

Great Demon King

(大魔王)

Chapter

001-492

Ni Cang Tian

(逆蒼天)

Story Description:

If I don't die... I swear I will act on all my evil thoughts.

Not exactly everyone's typical thought when they're about to die. What will a cowardly young man do when reincarnated with the evil powers to redefine his destiny? Can the natural kindness of human nature triumph over evil? Will he become the cold-blooded demon king of legend, or will he forge his own path and rain down another kind of terror?

Original Story can be found here: Link

Prologue

“You’re incredibly lucky; aside from astronauts, you’re the first person to tour the moon without spending a cent!”

An old man with facial features hooked like an eagle’s wore green robes that gave off sinister vibes. He smiled ominously as he looked at a young man enclosed in a thin, flimsy shell of purple light.

The youth looked to be in his twenties and wore flowery boxers. His lower body was of average build with a thinly built upper body, and he wore a disdainful expression as he peered around anxiously within the shell.

“Enough is enough, you old fart. What do you want now that you’ve brought me here?”

Han Shuo was filled with anger. He was just about to enjoy a cold, refreshing shower on this hot summer day when a white light flashed before his eyes. A weird, old man appeared in front of him before Han Shuo had fully undressed. The old man merely said, “The date of birth matches,” grabbed Han Shuo and jumped out the tenth story window with him, scaring Han Shuo silly.

When Han Shuo had come to, he suddenly realized it was gloomy, barren and desolate around him. The ground was pockmarked like a severe burn victim’s. That was when he was notified that he was on the moon.

Oddly enough, Han Shuo and that weird man could communicate easily, possibly due to that weird purple shell. What was stranger was that Han Shuo had no fear of suffocation, as there was enough oxygen within the shell.

“I will battle with three people in a moment in search of smashing the rules of heaven and earth. This will allow me to ascend to the apex of evil – the omen realm. Alone, these three fellows present no challenge to me. But I’m not sure what will happen if they join their forces.

To cover all my bases, I grabbed someone with the same birthdate as me – you. If I am so unlucky as to fall in battle, then I can call upon the most mysterious magic of them all and plant my consciousness within your body. I can then come back to life and use your body to revive myself!” Chu Cang Lan said evenly as he stared at Han Shuo, his tone belied by a hint of danger in his bloodshot eyes.

“Eh... when you were talking about planning your consciousness in my body, then... what will happen to me?” Han Shuo was extremely confused and hadn’t caught most of what Chu Cang Lan said, but he still instinctively seized on the critical fact and asked the important question.

Chu Cang Lan paused and cackled matter of factly, “Your body will be mine and you will be dead of course!”

“@#$#@(...”

Han Shuo was incredibly pissed off and started cussing vigorously, despite the fact that he was at the mercy of someone else. His string of curse words touched upon eighteen generations of Chu Cang Lan’s ancestors and greeted his family in different ways.

“Use this last opportunity and get it out of your system, brat! I would have spared your life had I won, but now I’ve decided that even if I win, I’m still going to send you down to hell!” Chu Cang Lan had originally kept his composure in the face of Han Shuo’s non-stop cussing, but his face darkened upon seeing that Han Shuo hadn’t let up after half an hour, and was, in fact, becoming even nastier.

This abruptly stopped Han Shuo in his tracks. He started banging against the side of the thin purple shell with both fists after a moment and started wailing, “Hero—, savior—, I was wrong, spare my life! What you’re doing is illegal, the authorities will come after you. Technology is quite advanced now, and even escaping to the moon won’t do you any good!”

“Demon practitioners are straightforward and are never concerned with the law. I, Chu Cang Lan, have roamed the earth for many years and have killed more people than you have ever met. I am still standing here, perfectly fine!”

Chu Cang Lan said lowly. Something in his face suddenly changed as he looked ahead of him to the left, and he murmured, "Finally!"

Han Shuo and his purple shell rose up and flew far away when Chu Cang Lan pointed his right finger. After bouncing a few times, he finally came to a stop in a shallow depression, upon which Han Shuo realized he could no longer move and his lips made no noise. Apart from being able to hear, blink, and think, he could do nothing else within the confines of the purple shell.

"The three of you are late. I hope everyone can bring their best game to our battle today, and will not hate me if you die!"

"Praise Buddha." "Almighty Heavenly One."

.....

Although Han Shuo could not move, he could still hear a few words from his position, perhaps due to the purple shell. However, he couldn't make out anything after hearing "Praise Buddha" and "Almighty Heavenly One". He came to the conclusion that a monk and a Taoist priest had showed up, because that was what monks and Taoist priests always opened with on TV.

According to what Chu Cang Lan had said, Han Shuo was done for whether the former won or lost.

Han Shuo was born in YZ city, and had managed to get into a bottom tier college after high school. He hadn't interviewed for jobs after graduation like his peers did, but rather messed around randomly on the internet. He had created websites and opened small online stores, but never earned much money from it. He was an otaku from head to toe, and one with no future potential at that.

His mind had become filled with evil thoughts the more time he spent online. Because he had spent his days at home, and society was well developed, he had been self-aware enough to not actually act on his thoughts. It's not like his parents were multimillionaires or high ranking officials either.

A twenty something year old with no accomplishments to date. His parents had attempted to introduce him to someone before, but the other had looked down on Han Shuo for being undependable because he didn't have a real job. Needless to say, it hadn't worked out.

He'd succumbed to parental pressure lately, and had been preparing to submit resumes and find a real job. But who knew this would happen before he had a chance to turn his life around?

Han Shuo's brain moved sluggishly as he thought that he was about to die. For the first time in his life, he felt that his life had been a waste. Not only was his career nonexistent, he had never done anything notable and hell, he was still a virgin!

"Sigh, I'm so damned unlucky. Just when I was about to start over again. Why do I not get a chance? If I don't die this time, I swear I will act on all my evil thoughts. I will not be looked down upon, and will never be too afraid to act. Never ever..."

The only thing that he could move now were his thoughts, so Han Shuo could do nothing but think wildly. The more he reflected, the more he regretted and despaired...

An earth-shattering explosion suddenly sounded, accompanied by Chu Cang Lan's egoistical laugh.

But after a while, he suddenly yelled, "Traacherous!" and was engulfed in another series of explosions that rocked the heavens. The large tremors shook even Han Shuo's position; it was as if the earth was collapsing. The disturbances were accompanied by a loud yell, "Chu Cang Lan, you are dead this time!"

"Eh! This is the demonic technique of body stealing! He's attempting to use a demonic technique, there must be a demon seed nearby!"

"Praise Buddha, for the good of all those beneath heaven, I will not let him succeed even if I die. Praise Buddha, Chant of Desolate Destruction!"

"Monk, no...."

Another series of violent detonations ensued, and then a black ray swiftly shot towards Han Shuo. It was as fast as a shooting star, and contained a vague something that was writhing inside, like an unholy liquid.

“In praise, in praise. Master Yuan Kong sacrificed himself to terminate the demonic technique. We can rest easy. Chu Cang Lan will never again be able to threaten the world of justice!”

The black light surged into the purple shell after Han Shuo heard the last sentence and something foreign seemed to invade his brain. A loud blast caused extreme pain as it felt like all his organs had simultaneously exploded, and then he knew no more.

Chapter 1: From the Depths of the Grave

Han Shuo slowly opened his sore eyes after some time. His whole body ached, particularly his head. It felt as if he had a severe migraine and had had random things crammed into his brain.

Looking around, there were piles of eerily white bones messily scattered around the gloom. There was also strange black matter further inside the room that wafted a nauseous smell.

“Ah. So I’m really dead. This must be purgatory.”

Han Shuo’s heart turned to cold ashes when he realized he’d died at such a young age. Damn, he was unlucky! His past life had been a waste, better hurry and reincarnate to ensure his next life would turn out differently.

Han Shuo’s head started aching fiercely at the moment. After he clutched his head and wailed in pain for a while, he felt that he had learned many new things.

“Bryan... Bryan... Who is Bryan?”

Half an hour later...

Han Shuo was dumbfounded. He thought that reincarnation into another’s body was the stuff of movies and dramas; how could it have happened to himself? And to take it one step further, he had reincarnated into a foreigner’s body. Had that old fart Chu Cang Lan made a mistake with his magic?

Han Shuo’s eyes had slowly adjusted to the darkness by now. He loosened his limbs and brought his right arm in front of his eyes. The black mole near his wrist was gone, and in its place were long, ominous scars crawling like worms up his arms. He shuddered, a cold feeling gripping his insides.

This body really wasn’t his. A gobsmacked Han Shuo realized he had really taken over someone else’s body...

Although Bryan was already dead, Han Shuo knew Bryan’s past for some reason. Han Shuo even knew that he had not reincarnated to the US or England, or any of the western countries. He was in a strange world named the Profound Continent, in an unfamiliar country called the Lancelot Empire. This was a strange land with swords and sorcery, one in which alien races ran rampant.

Bryan's parents had passed away when he was young, and he was only ten years old when his uncles had sold him to a slave dealer. The slave dealer had sold Bryan in turn to the Babylon Academy of Magic and Force, and his life had been dark ever since.

Bryan had died when he was sixteen. He had been assigned to the weakest department within the Babylon Academy – necromancy.

In those 6 years, Bryan's job was to assist the students of the necromancy major, cleaning up the skeletons, corpses and other trash after a failed magical experiment. Aside from that, he was also in charge of random administrative tasks such as making tea, serving water, sweeping the floor and killing bugs.

And another thing, students majoring in necromancy would often use him as target practice to test the battle abilities of their latest experimental skeletons or ghouls, or try out necromancy magics directly on him.

The weak and cowardly Bryan had suffered through a living hell in the past six years. His body was covered with countless scars and bruises. Necromancy students would practice on Bryan whenever they lost a magic battle against the other majors, even if he was eating indigestible food or completing one of his endless tasks.

A 16 year old youth, six years of torment. How cruel was this for a child?

Bryan constantly thought of committing suicide. However, in his cowardice, he could not even find the courage to kill himself. And so he silently endured six years of torture.

Finally, on the previous day, a little witch called Lisa summoned a ghoul and invaded his soul – killing him. Bryan felt no pain upon death, just the sad joy of release.

After moving corpses and broken skeleton bones for 6 years, another slave threw Bryan onto the same trash heap, the grave that he had constantly dumped trash into.

Han Shuo had felt his life was dark enough already, but when compared to Bryan, Han Shuo teared up a little. For the first time, he felt that he had lived a decent life.

Now that he understood what Bryan had gone through, Han Shuo's voice choked up as he sighed, "How could such an insane, cowardly youth like you exist in this world? Bryan, what can I do for you now that I've occupied your body?"

Han Shuo suddenly sensed threads of what seemed like liquid in his body. His head ached at the same time as some memories abruptly surfaced. Threads of liquid slowly circulated his body as Han Shuo became lost in his train of thought. Much more knowledge had filled his mind, courtesy of that old fart Chu Cang Lan.

There were nine different levels in demonic magic, respectively known as the solid realm, the open passages realm, the molded spirit realm, the true demon realm, the bloodsucking realm, the separate demon realm, the carnal realm, the nine changes realm and the omen realm. Demonic practitioners could do as they wish and kill who they wanted, completely disregarding all morals and ethics in the pursuit of absolute power.

Once a practitioner became a demon, he would have the abilities to move mountains and see all.

After sitting a while longer, Han Shuo felt that he had learned many things which were previously unthinkable. Of one thing he was certain, something had gone wrong with Chu Cang Lan's last piece of magic. His own soul had disappeared, but had left all his knowledge and memories of magic to Han Shuo.

The thread of liquid moving in his body was the fundamental and incredibly vital magical yuan – the foundation for training one's magical force. According to Chu Cang Lan's memories, a demonic practitioner would have to spend at least three to five years to successfully cultivate magical yuan. Han Shuo had done nothing and knew nothing, yet he had that sliver of magical yuan floating around his body. Although it was pitifully weak, he knew that it truly was magical yuan.

Han Shuo's thoughts turned to the crazy old Chu Cang Lan. He'd wanted to use Han Shuo as a scapegoat, but had ended up sending him to a strange time and place instead. All that random knowledge of how to train one's magical force must have been left behind by that Chu Cang Lan.

Although Han Shuo had learned a bit about this strange world thanks to Bryan, his knowledge was greatly limited, as Bryan was just Babylon Academy's lowly drudge. Han Shuo's thoughts started racing as he considered the life ahead of him.

Bryan was dead, and Han Shuo was occupying his body. Han Shuo was now Bryan, and Bryan had been sold to a magical force school – this was an eternal identity brand. This strange world had cruel and harsh punishments for runaway slaves, so Han Shuo could not run. It was possible that he would not make it out and regardless, he didn't even have a single copper coin on him.

After careful consideration, Han Shuo decided to return to the academy. Only there could he change his position as a slave and do something for the pitiful Bryan.

Han Shuo ached all over (Bryan had had a lot of old injuries before his death). Pain shot through his body as he attempted to stand up, so he hastily sat down after crying out, "Ow!"

Han Shuo felt no goodwill towards the Chu Cang Lan, who had forcibly kidnapped him here. Han Shuo knew nothing of Chu Cang Lan's life or world, just that through the latter's memories, one could strengthen his own body by training his magical force. With some advancement, one could travel in a blink of an eye or move mountains and shift oceans.

Although Han Shuo thought Chu Cang Lan was a bit off his rocker, Han Shuo was convinced of the legitimacy of his memories due to the fact that Chu Chan Lan had flown the two of them directly to the moon.

Feeling that he had nothing to lose, Han Shuo recalled the complex incantations needed to train his magical force. He concentrated according to the solid realm's first principle and sought to control that weak hint of magical yuan.

When he had built up his concentration and attempted to control the magical yuan according to solid realm's laws, the magical yuan did exactly as it was told, just like Chu Cang Lan said.

Secretly delighted, Han Shuo thought that despite Chu Cang Lan's eccentricities, the old man's memories were useful. He started meditating again and began to cycle the magical yuan around his body according to the solid realm's law.

Han Shuo only came to himself when his stomach started rumbling. He had no idea how long he'd meditated, just that his body's pains had greatly receded and he had gained some new strength. He had seen results after only meditating for a short while. That old fart Chu Cang Lan had trained for who knew how long; no wonder he even dared to go to the moon. Han Shuo could only imagine how domineering the old fart had been when he was alive.

Han Shuo noticed something odd when he took a break from training – that sliver of magical yuan no longer orbited according to the solid realm's law, but was actually circulating through the skin, muscles, bones and limbs of his entire body.

The aim of the solid realm was improvement of the physical body, an enhancement of muscles, skin and bone. Apart from slowly building up magical yuan in the solid realm, some fanatics would harm themselves in order to simultaneously build up their bodies and magical yuan. Simultaneous training yielded the fastest results.

"This method of training is basically a form of self-mutilation! Well, given that Bryan has always done similar things, maybe my progress in the solid realm will be faster when I return to the academy. Maybe it's not so bad being this Bryan!"

Han Shuo reflected with appreciation and planned to immediately leave this place. He suddenly thought that it was really stupid of him to have stayed so long in the stink of the tomb; he could bear it no longer.

A faint light emitted from the top. According to Bryan's memories, Han Shuo knew that there was a large cavern above him in which broken skeletons and corpses were thrown in. He ached all over when he stood up, covered with scars. Six years of torment had long since worn down Bryan's body, not to mention his poor diet. As a result, he was malnourished and thin, and only one meter and sixty some centimeters.

Han Shuo stood on some moss and struggled to pull his weak body up. After a while and five or six falls, he finally emerged from the tomb. Han Shuo felt a deep joy to be alive again upon seeing the moon's beams illuminating the earth and cascading across the cemetery.

Reassured by the magical yuan still circulating through his body, Han Shuo thought positively that what hadn't killed him made him stronger. And it wasn't like he was without a hidden card. That Chu Cang Lan had left behind secret methods of training that could prove of some use, and help Han Shuo achieve dreams that he had never dared to dream before.

However, Han Shuo had no idea that the magical yuan Chu Cang Lan had left him would not only help him train, but was also a seed. This seed would change his thoughts as it changed his body. His mind was filled with evil thoughts before, but he hadn't dared act upon them. The seed could prove to be his undoing, as it would prod Han Shuo into losing control of his own self.

Chapter 2: The Uncultured are Scary

The Babylon Academy of Magic and Force owned the most land in Lancelot Empire, and held the highest reputation within the empire. It was also one of the most important training institutions for the empire's mages and knights.

The academy was further divided into several departments, which consisted of light, dark, fire, water, wind, earth, thunder, summoning, and space. Each department had its own independent classroom building, library, laboratory, training field, and living district as if they were small cities.

Bryan was an errand slave for the necromancy major, which was a subcategory of the department of dark magic. Because necromancy majors had to work with skeletons, zombies, and the like, as well as the fact that this major had fallen off the radar for many years, it was not only the most unpopular major, but also the weakest. Even other department of dark magic students scoffed at the necromancy majors and didn't deign to form teams with necromancy students.

Bryan had belonged to the weakest and most despised major in his six years of running errands for the academy. Adding onto that, his special tasks of transporting corpses and skeletons... he had been subjected to no end of eye rolls and cold shoulders. Every day was a living hell for him.

Han Shuo followed Bryan's memories and arrived at a small path in the mountains located at the back of the academy. He entered through a small gate reserved especially for errand slaves returning in the dead of night.

Other students had long since gone to sleep, because it was midnight. Since Han Shuo was taking a secluded path, he didn't meet anyone on his way back. He observed his surroundings along the way and noted that the architectural style of Babylon Academy was similar to some of the western European countries back on Earth.

He finally made his way back to the necromancy major's designated area with some effort. Bryan lived in a warehouse, a place befitting his position.

The warehouse was filled with random items, with the majority being discarded crap or ingredients left over from experiments.

Most of these items awaited Bryan's organization and disposal. Necromancy students would often toss their unwanted items through the warehouse window for Bryan to take care of.

The warehouse was not very big to begin with. Excluding all the random crap, the only other thing present was a small wooden bed. Even this bed would sometimes be covered by a mountain of trash, as the students never paid attention to where they chucked their unwanted items.

The first thing Bryan did whenever he finished his work late at night was to clean up the trash that was on his bed. He would have to dispose of them before anyone woke up the next morning and then turned his attention to the others.

When Han Shuo took in his quarters, which resembled more of a garbage dump than anything, his eyes misted up and he felt deep pangs of sympathy for the unfortunate youth. How could he have survived those six years!

The air in the warehouse was foul beyond belief, even opening the windows had very little effect, as the smell was exuded by the mountain of trash. There were more items piled up on the small bed. It seemed that some had continued the habit of dumping trash here even after Bryan's death.

As Han Shuo shuffled his feet, he felt that even taking a few steps was an arduous task (the ground was covered with abandoned litter). He finally reached the bed and was about to clean it off, just like Bryan always did.

But, Han Shuo was not Bryan. When he was halfway through, Han Shuo felt a burst of rage. At first, this anger was only halfhearted, but the magical yuan within his body reacted to the anger and started moving rapidly, feeding his rage.

Finally, Han Shuo abruptly stopped his movements and fiercely denounced, "I'm not Bryan! I will not stand for this! Bryan oh Bryan, since I've occupied your body, let me help you punish that Lisa!"

Han Shuo was unaware that according to his original personality, he would never have impulsively acted on his thoughts, even if he'd wanted to. The him of yesteryear only had the will to think evil thoughts, but lacked the courage to take action.

He strode out from the warehouse and turned towards the female living quarters. In the silence of the night, he stealthily made his way towards the living district. Bryan had often cleaned here and was thus quite familiar with the area. Of course, he also knew where Lisa lived.

The necromancy major had much fewer students than the other majors, and thus every female student had her own room. Each room was spacious inside and had all the necessities they needed. This was heaven compared to Bryan's house of trash.

Lisa lived on the second floor, and Han Shuo could not gain admittance at night. Good thing there was a large tree next to her window. He flattened his body and scampered up the trunk like a skinny monkey. He could peer into her window if he stood on his tiptoes.

Han Shuo was secretly delighted when he saw that the window was open. He propped himself up and peeked in. The little witch Lisa had decorated her room in pink and it actually looked quite cute, especially with the furry toys hanging on the wall above the table.

A faint perfumed scent wafted into Han Shuo's nose, causing it to wrinkle. He had not anticipated that the cold hearted Lisa could decorate her room so cutely.

He couldn't hope to best her in a fight, and he knew that. He took a closer look and noticed pink gauze bed curtains in one corner of the room – that should be Lisa's bed.

He withdrew a small bottle from his bag and smeared some blood (typically used in experiments) around the edges of his eyes and mouth. He mussed up his brown hair after checking his face in a broken mirror (that Bryan had picked up). When he looked into the mirror again, a terrifying face covered with bloodstains looked back out.

“Heh heh, if I can't beat you, then I'm going to scare the crap out of you!”

Han Shuo was quite satisfied with his current makeup and nodded with a low cackle. When everything was ready, he stepped on a branch and swung himself close to Lisa’s window, swaying back and forth with the branch. He reached out his bone thin hand and knocked on Lisa’s window.

Don... Don...

Lisa was fast asleep when she was woken up by the “don don” sounds coming from the window. She groggily opened the pink gauze curtains and walked out barefoot.

Little feet as white as jade padded over a carpet that was also pink. Under the peaceful rays of the moon, the five pink toes on each foot were actually quite adorable.

Lisa was a bit younger than Bryan, and was the young lady of a noble household. Disregarding what she had done to Bryan, Lisa was quite a beauty with a head full of long, soft, blond hair, a height of 162 cm that made her just a tad taller than Bryan, delicately arched eyebrows, an elegantly long nose, and endearing red lips.

Dressed in pink pajamas, Lisa didn’t seem fully awake. After she walked out from the pink bed, she instinctively looked over at the source of the sound.

A familiar face covered in blood, petrifying traces of blood dripping from the eyes and nose, and a thin body swaying back and forth at the window, stared emptily back at her with no sign of life.

“Wahhhhh....”

A horrorstruck scream filled the hallways of the female living district.

Han Shuo inwardly grinned evilly and thought, I’m going to scare you unconscious this time, if not scare you to death. His expression grew more and more chilling as his thoughts grew. After a while of staring emptily ahead, he rolled his eyes backwards and swayed even more strongly.

He could no longer see Lisa because he’d rolled his eyes back. There was a sudden lack of sound from Lisa after that initial horrorstruck scream and continued through Han Shuo's gradual facial progression.

She probably fainted. Han Shuo thought as sounds of the other necromancy major girls' cussing floated within hearing. Better to leave while he could, otherwise he'd be in for a world of hurt if he was caught.

An incredible pain spread from the bridge of his nose just as he was about to reverse his eye roll. Another intense pain appeared from the top of his head, which caused him to fall off the tree. The fall awoke all his aches and pains and made him see stars.

Attacks fell on him like rain shortly thereafter, with a voice yelling as the hits landed, "Bryan, looks like you finally grew a backbone! You escaped death last time, but your brain rotted instead! I major in necromancy and spend my days with skeletons and corpses. You idiot tried to scare me by pretending to be a corpse; I have to really give it to you. Would the future great mage Lisa be unable to determine if a body even has a soul?!"

Although his body hurt, his heart was in even greater pain. That dumb Bryan spent six years as an errand slave for the necromancy major, but hadn't even picked up this bit of common sense. This was hardly the outcome he expected for the first time he'd gathered up his courage to do something bad.

Necromancy? This wondrous necromancy could determine even this? There was definitely some value in it. It looks like I have a lot to learn if I'm to survive in this world, otherwise the unfortunate events from today will most likely happen again.

As the agony on his body increased, Han Shuo continued to think rapidly while howling in pain. The magic of Chu Cang Lan's dark path encompassed the word "demon", whereas necromancy didn't sound like a great path either. What if he were to train in both of these, would there be conflict between the two or would they – become stronger together?

Chapter 3: From Idiot to Crazy

Han Shuo's thoughts spun madly as the little witch, Lisa, beat him hysterically, adding to the aches and pains he already felt all over his body. Poor Han Shuo was already quite weak to begin with. That initial blow to his nose had caused tears to leak out, and the resulting fall from the tree made him dizzy with pain. He could only curl into a tight ball on the ground and present a vulnerable target for Lisa's attentions – his butt.

Han Shuo realized something marvelous after a while. That little bit of magical yuan began to circulate past his butt and relieved some of the pain. When Lisa pulverized his butt, it didn't hurt as much, thanks to the magical yuan.

In fact, any place that cried out in pain was greatly relieved after the magical yuan passed through it, and it actually felt a bit... comfortable.

Han Shuo was taken aback and inwardly thought, the solid realm in demonic magic is seriously masochistic! The magic yuan travelled to his right buttcheek as Lisa's foot came smashing down and landed right where the magical yuan happened to be.

“Ah!” “Wah!”

A high pitched yell and a low grunt sounded from Han Shuo and Lisa respectively. Lisa suddenly felt that Han Shuo's right buttcheek was harder than iron. Her foot cramped up immediately and she hopped around yelling.

On the other hand, Han Shuo felt that it had only not hurt when Lisa kicked him, but it felt exceedingly comfortable. This was in stark contrast to the pain that he was feeling all over and had led to his involuntary yell. Truth be told, his yell had sounded slightly obscene – as if...

“Bryan, did you put rocks in your pants, you idiot?”

Lisa complained loudly as she massaged her delicate foot. Several other necromancy major girls suddenly appeared around Han Shuo and Lisa, each staring at him with sleepy, cold eyes.

His nose had stopped hurting and his tears were finally under control. Han Shuo shook himself and sat up on the grass. When he looked around, he discovered the angry stares from apprentices Amy and Athena, as well as novice mage Bella and of course, Lisa.

The thrum of danger was in the air...

Amy, Athena, and Bella paled in comparison when they stood next to Lisa. They were all sixteen or seventeen years old, but were not very pretty. They were also in extremely bad moods as their beauty sleep had been interrupted.

“Idiot, what are you looking at! Why are there rocks in your pants! You gave my beautiful foot a huge bruise! Ooh ooh.. it hurts.”

Lisa put her hands on her hips and spoke arrogantly while staring coldly at Han Shuo. The effect was somewhat spoiled, as she had to hop around on her left foot.

“Idiot heh...” Han Shuo cackled inside and put on an innocent expression. He gave a dumb sounding “heh, heh” after he pulled himself up with some difficulty and said, “Nuh uh, I don’t have any rocks in my pants!”

He turned around so his butt was facing the four necromancy major girls and started undoing his pants as he spoke. Four panicked screams split the air before he’d pulled his pants down, and the frantic sound of running feet followed shortly thereafter.

“Bryan, you idiot! Pull your pants up immediately or I’m going to kill you!” Lisa yelled hurriedly, but one could hear a note of panic in her voice.

“Oh.” Han Shuo answered dumbly, but continued to chuckle sinisterly on the inside. A bunch of naive little daisies, see how I’m going to take care of you.

After he put his pants back on. Lisa took a close look at Han Shuo. As the four girls now stood in front of him again, she said fiercely, “I can forget the fact that you hid rocks in your pants, but what were you planning to do on the tree outside my window in the dead of night?”

“Heh heh,” came two dumb sounding laughs in response to her question. Han Shuo pointed at a ragged bag on one of the tree’s branches. “To get that down!”

“Why are you chasing after a trash bag in the middle – of – the – night?!” Lisa yelled angrily as she thought, about to pop from anger.

At the moment, novice mage Bella sighed lightly and said to Lisa, “Hey Lisa, can’t you see that Bryan has gone mad? Looks like instead of killing him, your ghoul drove him insane instead. What’s the point of getting mad at a crazy person?”

Athena seemed to be quite sleepy as she covered a yawn, “Oh... there’s still class tomorrow. I’m going back to bed, senior Lisa you can handle this!”

Amy appeared to pity Han Shuo as she minutely shook her head, sighing softly after staring at him briefly. She didn’t say much and turned to leave like Bella.

If Han Shuo hadn’t acted like the village idiot, he would’ve faced the wrath of these three girls, in addition to Lisa’s, but since he had “lost his mind”, the three girls naturally wouldn’t bother with a madman. Thus, they left him alone and returned to their warm beds.

When the three female students left, it was only Lisa and Han Shuo again. Lisa glared ferociously at Han Shuo and bit off her words, “Go back to your business, I’ll come find you in two days. I’m tired today; if you dare disturb my sleep again, I’ll drive you crazy with magic for a second time, not just beat you black and blue!”

Lisa delivered a final glare after she finished and left, walking a bit unnaturally. A soft exclamation of “Ouch, this hurts! I can’t believe that idiot put rocks in his pants, he was definitely driven crazy by my ghoul” floated out when she walked through the door.

Silence descended again as Lisa went in. Han Shuo felt a belated shiver of apprehension as he watched her walk in. Good thing this Lisa hadn’t used necromancy magic, otherwise with her rank as a novice mage, another ghoul would have actually driven him crazy.

The party was over and Han Shuo took his leave as well. He cursed under his breath as he tiredly dragged his frail, battered body back to the warehouse.

After he returned to his warehouse, he haphazardly swept all the trash off his bed and fell into a deep sleep.

The next day.

Han Shuo was sleeping soundly when the warehouse door was suddenly pushed open and a loud “Wah...” sounded.

Han Shuo opened his sleepy eyes and twisted his body to see a short fatty wearing an errand boy’s uniform . He had short blond hair, a dark green left eye, and was pointing at Han Shuo with an aghast expression, “You... You...” He couldn’t finish his sentences.

“Oh, it’s Jack. What are you doing in my room?”

Little fatty Jack was the same age as Bryan. Jack was one of the few people in the necromancy major that treated Bryan nicely, possibly due to a sense of shared misery. Little fatty Jack came from a destitute family and his dad had sent Jack to the Babylon Academy of Magical Force two years ago to earn a few silvers every month.

Although Jack was an errand boy like Bryan, he had not been sold to Babylon Academy. He was a free person, unlike Bryan, who had been sold to the school by slave dealers.

Although Jack was also an errand boy and victim of constant bullying, the necromancy students did not treat him like they treated Bryan, simply because Jack was not a slave. They might hit and yell at him, and even conduct some small experiments on him, but they would never torment him to death like they would a slave.

Bryan had actually always envied little fatty Jack because Jack could eat his fill at every meal and not be subject to inhumane bullying. As for little fatty Jack, it was only with Bryan that Jack was able to find that littlest bit of self confidence, so the two got along fabulously.

“Hoo... hoo... Scared me to death. Bryan, you’re not dead, that’s wonderful!”

“What bloody wonderful, I’m starving. Jack do you have anything to eat? Give it to me if you do, I’ll return it later!”

Han Shuo realized little fatty Jack did not respond after he’d stopped speaking, and was in fact staring at him dumbfoundedly. Two small, yellow, bean-like eyes stared out curiously from fleshy face. Han Shuo frowned and asked impatiently, “What, am I that good looking?”

Jack started and looked even more strangely at Han Shuo, “You’ve never asked me for food in all these years. You would only eat if I gave you food. You’ve also never talked to me like that. Bryan, you’re a little different!”

A bit startled, Han Shuo reflected that Lisa and co. had been unable to see what was different about him, but Jack, that silly fatty, had sussed it out with Han Shuo’s first sentence.

Han Shuo rummaged through Bryan’s memories after a while, and discovered that Bryan basically never spoke to the necromancy students. He did whatever people told him to do with no interaction whatsoever, but Bryan and Jack would occasionally talk to each other. Granted, most of the time it was Jack talking and Bryan listening. The two had spent a long time together, no wonder Jack had quickly discovered the differences.

Han Shuo glossed over the moment with a smile and said, “I was hit by Lisa’s ghoul and almost died. After that incident, I felt that the way I was living before was wrong and wanted to make a change.”

Jack breathed a sigh of relief at Han Shuo’s explanation and nodded, “I see. I thought the ghoul hit you and turned you into an idiot!”

Han Shuo, “.....”

“Here, this is some black bread that I’ve stashed away. Go ahead and eat it. It’s such a good thing that you didn’t die. When everyone thought you were dead, they gave me your tasks because we haven’t found a new errand boy yet. Because of that I’ve had to come here super early this morning. I was in a rush and accidentally bumped into Bach. He beat me up, I even have a bruise on my left eye!”

Little fatty Jack relayed happily as he passed a piece of gray bread to Han Shuo. It would seem that he was delighted to not have to do Bryan's work.

Han Shuo violently bit off a piece of bread as he looked at the green bruise circling Jack's left eye. He spoke furiously, "Bach hit you again. He's too full of himself. Come, let's go get revenge!"

Jack hurriedly jumped up in fright and restrained Han Shuo using his body weight. He exclaimed, "Bryan, are you crazy? Aren't we used to this by now? Bach is an apprentice in necromancy! It's not the first time we've been beat up, it's good enough when he leaves us alone. What revenge can we get?"

Han Shuo laughed coldly, "Don't worry, I've got my ways. Yes, I am crazy, by now all of the necromancy students know I'm crazy. Yeah I'm damn crazy, who am I afraid of!"

Han Shuo bellowed as he proudly dragged Jack out of the warehouse. The magical yuan within his body seemed to churn faster!

Chapter 4: Chest as flat as bread

On a whole, necromancy major students tended to wake up early in the morning and would rush to get ready, hurrying to the department of dark magic's classroom building. Jack was about to lose it and was completely unwilling to participate, but his fears dissipated when he listened to Han Shuo's plan. In the end, Jack finally agreed, as he remembered that Han Shuo was doing this for him. After all, was he less of a man than Bryan?

Many statues of Babylon Academy valedictorians and notables were erected on the sides of a path made of rocks. These faithfully reproduced statues were larger than life and were the pride of the academy.

One of Bryan's tasks was to dust these statues everyday. He had been doing this since he was ten, and had to use a small ladder when he was shorter. Only after the completion of this arduous task was he allowed to take a break for food.

As they worked the dust out of the crevices of a bushy-mustached statue of an archmage, Han Shuo turned to Jack and said, "I say Jack, wouldn't it be nice if our statues could be erected here some day?"

"Bryan, don't be silly. We're just errand boys! It's enough that we get a full meal and not get beaten up everyday. How could we possibly become mages? Oh... Bryan, you are definitely different. You would never have had such crazy thoughts before and wouldn't share such a bad idea!"

"Why not?"

"We have to have the potential and pay a lot of gold coins for tuition to a magic school in order to become a mage. We have to pass through countless levels of training and tests, even kids from noble families need to have lots of potential if they want to become a mage. This is impossible for us commoners. Oh, I forgot. You're also a slave without freedom, that's even worse, there's no hope for you at all!"

"We're at a magic school right now and don't even have to pay tuition. Heh heh, this is a huge stroke of luck! If we don't learn some magic now, in the future, how would we dare say that we're from the Babylon Academy of Magic and Force!”

“Bryan, don’t act so confident. We’re not students, we’re only errand boys. Eh.. and at least I can leave the school in the future, but you – you can never leave!”

Jack was absentmindedly wiping the statue of archmage Claire, with none of his usual attention to detail and a face full of ambition. Little fatty Jack thought Bryan was being rather odd and thus spoke candidly.

“Hah, let’s not talk about that. Look, that witch Lisa is walking this way, let’s get back to work!” Han Shuo eyed Lisa limping towards them from afar, and thought that at least Bryan had something to show for his six year of running errands for the academy – he knew the daily routines of some of the people.

Lisa usually woke up later, and most of the time, slowly plodded to the classrooms alone. Today was no exception. She was dressed in a black wizard’s robe today, with her long, soft, blond hair strewn carelessly across her shoulders. It seemed that she hadn’t gotten much sleep the previous night, as she kept yawning as she walked.

Lisa was quite pretty, but maybe because she hadn’t completely finished developing yet. Since she was only 16, her chest area was not as well rounded. Rumor had it that Lisa was also very displeased with her flat chest and had recently been searching for solutions.

Han Shuo and Jack surreptitiously watched Lisa approach as they continued to dust off the statue of archmage Claire with all seriousness. They muttered to each other as they worked, seemingly oblivious to her presence.

“No way, Bryan you must have misheard. How could Bach have said that about Lisa?”

The two had been murmuring quietly when Jack suddenly raised his voice and exclaimed in surprise.

Lisa had been walking along absentmindedly when she heard someone mention her name. Her attention immediately zeroed in on that statement as she looked warily in front of her.

All girls wanted to know what people said about them behind their backs and Lisa was no exception. She even went so far as to hide behind another statue, so that the two wouldn't see her and become too afraid to talk. Her ears perked up as she sneakily snuck glances at the two.

It was that half-crazy, half-idiot Bryan! Lisa was still mad and wanted to put him in his place, but first, she wanted to hear what Bach had said about her.

Han Shuo smiled vacantly and said, "No I didn't mishear, on their way to class, Bach was telling the other students that Lisa's chest was as flat as stomped bread!"

Jack had to hold back his laughter with all his might as soon as he heard this. His face grew red and his body kept shaking.

On the other side of the statue, Lisa's face darkened with rage. Her pretty eyes shot out glares of wrath as her cute lips convulsed and her pearly teeth ground audibly. She trembled with rage for a few seconds and quickly stomped off in a huff towards the classroom building. She'd completely forgotten that she'd wanted to put Bryan in his place.

Jack could no longer hold in his laughter as he watched Lisa hurry off in the opposite direction, her face purple with anger and out for blood. "Hahahaha...." he expelled all his frustrations with an explosive bout of laughter. He laughed as he said, "Bryan, you're too evil! Even us errand boys know that Bach likes Lisa and that Lisa hates people making fun of her chest. Looking at how she was just now, Bach is totally screwed!"

Han Shuo gave a sinister cackle as he immediately put his brushes away. "Forget about dusting off Claire! Let's go watch the show!"

Little fatty Jack tucked his brushes, with a grand gesture, into the cloth bag at his waist as he took Han Shuo's advice. He laughed, "Let's go, I want to see Lisa beat Bach up. Serves him right for hitting me this morning!"

The two necromancy errand boys followed Lisa in high spirits, running swiftly to the classroom building. The students they passed along the way were puzzled by their behavior, thinking the two cowardly errand boys had woken up on the wrong side of bed that morning.

At the Babylon Academy of Magic and Force, the necromancy major was a subcategory of the department of dark magic. Necromancy students used the same classrooms as those majoring in dark magic, and studied everyday under the tutelage of the teachers.

One had to admire Lisa's efficiency, by the time Han Shuo and Jack had gotten there, she had already vented her spleen and was giving Bach a beating.

"Lisa, even the major's errand boys know how I feel about you, how could I have possibly said anything bad about you? Who did you hear this from?"

Bach already had a spectacular bruise around his left eye as he ducked a "bone arrow" attack. He took advantage of the respite to quickly protest his innocence and looked quite bedraggled indeed.

Bach had beaten Jack severely when the latter had bumped into him. Bryan had suffered even more at Bach's hands.

Bach was the seventeen year old son of a small noble family, but he held the lowest rank of magic apprentice. He was outclassed against a higher ranked novice mage, not to mention that he was pulling his blows because he liked Lisa. No wonder he was quickly hit when facing a wrathful Lisa.

"Huh, that's none of your business. They didn't even mean for me to hear them, so it must be true. Since you are so mean, feel my wrath!"

Indeed, Han Shuo and Jack hadn't "meant for" Lisa to hear them. Han Shuo was also half mad and half village idiot. There was no way someone like that could make up such a lie. He was also an errand slave, he wouldn't dare to lie!

Since it had to do with one of Lisa's taboos, she would never say what she overheard when other people were around. She brought her best efforts to teaching Bach a lesson so that no one would make fun of her again.

“Souls of the fallen soldiers, heed the dark herald’s call and reveal your existence!”

Lisa raised her slim, white arm towards the sky and chanted an incantation. When she was finished, two starkly-white, skeletal warriors wielding bone knives appeared in front of her. They creakily rushed at Bach with their knives held high when she pointed at him.

Han Shuo was gobsmacked as he watched on the sidelines. This was the first time he had seen the mysterious necromancy magic in play with his own eyes. His body about to burst in curiosity, he focused his eyes and attention on the action.

“Lisa’s focus isn’t that bad to be able to summon two skeletal warriors!”

“Huh, the necromancy major is weak as hell to begin with and its students are not united. No wonder necromancy is one of the weakest majors in the academy. What a stain on the department of dark magic!”

...

Students from the department of dark magic started chattering after Lisa had summoned the two skeletal warriors. From their conversations, Han Shuo learned that the same magic could be divided into five different levels based on the level of concentration. If a necromancer archmage with great focus used the chant to summon skeletons, he would be able to summon even more skeletal warriors.

Bach was extremely depressed and inwardly cursed the rumor starter a couple hundred times. If Bach had practiced dark magic incantations and had enough focus, then Han Shuo and Jack wouldn’t be able to enjoy the show they were currently watching.

The skeletal warriors chased him frantically all over the place. Bach finally had to use the same magic to summon a small skeleton. One man and one skeleton started fighting against the two other skeletons.

Other students from the department of dark magic laughed loudly when they saw Bach in such a mess. Bach was affected by the jeers and lost his focus, resulting in one of Lisa’s skeletal warriors stomping him in the gut.

His face grew purple with pain and he slowly sank to the ground.

Lisa hurriedly stopped her skeletons when she saw that Bach had been hit and the skeleton was raising its knife to finish the job. She sent the skeletons back to another dimension.

After all, it wasn't a fight to the death, and the academy prohibited such fights anyways. Lisa did not dare to really hurt Bach, and the bulk of her anger had been appeased by Bach's injury.

Bach stood up and sent his skeleton back to another dimension. He swept his gaze around and saw that in front of him, Han Shuo and Jack were also laughing loudly at him. Bach was already feeling quite infuriated and so stomped over angrily, cursing, "You two low level errand servants dare to laugh at me?"

Bach didn't dare to vent his anger on Lisa, and even less so on his seniors from the department of dark magic around him. He could only vent some of his wrath on the two errand boys, and the sight of them laughing at him only set him off even further.

Lisa had just about satisfied her anger when she saw Bach ignore her and focus on something else. This roused her rage all over again as she chanted coldly, "Oh eternal darkness, grant me the power of death, inflict the pain of the soul on his body. Agony of the Soul!"

A dark cloud of gas formed as Lisa finished and flew towards Bach. The gas kept shifting as it floated through the air and finally materialized as a pulsing black flame.

Bach's expression shifted as he turned to see the magical flame from the "Agony of the Soul" shooting towards him after he heard Lisa chant the incantation. He then suddenly turned and ran towards Han Shuo and Jack as if he'd thought of something. Just as the "Agony of the Soul" was about to hit him, he ducked and rolled on the floor.

Bach's plan worked. The merrily laughing and utterly defenseless Han Shuo watched as Bach suddenly tucked into a roll in front of him and the "Agony of the Soul" crashed onto Han Shuo's body.

Han Shuo's eyes rolled backwards as his head suddenly hurt, and he fell backwards straight to the ground.

Chapter 5: How is that called stealing?

.....

When Han Shuo woke up, he found himself lying on the small wooden bed in the warehouse, covered in ice cold water. In front of him, little fatty Jack had a wooden pail in one hand and was climbing onto a stool with great effort. He intended to dump the ice cold water right on top of Han Shuo.

Han Shuo was already freezing his butt off as it was a bit chilly that day. He gave a great yell as he saw Jack about to tip the pail over, “Jack, what are you doing?!”

Little fatty Jack was stepping onto a stool that had been trashed. It wasn't the sturdiest to begin with, and his legs wobbled in surprise when he heard Han Shuo's yell. His hand jerked, and all the contents of the pail came crashing down on Han Shuo's head as the pail flew and smashed into Han Shuo's chest.

“Ugh... I say Jack, are you trying to kill me?”

Han Shuo started shuddering uncontrollably after the second pail of ice cold water. Not only that, but it hurt like hell when the pail itself hit him. He immediately starting cursing loudly.

“Sorry Bryan, I thought the first pail wasn't enough to wake you up. This stool of yours was wobbly to begin with, and I was surprised when you yelled, that's why my hand slipped and I dumped the water all over you!”

Little fatty Jack was extremely apologetic and started wiping off Han Shuo's neck with a random rag that he had found on the ground.

Who knew that it would provoke a scream from Han Shuo like a pig being slaughtered? He hastily scrambled away and said, “Uh Jack, that rag in your hand is covered in bone dust that metamorphosed during necromancy experiments. It feels like little needles are prickling me, are you trying to stab me to death?”

“Ah.... sorry Bryan, I didn't mean to, I really didn't mean to!”

Jack was dismayed as he quickly threw the rag far, far away. He was thankful that there was no bone dust on the side that he had been holding.

“Achoo... Achoo... ah forget it. Jack why am I here? Didn’t I get hit by Lisa’s Agony of the Soul because that dickhead Bach used me as a scapegoat?”

His neck breaking out in red patches, Han Shuo kept sneezing as he rushed to peel off his sopping wet clothes. He quickly groped for the black towel that Bryan used and dried himself off.

“Bryan, you have so many scars over your body!”

Han Shuo took a good look at his new body, for the first time, upon hearing Jack’s words. There wasn’t a single inch of unmarked skin on his body as far as his eyes could see. He heaved an inward sigh and once again felt pity for Bryan’s circumstances.

“Scars are a man’s memories and medals of honor, what the hell do you know about them. Hurry and tell me, what happened after I fainted?”

“Classes happened to start after you passed out from the Agony of the Soul. Lisa said a few words and ran off to class. I yelled for Uncle Saru and the two of us carried you back!”

“So Uncle Saru had been by... Oh yes, what did Lisa say before she left?”

Han Shuo nodded as he continued to wipe himself off. Uncle Saru was the necromancy major’s oldest errand runner, he was fifty some years old and quite kind to Bryan and Jack. When Bryan had arrived at the academy, Saru had already been an errand runner for more than ten years.

“Lisa said it was too bad for you. If the Agony of the Soul had landed on Bach, he would have been fine after suffering for three days since he’s a magic apprentice. But you’re not a necromancy student and have no mental strength at all. You’ll probably suffer for a month. She said you bothered her when she was sleeping last night, and hurt her foot because you put rocks in your pants, so she won’t dismiss the Agony of the Soul!”

“Damnit, how dare Lisa treat me this way! I’ll take care of her one day!”

Han Shuo's face darkened as he listened to Jack's words and started cussing. His actions startled Jack as the latter thought, this isn't the first time Lisa's been this way to you, I've never seen you do anything to get back at her.

When Han Shuo was done venting his spleen, he thought briefly, "Bach has mental strength because he's a magic apprentice. He only has to suffer for three days, and I have to endure this for a month? Heh heh, my potential is great. If I learn some necromancy, maybe I can get better in three days."

"Bryan, you're an errand slave, how could you learn magic?"

"Then how do the students learn magic?"

"They first have to meditate and learn to sense the magical elements. When they've cultivated their mental strength, then they need to study the knowledge contained within the books of magic and practice the magic incantations. They ask the teacher if they have any questions!" Jack said matter of factly, after he thought for a short while.

"There we go, I can meditate. When I've cultivated mental strength, can't I look within the books of magic to learn the incantations written there?"

"But you don't have a book of magic?"

At this point in the conversation, Han Shuo had sidled around to Jack and suddenly threw a friendly arm around him, smiling winningly at him, "But I have you, don't you clean the library?"

Jack was shocked and promptly created some space between the two of them. He said with a panicked expression, "Bryan, you want me to steal books for you?"

"How vulgar! How can that be stealing? I'm just asking you to borrow some books for me. You can put them back when I'm done with them. No one reads those foundational books anyways, who would know? Jack, I'm in dire straits today because I was trying to help you. Now shouldn't you help me too?" Han Shuo said earnestly to little fatty Jack.

Jack wavered upon hearing Han Shuo's words, but finally agreed to “borrow” magic books for Han Shuo after Han Shuo gave him a puppy-eyed look.

Later that night, Jack stealthily crept up to Han Shuo and took out copies of “The Foundations of Necromancy” and “A Magical Dictionary” to hand over to Han Shuo. He exhorted Han Shuo to be careful and cautious at all costs before finally surreptitiously sneaking away.

As an errand slave, Bryan had no right to learn how to read. However, as an errand slave, who had to do anything and everything in the course of his job, he had picked up quite a few words over the past six years. All of this knowledge had been left to Han Shuo, and he was able to read the words in the two books.

Han Shuo shut the warehouse door after Jack had left, flipped to the first yellowed page of “The Foundations of Magic”, and started reading with every bit of interest.

Magic was a method of communicating with the magical elements of the world by using mental strength. There were four ways to use magic, through incantations, magic scrolls (or objects), hand seals, and magic matrixes.

Necromancy had once been an extremely prosperous branch of magic. At the height of its popularity, all dark magic had been categorized under necromancy. It was a pity that after its fall from grace, necromancy had become a subcategory of dark magic instead.

Necromancy was a field of magic that had started by simply controlling souls and skeletons. As it progressed and forebearers continuously experimented, its repertoire of spells had continuously grown. It slowly formed into a school of thought and became the representative of dark magic.

Mental strength was the foundation of all magic. The only way to cultivate mental strength was to sense the magical elements, through meditation, that regular people could not perceive. One was only considered a magic apprentice if they cultivated mental strength through meditation.

Thus, the first thing Han Shuo did after studying “The Foundations of Necromancy” was to meditate and try to get a grasp on mental strength. However, he came up empty handed after meditating for seven days. There wasn’t a trace of mental strength to be found.

Han Shuo could only meditate at night during those seven days, he had to be the diligent and bumbling Bryan during the day. He had to continue to perform an errand boy’s daily chores of cleaning, sanitizing, bug killing, and trash dumping, otherwise he would have no place at the academy.

Thanks to the Agony of the Soul, Han Shuo’s brain would suddenly spasm with pain a few times every day. He fainted dead away the first two times, but possibly acclimated after that and managed to stay on his feet.

Han Shuo’s half mad, half village idiot reputation also spread during this time. However, although he looked like a blundering madman, he still finished his assigned duties everyday. Thus, Babylon Academy did not kick him out upon seeing that his work was still completed.

As for what the necromancy students thought about Han Shuo’s crazy eccentricities, they were of one mind. Han Shuo had formed a habit of running errands after working for six years. Although he was a bit crazy, some habits were difficult to break and thus he still finished his duties everyday.

Except for one thing. Han Shuo would always somehow have a “headache” whenever the students approached him for experiments these days. He became even more out of control when his head hurt, and sometimes completely wrecked the lab. There was nothing the students could do as they knew that he had been hit by Lisa’s Agony of the Soul, and had gone a bit mental.

Even now, no one knew why Lisa had given Bach such a beating, but Bach was depressed nonetheless. He often thrashed Han Shuo on the basis of a flimsy excuse. Bach was a magic apprentice and stronger than Han Shuo, so the latter always ended up in much worse shape, even when he pretended to be crazy and hit back.

Han Shuo would break out into loud curses every night when he returned to the warehouse. “Bach you scum, just you wait. One day I’ll beat you so bad that even your mom and dad won’t recognize you.”

He’d been thrashed by Bach again today, and the latter had a small skeleton as backup. Han Shuo was naturally not a match for the two, and even now was covered in black and blue bruises. The difference was, Han Shuo felt that his strength was growing stronger these days, along with his appetite. Whenever he was still hungry after his rations, he would ask Jack for some more food.

Although it hurt like no other every time Bach beat him up, Han Shuo would train according to the principles of the solid realm when he returned to the warehouse. All his aches and pains would disappear during the night, and he would be in fine spirits the morning after. The next time he got into a fight with Bach, he noticed that Bach’s hits hurt less and less.

Han Shuo would immediately return to the warehouse after each beating and started training. That little bit of magical yuan within his body unknowingly grew bigger during this time as well.

It seemed that his body was slowly reforging itself after each cycle of beating and training, and the magical yuan slowly changed from the size of a thumbnail to the mass of a thumb.

This both excited and scared Han Shuo. He was excited that the magical yuan was growing stronger, and that his body and spirit were improving. He was scared that seemingly because of the magical yuan becoming stronger, he found it harder and harder to control his temper. Han Shuo would easily commit actions that he would later regret.

He retrieved “The Foundations of Necromancy” from underneath the small, wooden bed and started meditating habitually after a short perusal of the book. He circulated the magical yuan randomly throughout his body. Places that had aches and pains were greatly relieved after the magical yuan had travelled past them.

That sliver of magical yuan slowly traveled from his neck to his brain as Han Shuo was meditating. It was at this moment that a familiar pain started emanating from his brain. Han Shuo knew immediately that Lisa's Agony of the Soul was about to strike again.

Suddenly, just as Han Shuo's brain was hurting, the magical yuan slipped into the center of the pain. This was the first time that the magical yuan had moved into his brain when the Agony of the Soul was also flaring up. Han Shuo felt as if a cannon had gone off inside his brain, and fainted again after another round of intense pain.

Chapter 6: I'll get her one day

It was already midnight when Han Shuo woke up. The magical yuan was back to circulating in an irregular pattern, but there seemed to be something extra in his brain. Everything seemed much clearer now, compared to before, when he looked around.

A sudden thought struck Han Shuo and he resettled into meditation. He carefully extended his senses according to the instructions in “The Foundations of Necromancy”, and finally confirmed that because the magical yuan had traveled to his brain when the Agony of the Soul had hit, he had bafflingly trained some mental strength into existence.

“Hahaha... I am definitely a genius. I meditated and gained some mental strength in such a short amount of time. Heh heh, perhaps it's time to try out the lowest level of necromancy magic. Let's see if I can summon a skeletal warrior!”

He hastily hauled out “The Foundations of Necromancy” and flipped through the pages. He still couldn't find the incantation to summon a skeletal warrior after searching for a while. It was only then that Han Shuo realized “The Foundations of Necromancy” was a reference for only basic necromancy knowledge, and didn't contain any incantations or spells.

Han Shuo furrowed his brow in thought and recalled Lisa's incantation with some effort. He immediately raised his hands up high, concentrated his mental strength, and started chanting, “Souls of the fallen soldiers, heed the dark herald's call and reveal your existence!”

When he finished chanting, he felt the insubstantial amount of mental strength in his mind rapidly fade away. It seemed that he also perceived something in that moment, but then his head suddenly started to hurt and he sat wearily on the bed, panting heavily and completely drained.

When Han Shuo slumped over his bed, a black shadow flashed through his little warehouse, and a starkly-white skeleton, half the height of the one Lisa had summoned, appeared afterwards.

Han Shuo felt sheer elation when he saw the snow-white skeleton holding a bone dirk and staring back at him with two empty, hollowed out eye sockets. Despite the difference in size, this was still a skeleton and was proof that his necromancy spell had succeeded.

His body felt completely drained and his mind was woozy. Upon referring to “The Foundations of Necromancy”, Han Shuo surmised that his mental strength was too weak, and thus had his mental strength completely depleted when he had summoned the small skeleton.

Han Shuo felt a strange connection with the small skeleton standing in front of him, but his mental strength was so weak, that he couldn't even issue an order, much less send it back to another dimension.

Thus, a human and skeleton stared blankly at each other for a while. No one would come to Han Shuo's warehouse anyway, and it made no difference if the skeleton was here, since it wouldn't do anything without his orders.

It was already well past midnight by the time Han Shuo was done with everything. He was exhausted beyond belief, and once the surprise had worn off, Han Shuo fell into a weary, befuddled sleep.

The next day, not yet daybreak.

Han Shuo had already woken up and was planning on clearing out the trash as usual before anyone else had gotten up. He was just about go through the same routine when his eyes landed on the small skeleton standing next to the trash heap.

His mental strength seemed to have recovered a bit after a night's sleep, but it was still definitely not enough to send the little skeleton back to another dimension. However, it seemed to be enough to give it a single command – throw away the trash.

The little skeleton immediately stretched its legs out when the order was given, and slowly extended its five bone fingers to pick up the heap of trash next to it. It pushed the door open and walked outside.

“Heh heh, no wonder everyone wants to learn magic. Everything is so much easier with magic. In the future, this small skeleton can throw away trash for me early in the morning!”

Han Shuo noted that it was still quite early and flung himself back onto the little bed to resume chasing sheep. Over the past few days, this was the first morning he’d been able to sleep in.

When Han Shuo opened his eyes again after going back to sleep again, he discovered that the skeleton had returned and appeared to dispose of the trash according to his commands.

As Han Shuo washed his face after getting up from bed, he noticed that the black and blue bruising had miraculously disappeared, and even some of the scars on his arms seemed to have faded away. Aside from feeling a bit lightheaded from expending all of his mental strength yesterday, his body seemed to be in fairly good shape.

The solid realm of demonic magic was a process of reforming the practitioner’s body. Ascension beyond the solid realm was marked by erasure of all the scars on the practitioner’s body and vastly increased bodily strength and resilience. Either Bach or Lisa would suffer a quick loss if they tried to beat up Han Shuo with skeletal warriors then.

Han Shuo remained deep in thought as he washed up and watched the necromancy students hurry to class again. He grabbed his tools as well before running to dust off the statues of Babylon Academy notables.

“Athena, I went to the restroom before the sun rose today and saw a small skeleton carrying two bags of trash. It was walking slowly towards the trash dump, what an odd sight!” Magic apprentice Amy chatted with Athena as they walked towards the department of dark magic’s classroom building.

“Weirdo, who would be so bored as to summon a skeleton to pick up trash. Doesn’t that half mad, half village idiot Bryan do all that?”

“It’s true, I really saw a very small skeleton carrying two garbage bags. And also, I feel so bad for Bryan. It was bad enough for him already, now he’s suffering from Lisa’s aftereffects and gets beaten up by Bach every day!”

“You must have been half asleep and saw incorrectly. Bryan is an errand boy, and a slave in fact. It’s good enough that he can survive. You’re way too kindhearted, worrying about Bryan!”

The two girls had walked far enough and Han Shuo could no longer hear their conversation. Jack swung back after a while and dusted the same statute with Han Shuo. After Jack had busily wiped for a while, he looked at Han Shuo a bit dazedly, “Han Shuo, I think you’ve gained a bit of weight. And didn’t Bach beat you up yesterday? Your face was still bruised yesterday, why does it look fine now?”

“Bach must have over exercised recently. You can see that dull look in his eyes and how weak he looks. He doesn’t have any strength! At this rate, he won’t be able to beat me up anymore!” Han Shuo felt that his stomach was particularly empty after that declaration and said to Jack, “My appetite is bigger these days, give me some more of that food that you’re hiding.”

“Eh? How did you know I was hiding bread on me?”

“The entire major’s errand boys know about your habit of hiding food. You’re the only one who thinks it’s still a secret. Quit wasting time and give me some bread. I’ll return it to you in the future!”

Jack reluctantly took out a piece of bread after listening to Han Shuo, took a careful look, and broke off a piece for Han Shuo.

As Han Shuo sat aside his work and hungrily devoured the bread, Jack suddenly said, “Sh... Bach’s coming, eh?! Lisa’s with him!”

Bach held two exquisite, white boxes in his hand and was following behind Lisa with a fawning smile on his face. He kept trying to win her over, “Lisa, these are special snacks from my family and they are fabulously delicious. You haven’t had breakfast yet, right? Please have some.”

When Bach was beating Han Shuo up yesterday, Bach’s face accidentally connected with the latter’s fist. Even now there was some bruising on his right cheek, with it spasming every time he tried to smile, turning the grin into a grimace.

“Humph. I’m not hungry. Don’t you try that act with me, I hate people like you – people who flatter me to my face and then talk trash about me behind my back!”

Lisa stalked off without even glancing at Bach. When she passed Bryan and Jack, she glared coldly at Bryan, “Bryan, I’ll come find you for target practice again in a month when the Agony of the Soul ends!”

It wasn’t until Lisa brought this up that Han Shuo remembered that he hadn’t suffered from the Agony of the Soul since this morning. He guessed that the magic from the Agony of the Soul had been cancelled out when he successfully cultivated mental strength last night, otherwise he should have suffered an attack by now.

Lisa was about to walk away, while Bach, on the other hand, exclaimed in surprise after he saw at Bryan, “Eh? How is that possible? I remember I pounded tons of bruises into your face yesterday, why is that there are none there today?”

Damnit, you remember that well. Han Shuo looked at Bach stupidly and then gave a mad giggle, “Hehe, I have a good skincare routine!”

Lisa gave a small splutter of laughter when she heard Han Shuo’s words and halted her footsteps, not in a hurry to leave anymore. Her beautiful eyes creased into half moons with her smile. It was quite adorable actually. That idiot Bryan had gotten much more interesting after he went mad, Lisa thought. He doesn’t just stand there in silence anymore.

Jack knew Han Shuo wasn’t crazy, and that he’d said that to make fun of Bach. He tried to hold in his laughter, but just couldn’t and gave a light, “Haha.” By the time he realized he did something wrong, it was already too late.

Bach was already pissed off, thinking the bruise on my right cheek hasn’t healed, but that idiot’s has already faded. He hadn’t dare say anything when Lisa laughed, but Jack’s laughter completely triggered Bach. He sprinted towards Jack and cursed loudly, “You pathetic servant, how dare you laugh at me! I’ll beat you to death!”

Jack knew things were bad, but he didn’t dare run away. He could only stand there limply as Bach rushed over and waited for a beating. It was then that Han Shuo suddenly clutched his head and yelled, "It hurts!" and lumbered over in front of Jack. When Bach saw that the person in front of him had changed to Han Shuo, he mentally shrugged as it didn't make a difference to him who he beat up, and swung his fist straight towards Han Shuo's face.

Don sounded out as Han Shuo took a fist to the face, but Bach's fist didn't seem to hurt as much as it had yesterday. Han Shuo even managed to keep his frail little body from swaying back and forth in response.

But he still continued to howl in pain, "That hurts!" and wildly flailed his arms in front of him as if he'd gone into a mad fit. Pilipala rang out as Bach took three hits in a row, and his left eye immediately blackened into a bruise. He clutched his stomach with both hands and jumped up and down, "Worthless slave, how dare you hit me! I'm going to kill you with necromancy today, even if that's the last thing I do!"

"Bach, you're picking on Bryan again. It's class time, hurry up and go back to the classroom."

Suddenly, a gentle voice admonished sweetly from afar as a tall, lithe beauty with a head full of light purple, wavy hair came sashaying into view.

She looked to be 24 or 25, had a firm nose, an oval face, and sexy red lips. Her lightly tanned skin looked very healthy, and she wore a slightly form fitting master's robe trimmed with gold.

The tight master's robe perfectly showed off her well rounded chest and long legs. She was talking to Bryan as she held several books of magic in her left hand and a stylish emerald staff in her right.

"Eh... Master Fanny, you forgot your glasses again. You're pointing at Bryan!" Lisa's lip curled and she spoke with some resignation.

"Glasses are the kiss of death for a beautiful woman, I'm not wearing those things everyday," Fanny smiled in return and finally located Bach, using the staff in her right hand to make a motion as if she'd tapped him on the head. She said sternly, "Go back to class immediately, or you'll face the consequences!”

After Fanny had spoken to Bach in a bit of a temper, a mellow smile found its way to her face again and she smiled at Lisa, “Lisa, you need to hurry to class too. Frequent tardiness does not a good student make. I need to prepare for today’s lesson, I’ll see you later!”

Fanny turned her head to glare at Bach once more, then glided forward with her lean legs, striding with a grace unmatched by thousands. Her full butt swayed as she walked, creating an alluring silhouette.

“Eh... Master Fanny, that’s not the classroom building, you’re walking in the wrong direction. Oh gosh, put your glasses on!”

Lisa called out lightly and paused when she was about to leave. She turned back and raked a cold gaze across Bach, sneering contemptuously, “What a worthless guy, you can’t even beat up an errand boy!” Lisa glanced at Han Shuo again and hurried off in pursuit of Fanny.

Bach was ablaze with anger and pointed venomously at Han Shuo and Jack, “Just you wait you pathetic wretches, you’ll get what’s coming to you!” It would seem that Fanny’s threat had a great effect on him as he ran off to class in a great hurry.

Han Shuo gazed lecherously in direction that Fanny had departed in, watching until she was out of sight. He paid no mind to Bach’s threat, and muttered to himself after she had completely disappeared, “That Master Fanny is something else alright. No wonder that silly kid Bryan had a crush on her. Bryan’s taste in girls is actually quite similar to mine!”

“Bryan, stop looking. I know you’ve liked Master Fanny for a long time, and she’s also stopped some students from bullying you, but, you’re only an errand boy, and she’s a highly ranked adept mage in the academy. Do you know how powerful adepts are? Although Master Fanny is nearsighted, there are way too many people who have a crush on her in the academy. Wake up already!”

Jack waved two plump hands in front of Han Shuo as he reminded the latter to wake up and face reality.

“I’m already drunk, I can’t wake up!” Han Shuo said with a leer. He paused and added, “I’ll get her one day!”

Chapter 7: Methods for refining demonic treasures used to refine skeletons

“Bryan, I didn’t believe them when they said you were crazy, but now, even I am a believer. You – are – seriously – crazy!” Jack twisted his fat neck, shook his head, and sighed as he saw Han Shuo wearing a zealous expression and declare his desire to get Fanny.

“Eh? Those are the snacks that Bach was using to fawn on Lisa. Haha, what a stroke of luck! I’ve never tried the delicacies that nobles always snack on!” Han Shuo spied the snacks that Bach had forgotten in his hurry to leave and immediately sprinted over. He picked up the intricately designed snack box without saying another word and started munching on the contents without even thinking twice.

He tutted in surprise as he ate, “Tsk ts. These are delicious. That fight wasn’t for nothing. Here, I borrowed half a piece of bread earlier, and now I’m returning a box of exquisite snacks. You made out like a bandit!”

“But this is Bach’s? “I beat up that punk, so now it’s mine!”

Jack, “...”

Han Shuo also felt a bit odd about this development as well. He felt that since he’d arrived on the Profound Continent and started training his magical strength, his appetite had grown larger and his personality had also become bolder. He was doing things he hadn’t dared to do before, and his desires were actually growing as well.

“Bryan and Jack! You guys should be cleaning up the labs right now, but you haven’t even finished cleaning the statues! If you get us in trouble, you’re in for it as well!”

As Han Shuo and Jack were cooing over the wonderful taste of the exquisite snacks, two older errand boys walked up from behind them. The two of them were holding mops in their hands and began badgering Han Shuo and Jack, admonishing them to hurry to the labs and start cleaning.

These two errands boys were around twenty years old and were over 170 cm in height. They were called Borg and Carey, and had gotten into the habit of bullying Han Shuo and Jack in recent years because the older boys were stronger. They even went so far as to shift some of their own duties onto Bryan and Jack. Case in point? Cleaning up the labs.

“Not going!” Han Shuo paid them no heed since he’d wanted to get out of that for the longest time. He felt stronger now and his confidence had skyrocketed since he hadn’t lost any ground in his fight with Bach. He was actually thinking that he felt a bit too full, and another fight was just the thing to aid digestion if the two kept this act up.

“Hah, not going? Bryan, you’ve really gone crazy, daring to talk back to me, the mighty Borg. Do you want me to beat some sense into you?” Borg clenched his right hand into a fist and gave a cold laugh while staring at Han Shuo.

“Ah, my head hurts!” Han Shuo’s body shook as he crouched on the ground, clutching his head. Jack had been about to head off to the labs to start cleaning, but paused and stood there unmoving when he saw Han Shuo pull the same trick again. He looked at Han Shuo expectantly.

“I don’t care if you’re real crazy or fake crazy, I’m going to beat you until you obey!” Carey had an even worse temper. He took three large steps forward and kicked in Han Shuo’s direction.

It was then that Han Shuo gave a great “Aiya!” as he suddenly jumped up, meeting Carey’s right foot with his chest. Han Shuo gave a great cry of pain and wrapped his hands around Carey’s foot, lifting it up and to the side. It was Carey’s turn to yell in pain as he stumbled to the side. His lips parted in a silent howl as he smashed into a statue.

Borg smiled faintly when he saw Carey rush towards Han Shuo, thinking Han Shuo was in for it now. Who knew that although Han Shuo had taken a foot to the chest, Carey seemed even worse for the wear.

“Yeah? How dare you fight back Bryan! Borg, let’s get him together, we’ll teach him a lesson today!” Carey climbed up, in quite some pain, as he rushed towards Han Shuo again, and called for Borg to join him.

Han Shuo continued to clutch his head and cry out in pain as he thought, I dared to hit even Bach, much less than you two idiots. He flailed his arms and legs around wildly, and even though he took a few hits, Carey and Borg weren't much better off.

Han Shuo was already used to being beaten and had been improving his body by circulating the magical yuan according to the laws of the solid realm. He had no problem taking on Carey and Borg's fists at all. On the other hand, Carey and Borg's faces were already bruising up in some places. They looked worse off, in part due to Han Shuo's improved strength.

The three errand boys were fighting fiercely and wildly on the side of the road. Carey and Borg's bodies started to hurt more as the fight progressed, and their strength slowly waned, whereas Han Shuo only suffered from a minor bit of pain, and actually felt quite at ease. It was as if he had endless strength and he even started fighting more smoothly. In the end, it was Han Shuo who chased after Carey and Borg, pelting them with blows as they ran away with their tails between their legs.

"Hah! What a sweet fight! Jack, we're not doing Carey and Borg's duties anymore. Come tell me if they pick on you again, I'll use them as a punching bag!"

Little fatty Jack was looking at Han Shuo in admiration as he tugged on Han Shuo's arm. Jack laughed loudly and said, "Bryan, you're amazing. You beat Carey and Borg by yourself, how did you do it?"

Han Shuo pointed to himself and said cockily, "I have a brave heart!"

Han Shuo's head did not hurt even once in the next few days. For reasons unknown, Bach did not immediately seek revenge on Han Shuo either. Han Shuo and Jack refused to do Carey and Borg's work, but the two had nothing to say as they couldn't even win a fight, in which the numbers were in their favor. They silently completed the duties that they were supposed to do.

Now that the little skeleton was taking out the trash in the morning, and the lack of a need to pick up Carey and Borg's duties, Han Shuo suddenly had a lot more free time on his hands. He didn't ask Jack to "borrow" more books of magic during this time, but turned his attention to thoroughly studying “The Foundations of Necromancy” in order to build a firm base of knowledge.

Han Shuo came to understand that his mental power was quite weak after extended studying of “The Foundations of Necromancy”. He began to concentrate and meditate every night after he returned to the warehouse. The little skeleton was the weakest, dark creature from the other dimension, and its intelligence was so low, that it could only function according to the summoner’s commands. Han Shuo had given it the command to stay in the warehouse during the day and only dispose of trash late at night.

Han Shuo was just about to settle into his regular meditation that night when he suddenly recalled the memories that the old fart, Chu Can Lang, had left in his mind. There were some related to mysterious records of refining demonic treasures. Han Shuo thought that although the demon magic he was training in was from a different world than the necromancy he was learning now, they were both dark magics and seemed to have quite a lot in common. Would it be possible to fuse the two?

As Han Shuo furrowed his brow and started to seriously rummage through the memories, he discovered that although Chu Cang Lan had left behind a trove of memories, quite a few of them were misty and vague. It was like viewing things through a thin piece of marbled paper and not everything was clear.

After a while of recollection, he suddenly remembered a method to refine demonic treasures. Han Shuo could only summon a weak skeleton due to his short period of study in necromancy. Since that was the case, he decided to experiment on the little skeleton.

Refining materials were first needed for refining demonic treasure. Since he was just experimenting for fun, Han Shuo decided to use the little skeleton as the main ingredient. There was some worthless fresh blood from low level magic creatures in the warehouse, along with other trash, such as bone powder, salamander tails, etc. They all became auxiliary materials for the demonic treasure.

Some unique demonic treasures required very complex materials that necessitated arduous trials to obtain them. It wasn't even a certain thing that they existed in this world. Han Shuo ignored all of that and instead grabbed random items to fulfill his sudden impulse. He returned to the lab to grab a small bucket that no one was using, as well as various necromancy ingredients that were leftover from student use. He had no idea what they were.

Han Shuo stealthily crept back to the warehouse under the cover of night and carefully closed the door. He first put the skeleton into the bucket, and then just randomly dumped in all the low level monster blood, bone powder, salamander tail, and other materials, following it up with a solid bucket of water. There was now an ugly riot of colors in a bucket filled with an assortment of... things. Only the skeleton's head showed above the water level, it was completely unaware of what was happening.

Han Shuo thought for a moment as he closed his eyes and slowly ran through Chu Cang Lan's knowledge of refining demonic treasure. Apart from requiring a variety of ingredients, refining demonic treasure required setting up a specialized matrix. The practitioner also needed to train his magical yuan according to special method for several days or months. Some particularly strong demonic treasures even required training for a few years.

Of course, the current Han Shuo could accomplish none of this. He identified the easiest refinement method and dug out seven starkly-white bone spurs from who-knew-what-kind-of magical creature. He stuck the spurs according to the instructions denoted by the "Magical Yin Concentration Matrix".

The "Magical Yin Concentration Matrix" was a type of demonic treasure refining matrix in Chu Cang Lan's memories. The proper method was to first refine seven natal "yin demons", and to use the seven yin demons in forming the matrix. Once the refiner poured in his own magical yuan, the seven yin demons would concentrate the magical yuan in the matrix according to the matrix instructions. The refining ingredients would slowly dissolve and seep into the main ingredient. The demonic treasure would finally be complete after 36 days of refining with the magical yuan.

In order to refine a yin demon, one must first have a ghoul. A ghoul was an innocent who'd died wrongly and was subsequently buried in a forsaken piece of land. Only if the soul was unwilling to depart was there a possibility of a ghoul forming. Special methods were needed to refine ghouls into yin demons, and it was naturally something that Han Shuo could not accomplish at the moment.

He stuck the seven bone spurs into the bucket as a substitute for the yin demons, and then squatted beside the bucket to attempt circulating magical yuan to his right middle fingertip. He then swiftly stuck his finger in the middle of the seven erected bone spurs. Although the bone spurs were a poor substitute, they were arranged correctly and thus could absorb a bit of magical yuan.

After who knew how long, seven small swirls abruptly formed on the surface of the water, with the seven bone spurs as the center.

Han Shuo relaxed inwardly when he saw the seven swirls form. He knew that despite randomly mucking around, he had somehow succeeded. Although he couldn't fathom what the little skeleton would ultimately turn into, he was at ease and drifted off into a deep sleep after a bit of meditation.

Chapter 8: The infallible seven winged skeleton

The next day.

Han Shuo was still quite drowsy and not fully awake when the warehouse door exploded open. Little fatty Jack rushed in and started shaking Han Shuo awake, exclaiming in excitement, "Bryan get up! You have to see this!"

Han Shuo was bleary eyed. He'd just been dreaming about commanding the small skeleton to beat up Lisa. He'd been woken up before he could finish the dream, and complained with dissatisfaction, "What's going on this early in the morning?"

Jack's eyes were the size of yellow beans and excitement twinkled in them. He laughed heartily, "I'm not sure what Lisa did, but she summoned a weird skeleton that doesn't obey her commands. No one know's what going on, but pilipala sounds have been coming from her room all morning.

The little skeleton then ran off towards the department of light magic, with Lisa chasing it from behind. Oh! I swear, I've never seen a small skeleton run so fast in all my years in the necromancy department. Oh yeah, it also had seven bone spurs as wings!"

Han Shuo had been enjoying Jack's story until that moment. His expression changed as he suddenly thought of something, and he abruptly jerked his head towards the wooden bucket. The violently colored water had changed to an inky black at some point, and the seven bone spurs had vanished, along with the skeleton.

No way. I started refining him only yesterday. He seemed to remember somewhat, through the fog of sleep, giving the skeleton a command to teach Lisa a lesson, but weren't there still 36 more days before refining a demonic treasure would be complete? What's going on? Was it because he had randomly used bone spurs instead of yin demons that had caused the magical yuan to prematurely run out?

Han Shuo felt a foreboding chill at this thought and hastily sat up. He even ignored his morning duties of cleaning the stone statues and dashed towards the department of light magic, pulling Jack along in his wake.

Han Shuo's mind raced through his worries as he ran. He wasn't a necromancy student and couldn't find it within himself to be as indifferent to his summoned creatures as the students were. They didn't care whether the creature lived or died. The little skeleton had picked up trash for Han Shuo and saved him a lot of effort during this time. He had unknowingly developed feelings for the skeleton, and naturally didn't want anything to happen to it.

Apart from Han Shuo and Jack, the necromancy students were also rushing to the department of light magic. They had odd expressions of their faces as they chattered nonstop on the way there.

"It's so weird. It was such a small skeleton, black and with seven bone spurs on its back. I wonder how Lisa summoned it?" Amy said as she speed walked.

"I know, and the weirdest thing is that the small skeleton runs so fast. Oh. Gosh. Is it because Lisa's mental strength is stronger than ours that she can summon different skeletal warriors than we can?" Athena also wore an expression of extreme surprise, and carried a loud conversation with Amy as they hurried to the department of light magic.

The novice mage Bella creased her brow when she heard Athena say so. She snorted, "I'm also a novice mage and I've never summoned such a strange skeleton. The weirdest thing is that this skeleton doesn't obey its summoner's commands. It doesn't make sense at all."

.....

Han Shuo and Jack eavesdropped on conversations as they ran. From what they gleaned from the students, Han Shuo understood that his refined skeleton was quite unique indeed.

Inwardly fretting with worry, Han Shuo attempted to contact the skeleton with his mental strength. He found out that he could establish contact, but possibly due to the fact that it had been refined as if it was a demonic treasure, the skeleton didn't seem to receive the commands he was giving. It was still running around helter skelter.

The department of light magic didn't lack students like the necromancy major did. Light magic was a popular major at the academy, and had graduated many distinguished alumni. Light major students had always hated the dark major students, perhaps because light and dark magic directly opposed each other. Light majors hated necromancy majors the most, and light magic was an especially effective restraint against dark magic.

Many light magics were particularly destructive towards the dark creatures that necromancers summoned. It wouldn't be an exaggeration to say that light magic was the nemesis of necromancy. Han Shuo had gained quite a bit of knowledge after returning to the necromancy major, and understood the concepts that were common knowledge to necromancy students. However, knowing all this made his heart grow heavy with worry.

Han Shuo practically flew down the road as he dragged Jack along. His speed was such that his frail body even passed by a few necromancy students. The ones left in his wake gaped in surprise, thinking when did this idiot get so strong after he went crazy?

When Han Shuo had dragged Jack all the way to the department of light magic, Jack was utterly exhausted. He planted his butt firmly on the ground and panted heavily, complaining continuously, "Bryan, you run so fast. You almost dragged me to death, and you're not even sweating."

As Han Shuo's attention was completely preoccupied by the little skeleton scampering up and down all over the department of light magic buildings, he completely ignored Jack's complaints.

A short skeleton, with a body as black as ink, seven bone spurs stuck in its spine, and wielding a faintly glowing bone dagger was dashing to and fro in the middle of the courtyard.

The black skeleton emanated a faint glow thanks to Han Shuo's refinement. The bone spurs had stuck on its back, melding completely with the spine, as if they had always belonged there. Two leg bones extended like springs when it moved, and the seven bone spurs would flap busily, aiding its movement. Although they weren't enough to help it fly, they raised its speed so that the skeleton was very nimble. Even Lisa following in hot pursuit missed several necromancy spells.

Numerous light major students and stone pillars decorated with intricate reliefs stood in the courtyard. The little skeleton adroitly weaved in and out between students and pillars with an eerily agile body, leaving Lisa helpless.

Han Shuo was also dazed upon seeing the little skeleton's speed, and then quickly gathered his concentration to order the skeleton back to the warehouse. Unfortunately, it seemed that the little skeleton was unable to receive his commands and continued to flash between students and pillars, making the light major students run around in utter disarray.

It was sheer pandemonium in the courtyard.

"Lisa, you necromancy students are becoming more and more presumptuous. How dare you loose this filthy dark creature into the midst of the department of light magic. Are you still smarting over last time's loss against me and wanted to show off how good your skeletal warrior is?" Novice light mage Irene said coldly, staring at Lisa with provocation.

Irene was 17 and had a bob of light blue, slightly messy locks. She had beautiful bangs resting against her forehead, and sky blue eyes that were akin to two brilliant sapphires. She wore the hallowed robe of light magic and had set a diamond shaped sapphire in the collar. It sparkled with a misty-blue light that matched and brought out her eyes, making her appear even more beautiful.

Another young beauty, Han Shuo glanced at Irene and started mentally comparing her against Lisa. Irene matched up to Lisa in every way, and showed a burgeoning bosom, that was much fuller than Lisa's.

"Irene, keep your nose out of my business. Don't think I'm scared of you just because you come from the Kamplin family.” Lisa paused from chasing the little skeleton and sneered right back at Irene.

“Hmph! Filthy dark creatures are forbidden from sullyng the department of light magic. If you’re unable to take it away and dismiss it, then let me give you a hand!” Irene raised her hands with a noble expression and slowly started chanting, “Razors of light, become a sword that purifies evil, cleave this pathetic life – Radiant Slash!”

A longsword, made entirely of blinding light, appeared after Irene had finished her incantation. It swiftly flew towards the skeleton under Irene’s command.

Han Shuo’s skeleton had been playing hide and seek, and stopped dumbly when Lisa had stopped. It didn’t seem to react when Irene’s light sword rushed towards it, and the sword stabbed solidly into its ribcage.

The softly glowing black skeleton suddenly flared faintly when the longsword connected, and the longsword disappeared. A bit of smoke rose from its chest as the skeleton swayed a bit from the hit. When it regained its footing, it clutched the dagger and glanced around, as if trying to see who had hit him.

“Hoo, that dark creature didn’t immediately fall to pieces when the holy light of light magic hit it!”

“Yeah! This is so weird! Light magic is the nemesis of dark creatures. Its frame should have turned to dust under the holy light, what is going on!”

“Ah... is it possible that the necromancy major has researched a way to make dark creatures immune to the holy light of light magic? How is that possible? If this is the case, then necromancy’s dark creatures will be ridiculously strong!”

.....

Han Shuo looked around and saw that the light major students around him all wore expressions of fright. They stared incredulously at the little skeleton that was peering around.

Necromancy’s dark creatures not only took normal damage from light magic, but additional injury would be inflicted as well. Higher level dark creatures would start to rot, but something as low levelled as a skeletal warrior should have turned into ashes immediately.

But the little skeleton that Han Shuo had refined, according to the rules of refining demonic treasures, upended the normal laws of magic, and proved an impossibly incredible thing to light and necromancy major students.

Exclamations of shock and bewilderment poured out of the light major students. Even Lisa stood there dumbly, unnerved by this infallible skeleton.

But just as everyone was reacting in surprise, the little skeleton had finally found out who had hit him after a few moments of looking around. It rushed towards Irene with its five bone fingers clutched firmly around the coldly glowing bone dagger, and the seven bone spurs flapped furiously to again give it speed beyond a normal skeletal warrior's. It arrived in front of Irene, grasped the dagger in its palm, and fiercely stabbed towards the dismayed Irene.

Irene panicked and frantically threw herself to the left, as she knew she had no time to chant again seeing that the skeleton had already arrived in front of her. A tearing noise sounded as Irene squealed in fright.

The little skeleton didn't successfully stab Irene thanks to her quick dodge. However, it had torn the robe from right shoulder down to her chest, revealing dewy, creamy skin. There was even a small piece of snow white undergarments dangling on the tip of the bone dagger. The skeleton stood there dumbly again and didn't follow up on the attack.

Damn, well done! Slash you with a light sword huh! Slash all her clothes to ribbons in return! Han Shuo exalted inwardly.

Han Shuo suddenly felt his mental strength sharpen along with those thoughts. He saw the little skeleton snap to attention, grasp the dagger again and spring towards an embarrassed Irene desperately trying to cover herself up. It was obvious to see that it wanted to execute Han Shuo's order – slash all her clothes to ribbons.

Hah, now it receives its commands, that lecherous skeleton!

Chapter 9: He's really screwed this time

Irene's shirt had been sliced open, revealing snow-white skin, and even a hint of the top curve of her right breast. She was embarrassed and panicked, and was squealing in fright. The white expanse drew the rapturous glances of all the surrounding male, light major students.

Irene was a finely featured girl to begin with. Her beauty was further enhanced by a subtle, regal bearing that projected an awe inspiring and inviolable feeling. The male ,light major students standing closest to her happened to be going through the stage of life in which they were insatiably curious about girls, and thus forgot to put themselves forward to help her.

When everyone realized that the little skeleton was making a move again, it was too late to prevent it. The little skeleton had already raised the glowing, black, bone dagger towards Irene. No one dared to make a move for fear of hurting Irene with their light magic.

A feeling of despair and helplessness arose in Irene's heart when she looked into the skeleton's grey, hollow eye sockets. She seemed to be frozen in place with fright as she sat there, unmoving.

Irene watched the little skeleton close the distance with an upraised glowing dagger with a sad expression on her face. Who would have thought that her end would come at the hands of a despised, dark creature, and one of the weakest ones to boot! It was really quite pathetic.

Slash...

Irene felt a cool draft on her right waist and thought she had been stabbed, but as she looked down, she realized that she hadn't been hurt. Rather, the magic robe had been slashed open from right waist to calf, revealing even more skin.

A firm and smooth waist, supple and glistening strong legs, were all revealed this time. Even the teensiest bit of light green, silk undergarments could be glimpsed through the cut. Irene could hear some of the surrounding male students swallow loudly, as well as chatter from the female students.

“Ah...”

Although it would be a terrible thing if the skeleton killed her with one strike, it was worse than death to be stripped of her clothes under the hungry eyes of her peers. A piercing scream rang out from Irene’s mouth as she scrambled away directionless, desperately trying to cover herself up.

“What’s... what’s wrong with this skeleton? Why is it focused on destroying Irene’s clothes?”

“Stop staring! Hurry up and destroy it!”

The light major students finally regained their senses in the midst of the crowd’s conversations and began to raise their arms, ready to chant spells to attack the little skeleton.

The skeleton stood there dumbly again after that attack, as if it required continuous commands from Han Shuo to know what to do. Han Shuo started to inwardly stress out as he saw the skeleton just standing there. He didn’t know what to do.

Lisa, standing to the side, had been about to say something, but said nothing after she hesitated upon seeing such a large portion of Irene’s robe destroyed.

“Damned dark creature, how dare you attack the beautiful miss Irene! Receive your punishment from me, the sergeant knight Claude!” It was at this moment that a figure ran in from afar. Because his speed was so fast, Claude had already appeared next to the little skeleton immediately after he finished speaking.

Claude shot agilely towards the little skeleton as soon as he had arrived. A beam of pale-green light shot out with his right fist and landed solidly on the unsuspecting skeleton. The skeleton flew up and out, landing with a clatter on the ground after taking this blow.

“Beautiful Miss Irene, you have suffered because I arrived late!” Claude spoke humbly and executed an urbane bow to Irene after he sent the skeleton flying.

Claude was 18 and had tied his silver hair into a ponytail, allowing it to drape carelessly on his back. He wore an all white training robe and was extraordinarily handsome. Many of the light major girls blushed upon seeing his appearance and started whispering amongst themselves.

“Wow! It’s Claude! He’s only 18, yet he’s a sergeant level knight already, and the youngest son of the Empire’s Gryphon Legion chief. He’s so amazing!”

“You’re so boycrazy, Claude likes Irene. You come from a small family and you’re not as beautiful as Irene, he’d never be interested in you.”

The light major girls started holding hushed conversations and sneaking sly glances at Claude, as if he was the man of their dreams, their prince on a white horse. On the other hand, the male students regarded him with looks that alternated between hate and fear.

As the surrounding crowd engaged in murmured conversations, the little skeleton that been sent flying stood up shakily, his rib cage trembling along with the rest of his body.

Irene was completely bedraggled and frantically protecting her upper and lower body, her face flushed bright with embarrassment. However, she heaved a sigh of relief when Claude appeared. She was about to reply to his greeting when she glanced beyond Claude’s shoulder and saw the skeleton slowly clambering back up. Her haughty face instantly changed into an expression filled with panic and disgust. Irene pointed behind Claude and hurriedly said, “Claude, I’ll consent to having a meal with you if you destroy that ugly, dark creature.”

Claude turned his head upon hearing Irene’s words, and gave a quiet, “eh?” of surprise. It would seem that he hadn’t thought the skeleton would still survive. He turned back, flashed a small, sunny smile and bowed, “I am honored to serve you.”

Claude’s demeanor changed abruptly when he turned away. The urbane grace he’d just displayed faded, replaced with a sharp look shooting out from his eyes. He punched out with his right fist again, and the pale-green light once again rapidly shot towards the little skeleton.

Who knew that a thin, frail body would suddenly rush in from the left just at this moment. It happened to stop right in front of the little skeleton. The pale-green light from Claude's fist landed solidly on the frail body.

Bam! sounded out and the thin body stumbled a few steps backwards, throwing his head back and fell to the ground.

"Eh? Who's this errand boy? Why did he suddenly rush out?" Surprised cries came from all directions.

"Damn it, Bryan are you crazy?" Jack was just was mystified and howled with a face full of tragic pain.

Lisa was also extremely taken aback as she looked at Han Shuo, who had suddenly dashed out and taken the blow for the skeleton.

What followed was an even more surprising turn of events. The pale-green light connected squarely with Han Shuo, but he didn't cough up blood and immediately die on the spot. Rather, he too stood up shakily, like the skeleton, and wore a silly, naive expression.

As for the little skeleton, it suddenly about faced. It had been swaying back and forth, but then abruptly turned, bent its legs and and sprang off towards the necromancy major's quarters before anyone could react.

As for Claude, the attacker, he tripped over his feet all of a sudden and sat on the ground for no apparent reason. He panted heavily a few times before standing up, as if he had overexerted himself just now, but after he stood up, his chiseled features wore an expression of disbelief and shock. He cast an odd glance towards Han Shuo, who was still out of his mind.

The person in question, Han Shuo, wasn't completely putting on an act with the confusion flitting across his face. When Claude's pale-green light had passed directly through his body into his chest, Han Shuo had felt a heart piercing pain. He almost thought he'd died.

Han Shuo's mental strength had been possibly affected by the circumstances in that moment, and he successfully gave another command of 'retreat with all haste' to the little skeleton. To avoid detection, he told the skeleton to take cover in the academy's garbage dump.

But what was most incredible to Han Shuo was that he'd felt his magical yuan surround and enclose the pale-green light when the latter had travelled into his body. The magical yuan completely immobilized the light, and prevented the light from wreaking havoc internally.

"Bryan, what are you doing here?" Lisa finally found her voice and yelled towards Han Shuo.

Han Shuo had no idea what was going on in his body at the moment. He only felt a bit of heaviness weighing down his chest as magical yuan had enclosed the pale-green light. After the initial pain he had felt earlier, his body hadn't actually suffered much damage.

But in other people's eyes, Han Shuo was completely crazy. He couldn't even hear other people's questions. The blank expression and naive smile on his face further cemented his identity as a crazy person.

"Oh, it's the crazy errand slave from the necromancy major. No wonder he was such an idiot!"

"Yes indeed, only an idiot would have rushed out in front of Claude's attack at that moment!"

Little fatty Jack's legs were shaking like mad, but he eventually made his way towards Han Shuo and started dragging him away by the arm. He said, "Bryan, what are you doing here? It's not fun here. Come on, let's go back."

"Just a second!" Claude suddenly spoke up at this moment, his eyes fixed on Han Shuo. Setting aside the fact that the little skeleton had run away for a second, he was wondering why he suddenly felt his fighting aura (TL note: mental strength equivalent for knights) disappear. What was going on? Was he mistaken?

He'd only used his fighting aura in one hit, by all means he shouldn't have been tired. He'd even fallen, this really was too weird. Did this errand slave have some evil magic? No way, he was just an errand slave. That would be way too crazy beyond belief. He must be wrong.

“Noble and mighty knight Claude, you wouldn’t pick a fight with an errand slave, would you? Not to mention that this errand slave is crazy, this doesn’t seem to reconcile with your distinguished self?” Curiously enough, it was Lisa who was speaking up for Han Shuo.

Claude bowed to Lisa from a distance upon hearing her words, then gave Han Shuo a deep look. He nodded, “You may leave!”

“The two errand boys can leave, but Lisa, you summoned this dirty skeletal warrior and ruined my clothes. You owe me an explanation.” Irene had found a billowy white robe at some point and had flung it over herself. She’d recovered from her panic and shock by now and leveled a cold glance at Lisa.

“What does that have to do with me? I didn’t summon that weird black skeleton, otherwise why would I be unable able to control it? It snuck into my room at night and kicked me two times. I’m also the victim here.” Lisa gave a slight snort and also responded coldly.

“How is that possible? If not you, then who? It must be someone from your necromancy major. Whoever he is, I’ll find him and make him pay!” Irene flew into a rage.

“Hoo... ah... Bach, when.... when throw away trash, saw it run... run out from Bach’s room.” Han Shuo smiled vacantly and seemed to have trouble communicating as he stammered out a few words, but it was enough for the others to understand his meaning.

“Huh. So it was him. He must be trying to get revenge for when I beat him up!” Lisa’s face darkened and she bit off her words.

On the other side, Irene’s face also wore a livid expression as she audibly ground her teeth. Bells signaling the start of class rang, just as the two were about to track down Bach and make him pay. All of the assembled gave a start when they heard the bells, with light and necromancy majors running off to their respective areas.

Only Han Shuo and Jack remained, standing there dumbly. Han Shuo smiled “dumbly” and said to Jack, “Bach’s screwed.”

Jack nodded his head emphatically in complete agreement, “Yeah, he’s really screwed this time!”

Chapter 10: A demon practitioner does as he wishes

The students had gone to class, but Han Shuo and Jack had yet to begin tackling their duties for the day. After everyone had left, the two also separated to complete their respective work.

Han Shuo felt the heaviness in his chest dissipate when he'd finished cleaning the statues. He found a deserted corner and undid the top of his rough, linen shirt. He looked down at his chest and saw that there was an undercurrent of pale-green specks of light being expelled from his body. It seemed that Claude's pale-green fighting aura was being handled in this manner under the influence of the magical yuan.

Breathing a small sigh of relief, Han Shuo laid his worries to rest and marvelled at how miraculous the magical yuan was. From the knowledge that he'd recently gained, knights were also divided into various levels. Their fighting auras would be different at each level, such as knight apprentice (pale-blue), companion-at-arms (dark blue), sergeant (pale-green), senior knight (dark green), earth rider (white), sky rider (silver), and divine knight (gold).

Claude's fighting aura color was pale-green, indicating that he really did have the strength of a sergeant level knight. If a sergeant level knight gathered his fighting aura and attacked a normal person, it would have dealt a fatal blow to the target with no exceptions whatsoever. The fact that he had survived without major injury was a clear testament to the fact that he had been training his magical yuan.

Han Shuo breathed a sigh of relief upon feeling the magical yuan firmly enclose the pale-green fighting aura, but didn't dare engage in more training. He was deathly afraid that if the magical yuan circulated to other parts of his body according to his wishes, then the pale-green aura would be free of its restraints and suddenly burst into action and injure his internal organs.

Thankfully, as time passed, the magical yuan was slowly expelling the aura in the form of specks of light. This helped Han Shuo breathe a bit easier.

Due to the fact that classes had already started, no one searched the trash heap that the little skeleton had taken refuge in, but this matter wasn't about to blow over that easily. Seeing as it was broad daylight, Han Shuo didn't dare command the skeleton to return to the warehouse, for fear of inopportune discovery.

Late afternoon, within the department of dark magic's training field.

The Babylon Academy of Magic and Force had very extensive facilities. Each department had its own independent training field. The training fields were a place for students to test their magic. All sorts of mental testing rocks to test mental strength, and equipment to measure the strength of a magical blast could be found within.

The necromancy major also had a few spacious rooms reserved specially for students to conduct magic experiments. Han Shuo happened to have a mop in hand and was cleaning the necromancy training room floors when he suddenly saw a few necromancy students walk over.

One of them was someone who had not come looking for Han Shuo in quite some time – Bach. His face was mottled with bruises and he looked quite miserable. It would seem that Irene and Lisa had already found him and made him pay. Bach swiftly grew livid when he spotted Han Shuo mopping the floor. His already ugly face became even more twisted, until it was almost impossible to make out his original features.

Han Shuo was gleefully jumping up and down inside, but continued to plaster a dumb, silly smile on his face. He was even humming a few lighthearted folk songs as he clutched the mop in his hands, twirling it this way and that.

“You damned Bryan, when did you see that little black skeleton run out from my room?!” Bach's face had twisted ferociously as he roared angrily at Han Shuo.

Han Shuo lifted a completely clueless face and glanced at Bach, giving him a dumb smile. He didn't answer and rapidly walked off with the mop.

“Come back here, you’re not getting away today!”

“Bach, how many times have I told you not to bully Bryan. Do you ignore even my words now?” Fanny immediately stuck her hands on her waist and yelled sternly after she’d walked in through the door, and glimpsed Bach about to chase after Han Shuo.

“Master Fanny, look at my face! It’s all because Bryan started some rumors that Lisa and Irene beat me up. Bryan’s the bully here!”

“Oh, I’ve heard about what happened this morning. Maybe Bryan was confused and saw incorrectly. He’s already like this! Why are you creating more trouble for him? Hmph. With your magical ability, you really don’t have the ability to summon such a strange and strong skeleton.” Fanny started talking to herself after this point. “Who on earth summoned it? I am very curious as well. There are rumors flying that our necromancy major has had a major breakthrough, and has discovered a way to make our dark creatures immune to light magic attacks.”

Han Shuo had run to the corner of the room and was gazing upon the glamorous Fanny from afar. Fanny had tied her light purple hair up into a bun today, leaving only a few purple strands resting on her forehead. This added a striking charm to her looks, causing Han Shuo to silently sigh multiples times in wonder.

“Bryan, your Agony of the Soul should be over by now and can help me practice my zombies today. Come, go to training room three.” Lisa flicked her gaze to the figure in the corner and commanded arrogantly.

“Lisa, practice is fine and all, but you can’t do what you did last time and directly attack him with a ghoul.” Fanny rebuked gently, worried that something might happen to Han Shuo after hearing Lisa’s words.

“I know, Master Fanny!” Lisa tossed out a careless reply and walked towards training room three.

It was the duty of the errand servants to help students practice their magic. Han Shuo also wanted to take to chance and enact some revenge, so he docilely put down the mop and walked towards the training room.

Lisa closed the training room door with a loud clatter after Han Shuo had entered the area. This indicated that she wished to reserve the room for her own use today. She stood cockily in front of the door and stared Han Shuo down, “You can’t run away today.”

She immediately raised her hands and started chanting when she had finished speaking, “Zombie warriors of the fallen, heed the dark herald’s call and reveal your existence!”

A muscular zombie warrior with a dark green body, wielding a thick wooden club, materialized as soon as the incantation had finished.

Zombie warriors were a level higher than skeletal warriors. They weren’t necessarily rotting corpses, but rather had muscular and tough bodies. They moved faster than skeletal warriors and their strength was greater. Only novice mages were able to summon them, so therefore a mere apprentice, like Bach, would have been completely unable to do so.

Summoned dark creatures could attack enemies if the summoner gave a mental command. However, low level dark creatures usually possessed extremely low intelligence, and could only engage in the most basic attacks. A summoner would have to continuously exercise mental control if they wanted the dark creature to attack up to its full potential. Only then would the dark creature follow the summoner wishes and attack in a variety of complex ways.

However, repeated practice was needed in order to become proficient and adeptly control a dark creature’s attacks through mental strength. Therefore, the necromancy errand boys often became practice targets. Up until now, Lisa and co. had used skeletal warriors to practice on the errand boys. This time however, she had summoned a zombie warrior. It was plain to see that she was up to no good.

Han Shuo was dumbfounded when he saw that Lisa hadn’t summoned a skeletal warrior, but a stronger, higher level zombie warrior. He inwardly cursed Lisa’s name a couple dozen times and backed up, on high alert.

“Hehe, I see you’re running faster Bryan, and that your strength has grown. It seems to be a bit of an insult to practice skeletal warriors on you.

So today, you have the honor of helping the future necromancer archmage, Lisa, learn how to better control zombie warriors.”

Lisa’s pretty cheeks were tinged with pink and an unholy glee shone in her eyes. Under her commands, the zombie warrior had already started running towards Han Shuo, while she talked.

The zombie warrior was wielding a thick wooden club and thundered towards Han Shuo, according to Lisa’s instructions. Its speed was quite fast, and closed the distance quickly. The club flew directly towards Han Shuo’s head.

This club was thicker than Han Shuo’s arms, and the zombie warrior possessed great strength. Even if he didn’t die, Han Shuo would be gravely injured if he was hit.

For reasons unknown, Han Shuo wasn’t afraid at all as he watched the club descend. In fact, he felt a kind of bloodthirsty excitement. It was a very odd feeling, as if his body and soul craved battle.

His eyes narrowed slightly as the dumb look vanished from his face, replaced with a sharp glint in his eyes. He tensed his left leg and sprang off it, shifting his body to the right by a meter.

Bam went the zombie warrior’s wooden club as it smacked solidly into the floor, where Han Shuo had just been standing.

“Ee?!” Lisa gave a shocked squeal from the sidelines, where she had been controlling the zombie warrior. For the briefest of moments, the feeling she normally received from Han Shuo drastically changed, causing her heart to stutter. She had never seen the expression and the look in his eyes before this moment, and so had emitted a startled sound of bewilderment.

She forgot to give the zombie warrior further commands after that moment, and rubbed her eyes nervously. She stared closely at Han Shuo again.

Strangely, Han Shuo was wearing a silly expression again, and seemed to be instinctively fearing the zombie warrior. He cowered and trembled as he backed up, giving off the very appearance of an idiot.

I must have seen incorrectly. That damn Bryan, how is it possible... how could he have... that kind of aura, that kind of gaze? Lisa thought silently and gave a cold snort. She started to gather her mental strength again and commanded the zombie warrior to chase Han Shuo.

Although Han Shuo was chased every which way by the zombie warrior, he did not reveal it second time, the aura and look that had surprised Lisa, but he always managed to avoid the zombie warrior's club at very last second. This peaked Lisa's curiosity and competitive spirit, and so she fully concentrated on manipulating the zombie warrior as she thought, "Bryan's actually gotten a lot faster and stronger since he's gone crazy."

As the widely pursued target, Han Shuo started developing a strong desire for vengeance on Lisa at some point. Even though Han Shuo tried to reason that he couldn't and shouldn't pursue vengeance, and tried to stop the thought in its tracks, he just couldn't turn it off entirely.

And as the zombie warrior became more and more agile, and chasing after him with greater speed, Han Shuo's thirst for revenge became stronger as well. "A demon practitioner does as he wishes... A demon practitioner does as he wishes..." A memory suddenly resurfaced in Han Shuo's mind. He seemed to spontaneously understand the true meaning behind demonic magic, and the sentence "a demon practitioner does as he wishes" seemed to coalesce into a voice that echoed endlessly in his mind.

Finally, Han Shuo gave a low roar as he bent his head and arched his body. He changed his body's trajectory from avoidance and made straight for Lisa's direction.

Chapter 11: This time, it's a club

Lisa was fully concentrating on manipulating the zombie warrior at this moment, and was stunned into dumbly standing there when Han Shuo suddenly changed direction and directly charged at her. She shook off her inaction in a panic, and hastily ordered the zombie warrior to follow Han Shuo, while she exhaled lightly and dodged to the side.

Lisa couldn't make out Han Shuo's expression as he had lowered his head and arched his back, but an aura, as sharp as keen as a sword's edge, emanated from him as he charged. This was completely unlike anything that Han Shuo had ever displayed before, and thus the source of Lisa's consternation.

Because the zombie warrior had been a step behind, its speed could not catch up to Han Shuo and thus could not help Lisa in the short run. It was hard for Lisa to maintain her previous unflappable calm and she ran madly to and fro, terror written on her face.

And so, a strange scene appeared in the training room. The zombie warrior chased after Han Shuo, whilst wielding a wooden club, whereas the latter said not a word and charged towards Lisa with his head lowered, while Lisa ran a wild, avoidance pattern around the room. She even forgot to team up with the zombie warrior and fight Han Shuo together.

"Bryan, are you crazy? How dare you chase me?" Lisa yelled as she ran, alarm evident in her voice.

As the one doing the chasing, Han Shuo's mind was foggy and not too clear at the moment. Only the voice of "a demon practitioner does as he wishes..." reverberated on and off in his mind.

Han Shuo knew that he had to avoid a confrontation with Lisa at all costs. Otherwise, not only would the academy punish him, but even Lisa's family would be out for blood. No matter who it was, either one would be enough to make him suffer greatly, as he was only an errand boy.

However, reason was reason, and logic was logic. Even though he knew he shouldn't, it was as if Han Shuo had taken the wrong medicine. He pursued Lisa relentlessly, the complete embodiment of “a demon practitioner does as he wishes”.

All at once, Lisa gave a quiet “Ah!” as she slipped while running and fell heavily. Han Shuo had already been close behind Lisa, and took advantage of this opportunity to close the distance in one giant step.

“Ah! Bryan, what are you doing? I’ll definitely kill you if you dare bully me!” Lisa saw that Han Shuo was already standing next to her before she was able to pull herself up. She frantically blurted out a threat when she saw that he was raising his left foot readied himself to kick her.

Han Shuo wore a very odd expression on his face at this time. He frowned fiercely, as if struggling with indecision. Reason wanted to prevent him from kicking Lisa, but after that sentence of “I’ll kill you”, a hint of cruelty appeared on his face. The hovering foot descended and made straight for Lisa’s pert, round butt.

Bam sounded at as the foot connected solidly with its target. Han Shuo felt like his left leg was kicking a smooth, rubber ball due to a feeling of soft buoyancy.

“Ah....”

Lisa gave an uncontrolled scream, like a pig being slaughtered, as she cursed vehemently.

At the same time, the magical yuan, that had been enclosing Claude’s pale-green fighting aura in Han Shuo’s chest, suddenly churned madly like a whirlpool. He could clearly feel that Claude’s fighting aura was being dissolved bit by bit into the whirlpool by the magical yuan’s high speed.

The pale-green fighting aura that had lingered in Han Shuo’s body for the greater part of the day had vanished without a trace in the span of a moment. The magical yuan in Han Shuo’s body felt noticeably stronger. He felt that the pale-green aura had been completely digested by the magical yuan.

And at that moment, the magical yuan in Han Shuo’s chest started circulating aimlessly throughout his body again, but he could feel the energy, that he had just expended, come back. Even his mental state was in the best shape, as if he had just taken some highly potent elixir.

It was then that Han Shuo fully understood the meaning of “a demon practitioner does as he wishes”. It appeared that the magical yuan would spin faster if he followed his internal desires, and could even absorb and transmute fighting aura to become nutrition for the magical yuan.

“A demon practitioner does as he wishes, and benefits himself at the expense of others. So even training should be done this way!” Han Shuo’s facial expressions flickered oddly as he thought to himself.

“Wah... that hurts so much! Damn you Bryan, I’m going to kill you. You hurt me!” Lisa clutched the butt, that was still under Han Shuo’s foot, as she loudly gave voice to threats. There were already hints of tears forming in her eyes. It would seem that Han Shuo had delivered quite a strong kick just now.

His thoughts interrupted, Han Shuo gave a silent cry of dismay inside when he looked at Lisa. He was well acquainted with Lisa’s temper. She was well known for getting revenge. She would not easily let him go after what he’d just done to her.

Particularly as Lisa had actually cried. It would seem that her butt had suffered more than a small injury. All would be over for Han Shuo if the school found out about this.

The club wielding zombie had arrived in front of Han Shuo at that moment, and brought its club crashing down on his head, according to Lisa’s orders.

Han Shuo’s heart gave a great leap as he turned around to see the club descending, but at the same time, he suddenly felt that the club was falling rather slowly. He picked up his feet, and somehow easily avoided the attack.

Han Shuo gave a light “eh?” as he was slightly astonished, and once again dodged easily when he saw the club descending a second time. It was then that he realized that it wasn’t the zombie warrior that had gotten slower, it was that his speed and reflexes that had improved.

“Hehe, still didn’t get me!” He gave a weird cackle as he laid his worries to rest. He continued to evade all of the zombie warrior’s attacks. As he moved, he could feel his body become more and more agile, and even had the spare time to verbally ridicule Lisa.

Lisa had wanted to use the zombie warrior to get revenge for her, but who knew that the damned Bryan would suddenly become as limber as a monkey. He avoided the zombie warrior’s club attacks with a hop here, and a jump there, and even catcalled shamelessly, as if mocking her incompetence.

“Damned Bryan, you’re not going to get off this easily!” Lisa grew a bit distracted thanks to the pain coming from her butt. Upon seeing that the zombie warrior not able to get a bead on Han Shuo, she made a shrill threat, and dismissed the zombie warrior back to another dimension.

She tried to get up from the floor at the same time, but her butt was in too much pain after Han Shuo’s kick, and she cried out “aiyo!” as her legs gave way and she collapsed into a sitting position on the floor again.

Han Shuo was under no more pressure now that the zombie warrior had disappeared, but rather smiled foolishly and made his way to Lisa’s side. He dumbly extended a malnourished hand and said, “Let me take you to the infirmary.”

“None of your business, you damned idiot.” Tear tracks still streaked her face as she replied viciously to Han Shuo. She could still feel the pain radiating from her butt.

Han Shuo seemed to be flabbergasted after hearing her words, and a mischievous, evil glint slowly blossomed in his eyes. He extended his left hand and made as if to touch Lisa’s smooth, pert butt and said dumbly, “Then, let me rub it for you!”

Although Lisa had a vile temper, she was still a beauty. Although her chest wasn’t fully rounded out, her butt was uncommonly perky. His heart lurched immediately when he touched her butt, it felt exceedingly tender, yet firm, and was a delightful handful.

“Ah, go to hell Bryan! Don’t come near me!” Tears still sparkling on Lisa's face, she immediately lost her head and screamed loudly when she felt her butt being touched by Han Shuo. She found strength from somewhere and pilipala beat Han Shuo with both arms and legs.

One of her feet in particular connected solidly with Han Shuo's ankle. He lost his balance and came crashing down on Lisa, with his left hand still on her butt.

A delicate fragrance from Lisa wafted into his nose, and his heart lurched again. Lisa's body felt soft beneath him, and his left hand was still cushioned by her butt. He could clearly feel how soft it was.

It was as if a thunderbolt had struck Lisa in that moment, and she froze there dumbly, staring back at Han Shuo.

But it lasted only a moment, and she didn't continue to scream, but rather lifted both hands and started chanting with a cold face, "Oh endless darkness, turn into destructive bone arrows, and destroy according to my will..."

Han Shuo was horrified and agitated as he knew that that was the beginning of the necromancy spell bone arrow chant. He would be completely unable to dodge if the bone arrows shot at him from such close quarters. Perhaps even some parts of his body would be impaled by the bone arrows. That would not be fun, to say the least. And given that Lisa's expression was icily cold, it was obvious that she wasn't kidding. She really did want to kill Han Shuo.

A thought flashed like lightning through his mind as he decided to not wait for Lisa to finish the chant. He abruptly shot out his arms, pinned down Lisa's slender arms and held her tightly. He followed that up with moving his face closed to her, and frantically smashing his open mouth against her cherry red lips.

"Destroy the... mmph mmph..." Lisa's incantation was thus halted and wasn't completed.

The two mouths met and a smooth, wet feeling flowed into Han Shuo's heart. His entire mind felt out of it, as if he had ascended to the clouds in a split second. His entire being was drifting away, and he had no idea what was going on.

Even before he had landed in Bryan's body, Han Shuo had never kissed a girl before. The feeling of kissing a girl had only existed in his theoretical musings before. Now that it had happened, his immediate reaction was to be dazed with astoundment. He only thought, this feeling – was much more wondrous than he had imagined.

Lisa's face blushed hotly red as her breath came out unevenly. Her eyes were a haze of confusion and she was just as dazed as Han Shuo. She had no realization that she was being violated by Han Shuo at that very moment.

Lisa forcefully pushed Han Shuo away after a while and suddenly pointed at him, her little face flaming red, "Stupid Bryan, why do you always carry a bunch of weird things in your pants. Last time it was rocks, this time it's a club."

Han Shuo, "..."

Chapter 12: Poking one's nose into other people's business

"I..." Han Shuo opened his mouth, but didn't have the time to get a word out before Lisa landed a pilipala wave of hits with her girly fists. She cursed as she hit him, "Damn you Bryan, how dare you kiss me. My first kiss was taken from me by a crazy person! Oh my gosh, this is too scary. I'm going to kill you!"

Han Shuo's mind was also in a jumble in the heat of the moment, since he'd just kissed Lisa. It was Lisa's first time, who's to say it wasn't also Han Shuo's first time as well?

Fear showed on Lisa's face, and her butt was injured, so there was no strength at all behind her girly fists. Han Shuo did not feel any pain, and wasn't even tickled by her hits. He didn't resist, and furiously racked his brain for a way to prevent Lisa from further pursuing this matter.

Lisa seemed to grow tired from hitting him after a while. Her eyes were a bit red and puffy, and she glared viciously at Han Shuo. After she'd stared at him for a moment, Lisa frowned and said coldly, "Bryan, I will let you go if you tell me just one thing."

Momentarily stunned, Han Shuo asked dumbly, "Tell you what?"

"Why has your strength grown during this period? You couldn't avoid even skeletal warriors before, but now, even zombie warriors can't catch up to you. Even that idiot Bach suffered a beating at your hands last time. Claude's fighting aura obviously entered your body this morning, but why didn't you die immediately? Why is all this?" Lisa stared at Han Shuo closely during her interrogation.

Han Shuo inwardly thought, "uh oh" as his heart lurched. His body had indeed become stronger thanks to training his magical yuan, but who would've thought that Lisa would pick up on it so quickly.

He hurriedly considered a few options and then dumbly replied with a silly smile, "I, I don't know... Just that I've eaten a few things recently that have made me feel stronger.”

Lisa’s eyes flashed noticeably after Han Shuo had finished speaking, and she put her face next to his with every bit of interest. She focused her eyes on him and said, “What did you eat? I won’t pursue the matters of today as long as you tell me.”

“Use magical reagents to mix lizard tail and aardwolf teeth... submerge it in warm water for a day and then drink both of them down. That will improve your strength.” Han Shuo contracted his eyebrows and thought deeply for a moment, then delivered those lines with a naive smile.

Lisa’s face wore a serious expression and concentrated wholly on Han Shuo’s words. She repeated his words and then murmured to herself. “Eh? These disgusting things have this effect when mixed together?”

Han Shuo did not respond and only looked at Lisa with a dumb smile.

“Hmph. I’ll let you go today, and will come grab you for magic practice next time.” Lisa thought for a moment, and picked herself up from the ground to leave, but then went “aiyo!” and cursed angrily, “Damned Bryan, your kick was too strong. Why am I always so unlucky around you?!”

Lisa left the training room madly cursing, with one hand rubbing her butt. Han Shuo swiftly followed as soon as she’d left, quickly making his getaway as well, before anyone noticed.

Later that evening, Han Shuo stealthily crept over to the trash dump in the middle of the night. He first tried to use mental strength to command the small skeleton to show itself, but couldn’t reach the skeleton again. He unwillingly bore the stench of trash and rifled through the entire trash dump, finally finding the skeleton at the bottom of all the trash.

The little skeleton had crumpled underneath the trash as if it was asleep, with no outward sign of life. Several bones were scattered from his rib cage, and he appeared to be heavily injured. Due to his connection with the skeleton, Han Shuo knew that the little skeleton had not been junked. Han Shuo felt a wave of pity and guilt looking at the skeleton’s condition, knowing that it had ended up this way because it had received his command to get revenge on Lisa.

“Claude, oh Claude, just you wait. I’ll get my revenge on you some day!”

He grabbed the skeleton and cradled it, once more sneaking back to the warehouse under the cover of night. The skeleton’s loose rib cage bones clattered against each other as he ran, making his heart wring in pity again.

Han Shuo carefully closed the door when they were back in the warehouse, and thought for a moment. He placed the little skeleton in the wooden bucket again and found seven pieces of broken bone after some scavenging. He stuck them in the bucket, and channeled his magical yuan into them, reforming the “Magical Yin Concentration Matrix”. He was attempting to fix the small skeleton’s body with the method used to repair demonic treasures.

In contrast to last time’s severe weakness, Han Shuo felt much better off this time after he had injected his magical yuan into the bucket. It would seem that the magical yuan had increased in amount after digesting Claude’s fighting aura that morning. This set off another line of reasoning in Han Shuo’s mind.

He securely put aside the skeleton and brought out “The Foundations of Magic” from beneath his bed for further study. He had maintained his nightly studies these days, and not even thunder or lightning could sway him from his reading.

Even though this was just a foundations book, and had no record of any major necromancy magics within its pages, for a complete magical rookie like Han Shuo, this book was still much too complex for him.

Tonight, he cross referenced “The Foundations of Magic” alongside the “A Magical Dictionary”, and gradually lost himself in the books. However, despite the aid of “A Magical Dictionary” in this process, he was still unable to understand some of the technical terms within their covers.

He gave a long sigh and put down the two books in his hand, thinking to himself that he’d only started building his understanding of magic over the past ten days. If he could fully comprehend all the material in the books, then there was no point in the continued existence of the Babylon

Academy of Magic and Force. After some thought, he decided to take full advantage of the convenience of his position and eavesdrop on the necromancy classrooms that were currently in session.

Han Shuo settled back into meditation after he had calmed and cleared his mind. He wanted to make the best use of any scrap of spare time to meditate and increase his mental strength. Before he knew it, he had meditated well into the night and then went to sleep peacefully.

Han Shuo was full of vitality when he got up the next day at daybreak, as if his body was full of boundless energy. The little skeleton in the wooden tub next to his bed was still and showed no signs of life. There were seven small swirls next to the seven broken pieces of bone, with subtle hints of black light flowing in the water.

Upon closer inspection, he saw that unbeknownst to anyone, the scattered rib cage bones had reordered themselves. The skeleton's two empty eye hollows also seemed to have black light sparkling in them and appeared quite eerie.

Han Shuo contacted the skeleton with his magical yuan and immediately sensed that the skeleton seemed to be delighting in its newfound life. Also feeling the same, Han Shuo gave a slight smile and said to himself, "Oh little skeleton, you're extremely lucky to be following me. I can keep refining you as long as I have enough magical yuan, and you'll become stronger as a result. One of these days, that Claude will get what's coming to him."

Because the little skeleton was still being refined in the wooden bucket, Han Shuo had to get up himself and dispose of yesterday's trash. Once he had washed his face with briskly cold water, Han Shuo vigorously dusted off all the statues. He completed his duties afterwards, received a piece of black bread, and ran off towards the necromancy classrooms in high spirits, a broom in hand.

"In order to perfectly release magic, both incantations and hand seals are key. If the chant is incorrect, or the gesture incorrect, then you will be unable to perform magic. Magic is a mysterious power, the art of borrowing strength from the elements found on earth and in the heavens by employing mental strength, along with mysterious incantations. Magic then finds its target through hand seals...”

The necromancy students were either attentively or lackadaisically listening to Master Gene. A few windows down, Han Shuo listened with all his concentration and unconsciously waved the broom in his hand.

Gene was the same as Fanny, a necromancy adept mage, as well as a teacher for the major. Gene mainly instructed the basics and foundations of magic, and was in charge of helping students through the more difficult parts of the material. Fanny on the other hand, taught students how to supplement attacks with necromancy magics and led the students in experimenting with necromancy magic.

For all the other majors at the academy, not only did they have adept mages for teachers, but they also had even more knowledgeable, more powerful magi (plural of magus) holding down the fort. But due to the lack of students in the necromancy major, Gene and Fanny were the only two teachers, and only adept class at that. On one hand, it was true that there was no need to dedicate too many resources to the tiny necromancy major; but on the other, it was also due to the fact that necromancy had become unpopular, resulting in a corresponding decrease in the number of necromancy magi.

At the Babylon Academy of Magic and Force, students could graduate as long as they passed through a gauntlet of exams. Of course, if students wanted to continue their journey with the academy, they were free to stay and study within the school grounds. Many majors would separate students according to apprentice, novice, and journeyman classes, but because there were too few necromancy students, all the students were lumped into one class.

At this moment, Han Shuo was concentrating with all his might, and a trace of joyous glee could be seen in the smile on his lowered head. It had been just a few moments, but Han Shuo had already thought through some of the theories that had perplexed him endlessly, thanks to Gene’s explanations. His tepid, old-fashioned tone was the soothing music of angels to Han Shuo's ears, and he lost himself in it.

Bam sounded out as a student, wearing magician's robes, suddenly fell down in front of Han Shuo. His butt stuck up in the air as his face became intimately acquainted with the white marble floors. He grimaced in pain as he picked himself up, turned to glare at Han Shuo, and said angrily, "Bryan, how dare you trip me with the broom handle."

"Ah... I was only sweeping!" Han Shuo immediately responded with a panicked, upraised voice when he saw that the person was Fitch.

Fitch was 176 cm tall and had light blue hair. His thin frame combined with a billowy magician's robe, made him look like a wrapped up wooden stick. He was a journeyman mage in the necromancy major, and had long wanted to pass the tests to be promoted to adept mage. Unfortunately, he had failed multiple times, and rumor had it that he'd made another attempt. It would seem that he'd just returned.

Han Shuo had been enthralled by Gene's lecture on foundational magic and had paid no heed to the broom in his hand. No wonder Fitch had been tripped.

"Eh? Fitch has come back. Heh heh, did you fail again? Looks like you need to try much harder if you want to become an adept mage. I welcome your return. Bryan must not have done it on purpose just now, don't mind him!" Gene have a light laugh in the classroom, and spoke with concealed banter.

Han Shuo was not in the least grateful for Gene speaking up for him, but rather cursed him for poking his nose in other people's business.

Fitch had a bad temper to begin with, but wasn't really a bad sort. Even though he had failed on countless occasions to pass the adept mage exams, he still experimented tirelessly due to his great love for necromancy. Fitch was the leader of Bach and a few others, but normally wouldn't pick on Bryan and other errand boys.

However, both Fitch and Gene had a crush on Fanny. Fitch tried so hard to advance to adept class in large part due to something Fanny had said before, "I will only consider you if you become an adept mage."

Because of this, this teacher and student pair disliked each other intensely. If it wasn't for Gene's words, Han Shuo might have escaped further retribution, but now that Gene had spoken, it was bound to have the opposite effect.

Chapter 13: Mystical Glacial Spellfire

Indeed, Fitch's face twisted sinisterly as soon as Gene had finished speaking, almost as if someone had stepped on his face with a dirty shoe. He quickly glanced at the dumbly smiling Han Shuo, but proceeded to speak to Gene, "Master Gene, this outrageous errand slave dared to trip me. How can I not teach him a lesson?!"

Fitch rolled up his sleeves as he spoke, and hit Han Shuo on the head with his grey magic staff. Han Shuo actually breathed a sigh of relief when he saw that Fitch wasn't using magic, but merely his staff instead. Although Fitch was tall, he didn't have much strength. Han Shuo saw that the blow was descending without too much force, and decided to ignore it entirely. He stood there and made no attempt to dodge, just continued to smile in a silly, honest way.

Pow!

Han Shuo suddenly experienced acute pain when the magic staff knocked against his forehead. He gave a bloodcurdling "aiyo!" and grimaced in pain from the magic staff in Fitch's hands. Who would've thought that although the staff looked like it was made of wood, it had the heft and hardness of metal. Han Shuo could only feel that his brain was buzzing with agony, and that a huge lump had already formed on his forehead.

"Damnit, why is this magic staff so hard and so heavy? I've miscalculated this time!" Han Shuo thought as his forehead was bashed again, before his brain had had a chance to recover from the first hit. He felt his head grow heavy, and he stiffly fainted dead away onto the ground.

When Han Shuo came to, he found himself on a large, soft bed. Faint medicinal scents floated in the air. He noticed that the two big lumps on his head had already faded, and there seemed to be some type of ointment applied to them. It had a cooling effect and felt very comfortable.

"You're awake?" A face suddenly came near him. Light purple, wavy, long hair, sparkling clear eyes, fresh white teeth, and sexy red lips blew out a breath of slight fragrance onto Han Shuo's face.

"Eh, Fan... Master Fanny!" Han Shuo's gave a soft gasp at the sight of the pretty face in front him, and his heart began pounding. He pulled himself up into a sitting position on the bed and glanced around, taking in his surroundings.

The room was 20 square meters, and a large upright drawer was nearby. It contained a variety of medicinal vials, as well as some bones from magical creatures on the side. The walls were filled with magical drawings and text. In the middle was a pedestal made of darkly colored rocks, with a simple magic matrix formed on top of it. One glance was enough to tell Han Shuo that this was Fanny's laboratory.

As Han Shuo was observing his surroundings, Fanny was also scrutinizing him with a great deal of surprise. It wasn't until Han Shuo's sight had made a full circle and looked towards her, that Fanny extended a slender finger and lightly tapped his forehead. A small exclamation of bewilderment followed shortly thereafter, "Eh? The bumps went down so quickly? There wasn't even any bleeding under such a heavy staff thumping... How is this possible?"

Han Shuo's heart lurched when Fanny's finger touched him, and his nose greedily took in a deep breath. His lips curved up slightly in satisfaction as a whiff of fragrance drifted towards him.

Fanny, on the other hand, was stunned by Han Shuo's behavior. His actions just now bore a few obvious hints of wanton seduction, and was a marked difference from Bryan's typical timid and cowardly behavior. This made her pause in incomprehension, but a low sigh of understanding followed thereafter. She murmured lightly, "I didn't believe them before, but it does seem that Bryan has gone a little crazy. I can't believe an Agony of the Soul has turned him into this, sigh!"

Although Fanny had murmured in an exceedingly low voice, Han Shuo clearly heard everything. He laughed wryly inside, and thought that here was yet another person who truly believed that he had gone mad.

Suddenly, an expression of heightened curiosity appeared on Fanny's face and she said earnestly, “Bryan, the bruises and bumps on your forehead healed so quickly; there’s nothing there now. Is this an aftereffect of the Agony of the Soul? Aiya, this is really too incredible. I have something to research further again. Necromancy magic is truly wondrous indeed!”

Han Shuo could only smile wryly with some resignation, as he watched Fanny ‘pilipala’ rifle wildly through her things with great excitement. Han Shuo was just a crazy person to her right now. He naturally couldn’t explain that training magical yuan was the reason behind his body’s oddities.

Fanny was not wearing her glasses again today, and was exuberantly rummaging through magical items on all sides. After a while, she sashayed towards Han Shuo, holding a light green ball the size of her palm. The light green ball lit up with a soft, green glow, and after she abruptly said an incantation, she placed the ball on top of Han Shuo’s forehead.

Strong magical undulations rippled out from the ball. It was like a magnet, firmly glued to Han Shuo’s forehead as the light green ball sucked out the last bit of mental strength from his mind. The light green ball suddenly flickered like a broken green light bulb.

“Oh... this is too inconceivable! Bryan, you have mental strength in your mind! Oh my gosh, what’s going on? Can it be that the Agony of the Soul has the ability to bestow ordinary people with mental strength, after they have been baptized by magic? This is too unbelievable!” Fanny suddenly hollered, astonishment and fright written all over her face. It seemed that discovering that Han Shuo’s mind had mental strength was more than a small shock to her.

“I’ve decided, this will be my future research topic. If the Agony of the Soul doesn’t turn someone crazy and can leave traces mental strength within a body, then even an ordinary person can become a mage. Oh... this is too unimaginable!”

Gurgle.

It was at this moment that Han Shuo's stomach protested with hunger. The excitement still had not receded from Fanny's face as she breathlessly told Han Shuo. "It's getting late today, go back and rest first. I'll come find you often in the future. I'll go discuss with the school authorities to lighten your workload appropriately and increase your rations, until I've finished studying this topic."

Joy blossomed in Han Shuo's heart as he heard Fanny's words. Evil thoughts kept crossing his mind as he watched the glamorous Fanny. He thought that good luck was unstoppable when it came; not only did his workload suddenly lighten and food rations increase, but he had an excuse to get closer to Fanny. It looked like Fitch had actually helped him a great deal with this beating.

When he left Fanny's lab, Han Shuo lifted his head and saw that it was dusk when he noticed the fading light in the sky. He rubbed his forehead and discovered that apart from a bit of light pain, there wasn't much else wrong with him now.

He completed his afternoon duties with lightning speed, and bumped into Jack at the place where bread was given out. Jack was extremely surprised to see Han Shuo, and cast weird glances at him. He asked doubtfully, "Bryan, I heard that you had two huge bumps on your head and fainted because of Fitch's magic staff? How come there isn't a trace of that now?"

"Master Fanny smeared magical reagents on me, the bumps naturally faded away quite quickly. Heh heh, Master Fanny is beautiful and gentle!" Han Shuo laughed happily at Jack.

"Bryan, this is your food for the day!" A voice called out from the dining hall window. Han Shuo swiftly ran over and received a piece of white bread, a small cup of milk and a fried egg.

"Eh? Brother Gotha did you make a mistake? Bryan should get the same food as us, and even a smaller piece of bread than mine!" The boy who Han Shuo had beaten up last time – Carey, waved a piece of black bread in his hand and yelled loudly at the fatty who was in charge of dispensing errand boy rations – Gotha.

Gotha cast a cold glance at Carey and lightly snorted, “This is correct, it came straight from the school authorities. This will also be Bryan’s rations in the future. Go talk to the school authorities if you have opinions about it. Hmph. But you’re just a small errand boy, you’d be making life difficult for yourself if you said anything.”

Han Shuo gave a large shout of laughter as he saw Carey and Borg’s angry expressions while holding his white bread, milk, and egg. He purposely smacked his lips loudly when eating the bread, and kept up a long litany of praises. “Mm-mm, this white bread definitely tastes different from black bread. Ah, There’s even milk and eggs. Oh goodness, this is such a happy day.”

“Eh... Bryan, can I drink some milk? That milk looks so delicious!” Little fatty Jack licked his lips and looked enviously at Han Shuo.

“There’s still half a cup left, take it!” Han Shuo generously passed it to Jack and pulled him away, smiling merrily as the two walked away, leaving Carey and Borg behind casting disgruntled looks.

Han Shuo took a look at the small skeleton later that night, back at the warehouse. He noticed that the small skeleton was still laying in the wooden bucket, but that the seven swirls in the bucket had stopped moving. He understood with a glance that this was because the magical yuan had run out, and extended a hand to coalesce more magical yuan into the seven bone fragments. It was only when the seven swirls had reformed around the bone fragments that he stopped and went to bed.

The “Yin Magical Concentration Matrix” was just one method in refining demonic treasures. According to instructions, one infusion of magical yuan should have been enough to maintain the matrix for a full 36 days. However, this expected result hadn’t been achieved partially due to the weaknesses of Han Shuo’s magical yuan, and also because he had randomly scavenged various ingredients together.

Han Shuo felt that the magical yuan within his body had become much stronger after a bit of meditation and training on the bed. A sudden thought struck him, and he wondered if he could use the magical yuan to practice the combative magics that Chu Cang Lan had left behind in his mind.

Han Shuo's eyebrows knit together in deep thought as he started down this path of thought. He could vaguely feel that there were numerous training methods in his mind, but that many of these secret demonic techniques were a bit fuzzy, as if a thin layer of opaque paper prevented clear understanding.

His brows furrowed as he slowly searched through his memories. He realized that the memories in his mind seemed to be in great disarray, and that he could not fully recall all of them. He could only fully remember three topics, one of which was the basics of training magical yuan, and the other was the "Yin Magical Concentration Matrix" for refining demonic treasures. Apart from this two, there was another cantrap called the "Mystical Glacial Spellfire".

The "Mystical Glacial Spellfire" was a way of using magical yuan, and its power would increase according to the practitioner's level. The practitioner would be able to create red and purple spellfire on his palm if he circulated his magical yuan in a particular fashion amongst the meridians. The red flame was searingly hot, and the purple glacially cold. If the magical yuan and practitioner level was high enough, then he would be able to coalesce his magical yuan into two huge red and purple spellfires on his palms. This attack would be both searingly hot and glacially cold.

It was as if Han Shuo had received a precious treasure after he had fully understood all this. He decided to ignore all the indeterminate, obstructed memories and started circulating his magical yuan according to the "Mystical Glacial Spellfire" method. He slowly concentrated his magical yuan into his right hand, but his right hand meridian felt like it was on fire as the magical yuan flowed through it during this process. His right arm became sore, numb and stiff as that thin, wispy meridian felt like it had been electrocuted.

The magical yuan would be able to easily and quickly flow to the hand if he hadn't been circulating it according to the "Mystical Glacial Spellfire" method. But each time he circulated the magical yuan according to the spellfire's instructions, it was as if the magical yuan had met significant obstacles. Each tiny bit of progress was accompanied by almost unbearable pain and discomfort. It wasn't until midnight that Han Shuo was able to finally circulate some magical yuan from shoulder into wrist, but his entire arm prickled in pain and was useless.

He understood that only by guiding all the magical yuan into his palm and fingertips would he be able to truly make use of the "Mystical Glacial Spellfire" method. It hurt so much now because he was clearing miniscule meridians, acclimating them to magical yuan. Short term pain was inevitable, and it would all go away once all the meridians were cleared.

Han Shuo's eyelids grew heavy, as he was uncommonly tired, and he decided to flop onto the bed and sleep when he thought about his duties tomorrow. He wouldn't be able to finish magic training in one night either.

Han Shuo had a strange dream that night, one in which the little skeleton obeyed his commands, and beat up that Fitch who had knocked him on his forehead, getting revenge for Han Shuo.

Chapter 14: Took care of it in advance

The next day, Han Shuo was rudely awakened by a heavy trash bag being dumped on him.

He had been sweetly dreaming when he felt a heavy mountain toppling down on him. He alertly scrambled up from the bed, and rubbed his eyes to see that there was an extra heavy bag of trash on the bed. He immediately understood that someone must've thrown their trash in through the warehouse window.

He nagged and cursed randomly, kicking the bag of trash off the bed. The bag landed with a thump and rolled towards the door. Han Shuo was about to go back to sleep, when he realized that the time must've been late if someone had thrown a bag of trash in.

The sun had indeed risen high into the sky when Han Shuo pushed open the windows to take in the view. He sighed in turn, thinking that he had overexerted himself with training last night. He had definitely overslept today, and was about to hurry out the door, when he suddenly recalled last night's dream. He seemed to remember that the little skeleton had gotten revenge on Fitch for him. Han Shuo's heart leapt in fright when he remembered that last time he had a similar dream, the events had actually happened. His gaze quickly searched towards the wooden bucket.

He was greeted with the sight of the skeleton resting two bony, black hands on the sides of the bucket, and its left leg bone crossed on top of its right leg bone, swinging lazily to and fro, as if it was enjoying a sauna. It looked very comfortable and looked every bit a dapper rogue.

Han Shuo breathed a sigh of relief upon seeing it still in the wooden bucket and mused silently for a moment. He got up and shoved the bucket underneath the bed, and only left the warehouse to tackle his day's duties after he'd grabbed a trash bag to plug the space underneath the bed.

"Hi Bryan, what took you so long today?" Jack was dusting off the statues as he greeted Han Shuo from afar with a smile.

Han Shuo glanced around him and knew that he was late because no students were passing by on this path. Classes must already be in session.

“Oh, my mind’s groggy after Fitch’s two taps yesterday. That’s why I overslept.”

“Heh heh!” Jack suddenly gave a light, gloating laugh and put his head confidentially next to Han Shuo’s. He said lowly, “Bryan, you don’t need to be mad. I heard the students talking on the way to class today. That the black, seven-winged skeleton, that appeared last time, beat Fitch up last night. His face is bruised and puffy!”

Han Shuo, “....”

So the dream really had taken place, with a few marked differences from what he’d imagined. This time, the little skeleton was noticeably much faster and had already finished executing its commands. No wonder the little skeleton had been lying in the bucket in a different position from the night when he checked the bucket this morning.

“Eh, Bryan. Why aren’t you saying anything? Are you too happy? Haha, that must be the case. That black skeleton is really something. When Fitch had been beaten awake, he only saw the flapping of the seven wings. The skeleton leapt straight down from the window and escaped that way. Oh! Fitch lives on the fourth floor. It’s amazing that the skeleton didn’t land in pieces of broken bones!”

Han Shuo gave two dry coughs and was feeling quite gratified. He glossed over the topic and said, “Well done! I wonder who summoned that little skeleton and got revenge for me. I’ve been so lucky lately!”

No more unlucky things happened to Han Shuo in the next few days, and no one came looking for him to practice magic. In these days, Han Shuo took advantage of the rare quiet to stand outside the necromancy classrooms early in the morning, and eavesdrop on Gene’s lectures with a broom in hand.

Maybe it was due to his beating at the hands of the skeleton, but Fitch didn’t show up to class in those few days. Han Shuo eavesdropped on Gene’s explanations of magical knowledge everyday, and was enlightened on many theories that he simply did not understand prior.

At night, Han Shuo practiced the “Mystical Glacial Spellfire”, and bit by bit, circulated the magical yuan towards his right palm and fingertips according to the spellfire’s prescribed method. It burned with pain each time, but over the course of these few days, Han Shuo had almost circulated the magical yuan to his wrist.

He continued to study “The Foundations of Necromancy”, and would mentally note the portions he didn’t understand to see if Gene, by chance, mentioned any of those topics when Han Shuo was eavesdropping on his classes.

Now that Han Shuo’s rations had increased and his body was receiving more nutrition, not to mention him training his magical yuan, Han Shuo’s originally delicate body unconsciously underwent some fundamental changes. He started to form muscles, and even seemed to grow a bit taller, while his temperament changed as well.

The necromancy students all relegated Han Shuo’s changes as the aftermath of him going crazy. Han Shuo basked in the ease of no one paying him much attention, and continued to work and covertly practice magic. He was happy to witness the changes in his body.

“Oh endless darkness, turn into destructive bone arrows, and destroy according to my will, bone arrows!” A length of cuttngly sharp bone arrow materialized out of thin air when the incantation was completed, and flew towards a straw figure in front of Han Shuo with a flick of his finger. However, it suddenly shuddered halfway through.

Pa!

The bone arrow suddenly exploded halfway to its target, and from the look of its direction, it had veered greatly off course. It wasn’t aimed towards the straw stuffed figure at all.

Han Shuo gave a low sigh as he shook his head, thinking that understanding theory was one matter, actually using it was another. Han Shuo had been practicing this lowest level bone arrow magic near the cemetery these days, and he’d never been able to successfully cast it. Either he wasn’t able to summon the arrow, or its direction was greatly off course and would explode mid-flight.

Han Shuo understood that repeated practice was necessary in order to successfully cast necromancy magic. Only through constant practice would he be able to fully grasp the particulars of a spell, and be able to successfully cast it without any errors or flaws.

These days, Han Shuo would always train his magical yuan for a while whenever night fell, then sneak over to the cemetery, where he had once been dumped as a corpse, to practice necromancy in the dead of night. The little skeleton would stand there unmoving once it had hauled over two bags of trash and thrown them away.

Just as Han Shuo was reflecting on the incantation and hand seals he had used just now, and was trying to figure out where he had gone wrong with employing his mental strength, he suddenly heard rushed footsteps in the distance. He started and quickly hid in the randomly scattered rock outcroppings next to the cemetery.

The cemetery was expansive and completely quiet at night. Few visited apart from Han Shuo stopping by to throw away discarded magical ingredients. He furtively practiced magic here because he didn't want to be discovered, and naturally hid out of sight when he heard footsteps sound.

After a while, a tall, solidly built, blue-haired, middle aged man, with his clothes dyed crimson from blood and bloody froth at his mouth, came into Han Shuo's line of sight. He wielded a broadsword and staggered forward with an anxious look. He stumbled directionless, and kept checking behind his back.

His body shuddered when he reached the area where Han Shuo had been practicing before, and his footsteps swayed as he fell to the ground. He fished out a grey handbag from an inner chest pocket, randomly pawed at the earth twice and stuck the bag into the dirt. He got up and continued running after he had smoothed over the earth.

"Dylan, where can you run to now!" A benevolent voice carried from afar as a black light flashed and materialized into a thin, frail, old man behind the middle aged man. He wore a compassionate smile on his face and his master's robes were rimmed with gold. He carried an obviously precious staff that was embedded with a ruby, sapphire, and topaz.

A ball of dark green light swiftly flew in from afar after the frail, old kindly mage had appeared. When it reached the clearing, the dark green light abruptly disappeared and a strongly built, muscular looking swordsman equipped with a longsword appeared.

"Master Duke, how should we handle Dylan?" The swordsman stood politely next to the mage and asked humbly after he had arrived.

The compassionate old mage, Duke, wrinkled his sparse eyebrows and looked at the figure collapsed on the ground with blood coming out of his mouth. "Poor Dylan... he's probably at the end of his tether. He should not suffer this kind of pain. Erick, send him on his way!"

"The master is too kind!" Swordsman Erick praised with an odd expression on his face, and suddenly flashed like lightning towards the still running Dylan. Han Shuo caught a fleeting glance of a ball of dark green light as blood splattered from Dylan's back, and he finally fell to the ground, unmoving.

Erick sheathed his longsword and immediately bent down to search Dylan's body. His facial expression became uglier and uglier, he finally stood up and said resignedly, "Master Duke, it isn't on him!"

"How is that possible!" Duke was shocked and his expression shifted. He summoned Dylan's corpse with a wave of his staff, chanted a wind magic incantation, and several sharp blades of wind appeared to shred the corpse's clothing to pieces.

Han Shou clearly saw it all while hiding behind the outcrop of rock. The dark green light blossoming from Erick's longsword indicated that he was a senior knight.

That such a senior knight was so respectful to that Duke meant that the identity, or ability of this person, was even higher. It was the first time that Han Shuo had seen a murder committed, and his heart pounded as it raced with panic.

“It really isn’t on him!” Duke muttered to himself and tossed Dylan’s naked body to the ground like trash with another wave of his staff.

Duke shook his staff again, and a strong pulse of mental strength gushed towards Han Shuo. Han Shuo’s body flew up against his will and landed in front of Duke.

“Eh? How did you know I was there?” Not only was Han Shuo panicking internally, but his mouth was panicking as well. He flailed around with his limbs in mid air and yelled with disbelief.

“Heh, what a cute, innocent little fellow! Judging from your clothes, you’re from the Babylon Academy of Magic and Force?” Duke gazed kindly upon Han Shuo and dumped him on the ground after delivering these lines.

“Yeah, I’m an errand boy from the Babylon Academy. I was here to throw away magical trash. I didn’t see anything just now. Eh, it’s getting late. You guys keep chatting, I’m going back now.”

Han Shuo stood up from the ground and responded with a face full of naivete. He took two measured steps towards the academy’s grounds, then increased his speed and ran away with all his might. These two weird guys might do something detrimental to me, best get away as soon as possible.

“Heh, this fellow is a bit shrewd. Erick, why don’t you send him on his way!” Duke spoke benevolently and laughed lightly behind Han Shuo’s back.

Han Shuo felt a strong current of air rapidly approach as soon as Duke had finished speaking.

Chapter 15: I'm rich, I'm rich

Han Shuo understood that Erick must have increased his speed and was rushing towards him to kill him, just like Erick had killed Dylan, because he could feel the killing intent gradually approaching from behind.

At this time, Han Shuo concentrated his focus for the first time in his life. Maybe it was because he had been training, but Han Shuo, now, not only had an extremely agile body, but was also much more bold than before. There would have been nothing but fear left in his heart right now if he was still his old self.

The magical yuan within Han Shuo's body was swirling much faster than normal at this very moment. As he was running, he felt that his body had inexhaustible energy. Add to the fact that he was exceedingly familiar with the terrain, he actually widened the gap between him and Erick as he darted left and right while running.

"Eh!" Erick was surprised as he hadn't counted on Han Shuo being able to run so fast. Not only was he a fast runner, but his direction kept changing without warning. Erick's face grew hard as Han Shuo was about to disappear from sight, and the longsword in his hand began to glow with a dark green sheen. He forcefully plucked up some large rocks that were nearby.

As Han Shuo ran further away, he felt that he was sprinting smoothly and in fine shape. When he realized that he was leaving Erick's aura behind him, the joy of surviving a cataclysm rose in his heart.

It was at that moment that two sound waves boomed in the air. Han Shuo only knew that his two legs were heavily hit a few times. He immediately sank to his knees and fell flat on his face while he was running away. His face became intimately associated with the dirt, and his entire body fell to the floor.

"Little fella, sorry about this!"

Erick lightly called apologetically as he flicked the longsword in his hand. A ball of dark green light materialized and swiftly flew towards Han Shuo.

His mind clearer than ever before, Han Shuo felt the magical yuan within his body churning madly. His legs, that had been sore beyond belief moments ago, no longer ached as badly. As he faced the lethal blow, Han Shuo pushed off from the ground with both hands and feet and rolled to the left.

Clang!

The ball of dark green light from Erick's longsword landed where Han Shuo had been laying on the ground. Multiple fractures crisscrossed over the hard ground like a chessboard. Each crack was several meters deep. If Han Shuo had still been there, he would have likely been torn to pieces.

"I really didn't see anything, don't kill me!" Han Shuo was scared witless after he dodged that blow and took in the ground's condition. He spoke with twisted expression as he hurriedly scrambled up, preparing to run for his life again.

"Little fella, you're quite nimble for someone so skinny, but you saw something today that you shouldn't have seen. My apologies, I have to kill you!" Erick shrugged his shoulder and smiled with resignation.

A few rocks, the size of a person's head, flew up as he flicked his sword, and came hurtling towards Han Shuo. Han Shuo freaked out a bit, and anxiously dodged from side to side. As he was dodging, Erick soundlessly appeared behind Han Shuo, and a ball of dark green light sank into his body with a flick of Erick's longsword.

All of a sudden, Han Shuo flew out and once again kissed the ground, with all his limbs flung out. The pain from his spine was intensely bone deep, and the magical yuan within his body furiously congregated in his back, firmly enclosing the dark green aura that had landed in Han Shuo's body.

"Hoo... why do I feel like I've lost a bit of fighting aura? This is a bit strange. Have I overexerted myself? Hmm. Yes, that must be it. This kid runs fast, good thing it's finally taken care of!"

Han Shuo had been ready to run again when he heard Erick mutter to himself. Han Shuo's current body condition was the same as the time when Claude's fighting aura had attacked his body, but the only difference was, Erick's dark green aura was even stronger. The magical yuan couldn't fully enclose it, so Han Shuo's back was a mess of blood and flesh, and looked quite terrifying.

Han Shuo held his breath as a thought struck him, and lay there, afraid to move a single muscle. But at this time, the little skeleton seemed to sense Han Shuo's danger and seemed to be on its way to defend its master. Maybe due to the extraordinary amount of pain he was in, Han Shuo's mental strength seemed to be more concentrated than it had ever been, and so he gave an order in the nick of time for the little skeleton to remain where it was.

The tomb that the little skeleton was in was a bit far from Duke. But if it crawled out of the tomb to hurry here, Duke would definitely discover it. Although he didn't know Duke's rank, Han Shuo could tell from previous events that he was extremely powerful, and didn't want the little skeleton to come rushing to its death.

Erick panted a few times, muttered to himself a bit more, then picked Han Shuo up by the collar and brought him to a crumbling tomb nearby. He didn't bother to check Han Shuo's condition as he confidently threw his body down into the tomb, behaving as if Han Shuo had naturally died already.

That was understandable, given that Han Shuo was just an ordinary errand boy. He would naturally be dead after taking a hit from a senior knight, how could there be any exceptions?

Erick did not tarry after he threw Han Shuo into the tomb, and immediately followed his original route back. There was no more movement in this area after a while.

Han Shuo's back hurt like hell and he was busy mentally cursing all of Erick and Duke's families. He didn't dare climb out of the tomb until an hour later, when he gritted his teeth against the pain from his back and slowly, arduously crawled out of the tomb.

He expended some effort in touching his back and felt that it was a bit sticky. When he saw the blood on his hand, he silently noted this incident. If there was a chance in the future, he would pay it all back with interest. Grimacing against the pain, he cautiously walked towards the previous clearing. He crept surreptitiously the whole way, deeply afraid that the two would still be there.

Han Shuo discovered that even Dylan's corpse had disappeared when he finally made it back. Looks like they've randomly thrown it into one of the tombs nearby. He summoned the little skeleton out from its hiding place and left, cursing loudly as he did. He kept thinking damn I'm unlucky. Looks like I should avoid practicing here for the next few days.

He suddenly stopped upon reaching a certain place, and glanced at the dirt beneath his feet. Han Shuo remembered that Dylan had fallen here when he was running for his life, and buried a grey bag beneath his feet. Duke and Erick seemed to have discussed searching Dylan for something, could it be the bag that Dylan had just buried?

He clenched his teeth with pain and bent down, carefully pawing away the soft dirt on the ground and picked up the grey handbag. It weighed heavily in the hand, and clinked when shook. The material and style of this bag was so much better than the one he was using. He yanked at the drawstrings, shoved his hand inside and brought out a few silver coins.

"I'm rich, I'm rich!" Han Shuo knew that silver coins were the currency of this world. Bryan had never even held a single silver coin in his years as an errand slave. Now looking at the coins in his hand, Han Shuo couldn't hold back his laughter. Even the pain from his back wasn't as severe as before.

Swoosh!

He dumped out the contents of the bag onto the ground, revealing a dark green jade box the size of a palm. It was quite heavy and cool to the touch. There was a depression that seemed to be a keyhole, and actually a green key next to the box as well.

However, this wasn't the center of Han Shuo's attention. His eyes were glued to the coins in front of him and he smiled dumbly and repeated, "I'm rich, rich!"

Three gold coins, 12 silver coins and 56 bronze coins. That was the money contents of the bag. One gold coin could be exchanged for 100 silver coins, and one silver coin for 100 bronze coins. Even with Han Shuo's improved rations, a day's worth of bread, milk and fried eggs were less than ten silvers. If this money was exchanged for food, it would be enough for two years of his rations.

Bryan had originally been sold for five golds to the Babylon Academy of Magic and Force. The money here was enough for half of his life.

After a bout of extreme joy, Han Shuo was all smiles as he put the money back into the bag. His eyes then landed on the dark green jade box and green key. He frowned as he recalled Duke and Erick's clothing. It was apparent that the two were persons of some stature, Duke's robes and staff were in particular priceless items.

Although these coins were a great fortune to him, they would be nothing to Duke. They wouldn't have hunted Dylan for this money, and to kill even Han Shuo over it.

Were they after the contents of this jade box?

Han Shuo's gaze focused on the dark green jade box sitting still on the ground as his thoughts traveled down this path. Under the moonbeams, the jade box sparkled with a faint green glow indiscernible to a careless eye. The hazy green glow was extremely faint, and had an unearthly beauty to it.

As Han Shuo was silently gazing upon the jade box, concentrating his mental strength with unusual clarity, he suddenly felt a sinisterly cold presence emanate from the box. The box flowed up Han Shuo's mental strength and almost traveled right into his bones. Han Shuo shuddered uncontrollably and closed his eyes tightly.

This box was a bit strange!

He took a deep breath in, calmed himself, and then looked around in paranoia. He swiftly stashed the jade box and key back into the grey handbag, and staggered back to the warehouse.

Back in the warehouse, Han Shuo did not study the jade box further, and even temporarily left the money alone. He hid the handbag underneath the bed with a bit of a fear, commanded the little skeleton to wash and dress his back, then sank into a deep sleep.

Chapter 16: A lot of people are hitting me

Noon, the training fields for the necromancy major.

Han Shuo was absentmindedly cleaning as he ran through Master Gene's morning lecture in his mind. Han Shuo's eyebrows were slightly as he was deep in thought.

A fat figure sprinted in from the door and came to a stop in front of Han Shuo. Jack panted heavily as he said hurriedly, "Bad news Bryan! Carey and Borg are coming to get revenge on you!"

Han Shuo was a bit unhappy that his thoughts had been interrupted. He frowned upon seeing Jack's panicked face and asked, "What going on? Didn't I beat up those two idiots last time? What do they want with me again?"

"I don't know, I'm not sure either. I only heard that they're in pain because they ate something this morning. Their faces are all green! They're yelling about getting revenge on you, even Lisa's looking for you!"

Han Shuo still felt a bit of pain when he touched his back, but it felt a lot better than it had last night. The magical yuan had eventually fully enclosed the dark green fighting aura within his spine, and seemed to be shrinking slowly. This gave Han Shuo a small bit of comfort.

"Don't blame me since you've come looking for death!" Han Shuo coldly snorted and tightly grasped the broom in his hand as he looked towards the door.

Jack still wore an anxious expression on his face as he wringed his hands, "Bryan, it's different this time. Carey and Borg got a few helpers and they don't seem to be errand boys from the necromancy major. They're all really tall and strong! Hurry and run!"

"Damned Bryan, how dare you plot against us! I'll make you pay today!" Carey's voice had already traveled in from outside as Jack was urgently trying to convince Han Shuo to run. A crowd of people had already blocked the training field doors by the time he'd finished speaking.

Carey and Borg really did have green faces, and Borg “eurped” as soon as they had walked in through the doors. He clutched his stomach and his body spasmed for a while. He vomited a black and gooey liquid, and his breath immediately smelled of a bitter sourness.

Carey’s already green face looked even worse after seeing Borg spit something out. His stomach also seemed to be in pain as he coughed into his hand, but couldn’t vomit anything despite wanting to.

“Bryan, what did you tell Lisa to refine?! She fed it to us and we’re like this now! It’s my death or yours today!” He clutched his stomach with one hand and pointed an accusing finger with the other as he spoke bitterly. Borg’s body felt a bit weak after vomiting, and leaned on the door to keep himself upright.

He smiled inwardly as Han Shuo felt silly. He had randomly made up some disgusting things to fob off Lisa last time she’d asked him why he suddenly became so agile and vigorous, but who knew that she’d take it for real and actually refine the revolting things. It looks like she’d experimented on Borg and Carey, no wonder the two looked worse than death.

“No, no I didn’t!” Han Shuo shook his head and said with an expression of ignorance. He looked dumb and quite innocent.

“Lisa told us everything. How dare you still say you didn’t! I’m not leaving until I teach you a lesson today!” Carey bellowed angrily and made a gesture at those he’d brought with him. There were six errand boys, including Borg. They rolled up their sleeves and walked menacingly towards Han Shuo.

Apart from Carey and Borg, the other errand boys were from the department of dark magic, but they didn’t quite measure up to Jack’s description of being tall and strong. They were tall alright, but the tall ones were stick thin. There were strong ones alright, but they weren’t as tall as Han Shuo. On a whole, the tall ones weren’t strong, and the strong ones weren’t tall. Their fighting ability probably didn’t amount to much.

He flexed his hands, but still wore a dull expression on his face. An uncontrollable desire to rage and vent grew in his heart, and seemed that it would only be appeased by beating all of these people into the ground.

This desire came swiftly and unexpectedly, and it filled Han Shuo's mind within the blink of an eye, like an incantation spurring him to action. Han Shuo's personality had always been rather passive, and very rarely took the initiative to offend someone. He hadn't dare get into trouble by being too cocky, but with his strength and speed now, it was very likely that the fallout would be severe if they fought. Han Shuo wasn't willing for such a development to occur, but he didn't seem to have rational control over his faculties at the moment.

This feeling was the same as the situation when he'd faced Lisa in the training fields last time. All rational thoughts had been abandoned, and he took action according to his heart's inner desires. It was then that Claude's fighting aura had finally been digested by the magical yuan.

The situation was the same today. The magical yuan had enclosed Claude's fighting aura, and his inner desires were strong beyond belief.

He turned to see a cowering and shaking Jack. There were no more traces of honest dumbness on Han Shuo's face, the look from his eyes was as sharp as twin knives, with a streak of a gambler's fervor. He handed Jack the broom handle and said coldly, "Hold this. Stick anyone who dares hit you!"

He paused, pointed towards the sharp end of the metal broom, and said lightly, "Use the sharp edge!"

Jack was frightened by Han Shuo's current attitude, and stared at him dully with both legs trembling. The current Han Shuo of now was cool, calm, and collected, without a single trace of Bryan's cowardice and timidity!

Han Shuo shoved the broom handle into Jack's hands and turned with the familiar honest, silly look on his face. He instinctively cowered and wailed, "No, don't hit me!"

"We're going to do just that!" The six people all rushed in together, punching, and kicking with force, attacking Han Shuo's entire body.

He held his head with both hands and backed up fearfully at first. When he had taken three steps backwards and arrived next to Jack, it was as if he'd suddenly lost his mind and he barked out a few howls. He rushed towards the six people, like a bull gone wild.

Carey was out in front, and his upraised right foot halted in midair as he didn't dare complete his stomp. His heart skipped a beat as he was reminded of what had happened the last time Han Shuo lost his mind.

Although, just because Carey didn't kick him didn't mean that Han Shuo would let him off that easily. Han Shuo felt the magical yuan churn with increased speed as he ran. It looked like the same thing was happening again, as the magical yuan started to digest the dark green fighting aura that Erick had left behind.

At that moment, Han Shuo only had one uncontained thought, and that was to mercilessly beat everyone in front of him into the ground – regardless if they were still breathing or not!

He spread both hands and caught Carey's upraised foot like lightning. He lifted it up and sent Carey flipping backwards, landing with a huge thump and grimace of pain. His teeth made close contact with the ground and blood was already forming at the edges of his mouth.

The four who had come to help Carey and Borg were dumbfounded by Han Shuo's about face. Their leering faces froze, and their expressions became a bit odd.

"Don't be afraid, he's just one person. We've got six on our side and can beat him to death, even if we hit him randomly!" Borg lifted his chin and said suddenly as he brought a wooden stool out of nowhere. He gave a great yell and came crashing towards Han Shuo.

The four's flagging confidence was renewed upon hearing Borg's words, and their expressions shifted back again. They slowly took out short wooden staves from behind them and followed Borg's lead in rushing towards Han Shuo's head.

They'd even prepared weapons! Han Shuo narrowed his eyes, sprang off both legs and dodged to the side as he saw that Borg's stool was about to hit him.

Crash!

The stool hit the stone floor and its legs wobbled from the impact. It didn't look that sturdy anymore. Borg gave a light "eh?" as a shocked expression made its way onto his face. He hadn't anticipated that Han Shuo would be able to dodge and make his strike land on empty air.

Pow! A quick fist smashed into the bridge of Borg's nose and a bloody flower formed. Borg's head drooped as he staggered backwards, the stool slipping from his limp hands in his pain.

His head lowered with a low laugh, Han Shuo grabbed the stool that Borg had dropped and turned to be ambushed by a short and stocky red-haired boy. The wooden stave whistled through the air, and the wooden stool was suddenly raised to catch the stave, just as it was about to hit Han Shuo's head.

One stool leg in each hand, Han Shuo felt the magical yuan in his spine churn increasingly faster. He could clearly feel the enclosed fighting aura continue to disappear, resulting in limitless strength entering his hands. He grasped the stool legs firmly and all of a sudden tore it apart.

The entire stool was torn into half, and Han Shuo kicked out with his right foot as he held the two halves in his hands. He connected solidly with the guy's lower abdomen, with the latter's face immediately turning white as he stooped on the ground in pain.

Han Shuo wasn't about to let him off that easily – the former was reveling in his bloodthirsty feelings and only wanted to full vent it out. Both of his hands started working at the same time, crashing the halves of the stool down onto the red-haired guy's face. Blood splurged out from his forehead at once as it dyed the stool halves red.

"Hurry and stop him! That damned crazy kid will kill Alva!" Borg screamed in terror as blood streamed out from his nose, like two worms, thanks to being flattened by Han Shuo's fist.

Even Carey was struggling to pull himself up. Despite being struck with terror, he still shakily raised the pre-concealed wooden stave and rushed towards Han Shuo with the others.

Pilipala.

A violent series of collisions rang out. Watching from the sidelines with bent legs quivering in fear, Jack watched Han Shuo incredulously. He only saw Han Shuo raise the halves of the stool and bring them down on people's noses. Blood trickled down their faces and the tops of their heads after only a moment.

At this moment, Jack was stunned silly, completely floored by Han Shuo's coldly cruel methods. He never would have thought that the typically timid and accepting Bryan would one day display such a violent and savage side of himself.

Just as Jack was stupefied, Erick's fighting aura had finally been digested by the magical yuan during the fight, in which Han Shuo had indulged his every whim. It was then that Han Shuo came to himself and abruptly realized what he was doing. He couldn't help but feel a bit afraid.

"There's sounds of fighting, what's going on? Go check out the training fields!" Han Shuo suddenly heard Fanny's voice sound from afar, with rapidly approaching footsteps following her words.

He turned back to see Carey, Borg and co. look at him with faces full of fear and dismay, each scared out of their minds. They all wielded wooden staves, but not one dared take one step closer.

Han Shuo knew that things were grave indeed, and madly ran through different scenarios in his mind. A sudden thought struck him, and he unexpectedly ran towards the training field doors. He smeared the blood from the stool onto his face and head as he ran, then threw the two blood stained halves away. He grabbed his back, where Erick's sword had injured him, and gave a mighty yank along with a great roar of pain. The injury hadn't fully scabbed over yet and it ripped open immediately, fresh blood staining his back red.

At the door, Han Shuo abruptly switched from a sprint to a full stop and fell to the ground, "arduously" crawling towards the door. He stuck out two bloodstained hands when he saw that Fanny and co. had appeared, and said with a face full of terror and blood, “A, a lot of people are hitting me. Help... help me!”

Chapter 17: An evil, honest grin

Fanny panicked upon seeing Han Shuo's pathetic condition, and her beautiful, athletic, long legs quickly sprinted towards Han Shuo.

"Ah...."

Han Shuo gave an anguished cry as the blood drained out of his face. He stared at Fanny and stammered with pain, "Master Fanny, you... you're stepping on my hand!"

Fanny was nearsighted to begin with, and had run too quickly in her haste, without paying attention to what was underfoot. Add to that, Han Shuo's outstretched hands were on the ground in his desire to present a convincing front, and it all resulted in this current situation.

Fanny was wearing knee high boots with skinny, high stiletto heels. She had been sprinting with a certain rush of speed when she stepped firmly on Han Shuo's left hand. The pain on his face was not feigned in the slightest, it truly was pain that cut deep into the bone marrow.

Han Shuo hadn't suffered any major injuries in his prolonged fight with Carey and co., but now he was suffering from agony deep within his bones.

"Ooh... sorry Bryan, I didn't see that your hand was stretched out this far!" Fanny was horrified and hastily apologized. The boot, that had been stepping on Han Shuo's left hand, was swiftly retracted in shock, and rapidly shunted to the left – but Han Shuo's outstretched right hand was precisely where her foot would land.

Han Shuo was scared out of his mind upon seeing that the sharp spike was about to wreak havoc on his right hand. He withdrew his hand with lightning-like speed and wiped at the "blood traces" on his face. He pointed at the gobsmacked crew behind him and sent up a wail proclaiming his grievances, "They, they hit me!"

Fanny's face darkened as soon as she heard these words. Although there were multiple injuries to Carey and co.'s faces, they had long since wiped off all traces of blood when they heard someone approaching. They were afraid of being questioned, and in the confusion wiped off all the blood on the weapons that they then carelessly discarded.

They had been planning to keep their mouths shut and just chalk the afternoon's events up to bad luck. Who knew that Han Shuo would be so evil as to pin the blame on them after he'd beaten them up.

Fanny's beautiful eyes were astute. She threw a glance towards Carey and co. and realized that although their clothes were in disarray, there were no traces of blood on their face. There were, however, traces of blood on some far flung wooden staves.

She had merely cast one glance, lowered her head to gaze at the blood on Han Shuo's back and face, and "wisely deduced" what had happened here. Carey and co. had ganged up to beat up Han Shuo, the blood on the wooden staves was proof!

"I will inform the school authorities of this matter. All of you can await your punishment. I feel disgusted by so many bullying a thin, weak Bryan!" Fanny looked at Carey and co. coldly and said with a shrill voice.

"Master Fanny, that's not what happened. He beat us! Jack, you saw it all, wasn't Bryan the one hitting us?" Carey was dismayed and yelled in a panic.

Little fatty Jack's legs were still trembling on the side, he had been completely frightened and was in awe of Han Shuo's actions. Jack cast a far glance upon hearing Carey's words and discovered that Han Shuo was winking at him and gesturing with his head as he lay on the ground.

His confidence bolstered, Jack stuck out his stomach and pointed a chubby hand at the group, speaking with an air of self righteousness. "Stop lying Carey, I'm not afraid of you now that Master Fanny is here. You guys hit Bryan and want me to lie for you! Honest Jack won't do that!"

Carey and his crew still wanted to say something, but was stopped by Fanny's upraised hand and cold snort. "Stop disseminating and wait to be punished!"

She looked at the “pathetic” Han Shuo as she turned, and picked him up by the collar of his shirt. She said tenderly, “Come, let me tend to your wounds. You’re my research topic and I can’t allow you to get injured so often!”

The fresh smell of her breath wafted towards Han Shuo’s nose as Fanny spoke, making him suddenly feel that the part of his hand that had been stepped on wasn’t in so much pain after all. His back to Fanny, Han Shuo signaled with his eyes for Jack to leave, and then smiled an honest, dumb smile at Carey and his group.

However, these guys had just been badly beaten by Han Shuo and then had all the blame pinned on them. The honest smile he was flashing them now only appeared to be the most evil, terrifying smile on this earth!

Ten minutes later, Fanny’s lab.

Apart from Fanny, Lisa had also come to Fanny’s lab under the pretext of having some questions. Along the way, her gaze when looking at Han Shuo was quite strange, making him feel ill at ease.

Fanny bade Han Shuo to lie down on the bed upon reaching her lab, and found a bottle of medicinal solution. Just as she was about to apply it to Han Shuo, Lisa gave a light laugh and grabbed the bottle from her, smiling merrily, “Master Fanny, you’re not wearing your glasses. Let me do it for you.”

Fanny didn’t think too much of Lisa’s words and nodded, “Hmm. Okay, clean his wounds while I find some gauze. I don’t know where I’ve put it.”

Fanny talked to herself as she rummaged throughout the lab, whereas Lisa held the bottle in her left hand and applied the solution onto Han Shuo’s back with her right. She peered closely at his body and said lowly, “Eh? This injury doesn’t look like it was just formed. Why has it scabbed over on the top?”

Greatly startled, Han Shuo gave an internal cry of dismay. It looked like he’d underestimated the peculiarities of his own body. His body’s restoration abilities had been enhanced since he’d started training his magical yuan. The injury he’d suffered at dawn had already started to scab over after a short while, to be unfortunately witnessed by Lisa.

He didn't make a sound as he knew there was no point in saying anything now. He might as well pretend to be a fool to the end, as if he hadn't heard Lisa say anything. He kept making noises of pain with his mouth, as if the wound greatly pained him.

It was at this moment that a surge of pain traveled from him back. He immediately howled in agony and swiftly turned his head to glare at Lisa, only to be met with the glee of uncovering a secret in her eyes. He gave a silent uh oh and laughed dumbly, facing forward again after saying, "Hurts".

"Bryan, what's going on?" Fanny inquired after hearing his tormented scream. She was still looking for gauze on the other side.

"Oh, Master Fanny. I accidentally touched his wound just now. No big deal, I'll be more careful this time!"

"Then be more careful!" Fanny paid no attention to what was going on after her response.

An alluring scent made its way to his nostrils followed by hot air puffing by his ear. Lisa kept her voice low, "Damned Bryan, do you think I don't know that you're pretending? Huh. You scared me by pretending to be dead, and then gave me the wrong method for refining medicine. If I hadn't been smart enough to experiment on Carey and Borg, I would have suffered to death because of you.

I'll be frank, I got to the lab before Carey and heard your conversation with Jack through a ghou. I even saw the entire process of you beating up Carey. You're really something now aren't you. You even know how to scheme against others! Hehe, not bad, not bad!"

Lisa continued to apply the solution as she spoke, but obviously wanted to get some revenge as she frequently pressed down hard on Han Shuo's wound. Han Shuo had been made by Lisa and his heart was feeling topsy turvey. He had no idea what Lisa was planning, so even though the injury hurt like hell, he didn't dare complain loudly. He could only grind his teeth in pain as he muffled his cries.

With her plump lips lowered to his ears and fragrance wafting over Han Shuo's face, Lisa saw that he refused to make a sound. She said fiercely, "Last time at the training fields, damn, you even kissed me. And... and touched me there. I'm not letting you off that easily. I'll be waiting for you at the fake mountains behind the classroom building tonight. You're a dead man if you don't show up!"

She pressed down hard one last time on his wound after delivering her lines, smiling in proud vindication when Han Shuo grimaced with a low moan of pain. She then walked to Fanny and handed over the bottle of solution, saying "Master Fanny, I've finished applying the solution to him. I've suddenly remembered that I have something to do, so I'm going to go now. I'll ask you that question tomorrow!"

"Oh, sure go ahead." Fanny responded diffidently, then exclaimed in astonishment. "Eh! I've finally found it, so this is where I put it."

Fanny's beautiful legs walked her over to Han Shuo after her surprise, and was about to dress his wounds when she took a closer look. She wondered in bemusement, "Eh, how come the outside of the wound has scabbed over!"

Han Shuo's head was facing down into the bed and was worrying over Lisa's actions. He didn't know how to face her that night. His heart leapt in shock again when he heard Fanny's words, thinking that not Fanny too!

Fanny frowned but then quickly smoothed her brow, sighing in knowing wonder, "Ah, the bruise on your head faded quickly when Fitch hit you last time. Is this all because you were hit with the Agony of the Soul? Oh this is simply too amazing!"

Han Shuo, "....."

Han Shuo was speechless at the sight of Fanny's self-satisfying thoughts. How can her imagination be so creative as to find a reasonable explanation for something obviously incredibly odd?

Fanny became absorbed in a round of wonder and thought for a while, then started dressing Han Shuo's wounds. Her movements were extremely gentle, as if afraid of hurting Han Shuo.

Han Shuo reflected that Fanny's movements were so much better than Lisa's, and was about to turn his head to thank Fanny when he noticed something by the opened lab door behind Fanny. He glimpsed a tall, thin figure staring at him enviously. It disappeared upon realizing that his attentions had been noticed – Fitch.

Chapter 18: Please let us off the hook

Fanny did not intend to run Han Shuo through a gauntlet, due to his injuries. She let him go back after she'd cleaned, dressed his wounds, and saw that he wasn't suffering anywhere else.

Han Shuo's walk back was filled with silent frustrations and worry. He hadn't thought that Lisa would cotton on to him playing the fool that quickly.

He'd played quite a few nasty tricks on her recently, and she'd originally let it all go because she thought he was crazy, but now that she knew it was all an act, she was bound to be out for his blood.

He'd unknowingly made it back to his warehouse, while deep in the midst of furrowed, scattered thought. Just as he was about to open the door and step inside, he discovered the two cowering figures of Carey and Borg by his doorway.

Han Shuo had beaten these two the most at the training fields earlier because they were the ringleaders. Their faces were now bruised and battered, and the sides of their faces were even a bit misshapen.

Han Shuo's thoughts churned as he saw the two of them waiting there. He cautiously checked his surroundings, wondering how many more they had hidden on the sides waiting to ambush him, since they were already here to exact revenge.

He surveyed the vicinity and squinted, staring at the two of them without saying a word. He walked slowly to the side, where he usually washed and scrubbed things, and chose a hard rock. He smiled dumbly and said, "Do you still want to fight?"

Carey and Borg both shuddered when they saw Han Shuo come back with a rock. Carey hastily said, "Bryan, please let us off the hook. It was our fault for offending you before, we'll never do it again. Please forgive us!"

On the side, Borg was also staring at Han Shuo, with a face full of fear, as he shakily fumbled out two silver coins from his pocket. He cowered in front of Han Shuo and offered them to him, “Bryan, this is a token of our sincerity. Can you please talk to Master Fanny for us? Otherwise the academy will fire both of us. Our families are poor and completely depend on the silvers we earn from doing errands at the academy. Please let us off the hook!”

So, they’d come to beg and plead. Han Shuo threw the rock, that was in his hand, to the side. The honest, dumb look in his eyes faded away as he rested his two hands on his shoulders, lazily sizing up the two.

Han Shuo smiled after a moment. “I don’t want those two silvers!”

Borg and Carey eyed each other, then looked at the completely unruffled Han Shuo. They both bent down, putting one knee on the ground and implored, “Bryan, please forgive us. We won’t dare do anything again.”

“Stand up and talk, stand up and talk!” Han Shuo hurriedly raised the two from the ground while smiling. He then responded, “I don’t want your silver, but I’ll talk to Master Fanny and leave you two alone in the future if you agree on one condition!”

At this point, how could Borg and Carey not know that Han Shuo had always been putting on an act. Han Shuo’s coldly cruel methods in the training fields had stunned and frightened all thoughts of revenge out of their heads. The current Han Shuo had completely exceeded all of their expectations!

“We agree to whatever condition you want!” Borg speedily replied, fervently looking at Han Shuo.

Han Shuo looked at the two in a measured, unflappable manner and nodded. He said, “In the future, the two of you need to hop to it on all my errand duties, and finish them quickly. I’ll talk to Master Fanny, as long as you two agree to this.”

“No problem, Bryan we’ve got this. We know what to do, we’ll carry out your work in the future.” Carey almost tripped over his words in rapid agreement, as if he was afraid that Han Shuo would regret his words.

There were four errand boys in the necromancy major. If the school authorities really did sweep Carey and Borg out the door, they wouldn't be able to immediately find replacements. This way, the two's original jobs would undoubtedly fall onto Han Shuo and Jack's shoulders. Han Shuo would no longer have any free time, and was naturally something he didn't want to see.

Now that Carey and Borg had agreed to handle Han Shuo's business for him, he would have a lot more energy to do other things. What a change in fortunes. It used to be that Bryan was the one receiving a whole heck of extra work from these guys, now the situation was reversed, and he had indirectly gotten revenge for that unlucky Bryan.

He noted that the sky was darkening, and remembered that the proposed time with Lisa was quickly approaching. He said with some degree of impatience, "Alright, alright. I need to make a trip to behind the classroom building. You should go back if there's nothing else. Be careful in the future, keep pretending that I'm that crazy village idiot. If you dare breathe a word of what happened today, I'll beat you two so badly that you wouldn't even recognize each other if you stood face to face!"

Carey and Borg cravenly nodded in quick agreement upon hearing Han Shuo's chilly threat. Han Shuo's brutally cold-blooded methods in the training fields had branded a deep mark on their hearts. They didn't dare think of revenge even deep within their hearts.

Just as Han Shuo was about to leave, Borg suddenly thought of something and called out, "Bryan, don't walk towards the back of the classroom building from the direction of the fake mountains. Lisa just directed Carey and I to set up three holes with nets and tripwires. She said she wanted to test the intelligence of summoned creatures. Don't walk into them by accident!"

Han Shuo was taken aback, but quickly marshalled his thoughts in understanding. It looked like Lisa had made her preparations early. What intelligence testing of summoned creatures? It's just something she's prepared for me!

“Where did you set up the traps? Tell me in detail, otherwise I just may fall into them in the dark!” Han Shuo frowned as he asked Borg and Carey.

There was no way those two could have known that Lisa had set those traps in order to deal with Han Shuo. Add to that their current need for a favor from Han Shuo, and their genuine fear of him, the two quickly elaborated on the locations of the three traps in great detail.

“Okay. See you tomorrow. Remember to thoroughly wipe and dust off the statues on the path to the classroom buildings. I’m going to sleep in tomorrow.” Han Shuo showily gave an order to the two and walked off without a care in the world, towards the fake mountains behind the classroom building.

Department of dark magic classroom building, around a bend in one of the fake mountains.

Lisa was hidden behind the fake mountain, a corner of her mouth lifted into a snicker with evil intent. Her two eyes sparkled with life as she eagerly peered at Han Shuo slowly emerging in the distance.

Damned Bryan, how dare you pretend to be crazy and embarrass me. Not only did you scare me by pretending to be a corpse, but you kicked my butt in the training field and you gave me a disgusting refining recipe. See if I don’t torment you to death. Lisa thought viciously and her fingers tightened on the rope wrapped around her hand.

The other end of the rope was wrapped in a circular loop, laid on the path that Han Shuo would have to take on his way to the fake mountain. Lisa would give a mighty pull as soon as he set both feet into the loop, immediately tripping him to the ground. A big, outstretched net had already been laid out on a protruding rock further up ahead, just waiting to entangle Han Shuo as soon as his legs were tied up.

Lisa laughed a silent, cruel laugh as she watched the unassuming Han Shuo approach. She observed him looking all around, calling out as he slowly shuffled forward, “Lisa, where are you? Come on out.”

“I’m here, come over here. I have something to tell you. You’re dead if you don’t come over here!”

Lisa snorted lightly as she stayed behind the fake mountain.

Han Shuo glanced to his left and right again and walked towards the area with the rope lying in wait, as if he was completely oblivious. Lisa's heart swelled in joy and she flexed her hands around the rope in her hands, focusing her concentration on the second that both of Han Shuo's legs stepped into the trap.

Just as one of his feet landed in the trap, Han Shuo's body suddenly froze as he called out again, "Lisa, where are you hiding?"

The loop was just a few inches in front of Han Shuo's foot. Lisa had almost lost control and sprang the trap when she saw that Han Shuo was about to fall right into it. Her heart skipped a beat when she saw that she'd miscalculated.

Just as Lisa relaxed and was about to respond, Han Shuo's still body quickly strode out, evading the trap in the blink of an eye. He continued walking, murmuring in confusion, "Lisa, what game are you trying to play?"

Thus, Lisa's carefully laid out rope loop and net trap was seemingly carelessly dodged by Han Shuo with his sudden stop and start. A wave of dejection rose in Lisa's heart and she cursed in a low voice, hating Han Shuo for his good luck, but never once thinking it was because he was keenly aware of what was going on.

"I'm here, what took you so long!" Lisa was gritting her teeth in complaint, as her lithe body emerged from a crevice in the fake mountain.

"Oh, nothing much. Just that my back was still hurting so I went back and rested for a bit. Thanks for dressing my wounds today." Han Shuo said without expression and walked towards Lisa.

A sudden crack rang out, as if fragile wooden raft had been snapped. Han Shuo's body vanished from where he stood, accompanied with his panicked yell. Agony filled moans followed shortly thereafter from a deep hole that had suddenly appeared.

"Haha, damned Bryan, you finally fell for it. See if I won't torment you to death today! How dare you play a fool and embarrass the future archmage of necromancy!” Lisa’s woebegone expression just a split second ago, was replaced a wave of hysterical joy from her heart when she saw Han Shuo fall into the trap. She hollered excitedly and quickly ran out from behind the fake mountain and made straight for the trap that Han Shuo had triggered.

Lisa laughed in proud, high pitched laughter as she walked to the edge of the trap. She brought out a stone as she cussed loudly at Han Shuo, intending to stone him where he’d fallen to take revenge for her latest humiliation at his hands.

All of a sudden, a hand wrapped around Lisa’s right ankle. Scared witless, she looked down and finally noticed that Han Shuo’s left hand was grasping the edge of the trap, while his right hand was latched onto her ankle. He hadn’t fallen into the hole at all, and was in fact looking at her with an evil grin on his face.

“Come on down!” He guffawed evilly and yanked with his hand, taking advantage of Lisa’s consternation. The carefully scheming Lisa pitched forward, flailing her limbs wildly, while screaming in sheer terror, as she shot straight down into the hole.

Chapter 19: I like you

Lisa wildly reached out in her panic, and by sheer coincidence, grabbed Han Shuo's pant leg, while falling through the air. She immediately gave a strong tug, violently swinging Han Shuo's body, causing him to fall down into the depths of the trap with her.

Han Shuo had already quickly checked out the bottom of the trap earlier. Thanks to the moonlight, he could see that there weren't any sharp knives planted at the bottom of the trap, just a few protruding rocks, but those protruding rocks would still cause great discomfort if one fell onto them.

Han Shuo's heart was curiously calm with the sounds of Lisa's screams filling his ears. He didn't know if it was because he'd been training his magical yuan, but recently whenever he'd faced danger, Han Shuo's first reaction was not to panic. Rather, he swiftly thought about how to resolve the crisis he was in, and this time was no exception.

The trap had been hastily laid, and thus was only three meters deep, but during the split seconds of the fall, Han Shuo surprisingly still had the mental capacity to think of other things. While listening to Lisa's screams, Han Shuo circulated the magical yuan that had just digested the fighting aura at a speed many times faster than normal.

Han Shuo made his move just as the two were about to violently crash into the protruding rocks. He snatched Lisa out of thin air, catching the girl who had completely lost her head and was screaming every which way, around the waist. He whirled himself around and sacrificed his butt and back, smashing right onto the protruding rocks at the bottom of the pit.

"Aiyo...." Han Shuo grimaced in pain as the wound, that had been dressed not too long ago, split open again. Fresh blood oozed out instantaneously. As the primary point of contact, his buttocks also hurt tremendously.

Lisa hadn't suffered too much damage while being cradled in Han Shuo's arms. Seeing that she was unharmed and listening to Han Shuo's distressed moans, she started raking a suspicious glance over Han Shuo's body, asking in extreme surprise, "Why did you save me?"

Han Shuo's anguished cries were silenced by Lisa's question. His face wore a sudden expression of dejection as he shook his head with a low sigh, "Because I like you!"

It was as if lightning had struck Lisa as soon as she heard those words. She stared at Han Shuo dumbly, completely shellshocked. It took her a long while to react as she pointed at Han Shuo and stammered, "You... you... I... I... what did you say?"

"I said I like you Lisa!" Han Shuo gazed upon Lisa with a face full of sincerity, speaking wholeheartedly, "I've actually liked you all these years, and so have never begrudged you for experimenting on me. Even when you almost tormented me to death with the Agony of the Soul, I still never hated you.

Except, I understand that I'm just an errand slave. There's too much of a gap between my status and yours, so I just bury these thoughts deep in my heart and never dare to express them. I could only act crazy in hopes of soliciting more attention from you. Lisa, was I a fool to do so?"

I am so mean, such an asshole. Han Shuo sprouted off lies with an earnest face on one hand, and with the other inwardly marveled that he could use such low methods after arriving in a strange world. He didn't know whether it was due to training his magical yuan, or the fact that he had been evil to begin with and it had only begun to show itself after shrugging off all constraints in this strange world.

Lisa was completely dumbfounded by Han Shuo, staring at him dumbly and forgetting to speak. She only shook off her stupor and hurriedly stood up when her agitated hands randomly roamed over a strip of naked thigh. When she looked at Han Shuo, an astounding blush actually stole across her face for the first time. She seemed to be a bit embarrassed.

Han Shuo started and then lowered his head for a look. That was when he noticed that Lisa had ripped his pants when they landed. Apart from his boxers, his entire lower body was completely exposed. Lisa had actually been sitting on his naked lap just now.

Frantically whipping her head to the side, Lisa's voice heaved as she pouted, "I don't care if you're speaking the truth or not, there's no way that I could like you. You're just an errand slave for the necromancy major. I will never have anything to do with you."

"I understand Lisa, I just hope to stay in the necromancy major and gaze upon you from afar. I won't have any other fancies. Now that I've said all the words I've held in for years, I feel much more at ease." Han Shuo said with a low voice and a face full of genuity.

"I, I'm leaving. We can forget about what happened before, I won't pursue it further, but don't you dare daydream. You're only an errand slave, the two of us being together is impossible!" Lisa turned her back against Han Shuo and hurriedly responded as she listened to his heartfelt confession. She immediately started an incantation and summoned a skeletal warrior, commanding it to throw down the rope that she had planned to use on Han Shuo.

Han Shuo knew that once girls knew that someone had a secret crush on them, they would be unable to do anything to that person, no matter how much they had hated the person before. Lisa was the same.

Lisa wouldn't like Han Shuo just because of his words, but would forgive Han Shuo for his past deeds because of them. She would even help him in the future, because she thought that Han Shuo liked her. Even if she never liked Han Shuo, she would be touched and thus her future actions and judgment would be affected.

Seeing that Lisa was about to leave, Han Shuo turned his back on Lisa and smiled an evil smile of a plot succeeding. He then lowered his voice, "Lisa, I can do anything for you. I have done everything possible to learn that if you want your breasts to develop fully, then you must drink lots of papaya milk and do lots of swimming. When showering after swimming, you should massage the sides of your breasts. They say that doing this will ensure that breasts develop fully."

"Damned Bryan, where did you hear all this?" Lisa kept her head averted, throwing down a huffy response as she grasped the rope. After a pause, Lisa spoke again, "What's papaya milk?"

"Eh, milk will do. Two cups a day!" Han Shuo suddenly remembered that this world didn't seem to have papayas and hurriedly explained.

Swiftly turning her head, Lisa flung a fierce gaze at Han Shuo, speaking angrily, "Shut up. Don't tell anyone about what happened today, and don't tell others that you like me, or I'll kill you."

After delivering this line, she issued an order to the skeletal warrior waiting aboveground and it pulled her up. Some scuffling noises traveled down afterwards, and all became peaceful again.

Han Shuo lightly laughed heartily after exhaling a breath, thinking that he was really become more and more evil to lie so seamlessly and flawlessly. Now that Lisa had easily let him off the hook, it testified to how wondrously effective this method had been.

He snickered as he walked forward, seeing that the rope that Lisa had left behind was still there. He tugged on it and realized that the other end was most likely fastened to the fake mountain. Overjoyed, he understood that Lisa must have given him a hand out of convenience before she left. Han Shuo pulled himself up the rope and swaggered back to his warehouse.

Han Shuo practiced magic after commanding the little skeleton to redress the wounds on his back. He felt that not only had the magical yuan grown a tad bit bigger, but it spun at a higher speed than before. The Mystical Glacial Spellfire that he had been practicing for a while had finally progressed to circulating the magical yuan to his wrist. This pleased him greatly.

Was it because the magical yuan had digested Erick's fighting aura? Han Shuo creased his brow in silent thought, thinking back to resulting circumstances after Claude's fighting aura had been absorbed last time. Han Shuo was starting to slowly suspect that the magical yuan within his body could strengthen itself through assimilating fighting aura.

Why did training his magical yuan have such a peculiar effect? Han Shuo thought for a while to no avail and did not continue his musings. He started meditating to train his mental strength.

His mind empty and clear, Han Shuo suddenly felt distracted as he was training his mental strength. He was unable to immediately settle into his meditation as he usually did, as if something was disturbing his meditation by calling out to him. It was a bizarre feeling, and Han Shuo had ignored it at first. It was only after his meditations had been interrupted a few times that he started paying attention to this phenomenon.

As Han Shuo calmed his mind and started extending his senses, he promptly sensed that the thing interrupting his meditations was underneath the bed. The only thing underneath the bed was the handbag that had belonged to Dylan.

A thought struck him as Han Shuo reached for the bag. He withdrew the uncanny, dark green, jade box, perceiving the sinister, cold air within the box. Han Shuo shuddered involuntarily and began to carefully inspect the green, jade box.

The culprit that had repeatedly disturbed Han Shuo's meditations was the dark green, jade box in front of him. To this day, he still didn't know what was inside. He hadn't been interested before, but now he had no choice but to appraise the jade box if he wanted to successfully meditate again.

He picked up the green key and stuck it into the indentation on the jade box. He felt that it was unable to turn, and an expression of bafflement appeared on his face after jiggling the key back and forth a few times.

The key can't open the jade box, Han Shuo was startled and began to grow mystified. He recalled last time's circumstances in great detail, and thought of something. He concentrated his mental strength, slowly focusing it on the jade box.

Suddenly, a breath of sinister aura emanated from the box and intruded into Han Shuo's mind, hurting his mind. Fighting back against the pain, Han Shuo concentrated his mental strength as he never had before. Even the magical yuan within his body spun much faster than usual.

Bearing up against the invasion of the sinister aura from the jade box, Han Shuo tried a hard twist of the key again. The key turned to the right with an audible click, as the jade box abruptly sprang open, revealing the contents inside.

Chapter 20: Don't touch the teacher's butt

A chilly wave of aura first spilled out when the jade box was opened. The temperature in the warehouse decreased rapidly, causing Han Shuo to shudder involuntarily again. He quickly refocused his concentration on the item within the green jade box.

It was a verdant ball. Its surface like an emerald, winking with ephemeral green light. There was a red dot inside, like a drop of roiling blood, oscillating randomly within the ball.

His mind suddenly hurting, Han Shuo only felt that his mental strength started draining expeditiously towards the ball. It felt a bit like when he was using necromancy magic. With the injection of Han Shuo's mental strength, the surface of the ball shone with even more green, and the blood-red dot in the center abruptly let out a small strand of red light.

Pain! A keenly honed dagger savagely stirred up Han Shuo's brains. With the loss of his mental strength, Han Shuo's mind hurt like a living hell. He had never endured such cruel agony in all his years of life.

In the midst of this extreme pain, Han Shuo should have fainted dead away, but the eerie thing was that Han Shuo's mind was clearer than it'd ever been. Han Shuo even felt that because his mind was more awake than ever, it was exacerbating and infinitely magnifying the agony.

Both of his hands clutching his head, Han Shuo was like a wild beast being slowly cut by a thousand, a million knives. He emitted a raspy, low roar that didn't sound like it could come from a human. Han Shuo's mental strength continued to slowly flow towards the round ball, along with the continuation of the inhumane pain.

At this moment, the tendons stood out on Han Shuo's forehead, neck, and exposed arms, like multiple worms wriggling in his body. His body had started filling out a bit, and his muscles were now tensed with explosive power.

As Han Shuo felt that his mental strength was about to be completely drained, the magical yuan within his body flowed from his neck to his brain. As the magical yuan entered his brain, that was already splitting open from pain, the soul searing agony seemed to increase ten times in intensity.

The mental strength that had vanished with fleeting speed into the ball, came crashing back like a huge wave rolling onto shore, drowning Han Shuo in an instant. He could finally endure it no more and fainted.

He felt the weariness of a ten thousand kilometer march after he slowly woke up, but his brain was abnormally awake. When his eyes refocused, he took a look around and discovered that even the grain in the wooden door in front of him seemed quite clear.

He gave a light “eh?” as the changes within him stopped him in his tracks. The last time he had felt this way was when he gained mental strength after a series of coincidences. He had also felt that his senses were heightened then, and hastened to concentrate his mental strength again upon noting that this feeling had returned in force.

Exuberant joy immediately blossomed on his face, as he thought, the saying of what doesn't kill you makes you strong is true! Even that amount of danger hadn't been enough to end me just now, and now I've mysteriously benefited from that disaster. He could feel that his mental strength had increased in spades, and was much more potent than the amount of mental strength he'd labored to increase over the past two months.

These mystifying things had truly happened, shocking Han Shuo beyond belief as his gaze fell once more onto the dark green ball. The faint green luster on its surface seemed to have dimmed somewhat, but the drop of red within it was even more vibrant.

He frowned as he backed a few inches away, and made a close observation of the verdant ball. He suddenly felt that this ball was very similar to something. After a few moments of thought, he started in fright and made a sudden inspection of the ball. It was very much like an eyeball, and the more he looked at it, the more it seemed to be one.

The dot of red within the verdant ball seemed to be an eye sizing Han Shuo up, giving him an exceedingly creeped out feeling. He shuddered rather violently as he closed the jade box with all the hair on his neck raised. A sharp click rang out as the jade box locked itself again, and the key, that had been stuck in the indentation, automatically bounced out.

Han Shuo shook his head as he banished the association between ball and eyeball from his mind. The more he contemplated the matter, the more he thought there was something strange about this ball. If it wasn't for the magical yuan circulating to his brain today, his mental strength would have surely been sucked dry by the ball, and he would have broken underneath the inhumane pain. He would have been truly driven mad and become an idiot.

But when the magical yuan had made its way to his brain, the depleted mental strength had come rushing back like a river running upstream, and had even been greatly improved and increased. This made Han Shuo feel that the ball was even more uncanny and unpredictable. He could vaguely feel that this ball was no ordinary object, otherwise Duke would have hardly killed Dylan for the jade box.

As for the verdant ball within the jade box, Han Shuo could not fathom what its purpose was, but because the ball had almost turned him into a real idiot, his heart still jumped with fear when thinking about it. He stored the jade box underneath the bed again, planning to experiment with the item inside once he had figured out what it was.

The next day.

Han Shuo woke up feeling that his body was in much better condition than it had been the day before. He caught a glimpse of Carey and Borg from afar when washing up, the two were cleaning the statues on the way to class. They seemed to have woken up a lot earlier than usual, as they kept yawning, even at this time of day.

Carey and Borg flashed eager smiles and greetings from a long ways away when they sighted Han Shuo, also reminding him to speak to Master Fanny as early as possible.

After downing his breakfast and listening to another lecture from Master Gene on the foundations of magic as he swept the hallway for the necromancy classrooms, Han Shuo walked directly towards the training fields.

“Bryan, Fitch is in the training field asking Master Fanny some questions regarding magical knowledge. Please speak to her soon, or the two of us are really screwed!” Han Shuo bumped into Carey and Borg at the door, the two had just finished cleaning the training fields, and pleaded with Han Shuo as soon as they saw him.

Han Shuo nodded as he said lazily, “Alright alright, I’ll go find Master Fanny now.”

Fitch had some bad blood with Gene, not to mention that Fitch was already a journeyman mage. Therefore he naturally had no need to continue to listen to Gene’s foundational knowledge classes.

Fitch was gazing at Fanny on the side, completely mesmerized. Love, desire, and the light of greed mixed together and sparkled in his eyes. His eyes kept roaming over Fanny’s beautiful body, and he didn’t even notice Han Shuo’s arrival.

“Fitch, watch this. Even with my eyes covered, I can still command dark creatures to seek out the correct target based on previous memory.” Fanny’s eyes were covered as a few zombies bypassed several obstacles, using the clubs in their hands to land hard hits onto wooden targets as she spoke.

Focused on teaching, Fanny naturally had no idea that Fitch was not paying any attention to her words. Fitch’s attention was purely concentrated on her beautiful curves.

Upon seeing that Fitch completely ignoring Fanny’s explanation, and that his gaze was continuously combing over her body, Han Shuo thought silently that no wonder this kid has failed to advance to adept class even after multiple tries.

Judging from the situation, Fitch must have used additional tutoring as an excuse for some alone time with Fanny. Fanny’s covered eyes must have something to do with instructing Fitch on how to use his heart to command dark creature attacks.

Han Shuo noted quite a few obstacles in the surroundings as he walked over, carefully avoiding all of them as he moved towards Fitch and Fanny.

Just as he was about to reach Fanny and Fitch, Fitch suddenly awoke from his idiotic stupor and turned his head slightly. When he saw that it was Han Shuo, a hint of unconcealed disgust appeared in Fitch's eyes.

Fitch followed that up with a movement of his staff, and two lines of an incantation in a low voice. Some of the obstacles on the ground suddenly seemed to be alive, as some withered, broken, white bones came hurtling towards Han Shuo's butt. Some ropes also tightened onto the bones and came flying with them, seeking to entangle Han Shuo like a snake.

Han Shuo's body was a bit weaker than normal after the events of last night. His panicked dance of evasion was a bit messy, was finally tripped by a rope that suddenly appeared and stumbled towards Fitch and Fanny.

At this moment, Fanny was still concentrating her mental strength on directing the dark creature's attacks, and her mouth kept summarizing her actions. Although her ears caught a few sounds, she paid them no heed.

Seeing that he was about to fall onto Fitch and Fanny, Han Shuo's still reached out wildly for something to stabilize himself even though his heart was calm, but at this moment, a trace of a cold smile tugged at Fitch's lips. He raised his staff slightly and aimed it towards the falling Han Shuo, obviously up to no good.

Panicking inside now as well, Han Shuo forcefully twisted his body to the left in mid air, trying to avoid Fitch's attack. When his body started falling towards Fanny, the results of Han Shuo's magic training came to bear as his body miraculously stopped after sucking in his waist and pushing out with his stomach.

But, Han Shuo didn't manage to retract his randomly flailing right arm in time, and it landed on Fanny's pert, well rounded butt. The ecstasy of supple, tender, well-filled out curve immediately traveled the point of contact between Han Shuo and Fanny, back to his brain.

In curious coincidence, Han Shuo actually gave a light pinch, before realizing what he was doing and backing up violently. He understood the insanity of his actions just now and was extremely frightened, thinking that there was no way Fanny would forgive him. Why had he pinched her butt cheek – even though it had felt wondrous!

As he practically flew in retreat, Han Shuo looked at Fitch, who glaring back at Han Shuo with eyes spitting fire and a body trembling in rage. It was as if Han Shuo had committed something terrible such as murdering Fitch's entire family. Fanny also exclaimed in shock and immediately ripped off the black cloth covering her eyes.

Fanny is never going to forgive me now. Shit. Shit. Han Shuo thought.

Pa pa! Two slaps. Fitch had been furiously staring at Han Shuo when two red palm prints appeared on his face. Fanny was enraged, and stared at Fitch with killing intent, her lofty breasts heaving and she raged, "Damned Fitch, how dare you take advantage and violate me!"

Chapter 21: It really wasn't me

"I, I didn't! It was Bryan!" Fitch was aghast and loudly protested his innocence.

Pa pa!

Another two slaps and Fitch's cheeks were now puffed up. Fanny stared at Fitch in a towering rage as she bit off her words, "How dare you make excuses. Bryan is such an honest person. How could he have committed such a foul act? It must've been you."

Bryan was at a loss for words as he gloated inwardly. He hastily painted a picture of honest, dumb innocence on his face as he looked at Fitch and Fanny. He smiled dully, "What's wrong?"

"Master Fanny, it really wasn't me!" Fitch was suddenly the most wronged man in the world as he clutched his cheeks and protested loudly.

"Stop lying. Get out! Now!" Fanny wore an expression of exasperation that iron wouldn't improve and become steel (Chinese expression of wishing someone would improve) and replied heatedly.

Fitch's face was sore and saw that Fanny was ready to erupt with rage at any moment. He knew that any explanation would be of no use, and was deathly afraid that Fanny would strike out again if he sent her up a wall. He smiled bitterly and nodded, heading outside the training fields with a face full of dejection.

When he passed by Bryan, Fitch paused and glared at Han Shuo viciously for a few moments, gritting his teeth, and saying softly, "Bastard."

Han Shuo feigned complete innocence towards Fitch's hate and even smiled honestly at him in a friendly, kind gesture. "Eh? How come you suddenly got fat?"

Fitch was infuriated and he turned his face away in resentment, after glaring at Han Shuo one more time. He quickly bypassed the obstacles in his way and disappeared outside the door in the blink of an eye.

"Bryan, what are you doing here?" Master Fanny's anger abated as soon as Fitch left, and she posed a question to Han Shuo.

“Cleaning.” Han Shuo went to do his own thing in the corner of the training field. He picked up a broom and prepared to clean up the area a bit to get it ready for a subsequent round of necromancy students.

“Oh I see. Oh right, how’s your back feeling? When your injuries have healed, I want to take a closer look at what’s going on with you. It’s incredible that an Agony of the Soul spell could allow you to gain mental strength.” Fanny was quite affable when faced with Han Shuo, conversing with him peacefully and helping him clean up the obstacles on the ground with no haughty attitude at all.

“Much, much better. Oh right, Master Fanny, can you not tell the school authorities what happened last night?” Han Shuo absentmindedly swept up broken bones and dust, and took a sniff of the right hand that had touched Fanny’s butt when he had a moment.

A faint, delicate fragrance emanated from the fingers of his right hand, making his heart lurch. His eyes immediately gazed strangely at Fanny’s pert butt, which happened to be not too far away. Fanny’s back was arched slightly as she bent down to clear the obstacles, further accentuating the mesmerizing curve of her butt. It was as if it contained a hypnotizing power of temptation.

Fanny was a bit startled by Han Shuo’s words and quickly straightened her lithe body. She turned to look at Han Shuo and asked in astonishment. “Why? Hmm, Bryan you’re not concentrating... you’re stepping on the broom.”

He hadn’t expected Fanny to abruptly turn around. Han Shuo had a guilty conscience and hastily moved his foot off the broom, smiling dumbly afterwards. “Carey and Borg are actually good people. If you tell the school authorities what happened, they’ll be fired. Life will be difficult if their families don’t have the silver they earn anymore.”

Fanny gazed at Han Shuo in amazement and slightly crooked a dainty eyebrow. She smiled after a moment and said, “Bryan, you’re always so kind. You speak on their behalf even after they’ve bullied you. Alright, I’ll forget it, since even you, the victim, pleads so. I won't put them in a difficult place. You are the key to my experiments, remember to tell me if anyone bullies you in the future!"

Kind! Han Shuo was at a loss for words internally. Sure, what he was doing now was "kind", otherwise he wouldn't have the opportunity to blackmail Carey and Borg into doing his duties. If the two of them left, then everything would fall onto his and Jack's shoulders. Who would give a crap about what happened to the latter?

As Han Shuo was thinking his random thoughts, Fanny looked at Han Shuo suspiciously and spoke again. "Bryan, I don't think you're that crazy. Otherwise, how could you say what you've just said?"

Momentarily dumfounded, Han Shuo's heart skipped a beat. He hastily scratched his head and replied with some embarrassment, "Eh, I sometimes feel like my mind is dull and foggy. I don't know what I do after that!"

"I see. Looks like there are some negative aftereffects of the Agony of the Soul on your body. Hmm, don't worry. I'll give you a close inspection when your back heals. I'll definitely cure all your weird ailments. It's almost time for me to lead students in the next round of experiments. I'm going to get back and get ready. You can clean up the rest!" Fanny chanted an incantation after speaking to Han Shuo, sending the zombie warriors in the training field back to the other dimension, and then left in a whirl.

Soon after Fanny had left, Han Shuo left the ruins of the training field and left to find Carey and Borg as well. He dictated arrogantly to them, "Don't worry, I've already taken care of your business. The two of you can now go clean up the training field!"

Carey and Borg were happily astonished, and ran off willy nilly with mops and brooms, overjoyed to mop up behind Han Shuo after showering a round of gratitude on him.

Han Shuo had no pressing matters to deal with after leaving the training field. He became curious about the contents of the jade box after recalling the events of yesterday, and truly wanted to learn what the ball was. There was no way that he could ask anyone else about this, and thus decided to head to the dark major library to see if there were any records of the ball.

Each major had its own individual library within the Babylon Academy of Magic. The range of topics contained within the books of each library were exceedingly diverse, and held all the wisdom and descriptions of the major's collective knowledge bank. Generally speaking, libraries were not open to the public, and there were strict regulations regarding access for students from other majors.

Using Jack's cleaning duties as an excuse, Han Shuo swaggered into the dark major library with a brush in hand.

"Bryan, what are you doing here? Aren't you supposed to be cleaning the training field at this time?" Little fatty Jack was putting books away and was startled into a soft question when he saw Han Shuo walk in with a brush.

"Heh heh, Carey and Borg, those two idiots, will be the ones cleaning up the training field in the future. I'm here on serious business today!" Han Shuo smiled and picked up a random book in a relaxed manner. He glanced at it and put it back after realizing that it was a book on the foundational basics of dark magic.

"Carey and Borg are cleaning the training field for you. ...how is that possible? Eh, is it because they're scared of you after the beating you gave them at the training field yesterday?" Little fatty Jack had an expression of astonishment, but then remembered Han Shuo's performance yesterday and looked at him with a bit of fear. "Oh right Bryan, what happened to you yesterday? You seemed like a different person. Even though we're really close, even I was really afraid of you yesterday!"

Han Shuo laughed lightly as he put one hand on Jack's shoulder. "That depends on who. If someone is making life difficult for me, I won't let him have an easy one either. Heh heh, with our relationship, there's no way that I would beat you up. Oh right Jack, where are the books regarding magical items in the dark major library?"

"Mm, second bookcase in the back. Why do you ask?" Jack pointed behind Han Shuo and asked in confusion.

“Nothing much, helping you clean?” Han Shuo smiled and walked towards the bookcase of magical item references.

“But Bryan, I’ve already dusted off that bookcase!” “Then I’ll dust it off again for you!”

When he reached the appropriate bookcase, Han Shuo started from the last row and started flipping through a book, carelessly throwing his brush to the side.

When he had been observing the jade box last night, Han Shuo’s mental strength flowed curiously to the ball inside. This allowed him to vaguely sense the magical currents within the ball. The Han Shuo of now wasn’t a complete rookie when it came to magical knowledge, and naturally understood that magical currents indicated that the ball was some kind of magical object. This was why he came searching for the ball’s origins within the library.

Unfortunately, Han Shuo realized after perusing most of the books on magical items, that these contained only simple descriptions of ordinary magical staffs, robes, and jewelry. It wasn’t what he wanted.

He cleaned up the bookcase with some dejection and resignation, no longer holding out hope for answers here. He then moved to the bookcases holding books on necromancy.

Since he had made his way to the library, he couldn’t very well leave empty handed. He should bring at least one book back for further study, Han Shuo mused as he started browsing through the books. The books at the top of the bookcases dealt with higher level magic, he wouldn’t understand them even he took them home. Therefore, he turned his attention to the lower level.

A book of “The Description of Dark Creatures” caught his eye. He flipped through a few pages and discovered that it recorded some of the particulars of summoning dark creatures.

Happy at heart, Han Shuo immediately went to find Jack and waved “The Description of Dark Creatures” at Jack. He chuckled, “Jack, I’m taking this book back for further study. Cover for me, don’t let other people find out.”

He didn’t wait for Jack to respond and happily stuffed the book into his clothes, grabbed the brush he’d discarded earlier, and left the library.

Chapter 22: Earn Some Spending Money

Time flew. Half a month had passed by in a blink of an eye.

This half of a month was one of the the most relaxing periods of time that Han Shuo had ever had. The cleaning duties that had originally belonged to him were taken care of by Borg and Carey. And because Han Shuo's back was injured, Fanny didn't come looking for him to conduct more research.

Han Shuo learned from Jack that even Fitch had gone in again to give the adept mage qualification trials another go. Therefore, this major enemy was temporarily not a threat.

Ever since Han Shuo's shameless confession of love at the bottom of the trap, Lisa's attitude towards Han Shuo had undergone a drastic change. Not only did she not pick on Han Shuo anymore, but she often protected him, forbidding other students to practice necromancy magic on him.

Given the situation, apart from eating, sleeping, drinking and showering, Han Shuo spent all the rest of his free time on practicing magic and studying "The Foundations of Necromancy" and "The Descriptions of Dark Creatures".

To be honest, the injuries on Han Shuo's back had long since healed, thanks to him practicing magic. There wasn't even a scar left anymore.

The current Han Shuo had grown another two centimeters, and was now 170 cm. Thanks to practicing magic and sufficient nutrition from rations, his previous weak-beyond-belief body had started to slowly firm up and increase in strength. There were even muscles forming on his chest and arms.

Unbeknownst to anyone else, Han Shuo's body and strength had slowly changed without anyone knowing. He had also progressed to the crucial point of training for the "Mystical Glacial Spellfire". When Han Shuo circulated his magical yuan, he could proceed according to the spell's instructions, and bring his magical yuan to the palms of his hands.

Whenever Han Shuo started up the “Mystical Glacial Spellfire” and circulated his magical yuan to his left and right palm, he could feel that the center of his palms respectively turn glacially cold and searingly hot. The surface of his skin would be tinged faint purple and red, causing the center of his hands to look quite odd.

Han Shuo didn't dare do anything rash with the weird jade box in the meantime. He was deathly afraid that last time's situation would happen again. He was temporarily unwilling to take that kind of risk again before he got a handle on what the round ball was and its purpose.

Thanks to studying “The Descriptions of Dark Creatures” over the past two weeks, Han Shuo had a much clearer understanding of the particulars of summoning specific dark creatures. He also understood how to communicate with them, and how to send them back to the other dimension.

However, even though the incantation for sending a summoned dark creature back to the other dimension was recorded in “The Description of Dark Creatures”, and Han Shuo believed that he was absolutely capable of doing so with his current level of mental strength, he didn't dare take action. This was because he wasn't sure if he could summon the little skeleton again if he sent it back to the other dimension.

The black skeleton with seven bone spurs was the result of Han Shuo's painstaking refinement according to the methods of refining a demonic treasure. Not only was it superior in all aspects to ordinary skeletons, but it had a scary immunity to light magic.

Han Shuo had spent his days and nights with the little skeleton during this time. It had also helped Han Shuo greatly, causing Han Shuo to grow attached to it. He was worried that if he sent it to the other dimension, he would lose it forever if he was unable to summon it next time.

It was because of this concern that although Han Shuo was confident he would be able to send it back to the other dimension, he still hesitated to do so. He'd rather have the little skeleton live under his bed, resolutely keeping it even when that meant running the risk of discovery by others.

The little black skeleton was lazily lying in a wooden bucket, its bones as black as ink and glowing with a faint haze. In the past two weeks, Han Shuo had often injected magical yuan into the bucket, continuing to refine it according to the Magical Yin Concentration Matrix.

Under Han Shuo's continual refinement, the little skeleton's body became more and more agile and strong. Its bone dagger was actually even stronger than ordinary knives and swords. Han Shuo had once experimented with a piece of broken bone, and discovered that the broken bone had been immediately cut in half when the bone dagger had sliced down.

As the little skeleton underwent changes, so did Han Shuo benefit from training in the solid realm. His body also received a mysterious makeover.

The only thing was, Han Shuo had still been unable to breakthrough this demonic realm level. He carefully went through old fart Chu Cang Lan's memories, adding some of his reflections on what had happened recently, and came to one conclusion – if he wanted to quickly reach perfection in the solid realm, “breaking things” was the most effective and efficient way.

Whenever Han Shuo had been severely beaten, or suffered injuries on his body, his body would quickly repair itself through magic training. And everytime after recovery, his body would be more stronger than before. His skin and bones would be more resilient. It was only after damage and injury that his progress in the solid realm would pick up.

When he thought through this point, Han Shuo gave an involuntary ironic smile. This kind of magic training was death by masochism! But since he had started on this path, he had to find a way to quickly breakthrough the solid realm in order to gain more strength and power.

On this day, Han Shuo's figure appeared at the doors of the martial arts school of the Babylon Academy of Magic and Force.

After a few days of gathering information, Han Shuo understood that a place for cultivating warriors and knights existed within this school. However, the warriors and knights were trained separately. The ranks of the warrior students were mostly filled with commoners Their training mostly consisted of practicing their fighting aura and being instilled with notions of loyalty to their liege.

The students within the school of knights mostly came from noble families, and was a training field for the powerful families and military forces, as well as the royal sons of the empire. These students hailed from uncommon origins and had varying degrees of influence within their families. Not only did they practice their fighting aura, but they were also here to learn the manners and graces of the nobility, strategies of war and art of command.

These students absorbed a variety of knowledge within the school of knights, all for the purpose of obtaining a good opportunity in the future, whether in their family or within the empire. The families of these knight students were all rather wealthy, and on the path of becoming a senior knight, did not bat an eye spending money to hire a few commoners for use in practicing battle and martial arts techniques.

A few commoners who felt they possessed tough bodies would take the pummeling in return for money and rich rewards. Even a few warrior students would become willing human targets in return for money.

However, it wasn't an easy task to earn this money. Knight students would sometimes miscalculate and even beat a few human targets to death. But because this was a mutually agreed, both sides willing transaction that the knight students had paid for, no one cared if the human targets were beaten to death. They were asking for it, after all.

Han Shuo had come here to become one of the human targets. But he wasn't in it for the money, he wanted to temper his body in order to breakthrough the solid realm.

Numerous human targets stood within a spacious lobby. Each was strong and fit, all wearing the grubby clothing of poor commoners. Han Shuo concentrated his attention for a moment and discovered some warrior students mixed into the crowd. Some had been drawn in by the academy's reputation, and some were students from the warrior school.

"You're an errand boy for the academy. But your body isn't very strong, and you're not a warrior. You're asking for death coming here. Little fellow, let me advise you to avoid pursuing this pay, otherwise you could really be beaten to death!" A thin old man said to Han Shuo as he looked over from the doors at the front of the lobby.

Old man Jeff was fifty some years old, and in the same occupation as Han Shuo. He wore an errand boy's clothes and was in charge of registering the human targets. He had some misgivings about the frailty of Han Shuo's body and so tried to persuade Han Shuo out of kindness.

"No worries, Mister Jeff please register me. I'd like to try!" Han Shuo looked at Jeff and spoke sincerely.

"Since you insist, I'll register you. Ai. Do you think this is easy money? If you really are beaten to death, don't blame me for not warning you!" Upon seeing Han Shuo was still insistent after a few attempts, and that others behind in the line were impatiently calling out, Jack gave up trying to convince Han Shuo and agreed, putting down "Bryan" in the register.

A few other human targets looked at him oddly when Han Shuo walked in through the doors. The eyes of most were filled with disdain, and the kindhearted few wore expressions of pity and regret, even trying to convince Han Shuo not to try.

Although Han Shuo's body was a bit stronger than before due to practicing magic, he was still quite a ways off from the burly men whose arms were thicker than his thighs. Bryan had been all skin and bones like a skinny monkey, and Han Shuo was only marginally stronger in comparison.

"Listen to me, leave while you still can, otherwise you'll surely be beaten to death." As Han Shuo took in his surroundings, a thin, twenty some year old youth walked over to Han Shuo and tried to persuade him.

This youth wore the clothes of a warrior student. Even though his body didn't look too well built either, he was undoubtedly much stronger than those who looked strong on the outside, but hadn't practiced any martial arts techniques simply because he was a warrior student.

"Thank you, I want to try!" Han Shuo flashed a friendly smile and spoke lightly as he nodded at the youth.

“I’m called Cal, and I come here often to earn some extra money. Even though I’m a sergeant knight, I’ve still suffered serious injuries before. I’ve seen too many who were beaten to death because they wanted to earn some money, so I hope you can take my advice. Leave while you still can, otherwise you’ll truly regret it!” Cal looked at Han Shuo with sincerity, dissuading Han Shuo with a face of genuity.

Han Shou smiled and shook his head, “I’m called Bryan. Very nice to meet you Cal. I’m grateful for your good intentions, but I must try.”

Cal gave an involuntary sigh upon seeing Han Shuo’s determination, and shook his head without saying anything. Cal’s gaze however, was full of pity, as if he felt that Han Shuo was surely dead without a doubt.

Chapter 23: This kid's a bit strong

"Alright, our noble future knights are coming this way. Good luck!" Jeff suddenly yelled loudly as Han Shuo and Cal were talking.

More than ten colorfully dressed knight students wearing exquisite swords walked in through the lobby doors following Jeff's announcement. Most of them were teenage boys, with an exceedingly few amount of young girls.

They cast arrogant looks in judgment, sizing up the human targets in the lobby. The warriors in the lobby were the first to be noticed. These guys had much more strength than the average person, and would be the most beneficial in terms of real combat experience. They were thus naturally the first to draw attention.

The group of warriors that Cal headed up were the first to be targeted by the students. As the crowd of students haggled over an acceptable price, the group of warriors were led away for practice at the training field. Cal was one of them, and he cast a regretful glance from afar at Han Shuo as he left.

Warriors were the strongest out of all the human targets, and the most useful for knight students in terms of actual combat practice. If knight students wished to hire them, then the amount they would have to pay would naturally be far above that of ordinary, burly commoner.

After the warrior human targets, who had been mixed throughout the lobby, had been hired away as first pick, those remaining were all commoners. Of those, the ones who were brawny and stocky became the first to be selected.

Some flexed their huge muscles, showing off bodybuilding poses that screamed I'm-so-strong-my-muscles-are-awesome. They wore fawning smiles as they looked at the future knights, hoping to be selected and receive rich compensation in return.

Han Shuo's body was unremarkable to begin with, and being completely obscured by a crowd of tall and strong muscle men, he was taken even less seriously. Han Shuo started to become secretly anxious as he saw the knight students pick their targets and leave one by one.

The three muscle men next to him were standing in three different directions, almost completely covering him. The knight students probably couldn't even see him. As Han Shuo fretted, he also tried to find a way to stand out.

"Hi, big guy, excuse me!" Han Shuo patted the two meter mountain of flesh ahead of him and flashed a friendly smile.

The brawny man's skin was copper-colored, and his back was a sturdy frame. Muscles rippled through his two meter tall height, like a bodybuilder who Han Shuo had seen before.

When he heard Han Shuo speak, the man turned around and glared at Han Shuo with a vicious look. His right bicep muscle abruptly curled and tensed, forming a small mountain of flesh. He then laughed coldly in pride, and turned his head without another word.

What the, so what if you have big muscles! Han Shuo also gave a cold laugh internally and reached out with his left hand. He placed it on the man's waist, and suddenly pushed forward hard.

Dondondon. The big muscle man stumbled and staggered forward three steps following the inrush of the force from Han Shuo's strong push.

The lobby was already extremely crowded thanks to the presence of many mountains of flesh. People around him were shoved against their will when this person suddenly came crashing in. The area in front of Han Shuo immediately became quite chaotic.

"Damnit, Daniel, do you want to break the rules?" The other mountains of flesh, that had been body slammed by the mountain of flesh called Daniel, roared furiously after steadying himself.

"It wasn't me! It was the kid behind me!" Daniel protested his innocence to the burly man beside him, and immediately glared at Han Shuo ferociously, saying coldly, "Kid, do you want to die early?"

At this moment, Han Shuo had already taken advantage of the situation to slip out and occupy one of the better positions on the other side of the lobby. Upon hearing Daniel's words, Han Shuo gave a cold laugh and also stretched out his right hand, making the same bodybuilding pose that Daniel had just made. He flexed his biceps and made an I'm-so-strong gesture, cocking an eyebrow and gazing at Daniel provocatively.

A few additional knight students walked in suddenly and was about to pick the human targets in the back. They all halted their motions of hiring and looked over in interest, when they realized that there seemed to be something interesting going on.

Han Shuo had arrogantly struck such an outrageous pose because he had seen these new knight students walk in. Based on Han Shuo's body condition, it would be a bit difficult to be chosen out of the crowd. Trying to gain attention with his body and self boasting would also most likely not amount to much. The fastest shortcut was to use tyrannical strength to rout a mountain of flesh. Only then would the knight students change their minds about him.

Except, even though Han Shuo had struck a cocky, provocative pose, he was still an idiot in the eyes of others. If a mountain of flesh like Daniel had made such a gesture, it would have naturally been quite intimidating.

But, when a 170 cm tall and thin Han Shuo strutted arrogantly amongst so many mountains of flesh, one could only say – ridiculous, courting death!

“Ha, kid since you seek death, I'll send you on your way!” Daniel did not immediately erupt into a full blown rage when faced with Han Shuo's provocation, but was rather delighted. He laughed loudly, raised an arm thicker than Han Shuo's thigh and grabbed for Han Shuo.

In the lobby, fights often broke out between human targets seeking to distinguish themselves and attract the attentions of a rich and powerful knight student. This was a common sight. Daniel was naturally happy instead of angry when he saw that Han Shuo's reckless provocation was playing right into his plans. He would be able to use this kid to prove his aggressiveness and ferocity in front of the knight students.

Except, muscular and fierce people were usually all brawn and no brains. Daniel had given no thought to how much strength Han Shuo would've needed, with his body condition, in order to push Daniel forcefully from the piles of flesh and even cause those he'd crashed into to stagger as well.

The errand boy in charge of registering names, Jeff, couldn't bear to see Daniel reach towards Han Shuo and called out involuntarily, "Daniel, he's an errand boy for the students. You can't harm him seriously."

"I will!" Daniel smiled in response and didn't slow his right hand, still going towards Han Shuo.

A few human targets with good intentions and some of the kinder knight students winced in anticipation. Some of the young female knight students even screamed in fear.

Just as Daniel's meaty hand was about to fall upon Han Shuo's head, Han Shuo's body suddenly shifted from the position he had been standing in, causing Daniel's incoming hand to grasp at this air.

Han Shuo also laughed weirdly at this moment, as if mocking Daniel's incompetence. He stuck out his left arm again, and curled his left bicep with the same posture. His right finger pointed at the small muscle that had flexed on his bicep and nodded towards Daniel. His meaning was apparently even though he hadn't said a word. "See, I'm strong!"

"Ah, this kid is really cocky!"

"Provocation, absolute provocation!"

"Hah, interesting fellow!"

"..."

A stream of exclamations came out of mouths of the human targets and knight students. When they saw that Han Shuo hadn't been caught, they took things one step further and struck ridiculous poses themselves, further heightening general interest. Even a few knight students, who had been negotiating prices with some other human targets, temporarily halted their conversations and focused their attention on Han Shuo.

“Kid, how dare you insult me. I’m gonna get you today!” Daniel’s face burned bright red, like a spontaneously enraged bull. The knight students standing around him were his sources of fortune. Daniel’s fury was utterly inflamed by such naked humiliation. Judging from the way he looked, he had most likely long forgotten Jeff’s words of caution.

As Daniel spoke, his eyes spat out fire and his hands formed fists of iron as he glared vehemently at Han Shuo. He brought them crashing down towards Han Shuo, wanting to violently damage Han Shuo’s body instead of grabbing him.

To outsiders, this punch was worlds apart from Daniel’s previous action, whether in terms of speed or strength. This indicated that Daniel was truly furious this time. If Han Shuo was really hit, he would be gravely injured, if not dead outright.

Those who had previously paid attention to the proceedings out of the kindness of their heart started to worry for Han Shuo again.

Seeing that the attack was about to reach him, Han Shuo pushed off his heels and twisted his body, somehow miraculously dodging Daniel’s iron fists attack. When Daniel struck empty air, his body followed through the action and stumbled forward a good distance. The human targets in his path, who had been watching the show, all scrambled backwards in panic, fearful of being embroiled in the mess.

Han Shuo on the other hand had created circles in front of his chest with his two arms, pointing his fists upwards and puffing out his chest. With a trace of a disdainful smile at the corner of his lips, he had once again struck a provocative bodybuilder pose.

A string of astounded noises suddenly emitted from the onlookers. The knight students originally had the attitude of watching a good show started unconsciously treating Han Shuo seriously. The first evasion could perhaps be explained as a fluke, but Han Shuo still successfully dodged Daniel’s attacks after the latter had increased the speed and strength of his iron fists. This could no longer be explained by luck.

As everyone was marveling in astonishment, Daniel was like a crazy violent beast. His eyes bloodshot, his body shot forward again, like the wind accompanied by a roar of rage, reaching out with both hands and seeking to smash Han Shuo into pulp.

Miracles kept materializing as Han Shuo kept avoiding Daniel's attacks. He was as cunning as a fish, and his speed exceedingly swift as well. He even had the breathing space to continuously strike all sorts of bizarre and unique bodybuilding poses.

Han Shuo's actions were absolutely a naked provocation, an outrageous flaunting!

"Wow, he's so strong. Those insulting poses never repeat, I've never seen anything like it!" A female knight exclaimed in surprise.

"This kid's a bit strong!" A male knight student exclaimed in surprise.

"Daniel's in a spot of trouble this time!" A mountain of flesh exclaimed in surprise.

"....."

The entire lobby was in an uproar!

Chapter 24: First bucket of gold

“Damnit, I’m going to kill you!” Daniel roared explosively. He was thoroughly crazed, and began to attack Han Shuo fiercely, as if he was going to drag Han Shuo down to hell with him.

But Han Shuo was like a sturdy canoe in the middle of a furious ocean. It seemed like it would capsize at any moment, but it somehow resolutely clung on unharmed.

By now, everyone fully acknowledged Han Shuo’s evasion speed. No one thought that Han Shuo’s previous dodges had been out of luck now. Those who had been worried about him now wore carefree smiles. Even Jeff crossed his arms and was laughing merrily as he looked over.

Finally, Daniel ran out of energy and stopped automatically, panting heavily. He angrily glared at Han Shuo, with sweat dripping down like rain, roaring, “Kid, take one of my hits if you have the guts to. What’s the use in only dodging?”

Daniel had only meant to vent an angry complaint, even he didn’t think that Han Shuo would take a hit, but surprisingly, Han Shuo stopped his various bodybuilding poses and had the presence of mind to nod at Daniel, smiling, “No problem.”

Everyone revisited their opinions of Han Shuo after this response, with many displaying perplexed expressions. Han Shuo’s body was thin and small, so it was understandable that he was nimble and agile, but no one believed that the frail Han Shuo, with no fighting aura, could hold his own in terms of strength against Daniel, an obvious muscle man.

Even Daniel himself was gobsmacked by Han Shuo’s response. He swiftly recovered and laughed wildly, “Good, good. You’re the one who wants to die. You can’t blame me!”

Daniel had always been proud of his strong body and ferocious strength. This had formed the basis of his earned power. Although it rankled his pride, Daniel could grudgingly accept that his speed and nimbleness didn’t measure up to Han Shuo’s. Now that a chance to display his awesome strength was in front of him, it was up to him to see if he could wipe away the previous humiliation with one blow. Daniel was naturally going to take full advantage of this opportunity.

Gathering up his strength, Daniel propelled his right fist forward. The veins on his arm popped out as he increased his speed and strength to the limit, bring his fist crashing down on Han Shuo.

Han Shuo squinted his eyes a bit, a sinister coldness sparkling in their depths. They were like those of a viper, lying in wait for it's prey, giving the feeling of poised cruelty.

As Daniel's fist came flying towards his face, Han Shuo concentrated his magical yuan into his tightly-clenched, right fist and punched outwards in a head-on collision course with Daniel's iron fist.

Pa!

Daniel emitted a devastating scream, like a pig being slaughtered, as a crisp sound rang out. His entire right arm drooped, and the right fist, that had being tightly clenched moments earlier, was now curled in the shape of a chicken's claw, shaking madly with his right arm.

The severeness within Han Shuo's eyes faded away, and a harmless smile reappeared on his face. He retracted the right fist that he'd just thrust out and shook his right arm slightly, looking at his fist in shock. He muttered to himself, "Eh? I really took the hit?"

Daniel had put all his strength into that hit despite seeing Han Shuo's weak body. This wasn't simply teaching Han Shuo a lesson, but wanting to give him a death sentence, but the current Han Shuo was no longer a timid coward who dumbly accepted everything that flew his way. Although he sometimes played dumb, he naturally wouldn't be kind to someone who wanted to actually kill him.

The bizarre outcome of their two fists meeting had completely stunned the lobby full of knight students and human targets. A few of the nearby commoner human targets looked at Han Shuo now with just a trace of fear in their gazes. The people next to him automatically shied away, leaving the prime spot for him.

All the knight students were extremely excited and put their heads together in discussion. Some even suspected that Han Shuo was one of the rare barbarians on the Continent, or an orc that had taken human form.

Daniel was still wailing in pain as his right arm trembled continuously. Everyone understood what that crisp crack just now had meant: Daniel's right arm was most likely destroyed and useless.

The old errand boy Jeff looked at Daniel regretfully and spoke soft words of comfort, "Daniel, I'm sorry that this happened, but I'm afraid that your current body condition has disqualified you from staying here."

Daniel involuntarily looked at Han Shuo in resentment upon hearing Jeff's words. He then brushed past Han Shuo and walked out of the lobby. Too many previous injuries had resulted from fights, thus a few rules had been laid down. Daniel understood his place and position. Add to that his clear understanding that he was no match for Han Shuo, his only option was to leave early.

When Daniel had left, Jeff gave a great yell. "Alright alright, everyone can continue your negotiations!"

Multiple knight students walked towards Han Shuo as soon as Jeff called out. All of them had fixed their gazes on him and were shouting, "One gold coin!" "Two gold coins!" "Three gold coins!"

Under normal circumstances, according to their respective strength, a commoner human target could be hired for student practice for ten to fifty silvers. Warriors with high potential could be hired for one to five gold coins depending on their level.

The two or three gold coins that these people were offering were amazingly high amounts. Although Han Shuo had displayed his power just now, he still wasn't a warrior. A stronger warrior would have been able to use his fighting aura to deal a single, fatal blow to Daniel in the fight just now. Therefore, a price of two or three golds was an incredible price for a commoner human target.

Han Shuo had been ready to accept when the first student had called out one gold coin, but when the subsequent price of two gold coins had appeared, Han Shuo shut his mouth with an audible click and awaited higher offers.

Although he wasn't here for money, Han Shuo fully understood that money was just as important in this world as it was on Earth. He would definitely not settle for earning only one gold coin when he could earn two.

The knight students all walked up to Han Shuo and called out increasingly higher bids. However, Han Shuo was still a commoner and not a warrior with surpassing strength. Therefore, these people mostly stopped after two or three gold coins.

"Five gold coins!"

Han Shuo's patience had won a large sum for him. A handsome Sergeant Knight with golden curls, one who looked kind and humble, offered a price higher than the others.

Most stopped bidding as soon as his offer of five gold coins appeared. They looked at him askance, and one of them said, "Lawrence, a Sergeant Warrior is only worth five gold coins. Although this kid's a bit strong, he's definitely not worth five gold. Isn't your price a bit high?"

Lawrence smiled and said placidly, "It's a bit high, but we've come a bit late and all of the good warriors have been hired anyway. There aren't many left, so we can only choose him."

The others agreed as they pondered his words. Out of all the human targets left in the lobby, Han Shuo's strength was most likely the highest. If the warriors who had been here earlier were still here, then perhaps Han Shuo wouldn't have been worth this much, but now that he was the strongest here, the knight students didn't have much choice. People were also impatient to find a sparring partner, thus further increasing Han Shuo's worth.

"How does five gold coins sound to this amazing friend?" Lawrence smiled at Han Shuo and asked peacefully.

Han Shuo realized that no one would continue to bid higher after looking around, and then proceeded to size up Lawrence as the strongest out of those present. He nodded, "I accept!"

"My name is Lawrence and here's five gold coins. I hope you can help me in our training later!" Lawrence walked towards Han Shuo and took five gold coins out of a colorful pouch.

Han Shuo was a bit emotional as he accepted the five gold coins. Bryan had been sold to the Babylon Academy of Magic and Force for five gold coins back in the day. These five gold coins he'd earned for sparring with a knight student were enough to buy back Bryan's life! Five gold coins was a heavenly price for Han Shuo's current position; it was enough for his freedom!

"I'm called Bryan, nice to meet you." Han Shuo smiled urbanely at his fortune god Lawrence after he'd put the gold coins into his own ragged money pouch.

"Come with me and let me see if you're worth those five gold coins!" Lawrence walked out decisively with Han Shuo following close behind.

The training fields of the school of martial arts were quite similar to those of the school of magic. However, the corners were filled with obstacles instead of magical items. There was only Han Shuo and Lawrence in the spacious training field. The ground was tiled with rough, hard rock and the surface was extremely hard to the touch.

Lawrence changed into an athletic, white training uniform after entering the venue. He disarmed his sword, placing it to the side. Only then did he look at Han Shuo with some interest, smiling, "Those five gold coins aren't earned easily. Are you ready?"

Han Shuo inwardly thought that his body was worlds apart in toughness and strength from the original Bryan, thanks to the forging from the magical yuan. Add to that the magical yuan's curious negating effect against fighting aura, and he wasn't that afraid of Lawrence damaging his body with fighting aura. There wasn't much to prepare, so he nodded at Lawrence.

"Remember, you're sparring and thus can only dodge or block, but cannot attack!” It seemed that Lawrence could tell that Han Shuo was new at this, and issued some reminders before beginning. He only started slowly walking towards Han Shuo when he was satisfied that Han Shuo understood.

Just as Lawrence was about to reach Han Shuo’s side, his speed suddenly increased like lightning. His empty left hand was like a sharp sword being unsheathed, and it came rushing towards Han Shuo’s chest. His fingers were arranged together and pointed towards Han Shuo.

Due to training his fighting aura, a knight’s strength and speed were completely beyond the realm of an ordinary burly commoner if he activated his fighting aura. Lawrence’s onrushing hand was more than ten times the speed and strength of Claude’s from earlier.

Han Shuo’s eyes lost focus as he saw that Lawrence’s hand was already near his chest. His heart spasmed in fright as his magical yuan started churning quickly. Han Shuo abruptly twisted his body and dodged to the side.

Lawrence slashed open the front of Han Shuo’s shirt with a clear ripping sound. Han Shuo felt a cold draft on his chest and saw his shirt flying away in the breeze. He felt relieved that he had managed to dodgd in time.

However, a large amount of force surged into his lower abdomen while Han Shou was still inwardly celebrating. His body involuntarily staggered backwards as he sat down on the hard rock. His intestines and stomach felt like they’d been smashed together and it hurt quite a bit.

He lifted his head to see that Lawrence’s extended foot was still halted in midair. The student was looking at Han Shuo with a bantering look, “Bryan, I pulled my punches this time, and didn’t keep attacking. I won’t be as kind next time.”

Lawrence’s kick just now had been infused with fighting aura. However, Lawrence had only employed his fighting aura to increase his body and attack speed, and had kept it contained within his body. He hadn’t projected the fighting aura into Han Shuo’s body for further damage.

And it was because of this that the magical yuan within Han Shuo’s body hadn't reacted. His physical body had taken the collision that had been filled with a crazy amount of strength. Even his improved body had taken damage.

He nodded with his brows drawn tightly together. Han Shuo gritted his teeth against the pain from his stomach and stood up from the ground. He looked at Lawrence coldly, "I'll be more careful from now on. Again!"

Chapter 25: Pain and Happiness

Lawrence looked at Han Shuo with some surprise, then smiled and said, “very good”. His body abruptly moved again, and he appeared in front of Han Shuo in the blink of an eye. He violently kicked out with his foot using lightning-like speed, still aiming for Han Shuo’s stomach.

Han Shuo had already taken a hefty kick to the stomach at this point in time and was in an exceeding amount of pain. He was well aware that sergeant knight Lawrence’s attack speed and strength was not something that he, someone who hadn’t even surpassed the solid realm of demonic practice, could fully defend against.

But, for some reason, Han Shuo was wholly unafraid, and even felt a bit of eager anticipation. The magical yuan within his body circulated through his abdomen a few times, and he felt a quick abatement of pain. He concentrated like he never had before, and faced Lawrence’s subsequent attacks calmly.

Just as Lawrence’s foot came flying his way, Han Shuo’s feet had already pushed off and he backed up with haste, evading Lawrence’s foot like lightning. However, Lawrence wasn’t surprised in the least and his body didn’t hesitate. He followed his empty kick with a string of punches and kicks, following Han Shuo’s retreat and ferociously continued to attack Han Shuo.

Lawrence was a sergeant level knight, and could increase his body functions beyond a typical muscle man when he circulated his fighting aura to his energy and attack power. Even with Han Shuo’s current agility, he still couldn’t avoid being repeatedly hit. Pilipala sounded continuously, as Han Shuo could only fully protect his face. That left his chest, waist, stomach, arms, and legs to suffer constant hits.

The pain in his body increased as he started being hit multiple times. His evasion speed became more sluggish due to his overall body condition. He was hit with more attacks this way, and towards the end his two legs were as heavy as lead, and each movement required a monumental amount of effort.

If it wasn't for the fact that Han Shuo had been constantly practicing magic and strengthening his body during this time, then based off Bryan's weak and fragile body, he would've been dead within a minute of Lawrence's storm of attacks.

When he'd faced Claude and Erick, both had sent their fighting aura directly into Han Shuo's body. The wild fighting aura had been enclosed by the magical yuan as soon as it'd entered his body, preventing Han Shuo's body from suffering from too much damage.

Han Shuo hadn't been seriously injured the two times he'd been hit by fighting aura, causing him to slightly overlook the warriors and knight, but now that he'd been subjected to such a thorough beating by Lawrence, Han Shuo finally understood how he'd been completely wrong before.

He hadn't been hurt before purely due to the wondrous effects of the magical yuan. If it wasn't for the magical yuan, then his internal organs would have most likely have been completely destroyed as soon as the fighting aura entered his body. No wonder Claude was so taken aback when Han Shuo hadn't immediately died a grisly death when Claude sent his fighting aura into Han Shuo's body. This also explained why Erick confidently thought that Han Shuo was dead without a doubt, and didn't even bother checking Han Shuo's body.

Lawrence used his fighting aura in a different way and didn't send it directly into Han Shuo's body to wreak havoc on his internal organs. On the contrary, Lawrence used it to increase the speed and strength of his attacks. This prevented the wondrous effects of the magical yuan and forced Han Shuo to passively take the hits with his physical body.

Pa!

The same foot stomped on Han Shuo's stomach again, and Han Shuo staggered backwards in retreat. He finally couldn't handle any more and once more fell heavily to the ground.

The current Han Shuo had two broken ribs and numerous other injuries. Apart from his unharmed face, his entire body had suffered severe hits as it never had before. Han Shuo struggled with his body and kept trying to stand up, but would wobble back to the ground every time he tried.

Each twist and movement of his body brought him great pain, but Han Shuo actually felt ecstasy at this moment. He could clearly feel that the magical yuan was circulating at a speed much faster than normal, and kept flowing through all his aches and pains, creating a strange, fiery sensation where his bones had been broken and wounds had been opened.

Han Shuo understood that his previous conclusion had been correct. The fastest way to breakthrough the solid realm was to “break things”. The magical yuan’s abnormal circulations now continually repaired his broken body, and reforged his tendons, bones, muscles, and skin over and over again, causing his physical body to become tougher.

Although his body hurt beyond belief, Han Shuo was quite satisfied. He grit his teeth and yelled brokenly while laughing grimly. He finally scrambled to his feet and stared at Lawrence in the eye, “I think our partnership can be continued for a long time.”

Lawrence stopped and stood in front of Han Shuo, frowning as he watched the latter struggle to his feet after falling again and again. As the attacker, Lawrence was well aware of the force of his attacks just now. Even an ordinary companion-at-arms with the benefit of defending with fighting aura would not be able to take the hits like Han Shuo stubbornly did.

What surprised Lawrence the most was that even after suffering these fierce attacks, Han Shuo could still laugh loudly in between screams of pain. Lawrence could hear from Han Shuo’s laughs that the latter truly seemed to be filled with joy. Lawrence thought this was simply too incredible.

When Han Shuo had mentioned a long term partnership, Lawrence was dumbfounded at first, but then smiled lightly. “Bryan, you’re quite interesting, but a long term partnership depends on your body and whether it can handle more attacks. To be honest, I haven’t fully exerted myself today, nor have I used my sword. I have coins in abundance. If you still want to earn this money, you can come find me anytime. I will still offer the same price of five golds per session, what do you think?”

Han Shuo nodded and responded, “No problem, I’ll be back soon!”

“Good. Bryan you’re a very interesting fellow, I hope you can recover quickly. My attacks next time will be even more vicious! Be prepared!” Lawrence said as he changed out of his clothes, rearmed himself with his sword and left the training field.

Han Shuo didn’t leave immediately after Lawrence had departed. He instead sat down Indian style, and repeatedly circulated the magical yuan according to the principles of practicing magic, reforging his severely damaged body.

After a while, he felt his drained energy slowly revive after repeated circulations of the magical yuan. His legs, that felt like they weighed a ton, also gradually regained some strength. Although he still hurt all over, pain seemed to be better than the complete lifelessness he had felt earlier.

He grimaced as he moved, sensing the pain he was in. Han Shuo laughed loudly, holding up underneath the unending agony. He slowly stood up, then swaggered out of the training field.

“Oh, it’s Bryan, are you alright?”

Han Shuo heard others gasp in amazement as soon as he walked out of the training field. Upon swiveling his body, he realized that it was the kindhearted young warrior, Cal, the one who had tried to talk Han Shuo out of it in the lobby. Cal’s tight robes had some dust on it, and some traces of sweat beaded his forehead, but he seemed otherwise unharmed.

“No big deal.” Han Shuo smiled at Cal and responded faintly while nodding his head.

Cal was a seasoned warrior and could tell with one glance that Han Shuo was not as unaffected as he said he was. Cal had a great deal of experience as a human target, and naturally understood that even if nothing showed in outward appearances, that didn’t necessarily mean that the body was unharmed. The way that Han Shuo was walking and his expression all indicated that his body condition was quite bad.

Cal quickly walked towards Han Shuo and reached out a hand to help steady Han Shuo. Cal frowned, "What no big deal. Your body must be in awful shape. Here, let me take you back. Good thing you walked out alive, I thought you'd be beaten to death in there!"

Cal meant well, but Han Shuo was an errand boy for the necromancy major, and a crazy one at that. If he were to return with Cal, it was bound to create unnecessary complications.

Besides, Han Shuo didn't want to owe anyone favors. Even though he felt terrible, he had to hold it in. He would be fine if he walked slowly. Therefore, Han Shuo brushed off Cal's steadying hand and smiled, "Thank you Cal. I'm fine, really. I can go back by myself."

Han Shuo turned to leave immediately after his words, but saw a familiar figure approaching from afar – Claude.

A human target followed behind Claude, and they both approached the knight student training fields. It looked like he was also here to spar with human targets.

Han Shuo had been prepared to bump into Claude when he came to the school for knights. The last time at the department of light magic, Han Shuo's little skeleton had almost been pulverized by Claude, and he himself had suffered from Claude's fighting aura as well. If it wasn't for the magical yuan enclosing the fighting aura, he would most likely be dead by now.

Claude had long since forgotten this matter, and didn't know that the Han Shuo was the master of the little skeleton, but Han Shuo had already noted this event for future revenge. Even though he was prepared to see Claude again, his body condition was at its worst at the moment and Han Shuo had no desire to go head to head with Claude right now. If he'd guessed wrong and Claude was still harboring a grudge from last time, death was the only possible outcome for Han Shuo if Claude took his revenge.

Han Shuo's mind frantically raced through ways to avoid Claude as the latter approached with a sunny smile, turning his head to hold a spirited conversation with other knight students.

Chapter 26: Entering a demonic mental state

As Claude neared him, Han Shuo grimaced and gave a low moan. He ducked his body and head and reached for his ankle, as if inspecting the injury to his ankle.

Next to him, Cal frowned involuntarily as he saw Han Shuo's actions. He propped Han Shuo up with one hand and said, "Are you alright? Is your ankle injured? Let me take a look."

"Nothing much, just that I twisted it a bit just now." Han Shuo responded lowly with a drooped head and a bent over body.

Claude and the other knight students had arrived by this time. The others had come later and did not recognize Han Shuo. There were many present who were wounded or crippled, and so Han Shuo's performance didn't attract too much attention.

Claude flicked a glance at Han Shuo and thought nothing of it, passing by Han Shuo as he chatted and laughed with his peers.

Han Shuo's ankle was indeed twisted, and had swollen up by now. Cal gave a soft gasp upon seeing it, "It's swollen up so much, let me take you home!"

Seeing that Claude's footsteps were going further away, Han Shuo stood up straight again and wiggled his ankle, spinning off his toes. He smiled at Cal, "I suddenly feel much better. Thank you Cal, no worries about taking me back!"

Han Shuo's walking pace picked up after he finished speaking, and he quickly disappeared around the corner without a trace or making another sound.

Cal shook his head, his face utterly perplexed as he watched Han Shuo suddenly become hale and hearty. "What a weird person!"

Han Shuo dragged his battered body back to the necromancy major of the school of magic when the sky was about to turn dark. Now that his necromancy errand duties had been taken over by Carey and Borg, Han Shuo didn't need to expend too much effort. He lined up for his dinner after returning and went directly to the warehouse. He immediately started using the magical yuan to continually rebuild and reforge his body after he'd locked the door.

There wasn't a single inch of his body that didn't cry out in pain. His skin, tendons and bones had all suffered severe damage. The magical yuan circulated his body again and again according to the principles of practicing magic. Han Shuo could feel a bit of his strength return from the fiery mass of pain that was his current body each time the magical yuan completed a circulation.

The magical yuan churned continuously throughout the process, and it seemed to have grown just a tad bigger, bringing a new surprise to Han Shuo. It looked like the time and effort spent on strengthening his body was also a process of gradual improvement for the magical yuan. He would have to endure this kind of injury in the near future in order to fortify his body.

The pain in his body eased up after midnight and Han Shuo switched to practicing the Mystical Glacial Spellfire at this time. He circulated the magical yuan to his fingertips and palms of his hands according to the instructions of the Mystical Glacial Spellfire.

Time flew as Han Shuo sank into a strange, oblivious mindset. There were no distractions in his mind, just the perseverance and tenacity to train. He had long since forgotten the pain and injuries of his body, and just kept circulating his magical yuan according to method prescribed by the Mystical Glacial Spellfire.

Han Shuo had previously restrained himself when practicing magic. He would awaken at a set time, and had never immersed himself like he had today. Han Shuo had lost himself in it today, forgetting the passage of time, forgetting his sense of self, forgetting all mundane distractions.

Bam.

The small door to the warehouse suddenly banged open, startling Han Shuo out of his reverie. He frowned and his eyes shot like cold lightning to Jack's body.

Jack shuddered in fright under Han Shuo's stare, only exhaling softly when he saw the cold lightning in Han Shuo's eyes fade away. "Bryan, so you really were in the warehouse. I thought something happened to you!"

Han Shuo immediately checked his body's condition after being startled awake. He suddenly realized that his originally heavily injured body had mostly healed, and that the magical yuan circulating within his body was a bit stronger than before. His mental strength also showed more clarity than before.

"What could happen to me. I only slept in one day, that's all. Borg and Carey are cleaning for me anyway, there's nothing to do." Han Shuo cracked his stiff neck as creaking noises sounded. When Han Shuo got up from the small wooden bed and stretched his body, all the bones in his body sounded with crisp pa! pa! sounds, leaving Jack dumbfounded where he stood.

After a while, Jack finally reacted in surprise when the strange sounds had disappeared from Han Shuo's body. He called out involuntarily, "Uh, Bryan, you didn't sleep in for just a day. You haven't appeared in six days! I knocked on your door for a long time without any response from you, I thought something happened to you!"

Han Shuo was also astounded by Jack's words. Had he trained for six whole days? He creased his brow and then suddenly recalled the mention of 'entering a demonic mental state' within Chu Cang Lan's memories of demonic magic.

Some practitioners would be able to enter a demonic mental state due to fortuitous coincidence. It varied accordingly, and the demonic mental state was further split into either an aggressive or passive state. Some practitioner's minds and disposition would drastically change upon entering the demonic mental state, and they would thirst for and feast on blood and murder. Their bodies would feel no pain, and both their magic and physical body would be greatly enhanced upon entering the demonic mental state. They would be unable to pause for even a second, and would only seek to continuously destroy everything and everyone in front of them. This was the aggressive type of a demonic mental state.

The other kind was what Han Shuo had experienced earlier, suddenly entering a demonic mental state during practice. It was a vague, foggy process undetectable by the practitioner, but his internal processes and magical yuan circulation would be greatly heightened compared to typical training conditions. He wouldn't be able to sense his own training status, but would be able to discern a huge change within his body when he awoke.

The first type of demonic mental state ordinarily occurred after the rational mind had lost itself due to severe interference. If the practitioner didn't die in the course of the endless killings spurred on by the demonic state, his body's energies would be greatly harmed along with other side effects. Han Shuo's peaceful demonic state was the much better option. Most entered this bizarre mental realm during training, and could feel the increase in their strength when they awoke.

"Oh, that's because I've been a bit sleepy lately and slept too deeply. Right, what do you need me for?" Han Shuo realized that his stomach felt empty as he spoke, and immediately understood that his body greatly needed food and nutrition after going six days without eating.

Jack withdrew a large piece of bread for Han Shuo as he looked at Han Shuo rub his stomach. "I was worried about you, and Master Fanny told me to tell you to go to her lab. Oh yes, Lisa was asking about you too. I don't know if she wants to make trouble for you again."

"I see. Hmm. I'll go to Master Fanny's first. Let's go!" Han Shuo munched on Jack's bread as he walked out of the warehouse.

It was a good thing that Han Shuo had shoved the little skeleton underneath the bed during this time. Jack hadn't seen anything amiss when he'd barged in. After he relocked the door that Jack had come crashing through, Han Shuo made straight for Fanny's lab.

Knock knock knock.

Han Shuo stood at the entrance to Fanny's lab and raised his hand to knock.

"Come in!" Fanny's gentle and soft voice sounded from the lab. Han Shuo opened the door and stepped into the lab upon hearing it.

Several magic scrolls were placed on the pedestal in the middle of the lab. Mysterious and exquisite magic words and diagrams were tattooed on the scrolls. Even someone who had just set foot into the halls of magic, a rookie like Han Shuo, could feel the strong magical currents from the scrolls from a far distance away.

At that moment, Fanny was chanting an incantation as she bent over, tracing beautiful lines on the magic scrolls as she dipped a long, elegant nail into the brown magic solution to the side. Those delicate lines looked random, but also gave a wondrous feeling of extreme harmony.

Fanny finished outlining the scroll after a while and injected magic into the scroll after reciting an incantation. A desolate, lonely and dark aura immediately started emanating from it as a dash of brown light flashed over the scroll. It then rolled itself up automatically.

When she had stored the finished magic scroll, Fanny lifted her head and smiled involuntarily. "Oh it's Bryan. How's your back doing?"

"Thank you for your concern Master Fanny. The injuries on my back are all healed." Han Shuo nodded and responded.

Han Shuo understood he couldn't continue to play the fool. Although doing so would bring some benefits to him, it would create more trouble sooner or later. Since that was the case, it would be better to slowly change himself, and let everyone unknowingly accept his new self. Therefore, people wouldn't find it surprising that he had changed, and would actually think that he had suddenly seen reason again after being crazy.

The previous owner this body, Bryan, had suffered greatly in the necromancy major. Han Shuo had vowed to take revenge for Bryan when he climbed out of that tomb. A lesson had been more or less taught to Carey, Borg, Bach and Lisa, enacting quite a bit of revenge for Bryan. Han Shuo still remained in the necromancy major in order to lay the groundwork for future plans.

After gaining a better understanding of this world, Han Shuo realized that he would have to continuously become stronger if he wanted to thrive in this world. The Babylon Academy of Magic and Force was a place to continually improve himself. He remained here in order to take advantage of the school's resources to further raise all aspects of himself, including strength, knowledge, and a full understanding of this world.

Therefore, Han Shuo knew that he couldn't continue to be crazy, and needed to change himself bit by bit.

"Oh that's wonderful. We're just about to take a field trip and bring students to the outside world. They will be testing themselves on the development of their magic. Come with us! You can pick up after them, and I can take a good gauge of your body condition on the road. What do you say Bryan?" Fanny put down the items she held in her hand and smiled at Han Shuo.

Han Shuo stood motionless, thought for a bit and felt that this was a chance. He nodded involuntarily, "Sure!"

Chapter 27: Hot damn, I'm awesome!

"Alright, then we set off in two days. Use these next few days to prepare. As for your errand duties, I'll ask the school authorities to temporarily hand them over to the other three, so no worries there." Fanny smiled charmingly upon seeing Han Shuo agree. Her beautiful face was even more tempting and moving because of her smile, making Han Shuo's heart lurch slightly.

Before he'd arrived in Bryan's body, Han Shuo's life could be categorized as a failure. Not only had he accomplished nothing professionally speaking, but his love life had also been in shambles. He still didn't know anything about being with a woman, to this day.

Once he came to this world, Han Shuo's self control had decreased and his various desires had increased due to practicing magic. Han Shuo was someone who'd died once before. The depressing and pointless morass of his past life had completely bound his past self. Adding to that was the weight of his family and his shy personality, which had resulted in him never daring to act on the evil thoughts that he dreamed up.

And now, in this completely foreign world, with his increasing strength due to practicing magic, many of his previous constraints had disappeared. He naturally wished to live without regrets and fully materialize all the daydreams that he had always buried deep in his heart.

And women, particularly beautiful women, had always caused an uncontrollable urge in Han Shuo's heart.

Fanny was not only beautiful and mesmerizing, she also paid particular attention to Han Shuo's well-being, and he was at the age that desired the fairer sex most ardently. He would naturally have unavoidable desires. With the principles of demonic magic demanding that a practitioner do as he wished, Han Shuo naturally viewed Fanny as the prey of his affections.

"Master Fanny, are the dark creatures we summon always different? Is it possible to summon the same creature after sending it back to the other dimension?"

Since Han Shuo had promised Fanny to accompany them on their outing, he started making preparations for his own affairs. Han Shuo had no advantages besides his summoned small skeleton that he could rely on.

Although he could still contact the skeleton within a certain range, it would likely be difficult to remain in contact with his current level of control over his mental strength once he set out, and they were separated by a vast distance. If the little skeleton got into any trouble because Han Shuo wasn't here to control it with his mental strength, then things would get sticky.

Although Han Shuo was confident that he'd be able to send the little skeleton back to the other dimension, he didn't know if he would be able to summon it again. Therefore, he wanted to solve this problem before setting out. As the teacher for the necromancy major, Fanny would naturally know more about these things. Just because Han Shuo had no way of solving his conundrum did not mean Fanny didn't, hence his questions.

Fanny looked at Han Shuo in confusion as soon as his question was asked. Her sexy, full lips moved as she asked, "Eh, Bryan, why are you asking these questions? These are things that necromancy students should pay attention to. You shouldn't care about these things!"

"Oh, that was Lisa's question. I was just asking you for her." Han Shuo nodded and spoke with a good Samaritan expression.

Fanny didn't suspect a thing after Han Shuo's response. She understood that Lisa often practiced necromancy magic on Han Shuo and thus, it made sense for Lisa to ask a question through Han Shuo. She thought for a while and then said, "So that's the case... It's not that one can't summon the same creature after sending it to the other dimension, it's just that there's no need to do so.

Every time a dark creature is summoned from the other dimension, it, or a group, is merely chosen at random from a crowd of similarly leveled dark creatures according to the mental strength powering the incantation, and the chant itself. Because they are the same level of dark creature, their strength is roughly the same, and thus no one cares about these matters.”

“Then what should be done in order to resummon the same dark creature after its been sent back to the other dimension?” Han Shuo thought quickly and asked a follow-up question.

Fanny carefully put away the magic scrolls on the pedestal and ran her beautiful, long fingers over the top of the pedestal. She frowned as she explained, “If you really want to resummon a dark creature that you sent back to the other dimension, then leave a magical brand on its body. Lock onto the original dark creature through the magical brand the next time you summon it. You can find the original creature this way and resummon it out of the other dimension.”

Han Shuo’s heart was immediately overjoyed upon hearing Fanny’s words, but his forehead creased in a frown as he muttered to himself. “So that’s the case, I wonder if Lisa knows how to leave a magical brand on a summoned dark creature.”

After looking at Han Shuo oddly, Fanny smiled and said softly. “Bryan, you truly are a very kind person. I know that Lisa has not been the friendliest to you, and the problems with your body resulted from her Agony of the Soul. Yet not only do you not carry a grudge, but you constantly think about her. There are very few who are as pure and kind-hearted as you these days.”

Pure! Kind-hearted! Han Shuo was speechless internally, but maintained an honest smile on his face. He scratched his head and said with some embarrassment, “I don’t think a grudge should be carried, no matter the reason. People will understand if you treat them kindly. Heh heh.”

Fanny laughed softly and nodded as she heard Han Shuo’s words, and said no more. She took out a thin piece of yellow paper from a nearby cabinet, and picked up a quill with her slender fingers, dipping it in ink and quickly scratching out something.

After a short while, Fanny had filled the thin paper with words, and she stuck the quill back into the inkpot. She handed the text-filled, thin paper to Han Shuo and smiled, “This is the incantation and method for leaving a magical brand on a summoned dark creature. Give it to Lisa, I think she will know what to do with her capacity as a novice mage.”

Elated, Han Shuo almost shook as he accepted the paper from Fanny. He nodded with a dumb smile, saying eagerly, “I’ll go immediately, Lisa will be very happy.”

Han Shuo left Fanny’s lab at an eager pace, clutching the thin paper in his hands as soon as he’d finished speaking.

“What an innocent little fellow. I hope that Lisa makes less trouble for him in the future because of this.” Fanny smiled slightly and said with some emotion upon seeing Han Shuo leave so urgently.

Midnight, the cemetery behind the Babylon Academy of Magic and Force.

““Oh endless darkness, turn into destructive bone arrows, and destroy according to my will, bone arrows!” A cuttngly sharp bone arrow materialized out of thin air as a lowly chanted incantation finished. Accompanied by a strident whooshing sound, it connected violently with the chest of the straw figure in front of it.

“Haha, I’ve finally successfully released a bone arrow!” Han Shuo laughed loudly and called out with pride after seeing that the bone arrow had neither broken in midair nor had been off course.

A lot of time had passed since the incident that had occurred in the cemetery last time. Han Shuo resumed his practice of the bone arrow magic whenever he was certain that no one would pay attention to the place.

During this time, his mental strength had increased at a rapid pace, particularly after the encounter with the strange ball. Since he hadn’t succumbed to that great calamity, Han Shuo’s mental strength had greatly increased. After repeated practice and enhanced magical knowledge, Han Shuo had finally mastered the low level necromancy magic of bone arrow to perfection, without any mistakes.

The little skeleton stood at attention in the distance, its empty eye sockets vigilantly patrolling the four corners as its head swiveled. It grasped the bone dagger with its right hand, and glowed with a cold, dark light under the moonlight.

He would be temporarily leaving the Academy for the outside world tomorrow with Fanny and co. The fact that Han Shuo had used Lisa's name to ask Fanny some questions never came to light. After all, this was just a small matter, and Fanny wasn't someone who would ask about every little detail. She naturally forgot this issue after one or two days.

Over the past few days, Han Shuo studied "The Foundations of Necromancy" and "The Descriptions of Dark Creatures", as well as thoroughly reading and contemplating the words on Fanny's thin paper. He was confident that he would be able to leave a magical brand on the little skeleton. He planned to do so before he left on the morrow, and started to plant a magical brand on the little skeleton according to his understanding.

The little skeleton patrolling off in the distance came speeding towards Han Shuo with a yank of his mental strength. The seven bone spurs on its back fluttered slightly in the air, seeming to add a bit of power, and causing the little skeleton's body to actually lift above the ground for a bit as it ran. This surprised Han Shuo, thinking that his efforts in refining the skeleton had not been in vain. It was apparent that, just like him, its strength had continued to increase.

When the little skeleton came to a stop next to Han Shuo, he gathered his concentration in a way he never had before, curling his fingers upwards in the air. He then started to slowly recite the incantation found in Fanny's notes.

"My loyal servant, in the name of the summoner, I leave upon you my eternal mark. Dark Seal!" Han Shuo suddenly felt his mental strength drain rapidly away upon concluding the incantation, and an inky black aura, the size of a fist, formed between his hands.

The mental strength needed by this Dark Seal was more than what he'd anticipated. It was only then that Han Shuo remembered something he'd overlooked – Lisa was a novice mage, and he was just a magic apprentice. Fanny’s method had most likely been tailored for Lisa’s mental strength, and hadn’t even considered the fact that a magic apprentice would be the one casting it.

Han Shuo felt a headache flare up as his mental strength was spontaneously depleted. He was involuntarily shocked by the feeling of something being drained away.

At this moment, the aura between his two hands abruptly drifted out, sinking into the little skeleton’s body between its two empty eye sockets. At the same time, Han Shuo felt extremely fatigued and sat heavily on the ground, panting heavily as he did so.

Suddenly, it was as if a corner of a veil had been lifted over the foggy memories left by Chu Cang Lan, and a portion of an incantation and memory became exceedingly clear.

The newfound memories had to do with harnessing magical treasure and the “Harnessing Magic Incantation”. This helped Han Shuo realize that he had gained better understanding of some part of Chu Cang Lan’s indistinct memories under somewhat bizarre circumstances.

A strange whooshing sound abruptly interrupted his thoughts, and Han Shuo subconsciously raised his head to search for the its source.

He was flabbergasted.

The little skeleton was waving the sharp bone dagger around in an airy dance. Cold light sparkled around the little skeleton’s body in dizzying waves underneath the moonlight. The bone dagger followed the movements of the little skeleton’s hand and stabbed multiple times at the straw figure, leaving it with the appearance of swiss cheese.

Han Shuo recollected himself after being dumbfounded, his face full of incredulous joy. He threw his head back to the heavens and roared, “Hot damn, I’m awesome!”

Chapter 28: City of Zajoski

A streak of white light flashed as Han Shuo and several necromancy students materialized within a circular, magical matrix that was filled with magical symbols.

Han Shuo had experimented three times last night and realized that he really could send his small skeleton to the other dimension and successfully summon it back again. He joyfully took out the moneybag, that had been hidden under his bed, and made his preparations for the field trip.

He now wore an expression of astonishment as he continuously darted his eyes around in close observation of the magical matrix. The large matrix was circular in form, and on it was an enormous, six-pointed star on the rock beneath his feet. Exquisite magical forms were carved into the magical columns nearby, and a faint magical current emanated from the entire matrix.

He had been standing in a similar transportation matrix in the Babylon Academy of Magic and Force a second ago. When the matrix had activated, Han Shuo could only feel the strong magical current that permeated the air. He had appeared here after a flash of white light.

From the students around him, Han Shuo understood that this was a magical transportation matrix. This kind of magical transportation was extremely rare and required a lot of complex magic and was costly to set up. Even eminent mages needed numerous quantities of magical ingredients in order to properly arrange the transportation matrix.

“Stop looking, the magical transportation matrix is amazing alright, but you don’t need to make a big deal over it!” Off to the side, Lisa spoke up as she saw Han Shuo looking around, gobsmacked.

This magic was truly wondrous. Although Han Shuo had heard of magical transportation matrices, this was the first time he’d experienced using one, and naturally felt it was quite incredible. He gave up his observations only after he had carefully contemplated the area around the matrix.

Han Shuo understood that with his currently shallow grasp of magical knowledge, he probably wouldn't even understand the theories behind the transportation matrix, much less be able to set one up.

Not to mention that constructing such a transportation matrix would need an inordinate amount of magical ingredients. Even the Empire was unable to set one up in all the cities. Each activation required an awe inspiring amount of energy. Even some ordinary noble families would be unable to bear the burden.

If it wasn't for the Babylon Academy of Magic and Force having such a magical transportation matrix, and Han Shuo hitching a ride off the coattails of the students, it would've been extremely unlikely for him to ever travel through one in his lifetime.

This area was the Zajoski city on the outskirts of the Lancelot Empire. Zajoski was the biggest city in the southwestern part of the Empire, with the Kerlan Valley to the west of it. One would end up in the land of the orcs if they travelled west of the Kerlan Valley. To the south of Zajoski was the Dark Forest. All sorts of strong magical creatures lived within the expansive Dark Forest, including the elves that worshipped nature.

Things had never been peaceful for the city of Zajoski. The Empire had situated a lot of troops in Zajoski for defending against invasions by the savage orcs. It was said that the orcs lived in very barren land, and that the savage race had long wanted to occupy the fertile lands of the Lancelot Empire. Zajoski was the Empire's strongest point of defense in the southwest, and naturally enjoyed a lot of attention from the orcs.

The Dark Forest was also a turbulous area. Although the elves that worshipped nature were on more or less friendly terms with the Empire, many of the magical creatures within the Dark Forest often walked out of the forest to appear within nearby towns and villages. This caused things to be a bit tense in the towns and villages next to it.

Perhaps the Empire expended so many resources in setting up a magical transportation matrix within the city because of this unease. On one hand, this facilitated a connection between the Empire and Zajoski, but on the other it was unable to support large scale military deployments due to the sheer energy requirements needed to send through a limited amount of people.

Zajoski's peculiar position turned this region into a heaven for adventurers. Merchants and adventurers of all sorts came here thirsty for gold and treasure.

Whether it was the crystal cores, bones, skin, or flesh of the magical creatures within the Dark Forest, the priceless magical equipment forged by the elves, some precious jewels from the barren wastes of the orc lands, or the multitude of other items with heavy profits – these were the intended targets of all the gold rushers.

“Noble and respected mages, welcome to the city of Zajoski. We hope you enjoy yourselves in Zajoski, and obtain all that you need!” The official in charge of the magical transportation matrix stood next to it and humbly bowed to Han Shuo and co.

“Thank you for your warm words, I'm sure we will receive our just rewards.” Fanny smiled and nodded her head at him, and then glanced at the necromancy students. She said softly, “This is not a peaceful place, everyone be careful and don't let anything happen to you. Let's go.”

Fanny led the crew outwards along the main street when she finished speaking. Like Han Shuo, the students were gazing around with curiosity, measuring up everything and everyone around them.

Apart from the two teachers Fanny and Gene, there were nine necromancy students and Han Shuo, bringing the total to twelve people. Fanny and Gene were adept necromancers. Fitch had not traveled with the group because he was still undergoing the test for adept mages.

The strength of the remaining nine students was unevent. Other than a journeyman mage named Derek, the rest were novice mages and magic apprentices.

The buildings lining the street were all cut out of hard rock, and lacked a touch of artistic beauty compared to the other buildings within the Empire, but gained a few traces of dignity and toughness. Due to the frequent orc attacks, not only were the Zajoski city walls built to be impregnable, but even the buildings within the city were built on a principle of durability.

Along the way, Han Shuo noticed that many, many weapons stores, pharmacies, magical item stores, and provision stores could be found to the sides. There were also some small taverns for entertainment, a slave auction, and a bartering place for all sorts of materials.

It seemed that merchants knew what sort of transactions would be most profitable because of the unique characteristics of this location. Those entering and exiting these locations were warriors, knights, mages of different majors, robbers, archers, merchants, poets, and even a few slender, pointy-eared, beautiful elves, who were obviously from the Dark Forest.

The sounds of the street vendors, the elegant low chants from the poets, the brays from the warriors' steeds, the clashes of sudden conflicts – these scenes were all completely beyond Han Shuo's imagination. He was exceedingly astonished and had a better understanding of this chaotic city.

“Nothing much to see, we need to leave the city before sundown. This isn't a place where we should spend much time. Our next stop is the town of Drol. If we can't reach it by sundown, we'll have to camp in the wilderness tonight.” Gene called loudly and urged the students to walk faster.

“Heh heh, they're all flowers in a greenhouse. For some of them, it's their first visit to the city of Zojoski. No wonder they're so curious. They won't be in the future.” Fanny swept her clear eyes across the group and smiled involuntarily when she saw a few students, extremely excited by the sights they were seeing for the first time.

“Bryan, are you okay with carrying so many things on your back?” Next to Han Shuo, Lisa frowned as she looked at Han Shuo and voiced a question.

“Eh, Lisa, when did you start caring for Bryan. This doesn't seem like you!” Novice mage Bella looked askance at Lisa and asked oddly.

Apart from being in charge of all the random little things, Han Shuo was also in charge of providing manual labor during this field trip accompaniment. Although wondrous “space rings” that could hold items existed in this world, they were quite expensive. It would be difficult for even ordinary noble families to obtain one, not to mention commoners.

None of these necromancy teachers and students were lucky enough to possess a space ring. Everyone had packed heavily for this field trip. As an errand slave, Han Shuo had naturally taken up the role of a pack mule.

Many items were lashed onto Han Shuo’s back, shoulders, wrists, and even his two legs. No one thought Han Shuo could carry so many items on him in the beginning, but they had piled all their belongings onto him after finding out with surprise that Han Shuo could still walk with ease when loaded down with so much.

Although Han Shuo could play the fool and carry less, he didn’t do so in order to further train his own body. He happily accepted the burden, and now carried all sorts of items on him. A few bags even hung around his neck, with only a happily smiling, dust-covered, face apparent.

“Oh, I’m not having any problems.” Han Shuo smiled slightly at Lisa and said in a carefree manner. After that incident in the trap in which Han Shuo had “passionately” declared his love, Lisa’s attitude towards Han Shuo had taken a huge turn. Her words had already started to defend him.

Seeing that Han Shuo didn’t recognize her good intentions and said such things, Lisa harrumphed lightly and muttered to herself. “Can’t recognize my intentions, what an idiot.”

“And it’s all thanks to you! If it wasn’t for your Agony of the Soul, how could Bryan become this crazy, but it’s a bit strange, Bryan seems to have gotten taller and stronger since then, and even his energy has improved. Lisa you’re quite amazing!” Bella exclaimed softly and said enigmatically.

“Bella, none of your business. Shut up!” Lisa flicked a glance at Bella and responded coldly.

“Tch. Who wants to mind your business? Just curious!” Bella snorted and replied.

“Alright alright, calm down. Let’s walk faster to leave the city. Your delicate bodies are in for it if we don’t reach Drol before nightfall.” Fanny creased her brow and admonished lightly, and then looked at Han Shuo. She said softly, “Bryan, are you truly alright?”

Han Shuo nodded and smiled slightly, saying decisively, “No problem. Good rations give me strength.”

Fanny smiled and giggled upon hearing Han Shuo’s words, saying, “Looks like me asking the school authorities to improve your rations has actually had some effect!”

The crew engaged in no more idle chatter after that and the students’ gazes did not continue to wander around. They all rushed towards the city gates.

Chapter 29: The feeling of contempt

The band of twelve, including Han Shuo, were stunned by the magnificence of the city gates when they arrived at the city of Zajoski. The gates were all extraordinarily palatial and made from the strongest of rock. They were the color of dried blood, and no one knew whether or not it was because too much of it had drenched the stones.

Numerous guards, dressed in full body armor, patrolled the city walls, several meters above the ground. All sorts of defensive measures could be seen on the city walls.

From afar, the city gates looked like the open, fanged mouth of a bloodthirsty magic creature that devoured everything underneath the sun. Several sharp, cold, hangnails, that looked like the sharp teeth within the creature's month, peppered the city walls. Their cold light sparkled underneath the sunlight, giving people an incredibly deterring, spectacular feeling.

The two ink-black, grand gates, refined from who-knew-what, were open. The city entrance was immensely expansive, enough for ten horses to walk in abreast. It was quite crowded in front of the door and various mammoth and strange magic creatures slowly threaded their way through the entrance into the city, with all sorts of people and items on their backs.

These magical creatures were larger than any beasts Han Shuo had seen before. They were about five meters tall and ten or so meters long. Their skin was dark brown, with heads shaped like an elephant's. Their faces were covered in wrinkles, with two curved, white tusks jutting out from their cheeks. The tusks themselves were a meter long.

"This is an earth dragon, a gentler type of magical creature. They are easily tamed and move slowly, but can carry heavy loads. They're a popular form of transportation within the Empire. Merchants use earth dragons to transport heavy loads and trade with different areas." Fanny explained with a smile when she saw many students gazing at the earth dragons in astonishment.

“Master Fanny, look after them while I go register at the officers’ quarters. I’ll also borrow a few battlesteeds, otherwise we’ll never make it to Drol by nightfall on foot..” Gene looked at Fanny with sparkling eyes and spoke with a smile. His gaze fell on Fanny’s beautiful face and didn’t stray for a moment.

The entire necromancy major knew of Gene’s feelings for Fanny. Fanny herself was also well aware, but she never expressed anything. Gene wasn’t in a rush and seemed to want to move Fanny with his sincerity. He often made use of various opportunities to express his feelings, and staring at her soulfully for long periods of time was one of them.

Han Shuo cursed privately upon seeing Gene’s unfettered gaze. In Han Shuo’s mind, Fanny had long since become his personal property. He would naturally be irritated that other people were peeping at her in front of him, but right now, he was just a mere errand slave and wasn’t strong enough to show his strength. So although it rankled at him, he had to keep himself in check.

“Mm. Go ahead, I’ll watch them carefully.” Fanny gave a tepid response and agreed with a smile, avoiding Gene’s fiery gaze. She turned her head to look at the magnificent city walls and said with emotion, “Although I’ve seen this multiple times, I always feel proud of the Zajoski city gates whenever I come back to visit. It’s because of these durable city gates that the savage orcs have always retreated with nothing to show for their efforts.”

Han Shuo was weighed down with all sorts of items, and just about drowning in all of it. Everyone had stopped at this moment except for Han Shuo. He bent and then straightened his legs, twisting his wrists, and repeated the same boring movements.

“Bryan, what are you doing?” Amy was standing next to Han Shuo and saw the piles of items move along with Han Shuo’s body. It caught her eye and she asked in astonishment.

The others noticed his movements after Amy had spoken up and also concentrated their attention on Han Shuo, a perplexed look on each of their faces.

“Nothing much, I’m feeling a bit sore, and moving around will alleviate it!” Han Shuo replied calmly with a dumb expression, truly looking more than a bit dumb.

“Stupid, be careful. You’re carrying valuable items. If you accidentally break one, we wouldn’t be able to cover the losses, even if we sold you.” Bella frowned and said coldly.

“Bella, you’re such an idiot. Those things are quite sturdy. How could they break so easily? No one has allowed him to carry anything truly precious or fragile.” Lisa casted a look of disdain at Bella and replied sarcastically.

“You ladies are always arguing... stop it. We always run into some danger, whether big or small, when we travel for training in the outside world. You should unite as a team, or we’re bound to run into problems further down the road.” Fanny frowned and tried to separate the two when she saw Lisa and Bella were about to bicker again.

Han Shuo completely ignored Bella’s cold jeers and continued to repeat those boring actions. Those motions hadn’t been left behind in Chu Cang Lan’s memories, but were muscle building actions that Han Shuo had seen before. In order to keep improving his body and break out of the “solid realm”, Han Shuo was taking advantage of every second to train his body.

After a while, Gene returned with an ugly expression and empty hands. When he walked up to Fanny, he said furiously, “Damnit! They asked me for money!”

Fanny’s elegant brows knotted together and she spoke in surprise upon hearing those words. “Our Babylon Academy of Magic and Force is the cradle for the Empire’s knights, warriors, and mages. We nurture so many talents every year for the Empire. Even many of the guard officers and mages stationed in the city of Zajoski graduated from our Academy. There’s a protocol between the Academy and Zajoski. How dare they not lend us battlesteeds?”

“The guard officer was going to lend me the steeds when I said I was from the Academy. When I offered my identification and he saw that we’re from the necromancy major, he actually mocked me. He demanded fifty gold from me, saying that we would receive no steeds if we didn’t pay up. He further added that our necromancy major has never nurtured any talents for the Empire before, and thus shouldn’t enjoy free benefits.” Gene was maddened and bit off his words.

When the students heard his words, they too found a common enemy and shouted angrily, calling for revenge against the guard officer. It would seem that the feeling of contempt was a hard one to swallow. These students were already a bit aggrieved at joining an unpopular major, and were hard pressed to contain their anger now that they were so ignored.

“Forget it, take out fifty gold for him from the funds. These guard officers have lived here for a long time. Add to that the fact that our major truly has declined, and occupies a lower standing in the Academy. It’s no wonder than they think less of us. I will report this matter to the dean upon my return. Let’s not get into a fight with them right now.” Fanny shook her head, spoke a few conciliatory words with a dejected expression and finally made this reply to Gene.

Gene at first disagreed with Fanny’s words, saying that they could not allow such arrogant soldiers to strut around, but he sighed slowly and shook his head after a few placating words from Fanny, gloomily accepting fifty gold coins from Fanny’s hands and walking to the side of the city gates.

Han Shuo observed a few people, then looked at the despondent Fanny. He threw a glance at the far off guard officer and internally vowed that one day, the necromancy major would regain its past glories through his hands, and that people would tremble in fear at the sound of a necromancer.

“Don’t be depressed. No one dared to look down on us when the necromancy major was at its peak. It’s just that the necromancy major suffered from the ostracization of all the majors for a while. Legends speak of a great magic war that caused high casualties amongst the necromancers and the loss of many incredible, powerful spells. This is what's caused the decline of necromancy.

Our trip to the Dark Forest this time is in search of a cemetery of death that I've heard rumors about. It's said that a wise mage, who studied necromancy for many years, once stayed within the cemetery of death. If we can find the cemetery and obtain the magical tomes of necromancy inside of it, then perhaps we can alter the current situation that the necromancy major is in." Fanny spoke bracing words of comfort upon seeing students become melancholy.

Many cheered up after hearing Fanny's words, and expressions of joy and astonishment crossed their faces. It would seem that they were all prepared to give their all in this time's external outing.

Seeing the ardor on everyone's faces, Fanny gave a silent, involuntary sigh. Although news had broken of the discovery of the cemetery, the person who discovered it died not long after walking out of it.

The Dark Forest was vast, and to search for something within it was like looking for a needle in a haystack. Even she didn't hold much hope. Besides, if such a location was truly discovered, it was bound to draw in a horde of adventurers. It would be a bit unrealistic to think that the power of their band of twelve would be able to retrieve what they needed at that time.

Fanny merely wished to comfort everyone with her words. The main purpose of this time's outing was to test the student's grasp of necromancy and help them realize magical knowledge in the real world.

"Eh? Aren't these people from the necromancy major? Are you adventuring as well? Hehe, why are you all standing here?" A sweet voice sounded from afar as the necromancy students were sunk in their own thoughts.

It was the light major student from last time, Irene, and a few other students and teachers from the light major. Her ardent pursuer, Claude, was also mounted on a tall battlesteed and came clapping in from the distance.

“None of your business. Don’t fall from your horse now.” Lisa looked at Irene with contempt and sneered back.

“Hehe I know, you must not have been able to borrow any battlesteeds. Ai, that’s a foregone conclusion. Your necromancy major hasn’t contributed anything to the Empire, so of course it’s a bit inappropriate that you use the Empire’s resources without any payment!” Irene chuckled charmingly as sarcasm and mockery filled her holy features.

Although Lisa and company were enraged, they couldn’t find the words to retort back as Irene spoke the truth. They could only grit their teeth and fume inwardly.

“Hello Master Fanny.” Light adept mage Beacher was mounted on a battlesteed and greeted Fanny with a smile.

“Hello Beacher, are you heading towards the Dark Forest for adventure as well?” Fanny smiled in return and commented lightly.

“Yes, we plan on traveling to the Dark Forest and hunting down the magic creatures that are often a nuisance to the villages around the Forest. We’ll be testing the students’ command of magic while giving back to the Empire. Heh, we’ll be off, see you later!” Beacher replied gentlemanly, but Han Shuo could still discern a trace of disdain in his eyes, as if Beacher looked down on the necromancy crew.

Gene finally brought six battlesteeds over after Beacher and the light major folk had zipped by on their large horses. Gene’s horses were obviously subpar to the ones the light major students’ had, whether in terms of physique or in number. It would seem that the necromancy major still couldn’t obtain equal treatment even after paying fifty gold extra.

But the necromancy group numbered twelve people, whilst there was only six battlesteeds. Therefore, each horse had to carry double. The students looked at each other and quickly paired up, leaving Han Shuo, Fanny, Gene, and Bach as the odd ones out.

“Bach, you and Bryan share a horse while I ride one with Master Fanny.” Gene’s eyes darted quickly and he became overjoyed when he connected the dots. He smiled happily at Bach.

“No! I’m definitely not riding a horse with that dirty errand slave!” Bach held a grudge against Han Shuo and immediately cried out in dissatisfaction.

Everyone knew Gene’s thoughts. This was a golden opportunity to get close to Fanny. He was about to respond huffily to Bach’s yell when Fanny suddenly smiled. “Since Bach is unwilling, then I’ll ride with Bryan.”

“Heh heh, thank you Master Fanny. I’m coming!” Han Shuo was elated and joyously brushed past Gene, striding quickly towards Fanny.

Chapter 30: A tantalizing moment on the back of a battle steed

On the way to the town of Drol, the multiple items, previously loaded onto Han Shuo, were divvied up between the battlesteeds.

Han Shuo was seated behind Fanny, and their bodies touched as the horse maneuvered. A faint, alluring scent wafted towards Han Shuo's nose and mouth as her hair swung in front of them.

Fanny sat on the horse with her well-rounded upper body straight and proper. Her alluring curves, beneath her mage robe, were completely laid out for Han Shuo's admiring glance. As the horse galloped, the distance between the two started to close slowly.

Towards the end, Han Shuo's lower abdomen and Fanny's full butt slowly touched. The swiftly galloping horse caused the two to be off balance, and Han Shuo's lower abdomen and Fanny's beautiful butt bounced off each other. The thin mage robe did nothing to stop the marvelous sensation, and Han Shuo's uncontrollable desires reared their heads as the bodies collided against each other's.

Han Shuo himself didn't know whether to laugh or cry when a certain portion of his lower body stiffened, but he was unable to control his body's reactions. His upright lower body moved with the horse's ups and downs, constantly moving in the area between Fanny's wonderful butt cheeks.

Waves of strong stimulus came from the point of contact between Han Shuo and Fanny, stirring Han Shuo's heart so much that he almost cried aloud. Han Shuo stared at Fanny from behind, and realized that, at some point, a red flush had crept up Fanny's pure, white neck, making her look even more tantalizing and mouthwatering.

The sexy Fanny was already the subject of Han Shuo's daydreams, and he also happened to be at an age in which boys found it hardest to control their bodies. Add to that, the fact that Han Shuo was a virgin, who had no idea what intimate relations felt like, all this made the stimulus as earthshattering as thunder and lightning. Everything became difficult to control after that.

Unable to control his desires, Han Shuo was boldly wanton as he reached out his hand and slowly crept it towards Fanny's soft waist. Both of his hands firmly grasped Fanny's waist in order to more closely connect their lower bodies.

Two bone-piercing pains instantaneously came from the backs of Han Shuo's hands. He lifted his head in shock and immediately saw Fanny's ashamed and angry face. Fanny's beautiful face was red with anger as she turned her head, and her mesmerizing eyes glared viciously at Han Shuo. She said in a low voice, "Damnit, control yourself Bryan, otherwise I'll throw you off the horse."

But Fanny could immediately tell that something was wrong with Han Shuo. His face was beet red and his body convulsed spastically. He panted heavily and remained in this position for five seconds, after which his entire body froze and then returned to normal. The only thing left was a mouth panting on and off.

Fanny could clearly feel that something liquid and sticky had been added to the area between her behind.

"So... sorry Master Fanny! I... I didn't mean to!" Upon seeing that Fanny was about to spontaneously erupt in rage after Han Shuo had discharged himself, he immediately reacted and whined guiltily, but he actually kept revisiting the tantalizing moment in his mind, and wasn't as afraid or remorseful as he pretended to be.

Fanny was stopped up with rage. She also understood the nuances of Han Shuo's current age and that their bodies had been touching in a rather inappropriate way. Han Shuo's actions were out of instinct, and most likely not his true intentions.

But he had actually violated her in doing so. Even though the two hadn't really done anything, being a woman, Fanny naturally felt resentful and mad that Han Shuo had relieved himself behind her.

Han Shuo would most likely be unable to handle it if Fanny really lost her temper and took it out on him, since she was an adept mage. Han Shuo also had feelings for Fanny, and was truly afraid that Fanny would throw everything to the winds and beat him. He really didn't know what to do with her current mental state, and was at a loss for what to do.

Just as Han Shuo was thinking random thoughts, he suddenly felt a severe pinch on the insides of his two thighs. He immediately ducked his head and cried out in pain, hearing Fanny's voice at the same time, "Damned Bryan, I'll settle things with you later."

"Master Fanny, what's going on? Bryan, what are you going on about?" Lisa had heard Han Shuo's scream up ahead and looked back in question.

"No, nothing. He lost his seat for a moment and was scared out of his mind." Fanny cut in to explain before Bryan had a chance to open his mouth.

Silence resumed as everyone continued to hurry down the path. Half an hour later, Han Shuo was amazed to discover that his lower body was standing up again. When Fanny felt the same thing, she immediately separated a short distance from the pack and reined in the battlesteed, angrily demanding that Han Shuo steer the horse.

"Master Fanny, I really didn't mean to, and I don't know how to ride a horse." Han Shuo clambered onto the horse with resignation under Fanny's angry motions and spoke with a pinched face.

"Shut up and listen to me. I'll teach you how to tame a battlesteed." The two had switched positions, with Han Shuo in the front and Fanny in the back. Fanny, who had always been gentle and nice to Han Shuo, was no longer so kindly disposed to him because of what had happened earlier and spoke angrily.

Han Shuo couldn't get a grasp on things under Fanny's directions at first, and the battlesteed pranced around directionless. It rushed violently to and fro, braying and screaming loudly. Han Shuo and Fanny's bodies were off balance, causing Fanny's full bosom to crash repeatedly into Han Shuo's back. Learning how to ride a horse was the furthest thing from Han Shuo's mind and he was completely distracted.

After struggling for a while accompanied by Fanny's rage-filled shouts, Han Shuo finally began to tame the battlesteed. Fanny propped herself up with two hands on Han Shuo's back, preventing her well rounded chest from intimately touching his back again. She directed the path forward and they rushed towards Drol.

When Han Shuo and Fanny had arrived at Drol, the sky was dusky and night about to fall. Gene and a bunch of necromancy students were all waiting for them, anxiously staring at the road.

Gene hastily walked out when Han Shuo and Fanny appeared, looking at her and quickly saying, "Master Fanny, what took you so long? I thought something might have happened to you, I was so worried."

"Nothing much, just that Bryan wanted to try his hand at steering the battlesteed halfway through. I gave him some pointers, thus the reason for the delay." Fanny had already regained her composure at this time. She smiled as she looked at the group and chuckled faintly, "Very good, everyone is accounted for. Master Gene, have we settled in at the hotel?"

"That's been taken care of. We can rest as soon as we stable our horses. We can head directly to the Dark Forest when dawn breaks tomorrow."

Fanny alighted gracefully off the horse behind Han Shuo, displaying a nimble body. She stretched and frowned, "We've been sweating all day. I'm going to take a shower in the hotel. Bryan, come to my room after you've stabled the horses. We need to talk."

"Understood Master Fanny." Han Shuo agreed with a wry face, knowing full well that Fanny must want him with regards to his earlier violation.

Fanny anxiously rushed off towards the hotel after she'd finished speaking. Han Shuo felt the stickiness of his lower body and understood perfectly why she was so eager to take a shower. A hint of a smirk crossed his face.

Han Shuo and a few male necromancy students stabled the six horses underneath Gene's guidance. They then all followed Gene to the hotel.

“Master Gene, Drol is far away from the Empire and directly faces the Dark Forest. There are many bizarre and unique shops in this town. Since it’s not fully dark yet, can we go take a walk? We know what the hotel looks like anyways, so can we go back a bit later?” Bach suddenly spoke up at this moment, and the other students beside him were all chomping at the bit as well. It would seem that they were up to something else, judging from their expressions.

“No!” Gene denied them resolutely, and then looked at them with a weird smile. He said lowly, “Do you really think that I don’t know what you’re up to? This town of Drol is also called town of Depravity because of its unique location. Danger can befall any of the adventurers and merchants who come here and so they all seek excitement whether in dreams or their waking moments. Thus, their entertainment industry is renowned throughout the Empire. Hmph, you are absolutely barred from opportunistic depravity.”

Indeed, Han Shuo observed the surroundings closely after Gene’s words and realized that although it wasn’t truly night yet, there were so many lights on Drol’s wide streets that they were a neon blur. Several young girls, wearing heavy makeup, stood on a street corner, flinging flirtatious smiles and catcalling the pedestrians on the streets, giving off the impression of total submission to any bystander’s will.

Gene’s words had obviously hit home as the despondent boys walked into the hotel with their heads trailing. They sighed and complained about Gene’s heartlessness.

The students all found their rooms with help from Gene, after entering the hotel. Gene threw a glance at Han Shuo and smiled faintly, “We had limited funds this time and already took out fifty gold earlier for the battlesteeds, so for simplicity’s sake, I’ve arranged the abandoned storehouse for you. The storehouse is towards the back on the left hand side. There’s no key, just head on back.”

Gene spread his hands apologetically after his words and speedily left with a smile. Han Shuo could hear Gene’s quiet snickering after a few steps and his low mutterings, “You mere errand slave, how dare you share a horse with my beloved Fanny. Huh!”

The Han Shuo of now was hardly the Han Shuo of old. His senses were acutely perceptive within a short range, and he heard every part of Gene’s laughter and murmurings. Han Shuo smiled coldly and cursed in a low voice for a bit, then smirked evilly.

Just you wait until Fanny’s mine... I’ll see you cry tears of blood then. Han Shuo thought viciously as he made for Fanny’s room.

Chapter 31: You're a magical genius!

Dondondon! Han Shuo stood outside Fanny's door and knocked with an outreached hand.

"Bryan, is it you? Come in." Fanny's faintly lethargic voice sounded from inside the room.

When Han Shuo pushed the door open, he was greeted with the sight of Fanny's wet purple hair plastered to the white nape of her neck. A few translucent traces of water still clung to her charming face. Fanny had obviously just showered as she was wrapped in a soft white robe. A small patch of milky-white, creamy skin was revealed on her chest as she towed away the water in her hair with her jade hands.

It was a simple room with a cloud of mist billowing out from the open doors of the bathroom, which was located in the back. Fanny was sitting next to a round table, a pair of troubled eyes roving over Han Shuo's body.

"Master Fanny, what did you want me for?" Han Shuo looked around the room and his heart seized upon seeing how tempting Fanny's beauty was, but he kept a dumb, honest, and even slightly fearful expression on his face.

"What for? Hmph. You were certainly bold on the back of that horse today. I've always thought you were cowardly and timid, but you commit the most outrageous acts when your lewd desires rear their head!" Fanny took her measure of Han Shuo and snorted lightly with a frown.

Here it comes. Han Shuo thought as his expression grew even more innocent. He scratched his head and held his breath until his face grew red, then took a deep breath and hung his head. "I'm sorry Master Fanny, you're so beautiful and pretty, and you were suddenly so close to me. I don't know what came over me, but I couldn't control my actions. I was wrong, Master Fanny please punish me?"

Pa!

Fanny suddenly slapped the table in anger and Han Shuo backed up "in shock”, watching Fanny fearfully.

“Damnit, you violated me! Do you understand?” Fanny glared fiercely at Han Shuo as she shouted hoarsely.

Han Shuo nodded his head honestly and said with an open face, “I was wrong Master Fanny, I’ll bear responsibility!”

“Hah! You, take responsibility? Are you able to?” Fanny laughed in the midst of her rage upon hearing Han Shuo’s words. Although she giggled as she stared at Han Shuo, there wasn’t a single trace of a smile on her face.

“Eh... then I’ll do whatever you say. It’s all up to you!” Han Shuo was certain that Fanny wouldn’t do too much to him, so he sighed with a face of resignation and responded genuinely.

With that said, Fanny didn’t really know what to do with Han Shuo. From her perspective, it was highly likely that Han Shuo hadn’t committed that act on purpose, plus she had been the one who told him to get on the horse. Although that had happened, it wasn’t as if Han Shuo had committed a heinous crime at the end of the day. He was just a mere errand slave, it felt a bit awkward trying to decide how to punish him.

Seeing that Fanny’s brows were slightly knitted and that she seemed to be having difficulty in figuring out what to do with him, a thought struck Han Shuo and he said, “Master Fanny, didn’t you say that I’m your experimental subject? I actually have felt something weird with my body lately and something strange is happening to my mind. When I heard Lisa chant the incantation for the bone arrow spell a few days ago, I tried saying it as well and actually activated it.”

Fanny had been deep in furrowed thought, but started upon hearing these words. She immediately looked at Han Shuo in astonishment, saying excitedly. “Really? Did you really mean that? Can you try out the bone arrow magic for me?”

Han Shuo knew that Fanny was addicted to necromancy magic and was extremely curious about his body’s condition. He was also well aware that he wouldn’t be just an errand slave for the Academy forever, so this was a perfect opportunity to slowly change his image in Fanny's eyes.

Indeed, as soon as Fanny had heard his body's peculiar condition, she immediately forgot about punishing him and temporarily focused all her concentration on this matter.

"Of course I can!" Han Shuo smiled faintly and raised his hands, chanting lowly, "Oh endless darkness, turn into destructive bone arrows, and destroy according to my will. Bone Arrows!"

A cuttngly-sharp bone arrow appeared out of thin air in front of Han Shuo as soon as he completed his incantation. The bone arrow flew towards the wooden wall at his gesture, but started to wobble halfway through, and then finally exploded with a sharp crack.

"No no, the incantation was correct, but your hand seals during casting were incorrect. The right hand should slowly lift up, and the left hand shouldn't be on the same level as the right hand." Fanny first started to teach in her accustomed manner, then abruptly reacted with a sharp intake of breath. She looked at Han Shuo with a face full of shock and her lithe body trembled eagerly. She cried out breathlessly, "Oh, my gosh. You can, you can really cast necromancy magic!"

"Yes, yes. I don't know what happened either. Oh right Master Fanny, can you explain to me in detail the proper hand seals to cast the magic?" Han Shuo sniggered inwardly and spoke to Fanny with a look of confusion.

"Of course I can!" Fanny was truly excited and threw the towel in her hand to the side. Her limber legs walked rapidly to Han Shuo's side as she started explaining in detail.

"This, this, like this?"

"Raise your hand higher, concentrate your mental strength, and don't relax even a bit. Right, that's the correct hand seal. Mm, slow your left hand down a bit and show me again."

"Oh endless darkness, turn into destructive bone arrows, and destroy according to my will, bone arrows!"

When the bone arrow appeared this time, its direction was correct, but it abruptly exploded into pieces again just before it reached the wooden wall.

“Bryan, mental strength. Keep an eye on your mental strength and don’t relax for even a second. You can only relax after the bone arrow has successfully struck its target, otherwise the bone arrow will explode halfway. Try again.”

“Oh endless darkness, turn into destructive bone arrows, and destroy according to my will, bone arrows!”

Upon completion of the incantation, the bone arrow flew as fast as lightning without changing its position towards the wooden wall. It pierced the wooden wall with a sharp pfft and then vanished without a trace.

“Oh, gosh. Bryan you’re a genius. You’re absolutely a magical genius. I’ve only given you tips twice and you can successfully cast the bone arrow magic. Students typically need one to three months before they can master this magic. You’re so incredible.” Fanny was utterly stunned by Han Shuo and capered around, exclaiming loudly. She looked very excited.

“Damnit, who’s randomly casting magic! It almost hit me. Eh, Bryan, Master Fanny? Bryan, what are you doing in Master Fanny’s room?” Lisa’s startled cry suddenly came from next door as one of her eyes peered in from the hole in the wall.

“Nothing much, I grabbed Bryan for a bit of bone arrow practice. Lisa go to sleep soon, we won’t be disturbing you anymore.” Fanny walked hurriedly to the hole in the wall and replied charmingly. She picked up the towel that she had thrown to the ground earlier and filled in the hole before Lisa had a chance to respond.

She turned and look askance at Han Shuo, walking quickly towards him. “Stand still and don’t move, let me see what’s going on with your body?”

“Alright.” Han Shuo smiled responded faintly. I only spent ten days to fully master the bone arrow magic. According to Fanny’s words, maybe I do have some potential for practicing magic.

“Hmm? What’s that weird smell?” Fanny had walked over and was about to reach out to inspect Han Shuo’s body when her refined nose wrinkled, and she asked in confusion.

Han Shuo stopped in his tracks, then abruptly understood. He looked down awkwardly, saying wryly. “My room doesn’t have a bathroom, so I didn’t shower. That’s why there’s still a smell left.”

Fanny’s beautiful face flushed red after these words and she glared violently at Han Shuo, cursing lowly, “Despicable!” She then pointed to the bathroom with its doors ajar, frowning as she hurried him, “The water is still warm, wash that disgusting crap off yourself!”

It truly was “despicable”. Han Shuo could still feel a strand of sticky liquid leaking out from a slit in his lower body. Fanny’s words echoed his current inclinations. It was indeed quite uncomfortable for his lower body to remain in a sticky state, so he walked merrily to the bathroom that Fanny had just occupied.

A simple, crude, round tub was inside the bathroom. The water inside still gave off steam, and several pieces of Fanny’s sexy lingerie was laid out on a nearby rack. It only took one glance of the small silk pieces that were as ephemeral as cicada wings, for a ball of flame to violently rise from Han Shuo’s lower body.

Just as Han Shuo was salivating fixedly over the lingerie that Fanny had changed out of, she abruptly rushed into the bathroom and hurriedly put away all the items of clothing in great embarrassment. When she turned and saw that Han Shuo’s eyes were just about ready to spit fire, she involuntarily made a light spitting sound and spat out, “detestable”. She finally left with panicked footsteps after violently pinching Han Shuo’s backside.

Han Shuo peeled off his clothes and lay within the round pool, breathing in the mesmerizing scent that Fanny had left behind in the bathroom with his mouth. Luxuriating in the water that Fanny had previously used, Han Shuo felt that the perfection of moment was indescribable with words. He basically didn’t want to leave.

Han Shuo took a long time to wash up, and carelessly scrubbed his underwear only after Fanny had checked in a few times, finally walking out of the bathroom clutching his underwear.

“It’s getting late, I won’t inspect your body today. Hurry and leave.” Fanny acted like nothing had happened after Han Shuo had walked out and spoke dispassionately to him.

Han Shuo nodded with an honest smile and happily walked towards the door. Fanny called out lightly just as Han Shuo was about to leave, “Bryan!”

Peering back in confusion, Han Shuo scratched his head and asked dumbly, “Yes?”

“Nothing, just that you don’t seem like someone who’s crazy!” Fanny sized up Han Shuo and said oddly.

“I don’t know what happens when my head hurts, but when I’m not being affected by anything. Everything is normal.” Han Shuo’s heart skipped a beat. He left in guilty haste after his response.

Chapter 32: Small accomplishments in magic

Han Shuo didn't immediately rest upon returning to the hotel storage room, but rather practiced magic as usual.

The magical yuan within his body circulated according to the principles of demonic magic. Under Han Shuo's careful guidance, it flowed through every inch of his meridians, skin, muscles, and bones. Whether it was his physical strength or his five senses, Han Shuo could feel that both had greatly improved.

Han Shuo resolutely kept attacking the final bottleneck according to the instructions in the Mystical Glacial Spellfire. He circulated his magical yuan to the centers of his two hands and repeatedly tried to clear the meridians in his five fingers and bones. Pain continuously emitted from his bones and meridians as his two hands trembled with convulsions. Faint red and purple lights emitted from the backs of his hands, like two feeble lanterns.

The pain continued to increase while Han Shuo grit his teeth and stubbornly hung on. He knew that this was the critical point in training the Glacial Mystical Spellfire. It was up to his will to see if he could clear all the meridians in his hands and achieve successful results with the Glacial Mystical Spellfire.

The process of the magical yuan attacking the bones in his five fingers seemed to continue interminably. Han Shuo sat Indian style with sweat dripping out of every pore as his veins bulged and pounded in his forehead. His originally peaceful facial expression became a bit sinister and ghastly, giving off a feeling of extreme evil.

After who-knew-how-long, just as Han Shuo felt that he would faint from the pain, he could no longer bear the bone searing agony in his hands and involuntarily flapped his hands with a low roar.

Papapa...

Ten crisp sounds rang out from his fingers as Han Shuo immediately felt a bit drained, but the magical yuan flowed smoothly into his fingers with no obstacles.

Ten purple-red embers, like the flame on a candle wick, instantaneously arose from his fingertips. The ten purple-red blossoms of fire sparkled with breathtaking colors in the dark of the storage room. They were like hypnotizing flowers that had suddenly bloomed, giving others a secretive and unpredictable feeling.

The palms of his two hands were also dyed with purple-red color, along with his fingers. The bones within his hands could clearly be seen, and even his skin shone with a translucent gleam, looking exceedingly bizarre.

Absolutely elated, Han Shuo roared in a low voice. He then quickly looked around, and slowly withdrew the magical yuan from his hands back into his stomach. Without the continued infusion of magical yuan, Han Shuo's hands slowly went back to normal and the ten flowering flames disappeared as well.

Success. This was the evidence of successfully practicing the Glacial Mystical Spellfire. Although its full power could not be demonstrated due to his insufficient magical yuan, Han Shuo was no longer a defenseless, ordinary person, thanks to his current achievements.

The red flame of the Glacial Mystical Spellfire burned all in its path, whereas the purple flame was bone chillingly cold. Anyone struck with this spellfire would either be burned from the inside out, or experience their internal organs being frozen into blocks of ice. The likelihood of survival was exceedingly low. When the caster had sufficient magical yuan, even greater spellfire could be concentrated into the palms and thus unleash even more frightening power.

Han Shuo was engulfed by a huge wave of exhaustion after succeeding with Mystical Glacial Spellfire, and he fell into a deep sleep.

The next day, dawn.

Under Fanny's leadership, the band of twelve had gathered at the entrance to the town of Drol. They gathered some food and water from the town and piled all these items onto Han Shuo.

“What were you doing in Master Fanny’s room last night?” Lisa asked Han Shuo in a low voice as she hung a leather water skin on him.

It seemed like Fanny hadn’t explained last night’s events to anyone. Han Shuo cast a glance at Fanny off in the distance and realized that she was reminding some students of things to be careful of. He also responded in a low voice, “Nothing much. Master Fanny wanted to test some necromancy magic and used me as a subject.”

“Hmph. Don’t lie to me, even if Master Fanny wanted to test some magic on you, she would test bone arrow. This kind of magic only needs to be practiced by apprentices, would she need to test this kind of magic as an adept mage?” Lisa huffed and looked warily at Han Shuo.

“Master Fanny was testing bone arrow magic, isn’t each magic spell divided into five levels? She just wanted to see what level of bone arrow magic she could cast with her current strength. You can ask Master Fanny if you don’t believe me.”

Ever since Han Shuo had lied to Lisa, her attitude had indeed changed drastically towards him. But, women were just so. Even if she didn’t like him, she would still treat you as her personal property when she knew that you liked her. If you developed an ambiguous relationship with anyone, she would be the first to feel uncomfortable.

Lisa was the same way. Although she didn’t think much of him, but once she “understood” Han Shuo’s thought, she naturally thought that Han Shuo would like only her unto his death, and shouldn’t have any goings on with Fanny. Han Shuo had heard of this from others before, and now it seemed that there was some sense to it.

“Forget it, you wouldn’t dare lie to me anyways!” Lisa looked at Fanny, spoke to Han Shuo in a carefree manner and then turned to leave.

“Bryan, let’s go. The trees and shrubs grow vigorously in the Dark Forest and the paths are winding and uneven. We can no longer ride horses and can only proceed on foot. You have too many resources on you and cannot be pulled down. There are many vicious magical creatures within the Dark Forest. It would be tragic if you were pulled down and killed by them.” Fanny looked at Han Shuo from afar and called out.

Fanny’s attitude towards Han Shuo had subconsciously changed after yesterday’s events. She seemed to place greater importance on him now, but the gentle attitude she had towards him had ceased to exist, replaced with a brusque frustration.

“Coming, coming!” Han Shuo had taken huge advantage of Fanny yesterday and she’d also witnessed his ugliness in her bathroom last night. It was natural that she no longer looked kindly upon him. It was actually a kind of improvement now that Fanny was slowly changing her attitude towards him.

Drol was abnormally busy in the day as many stores had already set up shop bright and early. A few sleepy-eyed merchants and adventurers walked out of nearby alleys with their clothes in disarray. These people were also preparing to get to work after a night of depravity.

Merchants and adventurers formed groups and set off for the Dark Forest with their belongings in tow. They either sought to capture magical creatures or trade with the minorities within the Forest.

Under Fanny’s constant urging, Han Shuo’s group of twelve also put their affairs in order and followed Fanny and Gene’s footsteps into the Dark Forest.

The Dark Forest was vast and endless with various savage and violent magical creatures within it, as well as a few uncommon races. Elves, goblins, and savages numbered amongst them and were the main races within the Forest, but even these races normally lived on the outskirts of the Forest.

The real inner world of the true Dark Forest was full of mysteries and danger. The largest and most frightening magical creatures lived within this inner world, and that was the most tempting and mysterious part of the Dark Forest. Although legends spoke of great treasures and precious items within the core, few dared venture within. Those who dared to enter and still made it out alive were the cream of the crop.

“Follow me, we’ll head south.” Fanny called out loudly as soon as they entered the Dark Forest and changed the group’s heading, making straight for the southern part of the Forest.

The roads were indeed rugged within the Dark Forest. All sorts of durable rocks and towering trees with branches tens of meters long could be seen everywhere. There were many merchants and adventurers also heading south in the beginning, but they all veered off on their own paths as time went on. The others all disappeared in the blink of an eye, and no one knew where they went.

Suddenly, several rapid footfalls fell into Han Shuo’s hearing. He paused, concentrated his hearing, and then immediately said, “A sound is approaching, and it doesn’t seem like the steps of humans.”

“Bryan, you’re just an errand slave. What danger can you hear? So ridiculous.” Bach was the first to laugh loudly and mock Han Shuo.

Ever since Han Shuo had started training his magical yuan, his five senses had become a lot more perceptive than before. Besides, he was confident with his hearing to begin with. It was impossible for humans to emit the fast approaching light taps, and there seemed to be more than one.

Han Shuo had only spoken up because he understood from Fanny and everyone else the dangers of the Dark Forest, but seeing that no one paid any attention to him after his words, Han Shuo refrained from speaking up further.

The group continued to slowly walk south, but Fanny first frowned, and then exclaimed in surprise after two minutes. She said in her sweet voice, “There are indeed magical creatures approaching. Everyone put down your things and prepare to fight. Since we’re still in the outskirts of the Dark Forest, the creatures shouldn’t be terribly strong. No need to worry everyone.”

The students started, then looked at Han Shuo oddly after Fanny spoke. They hurriedly relieved themselves of their packs and formed a circular defensive position.

Chapter 33: A small magic trial

Suddenly, five cat-like shapes rushed in from around them, but the shapes had three heads, a spiky tail, and yellow light dancing within its eyes.

“Not to worry, these are just barbed-tail cats. Everyone hurry and attack. Show me the results of your magic training.” Fanny breathed a sigh of relief upon seeing the magical creatures.

Numerous bone arrows swiftly materialized out of thin air as students finished their incantations after Fanny had finished speaking. The bone arrows shot towards the five barbed-tail cats with whooshing sounds. Although their speed was fast, three of them were hit by the bone arrows and blood immediately blossomed on their brown fur, affecting their speed.

However, the first two that had rushed up first actually evaded the students' bone arrow attacks and dashed straight for them. As the students panicked, their bone arrow attacks veered off course or exploded in midair as they repeatedly made mistakes in their frenzy.

The two barbed tail cats darted left and right. Fanny made her move just as the one of the left was about to charge into the defensive perimeter. The same bone arrow magic in her hands resulted in three bone arrows that flew unerringly onto the three heads of this cat.

Three shrill wails emitted from the barbed-tail cat's mouth and it shrank from making another rush. It ran away fearfully instead.

The other barbed tail cat made for Han Shuo, and in fact it had set its sights on him. In the other students' panic, their bone arrow magic continued to be riddled with mistakes and didn't slow down the cat at all.

Gene was only concerned with Fanny's side and in the heat of the moment forgot about the threat on the right. He only reacted after Fanny had fought off the barbed tail cat, but it was already a bit too late. The cat had directly charged to in front of Han Shuo, and its three fanged cat heads along with razor sharp claws went directly for him.

“Bryan, be careful!” Fanny and Lisa both screamed in fright.

Han Shuo’s face stayed calm and didn’t panic as he saw the barbed-tail cat bearing down on him. A cold curve even played at the corners of his lips.

Han Shuo suddenly snaked out a hand like lightning when the barbed-tail cat’s claws were in front of his face. His left arm swung violently, and the durable wooden sticks intended to be a tent structure that were tied to his arm caught the barb tailed cat’s sharp claws.

His right hand immediately thrust out, and the others seemed to see a bright red line drawn through the air. Han Shuo’s right hand landed on the cat’s lower abdomen, paused for a second, and was then retracted.

Gene’s bone arrow support also arrived at the same time, and two arrows tardily shot towards the barbed-tail cat. Three ghastly wails sounded out from the three heads as it fell listlessly to the ground with an audible thud, where it then laid unmoving.

The four already injured barbed tail cats were spooked by the fall of this cat and they cried wildly as they hurriedly retreated, vanishing without a trace in the blink of an eye.

“Eh? Master Gene’s bone arrows are so strong, they killed this barbed-tail cat in a flash! The bone arrows that we and Master Fanny shot towards our cats only injured them and weren’t nearly as powerful!” Amy gave a soft exclamation and looked at Gene in surprise.

The others also thought it was odd after Amy’s words, and even Fanny gazed at Gene in astonishment. She said with a perplexed look, “Bone arrow is just a basic attack magic. You were able to immediately kill a barbed tail cat with this magic. This is truly amazing!”

Gene’s expression was a bit strange in the beginning, as if he was also befuddled as well, but after Fanny’s words, he immediately displayed a very confident smile, and nodded faintly at everyone, as if he too was paying respects to the power of his attack magic.

“Bryan, when you slashed at the cat with your right hand just now, why did I seem to see a red line slash through the air? What's going on? Although Master Gene killed the barbed tail cat, it seemed to have been you who made it off balance, right?" Lisa had been paying attention to Han Shuo and thought briefly, thinking it was a bit odd.

"Heh heh, don't think nonsense Lisa. Bryan merely hit the cat once, but his hit didn't have much effect. What harm could he bring to the barbed - tail cat with his errand slave strength?" Bach flicked a disdainful glance at Han Shuo and said in a voice heavy with sarcasm.

Han Shuo smiled dumbly and didn't say much, but the other students, having seen the same sight, also looked at Han Shuo with some confusion. They all soon decided that Han Shuo hadn't had any effect, and it was Gene who had killed the cat.

After all, to them, Han Shuo was just an errand slave that they could bully at their leisure... how could an errand slave have such strength and ways?

"Alright alright, let's get out of here. The barbed-tailed cat is a magical creature that picks on the weak and fears the strong, but this type of creature is a pack animal and would cause some trouble for us if they came back with reinforcements. These low level magical creatures have no magical cores, and their skin isn't worth much. Ignore them and let's leave!"

Fanny didn't pay much attention to Gene after that initial moment of astonishment as she urged everyone to pick up their dropped belongings and hurry on their way. This cause great disappointment for Gene as he thought that Fanny would definitely see him in a different light.

The group of twelve repacked their belongings under Fanny's cries and continued southbound.

Han Shuo trailed the pack and wore a bizarre smile before he left. He'd peeked at the two wounds caused by Gene's arrows and could smell a burnt smell already emitting from them. Its flesh could be glimpsed from the wounds, and he could see that it was already a charred, burnt mess.

This barbed tail cat's death was due to the red spellfire of Han Shuo's Mystical Glacial Spellfire and had nothing to do with Gene.

He looked at his right hand and circulated his magical yuan. A bright red spellflame abruptly erupted from his middle finger. Han Shuo breathed a sigh of appreciation for the power of the Mystical Glacial Spellfire as he admired the flame, finally chuckling to himself before catching up to the others.

Night. Bright moonlight filtered through the dense tree branches and leaves to scatter on all corners of the Dark Forest. A few unknown bugs serenaded the night, bringing some joyful sounds to the otherwise peaceful forest.

A bonfire burned bright red, warming the chilly night air. Han Shuo picked up a few branches with fresh meat draped over them and continuously turned them over the blazing flame. Delicious meat scents began to waft out into student noses after he applied some spices onto the pieces of meat.

“It smells so good! Bryan, how do you know how to do this?” Lisa exclaimed in surprise as she wrinkled her cute nose as her gaze locked onto a piece of meat gleaming with oil.

“Your performance when you met the barbed tail cat today was terribly disappointing. You panicked so much that you couldn’t even cast the most basic bone arrow magic. This won’t do! And Master Gene, although your last bone arrow magic was quite amazing, you were too lax earlier. If it wasn’t for Bryan’s high alertness, he surely would’ve been harmed by the cat.”

The students were gathered around the bonfire as they listened to Fanny’s loud lecture. Her brow was furrowed and she seemed to be very displeased with the students’ and Gene’s performance earlier in the day.

The students had timid expressions on their faces and seemed to be listening very intently. However, their eyes kept traveling to Han Shuo’s meat rack, and many swallowed audibly.

Han Shuo had been a full time otaku in his previous life and had taken care of his daily needs. He’d naturally honed his cooking skills. The development of this world's cuisines were a far cry from the time in which Han Shuo had resided in. People had started salivating when he'd merely deployed the slightest bit of his skills.

Han Shuo snuck a few glances at Fanny as her lecture sounded in his ears, a bit startled by Fanny's commanding aura. It looked like Fanny was the true organizer of this time's outing. Gene's position, who was also a teacher in the necromancy major, seemed to be a bit lower than Fanny. No wonder he was a bit afraid of Fanny. It wasn't as simple as him having a crush on her.

"Alright, let's stop here. We'll run into more danger along the way. I hope you won't be as careless next time. Let's eat."

After hectoring the students for a while, Fanny was also extremely tempted by the delicious scent of meat. She'd been on the road all day today and had partook only simple bread and clear water. Her stomach was the first to speak up now that such delicious food was in sight.

"Master Fanny, this is yours. Lisa, this is yours. Bella, Bach, Gene, these are yours..." Han Shuo had a strange smile on his face as he passed out the meat.

"Mm... Bryan, nicely done! This meat is delicious!" Fanny licked her lips after eating a piece and kept forth a steady stream of compliments. Han Shuo's heart lurched at the sight of this arousing scene.

"Not bad...It's actually really good! Bryan does have some skill!" Lisa was also smiling happily and she devoured half her meat in the blink of an eye."

"What kind of meat is this? This is disgusting! It's not fully cooked yet."

"Ew... this is gross. There's no flavor to this."

"Damned Bryan, you did this on purpose. This meat is still raw."

Bach, Gene and Bella, as well as some others with grudges against Han Shuo cursed repeatedly after taking a few bites.

Han Shuo smiled honestly with an innocent face, "Eh... maybe a few pieces really weren't ready yet. Sorry, bad luck!"

Chapter 34: Subconscious changes

Han Shuo and the band of twelve walked south for a full eight days. They met increasingly fiercer magical creatures along the way.

Unicorned charging bulls, enormous lizards, magical wolves that could release wind blades, and flying eagles that could spew out frost. They were handled easily at first and increased in difficulty until the band barely handled them by the skin of their teeth. Everyone felt the increasing pressure.

Everyone started off eating the food that they had brought and started cooking the meat from the magical creatures when all their rations had been eaten.

The magical creatures were increasingly violent, but not all of the flesh was edible. The lizard, for instance, had a strange smell that accompanied its flesh that made it hard to swallow.

But the stronger the magical creature was, the more valuable their carcasses, particularly the ones that could cast simple magics. These creatures would have magical cores within their bodies. These cores were very precious and could be sold for varying high prices according to their level.

The band's haul was uncommon as well. They had obtained four cores from magical creatures over the past couple of days, three from the Windblade Wolf and one from the Frost Eagle.

The cores from magical creatures were divided into six levels. Level 6 cores were the cheapest, while level 1 was the most expensive and basically hard to even catch a glimpse of. These magical cores could be used to create powerful magical weapons and increase a mage's power. Some special ones could even be used to increase a mage's mental strength, thus their prices were incredibly high.

The Windblade Wolf's magical core was ranked at level 5, and could fetch twenty gold at the market, while the Frost Eagle was higher, at level 4, and its market price was 150 gold. Based purely on their haul of magical creature cores, the band had already turned a profit even after subtracting out the fifty golds needed for borrowing the battlesteeds.

Not to mention that apart from their cores, the bodies of these magical creatures were also worth some money. The fur of the Windblade Wolf and the unicorn horn of the charging bull were all valuable items. The value of these items added together had greatly exceeded Fanny and Gene's original expectations.

"Everyone has improved after a few days of training, and you no longer panic when faced with magical creatures. This is the most important thing in actual battle. On top of that, our luck has been quite good. We have gained much from this time's outing. We will allocate the profits out to everyone after we return to the Academy and sell these items." Fanny was in a good mood and she wore a satisfied smile on her face when she spoke softly to the students.

Han Shuo had been coldly observing everything along the way. The unskilled students had gone from panicking when faced with magical creatures to handling them with indifference. Han Shuo had seen it all clearly.

Han Shuo's five senses were much sharper than anyone else's due to training his magical yuan. His early warnings had accomplished much in the later days, but no one could understand why Han Shuo had such perceptive senses. Fanny had even thoroughly checked Han Shuo's body over the past few days, but had turned up empty handed each time.

Fanny was perplexed, but could think of no better way. She could only say that she would employ the school's magical facilities to give Han Shuo a thorough once over after they'd returned to the Academy. After several days of early warnings and cooking mouthwatering meat, Han Shuo's status had subconsciously risen a few grades in this time's outing.

Other than Bach, Bella, and others who continued to be extremely unfriendly towards Han Shuo because of their continued "bad luck" in always getting a piece of disgusting food, the other students no longer ordered Han Shuo around. Some of the students, who were more particular about their food, had even tried becoming more friendly with Han Shuo in hopes of obtaining better food.

“Master Fanny, when can we reach that cemetery of death?” Lisa immediately asked after hearing Fanny’s words.

Fanny’s brow creased upon hearing this question and she became silent. She sighed gently after a while. “I’ve only heard that the cemetery of death was once discovered in the deep south of the Dark Forest, but I’m not too certain of its exact location. Our main purpose in traveling to the Dark Forest this time was to teach you the correct method of deploying necromancy magic when faced with danger. Based on our current results, you have all reached this standard.

I don’t know the exact whereabouts of the cemetery of death. You might have noticed by now that the magical creatures we are facing are becoming stronger and stronger. If it weren’t for the prewarnings that Bryan had been issuing the past couple of days, I think some people would have already gotten injured, but even so, we only made it through by the skin of our teeth when we met that Frost Eagle yesterday. I’m worried that some amongst us will not only be hurt, but some may even die if we continue further. Therefore, I think it’s time that we head back.”

The students were a bit dumbfounded by Fanny’s words, while Gene nodded and spoke, “Indeed. We’re just out here for training. The location of the cemetery of death is uncertain, and we don’t even know if it truly exists. It’s normal for us not to find it. Everyone had personally experienced the situation yesterday. If we continue south, I feel that everyone’s lives will be in danger. This time’s outing has already reaped rich rewards, so there is no need for taking further risks.”

The two teachers had thus spoken. A few of the more cowardly students thought back to the events of the past two days and all nodded their heads in agreement. “Alright, then let’s go back to the Academy. The dangers are becoming worse.”

“Bach, you coward. How else can rewards be gained if not through risk. If it weren’t for yesterday’s danger, how could we have gotten that Frost

Eagle's core? We should continue further south, perhaps we'd obtain even more valuable items. This way, the other majors won't look down on our necromancy major when we go back to the Academy." Lisa glared at Bach with a contemptuous look, and tilted her head back with sarcasm. She then cast a glance at Han Shuo, who was cooking meat on the side with an indifferent expression. "Bryan, wouldn't you agree?"

Ordinarily, no one paid any attention to Han Shuo, but after his performance over the past couple of days, incredibly enough, the students all stared at Han Shuo after Lisa had spoken. Even Fanny and Gene were the same, as if Han Shuo's decision was quite important.

Han Shuo was involuntarily speechless. He paused, and then smiled honestly. "Taking risks is a given. People haven't been hurt yet. Why don't we continue? Who knows, maybe we'll gain even more rewards!"

Fanny gazed at Han Shuo strangely, grew quiet for a moment, and then surprisingly nodded her head. "Alright, since this is the case, then let's continue until someone is hurt. Once that happens, we'll return on our original path."

"Come, come everyone, it's time to eat." Han Shuo laughed lightly and called out. Fanny and Lisa then hurtled forward merrily, dropping their manners as they accepted the two largest pieces of meat that Han Shuo handed over.

In the deep of the night, the cool moonlight spilled over the Dark Forest. A few students were already fast asleep in a few crude tents, while some others struggled against their sleepiness and took up the grave task of standing guard.

Han Shuo slipped away soundlessly by himself, slowly moving away from the students' tents and crept through the shadows of the towering trees.

Han Shuo's not terribly strong body could be seen through the cracks between the shadows of the the trees. He was as fast and agile as a cheetah, abruptly changing direction with ease as he wove through the trees. He had traveled far away from Fanny and co's tents in the blink of an eye and continued south.

After a while, Han Shuo's body suddenly stopped as he spread his two palms upwards and chanted the words to summon a skeletal warrior. "Souls of the fallen soldiers, heed the dark herald's call and reveal your existence!"

A skinny, inky-black little skeleton wielding a bone dagger abruptly materialized as soon as the incantation was complete. The little skeleton's body was even more dense and darker than before, completely becoming one with the color of the night. It was like an elf of the darkness.

The little skeleton continuously sprang off its feet to follow Han Shuo's high speed dash, but its bones no longer creaked with sound. The seven bone spurs flapped on its back, allowing the little skeleton to speed through the air, like it was hang gliding, as it wove through the forest side by side with Han Shuo.

Two Windblade Wolves suddenly appeared in front of the man and skeleton duo. The two Windblade Wolves were devouring the carcass of a magical creature in the shape of a wild pig. One of them seemed to feel the disturbance in the air as its sharp ears suddenly stood up and its green eyes darted to and fro.

A bone dagger shimmering with a cold, sharp light materialized out of the night. The bone dagger carved a marvelous curve through the thin air and suddenly stabbed towards the wolf, that had been on high alert.

At the same time, a nimble figure suddenly rushed out from the trees of the Dark Forest and made for the other Windblade Wolf. A faint, purple light suddenly flashed in the darkened sky, appearing all the more beautiful and fey.

Two ghastly wails sounded out from the two Windblade Wolves. The bloodthirsty wolves had all been killed before they had a chance to react. One wolf's skull was cleaved straight through with the bone dagger, and the other fell stiffly to the ground with frosty breaths coming out of its mouth.

"Heh heh, another two level five cores!" Han Shuo talked to himself in satisfaction as he withdrew his hand.

On the other side, the little skeleton had already started dressing the valuable Windblade Wolf skin with its bone dagger. Judging from its practiced movement, this wasn't the first time that it had done so.

Chapter 35: Prepare to fight

Han Shuo worked by himself during the nights, leveraging his perceptive senses to hunt down the magical creatures nearby. The flawless cooperation between man and skeleton had no drawbacks. They had gathered four level 5 cores by now, as well as some valuable skin and horns.

Han Shuo not only tried to cast magic whenever they hunted down magical creatures, but also repeatedly practiced the bone arrow magic, often combining missile and melee attacks for uncanny effectiveness.

Han Shuo never displayed the same panic and disarray that the students had displayed when they first met magical creatures. He always displayed the same calm, even a sort of numb callousness.

Even Han Shuo himself didn't know why he didn't have any negative emotions throughout the entire process. He could vaguely feel that his inner heart was actually brimming with eagerness and anticipation when he hunted magical creatures, as if he really enjoyed the process.

"I'm definitely not a good person!" Han Shuo laughed at himself, and accepted this time's haul of cores and Windblade Wolf pelts from the little skeleton's hands. He patted the darkly gleaming head of the little skeleton and smiled, "Let's go. We can go back now."

The little skeleton's hand clutched its bone dagger, with no traces of emotion in its empty eye sockets. It trailed behind Han Shuo and swiftly returned along their original path.

Han Shuo chanted an incantation when they were halfway there and the little skeleton returned to the other dimension. Seeing that he was about to return to the camping area, Han Shuo slowed his footsteps and walked unhurriedly through the shadows of the trees.

As it was past midnight, the students standing guard in the camping area had changed to Fanny, Lisa, and Amy. Lisa and Amy had half-drooped eyes and looked incredibly sleepy. Anyone could tell at a glance that they were slacking off and not shouldering the responsibility they were assigned.

It was a good thing that Fanny understood the importance of keeping guard. Her pair of beautiful eyes roamed the four corners alertly, and her wary gaze immediately locked onto the direction that Han Shuo was coming from when his light footsteps grew near.

Her magic staff in hand, Fanny frowned with an expression of high alert on her alluring features. She slowly advanced in Han Shuo's direction and said softly, "Who goes there?"

"Master Fanny, it's me!" Han Shuo called out lightly as he walked out slowly from the shadows.

"I knew it would be you. I went to look for you earlier and discovered that your tent was empty. Where did you go in the middle of the night?" Fanny's eyes locked onto Han Shuo's body as she asked with confusion.

"Nothing much, I only went to find a secluded corner to practice magic. After I asked you about the bone arrow magic last time, I've been taking advantage of the night to find a secluded area to practice. I think that only with repeated practice can I guarantee that I won't make a mistake." Han Shuo scratched his head and answered honestly in a light voice.

"Bryan, it's great that you're so hardworking. After a while, when you've grasped more magic, I will explain this matter to the school authorities. That way, your status as an errand slave can be waived, and perhaps you will be able to enjoy the same treatment as the students." Fanny looked at Han Shuo and thought for a bit.

"Oh, I was sold to the Babylon Academy of Magic and Force. Will my status as an errand slave be waived purely because I understand magic?" Han Shuo asked after he recovered from being dumbfounded.

Fanny nodded and spoke decisively. "No mage has ever been an errand boy or slave. Being a mage is an esteemed profession throughout the Profound Continent. Even if our necromancy major is unpopular, if you can prove that you truly understand magic, then your status will change, and you'll never have to be the slave that runs errands."

“I see, that’s wonderful. I actually have a lot more questions that I hope Master Fanny will be able to answer for me. I will do my best to improve myself and become an adequate mage.” Han Shuo’s thoughts raced as he suddenly recalled the many unanswered questions he had from the magic books he had read previously, and wanted to make the best use of this opportunity to get them answered.

“No problem, you can ask me any necromancy questions you have in the future. I will help you. Eh... although you’re a bit lascivious right now, I’m certain that you’re a magical genius and will help you escape your current position.” Fanny smiled faintly and responded in her gentle voice.

Han Shuo smiled honestly, as if he hadn’t heard Fanny accuse him of being too carnal. He contemplated briefly and started asking Fanny a few questions regarding magical knowledge.

After a brief moment, Fanny gave a great start of surprise and gazed at Han Shuo in shock. “Oh, goodness, Bryan, you already have so much magical knowledge. That’s amazing!”

“I gained this magical knowledge from reading the magical books in the library last time I helped Jack clean the library. Ever since I discovered that I could cast the bone arrow magic, I started to investigate the reason why.” Han Shuo lied smoothly, and in fact spoke with a slightly embarrassed expression.

“Bryan, I really wasn’t wrong about you. You really are a magical genius!” Fanny exclaimed in astonishment again upon hearing Han Shuo’s explanation.

At this moment, the sound of footsteps fell into Han Shuo’s ears again. His face grew grave as he hastily spoke, “A sound is approaching, but it doesn’t sound like a magical creature. Rather, it sounds more like a human.”

Fanny’s beautiful features changed slightly after Han Shuo’s words, and she pulled on his arms in panic. They ran straight for the tents, “There are many races within the Dark Forest, but not all of them are friendly. Even some who are humans like us will sometimes kill for a high level magical creature core. We should be ready.”

Fanny’s slender fingers clutched Han Shuo’s wrist in her hurry. She had no particular thoughts about it, but Han Shuo’s mind had already been filled with sinister intentions. His mind started falling head over heels when the feeling of the smooth fingers of her jade hand crossed his wrist, and his mind suddenly recalled the tantalizing moment on the back of a battlesteed a few days ago.

“Everyone up! Lisa and Amy, get everyone up and ready for battle! Possible danger approaches!” Fanny words jolted the dozing Lisa and Amy awake. The two could detect the arrival of danger in Fanny’s frantic tone, and they started raising a ruckus to warn those in the tents.

In the blink of an eye, many students who had been sound asleep in the tents all rushed out with their clothes in disarray and still half asleep. They began urgent preparations for battle.

Fanny unintentionally glanced at Han Shuo at this moment and found that Han Shuo was smiling happily at the hand that was clutching his wrist. An expression of enjoyment could be found on his face. Incensed, Fanny let go only after she gave Han Shuo a sharp pinch with her jade hand. She spoke angrily in a low voice, “Damnit Bryan, I find that you’re as lecherous as Fitch.”

Han Shuo cried out in pain and wore an awkward smile on his face. He thought internally, I wonder what would Fanny think if she knew that I was the one who touched her butt last time?

Several heavy footfalls gradually approached and fell into everyone’s hearing in the mess of the students getting ready. Han Shuo had started to calm down after Fanny’s pinch, and the previous lustful gleam in his eyes faded without a trace, to be replaced by a deep coldness. It was as if he was a bystander coldly observing everything around him.

Heavy footsteps accompanied by weird, airy sounds continued to approach the crew. Gene frowned and asked, perplexed, “Such heavy footsteps shouldn’t belong to humans, but two legged magical creatures are exceedingly rare. What could they be?”

Fanny furrowed her brow in deep thought as her beautiful eyes suddenly brightened with understanding. She suddenly called out, "Everyone hurry and summon skeletal warriors to the front, we seem to have run into the man-eating monsters in the Dark Forest."

Everyone was gobsmacked when the words "man-eating monsters" crossed Fanny's lips. A few of the female students shuddered as fearful expressions blossomed on their faces. Gene was also startled and hurriedly commanded everyone to form a circular defense pattern. He too brought out a brown magic staff, that looked like a tree branch. His face was full of careful wariness.

Rounds of incantations flew out from the students' and teachers' mouths. Multiple skeletal warriors, ghouls, and zombie warriors appeared out of thin air, as well as Fanny and Gene's hate warriors.

Hate warriors were more advanced beings of existence amongst the dark creatures. These hate warriors were enormous in size, wielded metal clubs, and had incredible strength in all the fat on their bodies. Their bodies also possessed extremely durable defensive capabilities, and were a common meat shield used by necromancers.

Indeed, following their thudding footsteps, eight, grey-colored, 2.5 meter tall man-eating monsters wielding studded clubs and long spears soon appeared in everyone's vision.

Man-eating monsters were pack creatures. Ten or so man-eating monsters counted as a tribe. The man-eating monster's nature was lazy and they liked to steal things. They were born robbers. They understood how to use studded clubs and long spears, add to that, the toughness and durability of their bodies meant they had extreme power and damage in close combat.

However, what frightened people most wasn't the strength of the man-eating monsters, but their habits. Man-eating monsters were labeled thus because they ate humans. If they met humans in the course of a robbery, not only would they steal everything, but they would carry off the human for food.

Han Shuo and co. had formed a defensive field, with the skeletal warriors, ghouls, zombie warriors, and hate warriors forming an outer defensive perimeter. A few necromancers readied their offensive missile spells and watched the approaching man-eating monsters gravely.

“Prepare to fight!” Fanny called out. Her staff had already been raised up.

Chapter 36: The calm of an errand boy

The man-eating monsters made weird sounds with their mouths as they moved. They abruptly started running towards the band when the strongest and tallest man-eating monster pointed at them with its club.

Strings of magical incantations sounded out before the monsters had even begun to approach. Bundles of bone arrows flew towards the man-eating monsters out of thin air, and those above the level of magic apprentice even fired out a stronger incantation, bone spears.

Bone spears was a necromancy magic similar to bone arrows, but one had to be at least at the level of a novice mage in order to master it. The power of the spell was also slightly stronger than bone arrows. Bone arrows and spears flew out simultaneously, through the air, making straight for the eight man-eating monsters.

These eight monsters knew to dodge the attacks as they ran, but they weren't a race known for speed. Some were still hit by the bone arrows and spears.

Except, their bodies were exceedingly durable. The bone arrows only caused them to cry out with pain and temporarily affected their speed, but couldn't pierce their bodies. Only the bone spears left bloody holes on their bodies, with green blood trickling out of them.

The eight monsters continued to get hurt as they approached, but none of them fully lost the ability to fight. They crashed into the outer defensive perimeter and started attacking the inner ring.

Han Shuo stayed within the defensive ring in an orderly, unruffled manner. His face full of calm, he looked coldly upon the fast approaching man-eating monsters and slowly sized up their battle strength.

"Let the dark creatures attack!" Fanny gave a great shout as her beautiful features turned grave as she saw the man-eating monsters drawing near.

Everyone started directing the outer ring of dark creatures to attack as Fanny's words rang out. The summoned ghouls, skeletal warriors, zombie warriors, and hate warriors all held their positions firmly, striking out only when the man-eating monsters closed the distance.

But the man-eating monsters were tall and buff, and their muscles provided them with a tough defense. Apart from the hate warriors, which could actually cause some damage with their metal clubs, the effect of the other dark creatures' attacks was quite limited.

The ghouls and skeletal warriors were particularly ineffective. They were immediately pulverized beneath the studded clubs, with the skeletal warriors falling to pieces and the ghouls dying in a mass of flesh and gore. The zombie warriors were more durable and could take multiple hits from the studded clubs, but they too staggered around weakly after being hit a few times.

"These damned man-eating monsters are a bit tough to deal with!" Gene started to worry as he saw the outer perimeter of dark creatures begin to collapse, and yet the man-eating monsters remained standing, even when bleeding profusely from various magic attacks.

"Hold the line! Don't let them breakthrough, otherwise we'll surely die if we face them in close combat!" Fanny called out loudly, a trace of anxiety appearing on her beautiful face as well.

Rounds of bone spears continued to appear as she chanted her spells. They honed in on one particular man-eating monster, with the final spear piercing the monster through the eye and penetrating its head with one stroke. This caused the man-eating monster wobble, and then fall lifelessly to the ground.

The remaining seven man-eating monsters seemed to lose their minds after their comrade had been killed. It was like the two with spears had been activated as they cried out with weird whooshing sounds and suddenly threw their spears out. The spears drew a curve in the air, and whistled sharply as they pinned down the two hate warriors.

The two hate warriors were the strongest meat shields in the outer perimeter. Although they didn't immediately lose the ability to move, their movements became slower now that their bodies had been impaled. They were pretty much ineffectual after two man-eating monsters started marking their every move.

At this moment, only two hate warriors and six zombie warriors were left in the outer perimeter. The zombie warriors were inferior to the hate warriors in every way, and the pressure on the former had increased with the hate warriors being impaled by spears. Two zombie warriors had fallen in the span of a moment.

“What to do, what to do? Will these damned man-eating monsters eat us?”

“Oh my gosh, why are their bodies so durable? The bone arrows have no effect when they hit!”

“Screwed, we’re all screwed. We should’ve gone back yesterday, wah... wah...”

Rounds of depressed complaints and fearful sobs rang out from the students’ mouths, affecting even their spells for a moment.

“Master Gene, let’s use the corpse explosion spell, quick!” Fanny called out suddenly and her beautiful face hardened upon seeing everyone become so forlorn.

“Oh perished soul, my will be the command, surrender your body to me, explode violently, Corpse Explosion!” Fanny and Gene both chanted at the same time, and Fanny pointed at the man-eating monster that she’d previously speared when it was done. Gene pointed at another fallen zombie warrior.

Two violent explosions suddenly erupted from the man-eating monster and zombie warrior’s bodies. The four injured man-eating monsters next to them, including two zombie warriors, who were fighting against them, were all affected as they flew forcefully through the air.

The four man-eating monsters were blasted apart with loud sounds along with the two zombie warriors. They all lay still and unmoving, obviously completely done for.

Han Shuo’s eyes shone brightly as he fixed them on Fanny. He was quite gobsmacked by the corpse explosion magic. He had seen clearly just now that the exploded man-eating monster's body had abruptly lit up after Fanny had finished her incantation, to be followed by a frightening force. Of the four man-eating monsters, who had been blasted apart, three of them had died underneath Fanny's magic.

Han Shuo had previously only heard a bit regarding corpse explosion magic. He understood that only adept mages could cast it, and that explosions would vary according to the mage's strength. Fanny's corpse explosion magic had been noticeably stronger than Gene's. This may have had something to do with Fanny's magic and using man-eating monsters as fodder.

However, it seemed that the corpse explosion spell significantly drained their mental strength. Fanny and Gene's faces were both pale after casting the spell and they panted heavily.

Up until now, of the original eight man-eating monsters, Fanny had killed one with a bone spear, and four more had been killed with the corpse explosion spells. Although the two hate warriors had been impaled by the man-eating monsters' spears, they continued to hold their ground and resolutely tied up two more man-eating monsters.

Only the strongest and tallest man-eating monster hadn't been unduly affected. It wielded a studded club and sprinted over like mad, making weird noises and even yelling simple phrases like "I... I will... kill you".

"We've just used the corpse explosion spell and pretty much drained our mental strength. We'll be unable to use any other high level magic for a while. Everyone run!" Gene's face grew panicked and he yelled quickly.

Fanny glanced around and urged, "Everyone hurry and leave! Don't get caught by these monsters."

Everyone panicked even more after these words from Fanny and Gene. The resources on the side were all forgotten as they all frantically tried to distance themselves from the studded club-wielding, quickly-sprinting man-eating monster.

Except, although the man-eating monster's speed wasn't too fast, it was still faster than the students', particularly as the latter sometimes tripped over the skeletal warrior remains as they panicked. This resulted in completely incomparable speed when compared to the man-eating monsters.

Fanny's thoughts were with the students as she urged them to leave and hung back herself. The tall man-eating monster, who remembered that it was Fanny who had cast the corpse explosion spell and blown three monsters to pieces, chased after her without a second thought upon seeing that she had fallen behind. Its club was raised high and crashed down towards Fanny.

"Master Fanny, be careful!"

"Watch out! Fanny, behind you!"

Lisa, Gene, and several others all cried out in shock and fright as they saw the club descend towards Fanny from behind.

Fanny turned upon hearing the others' cries and discovered that the studded club was falling straight at her. The sharp points of the studs sparkled with cold light, and the accompanying whooshing sound gave testament to the strength behind this blow.

Her enchanting face with starkly-white without a trace of color, and her beautiful legs were suddenly without strength. A feeling of mournful helplessness rose within her eyes as the studded club grew larger in her vision.

Clang. Sparks flew everywhere.

Fanny's beautiful eyes widened as she looked in front of her, a bit lost. Two studded clubs had appeared in front of her at some unknown time, and the two had collided together. The sharp studs had already been flattened at the point of contact, which still emitted some metallic sparks.

She followed her gaze down the opposing studded club and suddenly discovered that Han Shuo had appeared on her left. Both of his hands were tightly grasping the studded club that was completely disproportionate to his body. Veins had popped out on his forehead and arms, and his face twisted in a grimace as he stared fixedly at the man-eating monster.

Chapter 37: Ferocious Han Shuo

“Bryan, it’s Bryan!”

The students exclaimed in shock, even Fanny was a bit dumbfounded as she stared unfamiliarly at Han Shuo. She never would have thought that, with his 170 cm height, Han Shuo would be able to wave such a thick, studded club and block a savage attack to boot.

While everyone was shellshocked, Han Shuo stared fixedly at the man-eating monster and reached out with his right hand to give Fanny a push. He said with an honest voice, “Hurry and run.”

A shrill, panicked scream rang out from Fanny’s mouth. Han Shuo suddenly felt that his right hand had pressed on two balls of soft, big cotton candy amidst her screams. He understood that he had surely pressed down on the wrong place when he retracted his hand.

The students on the side were giving soft exclamations as Gene cursed loudly, denouncing Han Shuo’s wanton boldness.

His heart lurching, Han Shuo turned to look at Fanny and said awkwardly, “Sorry Master Fanny, I pushed in the wrong place. I really didn’t mean to!”

Fanny was extremely irate and was about to open her mouth to berate Han Shuo, when she suddenly sensed the man-eating monster behind her. Its large, studded club was already coming down on Han Shuo, and she reminded hastily, “Bryan, be careful!”

Traces of dull honesty still on his face, Han Shuo suddenly turned around and raised up the club that was bigger than his body. It whistled as it once more crashed towards the man-eating monster.

Clang. Sparks flew again as Han Shuo didn’t budge an inch, staying firmly put like an erect stone. The picture of his thin frame clutching the large club was imprinted in everyone’s eyes, causing students to look upon him weirdly.

“Master Fanny, hurry and get out of there!”

Gene's loud yell suddenly rang out at this moment. Gazing at Han Shuo in astonishment, Fanny finally reacted. Her beautiful eyes still locked on Han Shuo, she retreated backwards towards Gene and co.

After going head to head twice with the man-eating monster, Han Shuo felt an overwhelming need to vent his feelings at this moment. He wanted to fully let loose with all the power within his body as a faint desire to kill rose in Han Shuo's heart, giving him the urge to mash the man-eating monster into a meat pie.

Han Shuo suddenly gave a few chilling laughs as soon as Fanny had vacated the area. The dumb honesty on his face vanished without a trace and his expression grimaced scarily. He raised the thick club with a darkened face and rushed headlong towards the confused man-eating monster.

This fittest and strongest man-eating monster couldn't seem to understand why Han Shuo could withstand two of his heavy hits with such a frail body, and was standing there dumbly, as if contemplating something.

"Oh my goodness, Bryan must be crazy. He's rushing towards the man-eating monster!" Bella exclaimed softly, a look of incredulity on her face.

Everyone nodded in agreement as soon as they heard her words, all thinking that Han Shuo had naturally lost his mind. Even Lisa, who knew that Han Shuo was merely playing the village idiot, had a face of incomprehension, utterly shocked by how he was behaving at the moment.

"Bryan's suddenly become so strong after he went crazy. This is incredible! Lisa is too amazing. An Agony of the Soul spell turned the cowardly, timid Bryan into such a wild person!" Amy called out naively and looked at Lisa with emotion.

"Shut up!" Lisa stared directly at Han Shuo and responded.

At this moment, Han Shuo was wielding the thick studded club and moved as fast as lightning, dashing straight for the man-eating monster. The studded club whistled strangely through the air as Han Shuo grasped it tightly with both hands, swinging it upwards in a curve and aiming violently for the monster's waist.

The look on the monster's face changed abruptly from confusion to rage and it repeated its previous movement. It sent its club clashing towards Han Shuo, as if wanting to thoroughly defeat Han Shuo with strength.

Loud clashing sounds rang out continuously between the two studded clubs. The durable club and sharp studs were all flattened after repeated clashes. The fight between the frail Han Shuo and the hulking man-eating monster became heated as the clashing sounds continued.

Fanny and the others had originally wanted to escape as soon as possible, but all remained where they were in shock as they saw how scary Han Shuo's strength was after he'd gone mad. He was holding his own in a fight against the man-eating monster, and the crew stared gobsmacked at Han Shuo's strength.

Dancing around with a club completely disproportionate to his body, Han Shuo displayed not even a hint of apprehension as he faced the towering monster. Firm and well defined muscles with popping veins were evident on his neck arms and neck. In this moment, his expression was hideously mad. He had a sort of dauntless valor that completely upended Fanny and the students' understanding of him.

In this moment, the magical yuan within Han Shuo's body churned quickly, and he felt a joyous glee in fully deploying his strength. His movements with the studded club became more practiced, and not only did he not become tired by the repeated clashes, but his vigor actually grew in strength.

"Hehehe..."

A few weird laughs emitted from the grimacing Han Shuo. The man-eating monster staggered backwards after another violent clash. Its originally wild attacks and enormous strength had started faltering after a few rounds of clashes.

"Oh.. my gosh. Is this that weak and cowardly Bryan?" Bella exclaimed and repeatedly shook her head in disbelief.

“I swear I’ll never test magic on Bryan again. He’s too scary when he goes crazy!” Athena displayed a frightened expression and muttered to herself.

Lisa’s expression was excited and her small fists clenched tightly. She would randomly scream, “Beat him!”

Bach and others with a grudge against Han Shuo all displayed fearful expressions after exchanging looks. They looked upon Han Shuo with a bit of fear.

“Hehe... you won’t get away!” After another weird laugh, Han Shuo followed closely behind the escaping monster. The thick, studded club suddenly swept forward, and the monster’s two legs were broken with a resounding crack. Han Shuo’s weird laughter followed closely thereafter and the studded club repeatedly crashed down onto the monster. Ghastly wails sounded out from the previously cruel man-eating monster.

The monster’s hulking body had long since fallen down as fresh blood continued spurting out of his body. The grey, strong body was a bloody mess after Han Shuo’s continued beating. It was a bit difficult to make out what it had originally looked like.

These violent and savage blows rained down like a furious storm for a minute, with Han Shuo suddenly waking up after the man-eating monster had been mashed into a mess of blood and gore. He was also startled when he stopped as he’d never thought that he would have such a savage side to him.

This was the first time he’d killed someone, but there was no corresponding wave of fear in Han Shuo’s heart. After the expression on his face had calmed down, Han Shuo turned to look at Fanny and the students, smiling an honest smile, “He seems to be dead?”

Against his expectations, the students, as well as Fanny and Gene, all screamed and took two steps backwards when Han Shuo turned his head. Lisa exclaimed in fright and then asked, “Bry... Bryan, are you... are you alright?”

Han Shuo started and quickly recollected himself. He scratched his head and smiled dumbly, “What happened to me just now? Even I don’t know what I did. Why did this monster suddenly die?”

“You.. you’ve forgotten everything you’ve just done?” Fanny was also dumbfounded and then frowned as she stared at Han Shuo in interrogation.

Han Shuo nodded truthfully and explained sincerely, “Yes, I felt that my brain started to hurt a lot just now and then forgot everything that happened afterwards. The man-eating monster had already died in front of me when I came to. What’s going on? Eh? Weren’t there two more monsters? Where did they go?”

“You scared them off!” Bella stared at Han Shuo oddly and replied.

“Ah, no way. How can this be? Why would they be afraid of me?” Han Shuo asked, perplexed and with a face full of innocence.

“Bryan, you become so scary after you lose your mind, like you’re someone else. Even we were a bit afraid, not to mention the man-eating monsters. Good thing you’re alright now.” Gene spoke heartfully and voiced everyone’s thoughts.

“Don’t just stand there. Hurry and pack everything. We can no longer stay here. Two of the monsters got away, they may come back and create more trouble for us.” Fanny kept her cool and hurriedly directed everyone to clean up the aftermath upon seeing that the crisis had been temporarily averted.

Everyone returned to their original places after Fanny’s orders and picked up the resources strewn all over the ground. The students had become more mature after this life and death experience. No one wasted time in idle chatter, picked up and packed all the items with great speed.

“I think it’s time to leave and end this time’s outing!” Gene proposed gravely after seeing that everyone had appropriately repacked their belongings.

Everyone had recognized that their strength wasn’t as strong as they thought after meeting the man-eating monsters. There would be more dangers as they travelled south, and thus everyone nodded in embarrassed agreement after Gene made his suggestion.

Momentarily speechless, the crew started organizing their things. They planned to bring back this time's pickings back to the Academy and not continue adventuring south.

But just as everyone was prepared to leave, a desolate cry suddenly came from the south. The crew had packed and were about to leave, but were all gobsmacked after hearing this sound. Expressions of greed surfaced shortly afterwards.

Chapter 38: Another coolie

“It’s the hooting calls of a Frost Eagle. They’re solitary magical creatures... We’ve already hunted one down before, why not leave after killing this one?” An expression of joy appeared on Gene’s face as he gazed at everyone and asked.

The creature core of a Frost Eagle was at level 4, and was worth a lot more than a Windblade Wolf’s. Although everyone had expended quite a bit of effort to hunt the first one down, that meant they were now more experienced in dealing with Frost Eagles. Everyone blanked after Gene’s words, after which Fanny looked at Han Shuo and asked, “Bryan, what do you think?”

“A large sum of resources is in front of us. I think we should take it!” Han Shuo scratched his head and smiled honestly.

“Then alright, everyone make your preparations. We will return to the Academy after we’ve taken the Frost Eagle core. If our necromancy major can obtain two level four magical creature cores during this outing, then the other majors will not dare to look down on us.” Fanny nodded and instructed everyone to move out.

When the band heard her words, it was like they’d recalled the outrages they’d suffered before. Each person started moving angrily, following in Han Shuo and Fanny’s footsteps towards the direction of the Frost Eagle’s call.

Han Shuo walked in front, just like a leader, and everyone else wore a ‘naturally’ expression. No one had any opinions otherwise, and subconsciously, they themselves had all started to change the way they thought about Han Shuo.

By now, no one dared to treat Han Shuo as an errand slave that they could bully at their leisure. Their gazes towards Han Shuo subtly held a few more hints of respect and fear.

The band of people rushed along their way, following the Frost Eagle’s cries. They arrived at the Frost Eagle’s location after a while, but were shocked by the scene that came into view.

Under the pure and bright moonlight, the band saw a tall, strapping, and handsome youth with tousled silver hair, wielding a longsword to battle the Frost Eagle in the sky.

He wore a simple paladin's robe and his shoulders, chest, and stomach were covered with armor that sparkled with silver light. His clothes and appearance made him out to be a knight. As he wove the longsword in his hand, beams of milky-white light flashed glaringly, causing the Frost Eagle circling overhead to continuously caw out when it was struck.

"Oh my gosh, a milky-white fighting aura... he's an earth rider knight! Ooh.. he's so handsome!" Bella squealed and locked her eyes firmly on the body of this earth rider knight. A boy crazy look rose to her face.

Several other female students next to her also revealed mesmerized expressions, their eyes shining as they gazed at the earth rider, who easily handled the Frost Eagle.

Han Shuo creased his brow, also surprised by the earth rider's strength. The last time Han Shuo and the band of 12 had confronted a Frost Eagle, they had found it extremely difficult and had expended monumental effort before finally killing the Frost Eagle. This earth rider not only was not having difficulties, but was handling it with ease. The Frost Eagle emitted continuous low keens after the white fighting aura was projected.

A beam of white fighting aura shakily rose upwards until it pointed straight at the heavily injured Frost Eagle. The Frost Eagle seemed to have perceived the danger as it flapped its wings in preparation to leave.

The earth rider's body had been standing on the floor until this moment, where it abruptly flew through the air in an accelerated jump. The long sword slashed past the Frost Eagle's belly as a wailing bird call sounded once more. The Frost Eagle wobbled in a listless, downward fall.

"That was amazing!" Bella's eyes gleamed as she giggled with infatuation.

The earth rider walked up to the body of the Frost Eagle, made a flicking motion with his long sword and removed the Frost Eagle core. He then wore a faint smile as he took large strides towards Han Shuo and co. He swept his eyes across the band and then bowed urbanely, “Knight Clark greets these noble mages.”

“Hello Clark. You’re so strong! You killed a Frost Eagle all by yourself, you’re so amazing!” Bella laughed modestly and spoke gently, as if she was a completely different person.

Except, that Clark’s gaze didn’t rest on Bella, but stared at Fanny instead, as if waiting for Fanny’s response. This caused Bella to feel a bit awkward.

“We’re students and teachers at the Babylon Academy of Magic and Force. We ventured out to the Dark Forest for training this time, it’s very nice to meet you Clark.” Fanny’s expression didn’t change as she too slightly inclined her body and smiled in response.

“I see... I’m also here to train in the Dark Forest. The magical creatures here are very strong and very suitable for increasing strength. I didn’t think I’d run into everyone, heh.” Clark smiled faintly as he looked at Fanny. There was a strange smell in the look that made Han Shuo slightly ill at ease.

“Master Fanny, the Frost Eagle has been killed by him, I think we should go back now.” Han Shuo looked at Clark for a few moments and understood why he would feel uncomfortable about Clark’s gaze. It turns out that Clark’s gaze was a bit similar to Gene’s. Although he didn’t take it to the level that Gene took it to, but this already subtly explained a question – this Clark seemed to be interested in Fanny’s good looks.

“Yes Yes, Master Fanny, it’s getting more dangerous. For the sake of student’s safety, we should head back to the Academy.” Gene seemed to have also noticed the threat as his gaze towards Clark wasn’t too friendly. He immediately seconded Han Shuo’s suggestion.

Fanny nodded upon hearing Han Shuo and Gene’s words and was about to agree when Clark suddenly said with a smile, “If the noble mages wouldn’t mind, I can join your group and accompany you. I think there’s a mutual benefit if we walk together, and a corresponding decrease in danger. I wonder if everyone is amenable to this suggestion?"

"Yes, if a earth rider knight is with us, then our haul this time will surely eclipse the light major's." Bella's face lit up in joy and she abruptly cut in without waiting for Fanny's approval.

Some of the other female students hastened to agree after Bella had spoken, only Lisa was unmoved as she stared at Han Shuo in odd consideration. A few of the male students hadn't spoken. They didn't seem to care.

After Clark's words and Bella's unison, Fanny started to waver in her original intention to leave. She had felt particularly tempted when Bella had said their haul would eclipse the light major's haul.

Don't agree, don't agree. He's smiling, but he's not a good thing. This kid obviously has bad intentions, don't agree to travel with him. Han Shuo looked at Fanny and repeated in his mind.

"Alright, then we'll have to impose on you. We're a band of mages, so it will surely be of great help if such a strong earth rider like you were to join us." Fanny hesitated for a while and finally agreed.

Han Shuo was exceedingly disappointed, but didn't display it on his face. He exclaimed in astonishment instead and say, "Aiya, we came in pursuit of the Frost Eagle, but you had already killed it. Ai, the level 4 core from a magical creature, gone just like that."

Clark's face wore a bewildered expression after hearing Han Shuo's words and he looked at Han Shuo with some confusion. He asked, "You were the ones originally pursuing this Frost Eagle?"

Nodding his head firmly, Han Shuo said with a wistful expression, "Ah yes, but we hadn't thought that you'd kill it."

Fanny was a bit dumbfounded upon hearing Han Shuo's words and glared ferociously at him. Just as she was about to explain that this wasn't the case, Clark hesitated, and then took out the Frost Eagle core with some heartache. He forced out a smile and offered it to Fanny, saying, "I see. Since this is the case, then I return it to you. Master Fanny, you must accept it.”

“Accept, we’ll absolutely accept!” Han Shuo smiled as he approached and had already taken the core from Clark’s hands before Fanny had responded. He handed it over to Lisa, who was standing beside him, and said merrily, “Heh heh. Clark the knight is such a good person. He’s given us a level 4 core so readily. I think he’ll be even more straightforward in the trials to come.”

Lisa’s two eyes shot out light as she also merrily, unapologetically put the core away. She nodded at Han Shuo with praise and surreptitiously stuck up her thumb up in a compliment.

Fanny was going to explain, but found that the core had disappeared into Lisa’s pocket in the blink of an eye. She involuntarily revealed an expression that was neither able to laugh or cry, rolled her eyes at Han Shuo and Lisa after she shook her head, but didn’t say anything else.

A level 4 core was equivalent to one hundred gold coins. One hundred gold coins wasn’t a small sum to even an ordinary small noble. No wonder Clark was feeling the pain a bit after Han Shuo had so easily taken it from his hands.

“Master Fanny, now that we’ve been joined by the noble and generous earth rider, I think we can continue south. There are certainly even stronger magical creatures there. If we have obtain a level 3 magical creature core, then we can surely strut with pride in the Academy after this outing.” Han Shuo slightly spurred Fanny on, thinking if Clark dares look twice at my woman, then he has to provide some free labor at the very least. It would be a pity to not use the earth rider.

Fanny’s spirits were recollected upon hearing the ability to strut with pride within the Academy. She nodded and smiled charmingly, “Alright, then we continue further on south. Noble knight Clark, we’ll have to trouble you to take care of us later on.”

Clark bowed humbly and smiled politely, “Not a problem at all, I’m happy to be of service.”

Since you insist on staying, see if I don’t play you to death. Han Shuo was exceedingly unhappy with Clark's actions and his thoughts raced furiously in consideration of several evil schemes.

Chapter 39: Making fun of the earth rider

The next day.

With the addition of Clark, the band continued their journey south in the Dark Forest. Due to Clark's involvement, it became much easier to handle the various magical creatures along the way.

Clark purposefully showed off his skills in front of Fanny, and it was thanks to his great assistance that two Windblade Wolves and one Frost Eagle were easily taken care of along the journey.

Whenever a magical creature was killed, Han Shuo would swiftly appear and immediately remove the creature core. He would then naturally hand it over to Lisa for safekeeping, absolutely treating it as if it was his side's spoils of war. Even the Windblade Wolf pelts weren't left behind for Clark.

Clark wanted to win Fanny's favor, and thus although his heart bled inside, he still forced a smile, played along with Han Shuo's actions, and didn't fight for the magical creature cores.

The crew raised a bonfire at dusk and it the duty of grilling meat fell onto Han Shuo again. Clark intentionally stayed with Fanny and wittily conversed with her. Off to the side, Gene eyed Clark and would repeatedly butt in and use words to ostracize Clark.

The other students all separated to either rest, laugh and chat, or silently organize their belongings. Only Lisa stayed beside Han Shuo, watching him flip the pieces of meat with ease.

"Bryan, I've discovered that you're becoming more of a villain, and that you're very different from before!" Lisa was holding a bright-red, wooden stick in her hands as she stirred the bonfire carelessly. Her bright eyes landed on Han Shuo's body as she spoke.

Han Shuo flicked a glance at Lisa before responding faintly, "Is that so? I'm feel fine...I just felt that I was living too hopelessly and stupidly before and wanted to change myself. Is there anything wrong with that?"

Lisa shook her head and said, “No no. I just feel that you’re different from before. I don’t know how to describe what is exactly going on. Maybe it is because I cast the Agony of the soul on you and made things the way they are.”

Laughing involuntarily, Han Shuo thought that he wasn’t Bryan at all and thus it had nothing to do with the Agony of the Soul. Whether it was Lisa, Fanny, or even the other students and teachers, it was quite funny that they all thought the Agony of the Soul was the reason behind his changes.

“Are my changes not good?”

“Very good, you’re much better than how you were before. I was really angry to see you so cowardly and timid before, so I was mean to you in hopes that you’d shape up, but you always accepted whatever life threw your way, and wouldn’t resist no matter who bullied you. I felt that you were quite pitiful then and that living was quite painful for you. It would’ve been better if you died. I actually used the Agony of the Soul on you because I didn’t want to see you living so pitifully anymore.” Lisa thought for a moment and then looked at Han Shuo.

A frown creasing his brow, Han Shuo looked at Lisa, perplexed. He asked, “Is this to say that you were helping me out of the goodness of your heart when you used the Agony of the Soul on me?”

“Of course!” Lisa’s neck raised as she explained, “Although I grabbed you for magic practice before, I treated you a lot better than the other students did, but you were disappointing and lived out your days so hopelessly. I couldn’t bear it anymore and wanted to set you free from this life. Look at you now, you’ve changed so much that I hardly recognize you.

Shaking his head, Han Shuo didn’t say anything more, but somewhat approved of Lisa’s methods within his heart. The pitiful Bryan really did live life so hopelessly and he’d long since wanted to kill himself but just lacked the courage to do so. Han Shuo, however, was still unable to forgive Lisa for helping people end their lives.

“Bry... Bryan. I think we can grill our own meat and don’t have to impose on you.” At this moment, Bach, Bella, and a few others walked over from afar and looked at Han Shuo with a bit of fright as they spoke.

In these days, Han Shuo grilled out exceedingly delicious meat for Lisa, Fanny, Amy, and co. and horrendously gross meat for Bach, Bella, and a few others. After a few days of torture, Bach, Bella, and co. had already suffered from a few days of diarrhea.

They had been cursing and complaining at Han Shuo, but after experiencing Han Shuo’s berserk performance yesterday, these people didn’t even dare to complain and curse at him. They were afraid that Han Shuo would suddenly lose his mind again.

Now, they were truly a bit afraid of Han Shuo.

Smiling dumbly, Han Shuo said with some embarrassment. “How can this be done? I’m an errand slave for the necromancy major and preparing food is one of my jobs. It wouldn’t be that appropriate for your noble and delicate selves to do such tasks, would it?”

“Appropriate, absolutely appropriate! Since we’re out training, we should try everything once. Not to mention you saved our lives yesterday. We shouldn’t let you continue to take on that many missions... Wouldn’t you agree Bach?” Bella forcefully laughed as she spoke.

“Indeed, we should grill our own food and not rely on you for everything!” Bach’s stomach had suffered for a few days already, and he knew that if he were to eat Han Shuo’s grilled meat again, it would definitely be half raw and half cooked. He hurriedly fawned with a small smile, paused and opened his mouth. “Bryan, I was in the wrong before. Please don’t hold a grudge against me. If you hate me and come find me when you suddenly go cr-er, suddenly lose your rationality, then I would be screwed!”

“Alright, since you all are so kindhearted, then I thank you. Come, you guys grill the meat, I hope you have a great time.” Han Shuo felt damn good inside as he stood up with an honest smile. He took a few of the cooked meats, gave a huge piece to Lisa, who’d been eyeing them for a while, and walked the rest of the meat to Fanny.

The tempting smell of meat slowly spread out. Fanny had been listening to Clark and Gene put down each other with an impatient expression on her face when her eyes suddenly lit up and her tongue darted out to moisten her lips. A charming smile appeared on her lips.

“Master Fanny, Master Gene, um... and Sir Clark the knight, these are your grilled meats!” Han Shuo laughed lightly and handed over the meat to the three people.

“Ooh ooh... blech! Bryan, how come today’s wasn’t fully cooked, this is too gross!” Fanny suddenly squealed and spat out the piece of grilled meat she’d eaten.

This time, because of Fanny’s poor eyesight and the fact that Han Shuo hadn’t given her the meat individually, plus the fact that she was in a rush to eat, she’d already eaten one of the pieces that Han Shuo had prepared for Gene and Clark before he’d had a chance to remind her.

“Eh... Master Fanny, that one’s not yours, this one is!” Han Shuo didn’t know whether to laugh or cry as he thought you were seriously in a bit too much of a hurry.

He then quickly handed over the piece of meat that he’d painstakingly prepared, seized the half-raw, half-cooked piece from her hand and drew out a dagger to cut off the piece that she’d bit off. He smiled merrily as he handed it over to Clark, saying with some embarrassment, “Noble Sir Clark, this piece is yours. My cooking skills aren’t quite up to par, and although Master Fanny’s already taken a bite, I hope you don’t mind?”

Clark said, “Eh... I’ll just eat bread.”

“Now how can this be allowed, bread won’t increase body strength and you’re a knight who really needs a lot of body strength. You must eat lots of meat. Are you disgusted with Bryan’s lack of cooking skills or because Master Fanny has already taken a bite?” Gene had long since known that those who weren’t nice to Bryan would suffer greatly when eating something he’d prepared. Gene was laughing gloatingly on the inside while trying to convince Clark with a righteous and dignified expression on his face.

“No, I didn’t mean it that way. Just that, just that...” Clark had a face of resignation as he spread his hands out awkwardly. He shook his head but didn’t know how to explain himself. He had seen Fanny take one bite and spit it back out, and naturally knew that that piece of meat wasn’t very tasty.

“As a noble knight, sir Clark must not wish to eat something that others have bitten before. I understand. Master Gene, how about you take this piece?” Han Shuo had an expression of I-gotchu-man as he first insinuated that Clark was disdaining Fanny, and then passed on the hot potato to Gene.

Gene started to panic after Han Shuo’s words. He laughed shamefacedly and said, “No, absolutely not. How could I take something from sir Clark? Besides, this piece is mine, I’ll go off and eat it now.”

Vague traces of sweat apparent on his brow, Gene spoke frantically and hastily took the other piece of meat that was likewise half-cooked and half-raw. He headed towards Bach and Bella’s direction as if he was escaping, obviously intending to recook the meat.

“Master Gene is such a humble person! Looks like this piece of meat is still yours to dispose of!” Han Shuo smiled dumbly and planned to forcefully give that piece of meat to Clark.

Clark had a pathetic expression on his face as he smiled with a wry smile, and then suddenly spoke as if he’d abruptly remembered something. “I forgot something, please excuse me.”

Clark made like Gene as soon as he’d finished speaking and left like he was escaping something. He had disappeared without a trace in the blink of an eye.

“Bryan, you’ve become more and more naughty. No wonder Gene and Bach have been plagued with diarrhea the past couple of days. You were behind it weren’t you?” Fanny found it both maddening and funny as she glared at Han Shuo and lectured him.

“You’ve only realized it now Master Fanny? Bryan truly is different from how he was before, and has become naughtier than all the other students.” Lisa chuckled lightly and then looked at Fanny oddly. “Right, Master Fanny you obviously know that Bryan is purposefully pranking them, why don’t you stop him?”

“That’s because I also feel that Clark and Gene are too irritating. They hover around me and chatter incessantly, keeping up a constant racket and drag me into it. It’s such a bore, but Clark has helped us out a lot and is truly a good person!” Fanny gave an evil laugh as she explained to Lisa.

Han Shuo gloated inwardly when he heard the first part of Fanny’s words, but that gave way to anger when he heard Fanny say Clark was a good person.

“So that’s the case, hehe. Master Fanny, I know of a spacious pool of water nearby. Its waters are clear, bright and clean. We haven’t bathed or showered in quite a few days, shall we go for a swim later tonight?”

“Lisa, you didn’t like to swim before. How come you’re suddenly liking swimming these days?”

“Eh... because swimming works out the body!” Lisa’s delicate face reddened at Fanny’s question and she responded quickly after turning her head to look at Han Shuo.

Han Shuo’s face wore an odd expression, thinking to himself that although Lisa had seemed indifferent on the surface when he told her about the way to develop her breasts last time, she had taken action secretly. He found it funny, and his understanding of the female mind deepened further.

Chapter 40: To think that you were this kind of person

It was night. The moonlight was cold and clear as it scattered within the vast and boundless Dark Forest. The bright, silver moonlight added a few traces of silence and and comfort to the Dark Forest.

Several crude and simple tents were respectively erected on the soft grass. After experiencing a day's worth of labors, the students were tired, holding murmured conversations or meditating. Han Shuo surreptitiously hid behind a towering tree as he chanted an incantation.

A beam of light flashed through thin air as a small skeleton, holding a bone dagger, abruptly materialized. Under Han Shuo's guidance, it flew soundlessly towards the tent Clark was residing in.

Clark's tent was pitched a bit of a distance away from the students. Although he appeared humble and genteel on the surface, apart from being friendly and genuine with Fanny, his gaze towards the students held a subtle undercurrent of lofty disdain. His tent was also completely different from other people's and was a distance away by himself.

The little skeleton was agile and its inky-black form melded with the darkness. It didn't make a single whisper of a sound as it walked, and had arrived at Clark's tent within roughly ten seconds. The little skeleton slipped inside Clark's tent after Han Shuo's command.

A low grunt of pain sounded as Clark's tent spontaneously collapsed. The little skeleton figure abruptly dashed out and it fled quickly to the southwest.

After a cry of pain, Clark flew out of his tent in a bedraggled state. He held his longsword in his hand as he gazed around in all four corners, then huffed angrily as it followed in the direction that the little skeleton had taken, muttering strings of low-voiced curses.

Success! Han Shuo laughed silently.

Han Shuo cackled evilly as he closely followed in Clark's footsteps.

Hidden in the shadows, he wove quickly around the corners of the trees.

Southwest direction, a spacious pool of water. Strange, curved trees lined the banks. Beneath the light of the bright moon, the clear currents of the pool sparkled with silver color.

Continuous splashing sounds along with the sounds of laughter came from the surface of the pool, breathing in a few hints of life into the silent pool.

“Lisa, have you started developing? Your breasts seem to have changed lately?”

“Hehe, Master Fanny, let me tell you something. Swimming can actually enlarge breasts. I only discovered this secret after trying it.”

“Really?” Fanny exclaimed in astonishment and then laughed involuntary. “No wonder, I was wondering why you suddenly became infatuated with swimming lately. So this is the reason why. Heh heh, then we should swim longer today.”

“Master Fanny, your breasts are already so well developed... Why would you still care about this matter?”

“Heh, of course. No woman wouldn’t care about this.”

“I see. Hehe, apart from swimming, drinking milk, and massaging during showers can all help breasts become firm and perky. This has been my experience! I’ve been doing this lately and can really feel the changes in my breasts. Master Fanny, you can try too!”

“Ah, Lisa you seem to understand quite a lot now, but your breasts have actually been changing recently, it looks like your methods are effective.”

“But of course. Hehe, you can’t go wrong listening to me.” Lisa laughed a light, proud laugh as she spoke to Fanny.

At this moment, the sound of footsteps abruptly sounded in the distance. Fanny and Lisa looked at each other and Fanny frowned. “What is that noise?”

Lisa has ducked into the water so that only her head was showing and was equally perplexed. She shook her head and said, “I don’t know, I discovered this area while I was collected firewood earlier today. No one else should know of this place.”

Fanny and Lisa were a bit surprised and about to leave when the footsteps grew nearer, and a heavily sweating Clark burst into view along the pool’s edge. He looked to and fro, surveying the vicinity.

When Clark saw Fanny and Lisa in the pool, all three exclaimed in shock at the same time. Lisa was utterly discomfited and hastily hid her body in the pool, pointing a frantic finger at Clark and speaking angrily, “Damnit, how could you commit an act like voyeurism as a noble knight!? You’re disgusting.”

“No, this isn’t what you think. I found this place because I was tracking a monster.” Clark was extremely upset and rushed to explain.

“Leave immediately! Clark, you have disappointed me greatly. To think that you were this kind of person!” Fanny also had a wrathful expression as her facial expression and tone turned frosty.

“Master Fanny, I really didn’t mean to come here to peep. Please let me explain.” Clark was sweating profusely as he too hadn’t thought that he would bump into Fanny and Lisa swimming here. He thought it was a bit odd and hastened to explain.

“Leave, immediately!” Fanny and Lisa gasped and screamed in unison as Clark was hurriedly explaining.

A resigned and wry smile on his face, Clark sighed and slightly bowed at the two from afar. He said apologetically, “My apologies to you both. I will leave immediately. I hope you don’t think that badly of me, I really didn’t mean to.”

Clark had a downcast expression and left with a dejected droop to his shoulders when he finished speaking. A round of complaints flew out of his mouth as he sighed and moaned that his luck was just too bad.

Han Shuo’s surreptitious figure materialized from the shadows of the tree after Clark had left, and he stuck up his middle finger to the figure walking away into the distance. He cackled as he said in a low voice, "Trying to steal my woman. Go to hell noble knight!"

"It turns out that noble knights also have disgusting hobbies." Lisa was still infuriated and she snorted slightly with a face full of disdain.

"Men are all the same, noble knights are like this, lowly errand slaves are also like this. Only some know how to conceal it and others don't." Fanny also snorted lightly and said with some emotion.

"Errand slaves? Master Fanny, are you talking about Bryan?" Lisa was startled and then seemed to think of something as she stared at Fanny oddly.

"Eh... no, no. I was just sighing, purely sighing. Heh heh, Lisa don't imagine things." Fanny was internally startled that she had spilled the beans, and hastily laughed in embarrassment as a cover up after Lisa's question.

But Lisa's face was still full of suspicion after Fanny's explanation, and her gaze towards Fanny was also a bit strange. She kept murmuring, "Can it really be Bryan?"

Han Shuo had been concealed in the shadow of the trees and watching the two lecherously when he heard their words. His heart jumped, but before he had time to reflect, his eyes suddenly grew wide and his entire being speechless and dumbfounded.

Fanny had slowly started walking towards the edge of the pool at this time, and the body that had been obscured within the pool started to slowly emerge. The clear, bright moonlight scattered over Fanny's flawless body. Crystalline drops of water on her pure, white skin were like rolling gems beneath the moonlight, lightly traveling past her satin-like body.

Her upper body, as revealed beneath the moon's light, was so beautiful that it made Han Shuo dizzy. Her breasts were full and upright, with two mesmerizing spots of blush at the peaks. There wasn't an ounce of fat on her tightly toned lower body, and her slender arms were as tender as the snow lotus. A head full of beautiful, light-purple locks were scattered messily over her smooth shoulders. She displayed a soul and heart stealing allure.

The rest of her lower body was immersed in the water starting from her lower abdomen, but under the light of the moon, Han Shuo could still make out sparkling white legs beneath the clear pool waters.

This was the first time that Han Shuo had seen a naked girl, and such an extraordinary beauty at that. Fanny's transcendent beauty and perfect figure under the moonlight, with water droplets slowly rolling off of it, caused Han Shuo to become utterly gobsmacked. His entire being immediately sank into a sluggish state.

A strange sound suddenly traveled into Han Shuo's ears, and his dumbly staring self suddenly startled awake and started surveying the area.

A loud, panicked scream emitted from Lisa's mouth. Lisa was still in the deep waters of the pond and was pointing fearfully behind her. She screamed hoarsely, "Master... Master Fanny, Deepwater Venom Python!"

Fanny blanked and turned her head to discover a light-green, spiked back ridge, a five or six meter long enormous python was quickly swimming in from the far reaches of the pool. A savage and merciless light was flashing in the python's dark green eyes, and its heavily fanged mouth spat out dark green smoke as it quickly approached Lisa.

"Run Lisa! Hurry and run!" Fanny's expression had also changed drastically and she screamed frantically.

But Lisa had been terror struck. Her originally fast moving figure had slowed down considerably due to the arrival of the Deepwater Venom Python, despite her arms and legs making splashes on the water surface.

"Master Fanny, wah wah... save me!" Lisa's voice was choked up as she screamed in a panicked frenzy. Her arms and legs moved in unison in a bid to reach the pool banks faster, but the Deepwater Venom Python drew ever closer to her.

"Damnit, where is that Clark now?!" Fanny cursed out of character for her, and her perfect body started back, making for Lisa's direction.

At this moment, Han Shuo had completely recollected himself and gazed at the Deepwater Venom Python that continued to get closer. He hesitated, and then abruptly dashed out of the tree's shadows. He called loudly, "What's going on. Eh? Deepwater Venom Python, let me help you."

The Deepwater Venom Python was a level three magical creature. Not only did its body possess strong attack power, but its mouth could also spit out a poison mist, not to mention its speed and advantages had all been greatly increased because it was still in the water.

A level four Frost Eagle could only be brought down with herculean effort from everyone. This level three Deepwater Venom Python would be even harder to handle. Even Han Shuo didn't feel completely confident, but he couldn't just stand by and watch Fanny be eaten. He had to rush out even in the face of death.

"Damnit, screw it!" Han Shuo pulled out a dagger and his body flashed like lightning through the dark forest as he rushed towards the pool of water.

Chapter 41: Battling the Deepwater Venom Python

Within the pool, the Deepwater Venom Python caused huge waves and ripples as it swam towards Lisa with a terrifying aura. It became harder for Lisa to escape the more frenetic she got, and the distance between the two had already shortened to twenty or so meters.

Fanny had already reached the banks of the pool when she pay no heed to anything as she splashed through the water, rushing quickly towards Lisa like a mermaid. Han Shuo's speed was even faster. It was like he met no resisting drag in the water as he sped towards Fanny like lightning.

All of Han Shuo's bodily functions had far surpassed an ordinary person's since he started practicing magic. When Han Shuo gave it his all, he immediately demonstrated an incredible energy. He had already arrived when Fanny was approaching Lisa.

He reached out with both hands without further ado, grabbing Lisa with one and Fanny's waist with the other as he quickly said, "Let's go."

He had no time or spare thought to feel the smooth tenderness of Lisa and Fanny's bodies at the moment. His only thought under the panicked circumstances was to quickly vacate the area. His two legs quickly moved through the water like swimming fish. Add to that Fanny's forceful arms and legs, and the three entwined around each other and swam for the banks of the pool, regardless of anything else.

Except, if it's only been Han Shuo, he may have really been able to shake off the pursuit from the Deepwater Venom Python. But his speed was greatly affected by the addition of Fanny and Lisa, and it was hard to resume his prior speed. They could only watch as the Deepwater Venom Python grew closer.

Lisa's screams and sobs hadn't stopped for a moment. Even Fanny was powerless in this moment, and her face was filled with shock and desperation.

In the pool, even summoning dark creatures to do battle wouldn't be much use. The level three Deepwater Venom Python had uncommonly thick snake skin. Any ordinary necromancy magic would be unable to stop it. They wouldn't be able to kill the Deepwater Venom Python with one stroke if they stopped to chant a spell, and they were sure to be tangled up by it and then be eaten without a doubt.

"Wah wah.... what to do, what to do. Are we going to be eaten by it?" Lisa sobbed frantically as her two hands slapped the surface of the water with decreasing strength.

Fanny also didn't know what to do, and could just watch the Deepwater Venom Python approach ever closer. She couldn't find a way to hide or escape and could only swim death defyingly.

A resolute expression appeared on Han Shuo's face after a moment of hesitation. He grabbed Lisa's right arm and swung her out with all his strength. Lisa's naked, charming body shot out from the water and flew three meters through the air, straight for the banks of the pool.

The left hand that had been wrapped around Fanny's waist suddenly pressed down on her beautiful buttocks. Han Shuo had already pushed out forcefully before she had a chance to scream, and he gave the fast swimming Fanny a hand. Her speed abruptly picked up as she shot towards to the banks like a spear.

"Hurry and go!" Han Shuo roared explosively and quickly turned his head around, facing down the Deepwater Venom Python alone.

"Bryan, Master Fanny, you have to save Bryan!" Lisa's desolate cry of astonishment sounded out from afar.

"Hurry and go on shore Lisa. Only then can we help Bryan!"

The look Han Shuo's face was cold and harsh at this point. He tightly clenched the dagger in his hands and could only watch as the Deepwater Venom Python started tangling around him.

Surprisingly, Han Shuo didn't retreat, but moved forward instead. He actually dashed out quickly before the Deepwater Venom Python's tail had tangled him, and made for the Python's head.

Han Shuo knew that as fast as he could swim in the pool, he would still be unable to race against the Deepwater Venom Python. Now that it was tightly against him, wanting to pay attention to nothing else and just seek to escape would be a death sentence. The Python's skin and flesh were durable and strong, with soft skin and flesh only around its neck. Close combat was the only way to get out of this alive.

The Deepwater Venom Python most likely didn't anticipate Han Shuo would attack rather than run, and so when the enormous tail came to tangle him, it only swung around in a rather large arc but didn't touch Han Shuo.

The dark green eyes flashed as the Python seemed to jeer at Han Shuo's ignorance. A mist of dark green smoke sprayed out directly towards Han Shuo from its heavily fanged, bloodthirsty mouth as it lifted its neck.

"Bryan, be careful of the smoke it sprays. The smoke has a slow paralysis toxin and will cause your body to stiffen up, and finally become immobile." Fanny called out loudly at this moment to remind Han Shuo to be careful of the dark green poison mist that the Python was spitting out.

Han Shuo startled in horrified shock as his quickly moving body held a breath and hastily dived into the waters. He used the pool's clear waters to discern where the Python was and rushed in that direction.

Avoiding a swing of the Python's tail again halfway through, Han Shuo directly traveled to the area beneath the Python's neck. Han Shuo's body and the dagger in his hand thrust out through the water at the same time, and the dagger shone with a cold light as it traced a silver line through the moonlit sky, stabbing fiercely towards the soft flesh in the Python's neck.

The dagger sank up to the hilt with a puncturing sound and blood splurged out afterwards. It was accompanied by a ghastly wail from the Deepwater Venom Python as it twisted its neck. Its enormous body started twisting and turning crazily as well.

Han Shuo was taken aback and quickly yanked out the dagger, pressing down his right palm onto its neck. The red flame of the "Mystical Glacial Spellfire” flashed once and it landed into the Python’s neck in the blink of an eye.

The Python became even more berserk after being attacked by the “Glacial Mystical Spellfire”, and it’s desolate wails rang continuously. A ball of dark green smoke had started spreading towards Han Shou before he had time to react.

Strands of strange air substance filtered into Han Shuo’s body through his pores. He felt his entire body suddenly go weak and numb, and even the dagger became as heavy as a thousand tons.

“Oh my gosh, Bryan’s been hit by the poison mist. What should we do Master Fanny, what should we do?” Lisa had already reached the shores of the pool when she saw Han Shuo get sprayed. She called out loudly in great haste.

The sound of Fanny chanting a spell suddenly rang out at this time. “Oh endless darkness, turn into destructive bone spears, and destroy according to my will, bone spears!” Three cuttngly sharp bone spears materialized out of thin air and sped, with a whooshing sound, towards the Python thrashing madly within the pool.

Fanny’s bone spears spell was indeed uncommon. The three bone spears all hit their target, with two of them embedding themselves into the Python’s forehead, causing two flowers of blood to blossom. The last spear landed in the Python’s mouth, a horrifyingly fanged mouth that had been about to swallow Han Shuo. The spear broke off a few of its sharp teeth, causing the Python’s enormous mouth to rear backwards.

At this moment, the magical yuan within Han Shuo’s body churned madly, and the sore, numbing feeling vanished immediately without a trace wherever the magical yuan circulated to. Previously leaden and lethargic, Han Shuo regained his energy and quickly moved next to the Python after its head was rearing from Fanny’s bone spears. The dagger in his hand stabbed downwards twice like lightning, and then he swam like the devil was behind him and made for the shore.

The Deepwater Venom Python suddenly gave a miserable, mournful roar as it roiled the waters of the pool so that waves and froth formed. When its head appeared again, Fanny and Lisa could see that its two dark green pupils were all leaking viscous, fresh blood.

“Oh my gosh! Bryan can still move, and he’s blinded the Deepwater Venom Python! Ahahaha!” Lisa was hollering and hopping up on the shore, with the panic and whimpering of the previous second miraculously turning into excited squeals.

However, due to the Python’s wild frenzy, its enormous tail thrashed chaotically and just so happened to whip Han Shuo. Han Shuo had been moving quickly when his body flew through the air towards the shore after he’d been hit.

At the same time, Fanny continuously cast necromancy magic, aiming for the weak spots of the Python’s beautiful eyes and neck areas. Having lost its vision, the Python was hard pressed to evade Fanny’s attacks. The vicious wound on its neck and its eyes were repeatedly pierced by the bone spears and it raised an increasingly loud uproar within the pool. But judging from its appearance, it was steadily losing its strength.

Under its berserk frenzy, the Python didn’t seem to realize that it should escape at this moment, but rather followed the sounds and drew closer to the shore, as if wishing to eat its attackers regardless of all costs. But as its wounds grew bigger, the frenetic Deepwater Venom Python became drained of its vigor and lost its luster.

The Python finally fell down listlessly, and Han Shuo’s body slowly floated up to the surface of the water for the first time after he’d fallen in. The clothing around his chest and stomach had ripped apart in many places, and his right cheek was a fiery red. He’d seemed to have been injured by the Python’s tail whip.

Lisa had been shouting excitedly and Fanny had been continuously casting magic when they both exclaimed in shock and abruptly swam towards the center of the pool, paying no heed to the naked state of their bodies.

The two moved quickly and hastily pulled Han Shuo up onto shore. Han Shuo's lower abdomen was distended and his cheeks puffed out with water leaking out the sides of his mouth. It'd seemed that he drank quite a bit of the pool.

Fanny knew a thing or two about rescue measures and immediately placed both of her slender, jade hands onto Han Shuo's chest. She repeatedly exerted force and compressed downwards, seeking to expel the pool water that Han Shuo had swallowed. Lisa did the same and large mouthfuls of pool water were expelled from Han Shuo's mouth under their combined efforts.

"Why isn't Bryan waking up yet?" Lisa's face was anxious after a while and she looked at Han Shuo with worry.

"Maybe because he's drank too much water, and the area around his throat is already blocked. Why don't you try to breathe for him?" Fanny looked at Lisa and made this proposal after a bit of thought.

Lisa blushed and glanced at Fanny, "Master Fanny, I don't really know how, why don't you do it?"

Fanny halted for a moment and creased her brow with thought. She grit her teeth with resolution and said, "Bryan saved our lives. Forget it, I'll try for him."

Fanny bent down as soon as she'd finished talking and, her charming cheeks a path of charming, embarrassed red, moved her delicious, red lips towards Han Shuo.

Han Shuo had actually woken up a long time ago and patiently held his peace until this moment. His heart thumping loudly and even feeling Fanny's smooth and tender arms on his chest, Han Shuo's heart was mad with glee.

A wisp of light fragrance accompanied the creamy sensation, reflecting directly into Han Shuo's mind. Fanny's sweet-smelling tongue darted out to separate Han Shuo's teeth as the two noses touched and lips locked firmly together. Fanny started helping Han Shuo breathe.

A marvelous, soul stealing feeling immediately spread through Han

Shuo's entire nervous system. Han Shuo only felt that this time's adventure had finally been worth the while and was completely unwilling to wake up. He carefully savored this moment of incredibly wondrous sensations.

Fanny sucked in one breath, raised her head to expel it, paused and had been about to continue when her clear eyes absentmindedly took in the strange little tent that had been erected between Han Shuo's legs.

Fanny was stunned, blanked for a moment and abruptly recollected herself. She gave a high pitched scream and placed her jade hands around Han Shuo's neck, violently shaking him. She cursed loudly, utterly discomfited and exasperated, "Damnit Bryan, I'm going to kill you!"

Chapter 42: Erected a small tent

“Eh... bleargh, blech...” Han Shuo spat out mouthfuls of water as his face turned beet red. He hastily moved Fanny’s clenched hands away from neck, still not sure what was going on. He hurriedly said with a wry face, “Master Fanny, what are you doing? I’m already like this. Can’t you be more gentle?”

Han Shuo’s eyes suddenly bugged out after saying that and he stared fixedly at Fanny and Lisa in front of him. Their upper bodies were basically completely naked. The pure, snow-white expanse were revealed entirely. Fanny’s beautiful twin peaks and Lisa’s initially budding breasts were thus unabashedly utterly exposed to Han Shuo’s eyes at close quarters.

Dripping-wet, thin lingerie as thin as cicada’s wings covered the two’s most vital area on the lower body. Although he was unable to fully see through, the tantalizing, almost translucent temptation was even more fatal. Han Shuo’s brother had been about to droop down in the shock of being choked, but it now resolutely erected itself again.

“Aiya, Bryan you’re finally awake. Eh, Master Fanny, why are you treating him like this?” Off on the side, Lisa was equally perplexed and she quickly walked over.

“Look at his lower body. If he’d really fainted, why would his lower body have a reaction?” Fanny was irate and spoke to Lisa with a reddened face. She immediately retaliated by randomly pinching and twisting Han Shuo as she cursed in a low voice.

Han Shuo was immediately dumbfounded by Fanny’s words as his eyes still roved fixedly over the two bodies. Sudden brilliance struck him and he immediately argued, disregarding whether or not his logic was correct. “I was hit by the Python’s venom just now and my entire body went stiff and listless. My lower body was stiff too! How can this be my fault?”

After he’d spoken, Fanny and Lisa looked at each other and suddenly realized that they were still naked. They exclaimed in surprise and screamed shrilly.

“Shut up! Stop making excuses. I’ve never heard of anyone with a stiffened lower body after being hit by the Deepwater Venom Python poison mist. Ooh, close your eyes and don’t you dare peek! Lisa, let’s hurry and put our clothes back on before we deal with him.” Fanny humphed angrily and hurriedly vacated the scene, screaming along with Lisa.

Han Shuo immediately shut his mouth and his beady eyes quickly opened when both had turned their backs to rove greedily over Fanny’s well rounded and pert bottom.

After a moment, a fully-dressed Fanny and Lisa walked furiously over from the distance with both of their cheeks burning red. Fanny sized up Han Shuo with a darkened face, snorting coldly after a while, “Why did you appear here so coincidentally?”

“Eh... I came to collect firewood and happened to hear your screams. That’s why I appeared here to save you without paying attention to anything else. Master Fanny, I’m hurt and I didn’t mean to look at you guys. I’m stiff all over and can’t move. The Python’s tail also whipped me from my chest to my right cheek and it hurts an incredible amount right now. This was all to save you two.” Han Shuo said with a pinched face as he lay there on his back, his entire body as stiff as a wooden doll with only his mouth and pair of eyes being able to move.

“Master Fanny, although Bryan is indeed suspicious, but he’s just saved our lives and become like this because of that. Can you let him go?” Lisa looked at Han Shuo from afar and flung him a vicious eye roll when she saw that his lower body was still firmly stiff. She spat lightly and only then begged for mercy on his behalf.

“Lisa, I... I’ve been violated by him!” Fanny glared at Han Shuo and spoke hurriedly when she saw that Lisa was begging for leniency for him.

“We’re the only ones that know of this. I won’t say anything, Bryan certainly won’t say anything, so you can just pretend that nothing happened. Eh, he’s also seen my body. Although I hate him too, we can’t very well kill him! He almost lost his life because of us just now.” Lisa blanked for a moment and finally responded to Fanny wryly after thinking for a moment.

“I didn’t see anything, I didn’t see anything just now, I promise. Master Fanny please don’t kill me...” Han Shuo’s face was full of panic as his eyes moved rapidly, spitting out a string of crazy talk from his mouth.

“Shut up!” Fanny shouted irately. This expression was replaced by resignation, and she abruptly stomped her foot after thinking for a while. She gritted her teeth, “This isn’t over yet. You’re injured, so I’ll let you go for now, but I’ll settle this with you sooner or later. We have finished addressing last time’s matter when you’ve... eh. Nothing.”

Fanny suddenly realized that she’d almost let things slip halfway through. Seeing that Lisa was looking at her with a look of suspicion, she hurriedly changed to topic to cover up her slip.

“Master Fanny, you don’t mean?” Lisa looked at Fanny oddly and asked.

“No!” Fanny immediately huffily interrupted Lisa’s words, and then laughed charmingly and said gently, “Bryan kept making mischief in last time’s experiment, that’s why I said I’ll settle last time’s matter with him. Don’t think the wrong thoughts. Isn’t this right, Bryan?”

His eyes moving rapidly, Han Shuo hastened to agree, “Yes, Yes, that’s right.”

“Eh, Lisa you watch Bryan for now. The Deepwater Venom Python is already dead, I’m going to go extract the core from it. Hah, this is a level three magical creature core! We’ll be able to walk and talk proudly when we return.” Fanny was a bit afraid to continue to remain here, afraid that she would let something slip again. She hurriedly walked away like she was escaping something. She swam into the lake again, but this time she didn’t undress.

After Fanny had left, Lisa approached Han Shuo and sighed lightly, saying lowly, “Bryan, who would’ve thought that you would be so silly. I know that your death defying battle with the Python this time was all for me. I only half believed your words in the trap, but now after this event, I believe you completely. Bryan, I’m actually a bad girl and not worth your effort!”

Han Shuo, “....”

Lisa saw Han Shuo stand there dumbfounded and thought that she had correctly guessed Han Shuo’s inner thoughts. She shook her head and clenched her teeth, “Bryan, give up on me while it’s still early. We’re really not suited for each other because the gap between our status and position is simply too great. My family would never approve a relationship between us. I’m sorry Bryan!”

Han Shuo, “...”

“Bryan, what’s wrong, why aren’t you talking? Are you sad?” Lisa maintained a knowing look on her face as she spoke frantically and continued to think that she was being a heartless person.

Han Shuo didn’t know whether to laugh or cry. As he watched Lisa continue to pay no attention to anything other than herself and carry on speaking those conceited words, he really didn’t know how to respond. He finally settled for being in a daze for a while and then shouting in pain, “Stop talking!”

After he paused, Han Shuo thought Lisa had been severely frightened. He hastily sighed and spoke with a face of desolation, “I understand in my heart. I just wish to look at you from afar and won’t bring you any troubles. Liking someone means that one shouldn’t weigh her down and should wholeheartedly consider all matters for her. Lisa, you don’t have to mind, really. I will take care of myself and silently wish you the best.”

Han Shuo had heard these words from a third rate soap opera before, and he even gave himself goosebumps upon saying them. He thought he was really being a bit too sinister and shameless.

“I’ve never heard anyone say such nice things, wah wah... I’m sorry Bryan!”

Contrary to Han Shuo’s expectations, Lisa actually burst out in low sobs after she heard his words. Her tears flowed down without pause. It’d seemed that she’d been greatly moved to pieces by his words.

Fanny returned, dripping wet, from the pool at this time. When she heard Lisa crying, Fanny's face changed as she glared viciously at Han Shuo. She said, "Bryan, haven't you bullied us enough?"

"Wah wah... Master Fanny, it has nothing to do with Bryan. I was just a bit scared after recalling what had happened just now. It had nothing to do with him, really!" Lisa hastily wiped away her tears, forced a smile onto her face, and explained when she heard Fanny berate Han Shuo.

Looking at Lisa in confusion, and then looking at Han Shuo, who hadn't moved an inch and was still lying there completely frozen, Fanny snorted lightly and said, "He wouldn't dare bully you anymore."

Fanny's clothes were tightly plastered to her perfect body as she'd emerged from the lake. Although nothing could be seen, those vivacious curves were still a feast for Han Shuo's eyes. He tutted in appreciation inwardly. Fanny not only possessed beautiful and striking features, but her body was a crime of utmost temptation.

"This is a bit odd, the Deepwater Venom Python was burnt to a soggy mess from its neck to its head. I wonder what happened? It looks like this Python died so quickly, not because of my magic, but because of the burnt mess within its head, which is weird because my bone magic doesn't have the amazing effect of making someone's body burned up from the inside. What is going on Bryan?" Fanny sized up Han Shuo and asked oddly.

Laughing dryly, Han Shuo said hastily, "Who knows? I only stabbed it a few times and don't have the kind of magic or fighting aura for it to burn up from inside. It's no use looking at me."

"Is that really the case? Why do I think you're very suspicious?" Fanny frowned and her beautiful eyes sized up Han Shuo as she spoke with a voice thick with suspicion.

"Eh, whatever you want to think. I'd love to have such wonderful magic and fighting aura though, but too bad I just don't have the strength!" Han Shuo laughed loudly and said with a bit of a self deprecating tone.

The magic that he was practicing was something that shouldn't exist in this world. This was a secret that he would never tell anyone else, even under pain of death.

“Master Fanny, you must be thinking too much or saw incorrectly. Your eyes don’t work too well sometimes. Bryan just saved us, so why would he lie to us. Besides, if he was so strong, he would’ve long since stopped being an errand slave.”

“Perhaps.” Fanny smiled slightly, nodded her head and then said gleefully. “I’ve got the magical creature core. Come, we can go back to the tents now. This swim was quite thrilling, but we made out like bandits by getting our hands on a level 3 core!”

“Bryan, can you move now? Do you want me to get some of the male students to carry you back?” Lisa looked at Han Shuo and asked with some worry.

“According to my knowledge, the poison mist of the Deepwater Venom Python only temporarily paralyzes enemies in order to facilitate eating them later. It’s been so long. Bryan, you should be fine by now?” Fanny huffed angrily and rolled her eyes at Han Shuo in a bad temper, speaking with a cold expression.

Han Shuo exclaimed in surprise upon hearing her words. “Ah, that’s so true! I can move fully now. Let’s hurry and go back?”

Lisa started, then looked at Han Shuo and also spoke with a bit of anger. “Bryan, you could move a long time ago right?”

Han Shuo spoke seriously without a trace of awkwardness. “No no, I only knew I could move after I heard Master Fanny’s words. Let’s go... let’s go. They’ll be worried if we’re any later.”

He abruptly stood up after speaking without waiting for Fanny and Lisa’s responses. He walked speedily and headed straight to where the students had pitched their tents.

“Damnit, he’s definitely been pretending all along. I’ve found out by just testing him. Bryan, stop right there! You haven’t heard the end of this!” Fanny was infuriated and she chased after Han Shuo, pulling Lisa along in her wake.

Chapter 43: Reborn

Han Shuo whizzed all the way back and suddenly detected that Gene hadn't gone to bed yet when he returned to the campground. He was sitting outside his tent instead, bored to death.

"Eh, Bryan. Have you seen Fanny or Lisa?" Gene immediately stood up and asked when he heard Han Shuo's footsteps.

Nodding, Han Shuo said faintly, "I did. Master Fanny and Lisa will be back shortly. Master Gene, why haven't you gone to sleep yet?"

"Oh, because Clark suddenly left for some business. He asked me to give Fanny his apologies. Hah, that Clark left without giving a reason. How baffling."

Han Shuo's thoughts raced after hearing Gene's words, and he immediately understood that Clark must have left abruptly because he knew that he would be unable to explain his actions for bumping into and angering Fanny and Lisa at the pool.

"I see. Master Gene, I still need to collect a few things from nearby. When Master Fanny and Lisa return, please tell them that I'll return at daybreak." Han Shuo quickly headed south after he'd spoken, not paying attention to whether Gene had agreed to pass along his message or not. He vanished without a trace in the blink of an eye.

Although Han Shuo's body wasn't stiff and drained of energy, he was still feeling the effects of the Python's tail whip. His body was truly injured, and he knew that Fanny and Lisa were bound to nag him for a while when they returned. This way, he'd be unable to use his magical yuan to repair his body. He therefore decided to temporarily avoid the situation and wait until morning. Their tempers would mostly be mollified by then, and there shouldn't be anything major by that time.

There was a towering tree to the south with a thick branch heavily forested with twigs and leaves about ten meters from the ground. Han Shuo sat down Indian style and was deep in concentration, coalescing the magical yuan to repeatedly strengthen his body.

Time flew by unknowingly, and the slight aches in Han Shuo's body faded away beneath the circulation of the magical yuan. Every inch of skin, flesh, tendon, and bone in his body felt like it was filled with surging strength.

Han Shuo had sank into the passive demonic mental state when a faint sliver of pain started emanating from his mind and gradually spread throughout his entire body. A sudden onslaught of pain accompanied it, as an agony ten times stronger than that pain roared to life and caused Han Shuo to immediately cry out.

Explosive pilipala sounds rang out from within his body accompanying his pain-filled roars. Faint, murky strands of air started rising from Han Shuo's pores along with these sounds, and layers of ripples swam along the surface of his body, as if someone had thrown a rock into water. When his pores had finished emitting the murky air and harmful matter within his body, a misty cloud of black splendor faintly surrounded his body.

This situation sustained for who-knew-how-long. Han Shuo only felt the pain all over his body suddenly vanished without a trace, and he dropped down from the ten meter high branch with a sharp crack. His body was scarily agile and nimble.

Success! He had finally successfully broken through the first demonic "solid" realm. From now on, his body had been reborn. Whether it was strength, pliability, or toughness, his body now far outstripped that of ordinary people. After surpassing the most basic "solid" realm, Han Shuo's effort in future training would be halved, but would be double in effectiveness.

A sudden thought struck him and his magical yuan circulated freely, meeting no obstructions. Not only could it effortlessly travel throughout his four limbs, chest, and stomach, but the magical yuan could also easily circulate to his head. Han Shuo glanced at his naked skin and saw that not even a single scar remained from his previously scar covered body. His skin and flesh were clean and supple, and he could clearly feel that his height had increased another one or two centimeters when he moved his body.

He lifted his head to look at the sky and saw that it was still deep night. Han Shuo was reveling in the joy of new life in the moment as he continuously circulated the magical yuan all over his body, excitedly feeling out every inch of change.

Suddenly, Han Shuo's mind raced as he remembered the handbag and jade box he carried around with him. Last time he'd used the bizarre object within the jade box to mediate and train his mental strength, he had almost had all his mental strength sucked away instead. It was only when the magical yuan had flowed into his brain that he had found a way out of danger and emerged with great rewards instead.

Now that he had broken through the "solid" realm, Han Shuo could freely deploy the magical yuan at his will and command it to flow to any part of his body, including the most difficult to reach part, his brain. Recalling the enormous rewards that he'd gained previously, Han Shuo found it hard to repress the desires in his heart. He immediately sat down, crossing his legs, and took out the bag he always kept on him.

When he opened the box, the ball that appeared like an eyeball was still as strange and sinister as he remembered. When he focused his mental strength and slowly started coalescing it into the round ball, the same thing that occurred last time happened again. The ball instantly emitted a hazy light green aura, and the drop of blood inside gave one a heavy, uncomfortable feeling.

Han Shuo's mental strength was sucked away like a whale drinking in water, and it flowed quickly into the round ball within the jade box. The pain in Han Shuo's mind increased as his mental strength continued to be siphoned away.

Finally, just when he thought that his mind would explode, his thoughts moved and the magical yuan pooling in his lower abdomen suddenly flew up into his mind. There was a loud roaring sound in his mind as increased pain caused him to roar out loudly in pain. At the same time, his surging mental strength returned with the force of leveling mountains and draining seas, instantly filling Han Shuo's mind.

Han Shuo abruptly sank bonelessly to the ground and panted heavily. His entire mind felt groggy and stuffy, and this condition maintained itself for a while. He slowly returned to normal and only felt that his mental strength had indeed increased significantly. Han Shuo stared involuntarily at the round ball with glee.

Suddenly, Han Shuo saw that strands of green light had started rippling through the ball. These strands of light wove together continuously, as if a pen was tracing out a drawing. A picture formed in the midst after a short while – a strange, grey castle.

Briefly revealed by the green lines, it suddenly vanished without a trace leaving only the drop of red in the center flashed continuously as it actually formed the shape of a red arrow. It froze momentarily, then pointed south.

What did this mean? What did it mean when the arrow pointed south?

Han Shuo was momentarily dumbfounded as he gazed at the spot of red in the center, lost in thought. His thoughts churned madly and finally confirmed one thing. The red arrow within the round ball had delineated a direction, like an objective to travel to.

He hesitated and gazed at the sky as his curiosity had been thoroughly piqued. He finally grabbed the jade box and quickly ventured south, in the direction that the jade box was pointing at.

Throughout this entire process, Han Shuo could feel that the further south he traveled, the more he heard sounds from large magical creatures. Dangers abounded along his way and he was quite wary. His eyes occasionally flicked to the round ball and noticed that the arrow continuously changed direction, as if pointing out the correct path for Han Shuo.

He proceeded in this way for quite a while when the red arrow in the round ball he grasped finally disappeared. The red blood-like drop reappeared, and the green light emitted from the ball became stronger. Strong magical pulses travelled out from the ball.

Han Shuo stopped, surveyed his surroundings and realized that this was a common area filled with weeds, shrubbery and towering trees. An unknown, enormous tree with twisted, entwined branches was present not too far off, and its strange shadow, illuminated by moonlight, appeared like that of a monstrous creature's on the ground.

Han Shuo concentrated his attention and suddenly noticed something strange. In other parts of the Dark Forest, sounds from bugs would carry on no matter how quiet it was, but upon reaching this place, Han Shuo realized that this place was almost desolately quiet. There wasn't a single insect's call and not a hint of life to be found.

Bizarre. Han Shuo felt that the entire area was filled with a strange aura, hidden under an ordinary exterior. This aura felt familiar and friendly to Han Shuo, as if he'd long since grown used to some things, but upon thinking carefully, Han Shuo realized that he had no idea what was going on.

Just as Han Shuo was completely lost and deep in thought, the round ball within the jade box suddenly levitated into the air as the ball used the green light on the surface to draw beams of magical lines through the air. Han Shuo could feel the strong magical pulses through the air, and that they were growing stronger the more the ball's green light shone out.

After Han Shuo had noticed, he suddenly realized that the area bathed in the green light underwent changes that made his eyes bug out and his tongue tied. The weeds and shrubs on the ground would suddenly vanish without a trace whenever the green light touched it, to change into dry, grey, and dusty earth with piles of stark, white bones piled on it.

The leafy boughed, towering trees on the side also underwent eerie changes under the green light, changing into the skeletons of monstrous, dead creatures. If Han Shuo's memory served him right, those enormous skeletons were the legendary bone dragons, the most terrifying kind of dark creature.

Death. An empty, desolate wilderness morphed into an eternal land of death under the rays of the green light.

There was an enormous grey castle half floating in air, half buried underground. A few odd, sharp spikes encircled the castle as numerous pictures of dark creatures were carved on the castle walls.

Han Shuo looked on for a while, completely gobsmacked. He finally muttered to himself in astonishment. “This... is this the legendary cemetery of death?”

Chapter 44: Cemetery of Death

The cemetery of death was a legendary, sacred ground for necromancers, and the lofty hope that the band had held upon traveling to the Dark Forest. Han Shuo fully observed his surroundings, connecting it to Fanny's previous descriptions. He could be certain that this was the legendary cemetery of death.

No wonder Han Shuo had vaguely felt something so familiar about this place earlier. This was because Han Shuo also practiced necromancy magic. The strong pulses of death magic in this area, including the smell given off by the illusioned white bones, were all things that Han Shuo were exceedingly familiar with.

He gazed all over his surroundings, taking everything in. Han Shuo frowned as he thought, everyone who has ever seen the cemetery of death has ended up dead. Now that I stand here, do I go in or not?

The cemetery of death was a place in which mighty necromancers studied necromancy, back when this magic was at its peak. All the necromancers had later died, and the cemetery of death had vanished without a trace.

However, since this cemetery of death had been a place of research for those necromancers, some secrets of necromancy must surely exist here. This was a huge temptation for a rookie like Han Shuo, someone who had just entered the halls of magic. This forced Han Shuo to seriously consider whether or not to take on this adventure.

After a while, Han Shuo walked towards the direction of the cemetery and set foot into the piles of stark white bones, a firm resolution evident on his face. When he'd taken a few steps forward and set foot into the inner parts of this area, the dark green, round ball hung high in the air suddenly landed back into the jade box, and the green light that bathed the surroundings vanished with a trace.

Han Shuo started as he looked around him, stunned. The outskirts, that his eyes had just passed over, had changed again. It had been restored to the sight that he had first seen when he had arrived. Only the surroundings areas around the cemetery to the ground underneath Han Shuo's feet were the same scene of death and gloom.

Looking at the round ball in his hand, Han Shuo understood that this ball was a pivotal item to enter the cemetery of death. It seemed to be able to open the doors to the cemetery. The entire cemetery was shrouded by a concealing field. No one would be able to detect anything out of the ordinary if they looked in from the outside, nor would this place elicit anyone's attention.

However, one would be able to reveal the true nature of the cemetery of death with this round ball and envelop the entire cemetery under a veil of silence and desolation.

The stark white bones creaked beneath his feet. The sound suddenly broke through the still and lonely air, giving Han Shuo the creeps. It was a good thing that he had just successfully broken through the "solid" realm, giving him some courage from who-knew-where. He actually walked headlong towards the cemetery of death without paying heed to anything else.

After a while, he finally stood in front of the cemetery. There was a circular moat in front of the door and inky-black water flowing in it. A bridge made of black lines and white bones hung in abject loneliness over the moat.

Without hesitating, Han Shuo's hands tightened around the jade box, that held the ball and stepped slightly apprehensively onto the bone bridge, slowly walking towards the doors to the cemetery of death. The bridge swayed, throwing his body off balance. He didn't know what was in the moat below, but a single glance was enough to raise his hair. He somehow felt that whatever was in the still, inky black waters of the moat was highly dangerous.

When Han Shuo walked onto the bridge, the round ball within the jade box started emitting the strange green light again. This seemed to be some miraculous medicine for motion sickness as the wobbly bridge stopped swaying as soon as the green light flashed out. The black lines that had once been large gaps in the bridge immediately solidly bridged the space between the bones.

Han Shuo finally made it to the door. There were skeletons of two enormous evil knights and their steeds in front of the two great, grey doors that were made of unknown material.

Evil knights were dark creatures that possessed extremely strong battle power. Necromancers who weren't at archmage level shouldn't even entertain the idea of summoning evil knights. From the large skeletons of the two evil knights in front of the doors and the shape of their battle steeds, Han Shuo could vaguely tell that these two evil knights were the cream of the crop.

There were complicated and detailed magical patterns on the two grey doors. A round slot was present in the center, where the two doors intersected. The shape of that slot looked like a key that would open the doors.

At this moment, the dark green ball that Han Shuo clutched in his hands suddenly shot out a beam of green light, aiming straight for the round slot in the middle of the doors. Han Shuo's thoughts raced as he immediately understood what was going on. He raised the jade box without hesitation and brought the ball closer to the slot, slowly inserting it.

In the entire process, Han Shuo took pains to ensure that his hand wouldn't touch the round ball, because he understood that this ball was no simple object. He wasn't sure if some undesired changes would occur if skin and flesh touched it, so he therefore avoided touching it with his bare hands as much as possible.

When the ball had been inserted into the slot, a roar sounded out as the doors abruptly opened with a creak. The slot automatically split open with the opening of the doors, and the round ball that had been inserted in it remained in the jade box with no changes.

Hazy gloom and dust from the inside drifted out, accompanying the opening of the doors, causing Han Shuo to cough a few times before calming himself down and observing what was inside.

There was a large hall within the cemetery of death and six rooms with closed doors around the hall. The entire hall was quite vast and the ceiling was extremely high. It was about the size of a basketball field, and there was a magical matrix in the shape of a large, six-pointed star in the center. It was about 80% to 90% similar to the one that Han Shuo had taken from the Academy to the city of Zajoski, and there were ancient, quaint magical pictures drawn in the center.

Apart from the six-pointed star matrix, the hall was bereft of anything else. There were only a few magical pillars that were supporting the building, and a few broken pieces of bone in the corner.

There was a thick scent of decay in the air and Han Shuo waited for a while at the door, only slowly walking in when he felt that the scent had slowly started dispersing through the open doors.

Apart from the six pointed star matrix, there was only the lofty ceiling within the hall, plus the six room doors that the matrix points were pointing at. He first looked throughout the hall and didn't come up with anything valuable. Han Shuo then turned his attention to the six rooms with the closed doors.

One, two, three...

Han Shuo was still empty handed after he having gone through all six room. From the shape of the six rooms, they were merely six warehouses with nothing inside them now.

He returned to the great hall and started recollecting what Fanny had said last time. Apart from the general outward appearance, Han Shuo gradually remembered that only a small portion of the cemetery of death was revealed above ground. Most of it was buried deep underground, and the true secret would surely lie in the depths of the cemetery.

Except, Han Shuo hadn't seen any tunnels or stairs leading down after he'd gone through the great hall and six rooms. This greatly befuddled him and he sank into deep thought again.

After a while, Han Shuo still felt that the round ball within his hands was the key. He immediately stood up again and circled the hall again, including the six rooms in his inspection.

Finally, Han Shuo discovered another slot in the corner of one of the rooms. He was overjoyed and another set of rumbling sounded out when he inserted the round ball into the slot. A dark tunnel suddenly split open the walls of the room, and rows of six silver sticks, made from strange material that was neither stone or wood, were laid on the first step of the tunnel. There seemed to be connection points on both ends of each stick, as if the six sticks could be assembled.

There was only a thin piece of paper apart from the six sticks. On it, ancient magical symbols were used to write a few hastily scribbled words. Han Shuo took the thin sheet of paper.

When he'd carefully read the magical words, Han Shuo understood that these six sticks could form a diagram with a six-sided star and be used in direct transportation with the magical matrix in the hall. He also clearly understood that if one had insufficient mental strength, one would be unable to venture further into the depths.

Apart from that, Han Shuo was unable to obtain any other useful information from the thin sheet of paper.

Thinking briefly, Han Shuo put away the six magical sticks and creased his brow as he started walking down the tunnel. An invisible field suddenly appeared as green light rippled, abruptly bouncing him off. Han Shuo only felt that his mind hurt abnormally throughout the process, and internally reflected that the words on this thin sheet of paper were true. His mental strength must be too weak and was being prevented from descending any further into the depths of the building.

Cursing lowly, Han Shuo stayed in the room and connected the six magical sticks according to the instructions recorded on the paper and formed a six pointed star on the floor. He then stood in the center of this mini matrix, activated it with his mental strength, and Han Shuo appeared in the large matrix in the center of the hall with a flash of white light.

Repeating the same method, Han Shuo infused the transportation matrix in the hall with his mental strength and returned to the same room after activation, appearing within the small, six pointed matrix

His brow creasing in deep thought, Han Shuo understood that he would be unable to enter the tunnel and explore the cemetery of death for the time being. It was a good thing that he had gained the six magical sticks and the round ball that allowed him to conveniently come here no matter where he was. This filled his heart with glee as he'd already started thinking of this place as his secret base.

Since he would be temporarily unable to discover the secrets of this place, Han Shuo had no desire to continue to stay. After thinking for a while, he rolled up the six magical sticks and placed them on his back, put away the piece of paper into his pocket, and walked out of the cemetery of death in the same manner of holding the jade box.

When Han Shuo had safely walked out, he looked back and realized that the scene was the same as when he'd walked in. The growth of tall weeds, shrubs, and towering trees remained unchanged. His surroundings were still quietly desolate.

A small, satisfied smile appeared on his face. Han Shuo understood that this time's outing to the Dark Forest had come to an end here.

He had stumbled upon the legendary cemetery of death by pure, dumb luck. The secrets of this cemetery also belonged to him and no one else, including the necromancy students and teachers.

Chapter 45: Making a move when he should make one

After emerging from the cemetery of death, Han Shuo returned along his original path, but the sky had completely brightened halfway on his journey back. When he returned back to the original camping grounds, according to the way in his memory, he found that the necromancy students had long since moved on.

Just as Han Shuo was about to curse loudly, he suddenly took in the appearance of his surroundings. He discovered that the ashes in the area with the bonfire didn't look like they were from last night, but much more like they had been there for a few days.

Han Shuo's tent area had been filled with many resources, but now nothing remained. Only a few rocks were piled up in a triangular formation.

His interest piqued, Han Shuo quickly walked to the tent area. He took out his dagger and carefully flipped through the center of the stones, retrieving a piece of yellow paper after a while.

"Bryan, on the second day of your departure, we found traces of the two man-eating monsters nearby. We were worried that the man-eating monsters would seek revenge and decided not to wait for you. When you see this note, return to the academy along the original way. Perhaps we will meet halfway. Hope you are safe and sound, Fanny."

Fanny had left the note. Han Shuo whapped his head after reading it and silently said, "Oh no!". After reading the note, Han Shuo understood that much time must have unknowingly passed by while he was practicing magic, and not merely just a day.

It looks like the two man-eating monsters had appeared and caused Fanny and the others to panic. Add to that she was already deep in the southern territory of the Dark Forest and without Clark's protection, they had no choice but to resign themselves to return along their original path.

Currently, Han Shuo's slave status still had not been resolved, and the woman he wanted was still within the Babylon Academy of School and Magic, along with some tomes of necromancy magic that he wanted still wanted to learn. He would be unable to leave the Academy in the near future.

With the six magical sticks, Han Shuo could come and go from the cemetery of death at his leisure. He could absolutely use the transportation matrix to make the cemetery his personal territory after he returned to the Academy. The entire southern portion of the Dark Forest would be his training fields in the future. Whether it was magical yuan or magic spell training, half the amount would lead to double the effectiveness in a place like this.

Musing for a while, Han Shuo followed the instructions left on Fanny's note and followed the original road, swiftly moving towards the outskirts of the Dark Forest.

Although he traveled without rest for a day, Han Shuo actually didn't feel tired at all. Moving through the winding and bumpy paths of the Dark Forest, Han Shuo's speed was as fast as lightning, like a magical creature hunting down its prey.

He neared an area of randomly scattered rocks and shrubs around dusk. This was an area where they had camped before. The sounds of metallic clashes traveled to him from afar.

Han Shuo was startled, thinking 'Could it be that Fanny and everyone else are under attack by the man-eating monsters?' When he thought of this, his speed picked up and he abruptly flew towards the area of rocks and shrubs.

Along the way, many forest trolls with glistening green skin, towering bodies, grimacing faces, and wielded knives or studded clubs repeatedly attacked Han Shuo. He easily evaded all of them.

Forest trolls were a race within the Dark Forest that were mortal enemies with the elves. The elves treated them as marauders of the forest and continuously attacked them.

Within the Dark Forest, the forest trolls were even more frightening robbers than the man-eating monsters. Not only did they adhere to a strict code of conduct, but they also divided themselves according to methods employed by mankind into warriors, hunters, and even priests that could use some simple magics.

It was said that the forest trolls were evolved from plants and trees. They held high intelligence, similar to humans, and enjoyed some unique advantages within the Dark Forest. They leveraged these advantages to wantonly plunder the resources of other races, including the cargo of some traveling merchants. They were infamous bandits and robbers like the man-eating monsters.

Han Shuo listened closely to the sounds of fighting and quickly darted in the direction they came from. Along the way, some of the forest troll hunters threw out long spears, and they flew towards Han Shuo's spine with a whooshing sound. Han Shuo's five senses were exceedingly sensitive as he ran. As his ears twitched, he changed the direction of his body a few times and easily evaded the long spears that had been thrown.

Several forest troll warriors holding large, sharp axes yelled loudly as they rushed towards Han Shuo, but before they had reached him, Han Shuo had already agilely dashed past them and continued towards the center of the action.

After ten or so seconds of extremely fast sprinting, Han Shuo had finally made it to the thick of combat. He saw ten or so people wielding longswords, defending themselves against the forest troll attacks. Their dress clearly signified them as part of a mercenary band. They all looked like they had suffered some sort of injury.

There were about ten or so forest trolls surrounding them. Troll warriors handled the close combat up in the front, while about ten troll hunters continuously threw out long spears. The final five troll priests cast simple healing magics and fire of the soul to enhance body durability, healing the warriors' and hunters' injuries while increasing their vitality.

Judging from this scene, the fight had been going on for a while. The battle strength of the band of roughly ten humans was also extraordinary, but it was a pity that the forest trolls held the strength in numbers, and they had missile fighters in the form of the troll hunters, as well as the healing-type troll priests. The combination of these three matched up against a mercenary band of only warriors. Add to that the forest trolls' advantage in strength, it was obvious that they held the absolute advantage.

A short, stocky fatty, with a face full of blubber, was behind the mercenaries. His yellow bean-like little eyes moved swiftly as he cursed loudly. He seemed to be searching for a way out.

So it wasn't Fanny and them... looks like this is nothing to do with me. Han Shuo thought as he immediately put the events of this tableau out of his mind. He had no thoughts of joining the fray and helping, and was intent on simply bypassing these people and continue on his path to exit the Dark Forest.

However, even though Han Shuo had no intention of lending a helping hand, these forest trolls didn't seem to want to let him go. A couple particularly strong and fierce troll warriors, who were out in the front, had already raised their large battleaxes and were rushing towards Han Shuo. A few sharp spears in flight also accompanied them.

"Sorry, I'm just passing by and will leave immediately. Continue robbing them. It's nothing to do with me!"

Han Shuo didn't want new complications to arise, so when he saw the troll warriors rush towards him, he yelled loudly and tried to leave and avoid them.

"Humans are the most devious and evil of all races. Kill him." Standing beside the troll priests on the outside, the forest troll leader of this operation suddenly screamed harshly with the common language (language of humans) of the Continent.

The troll warriors had paused briefly upon hearing Han Shuo's words, but lost their hesitation when hearing their leader's words and came rushing over with axes upraised.

Damnit! They were looking for death! Han Shuo was also a bit hacked off. He had just evaded the throws of the long spears when the tall, bulky troll warriors rushed over with their battleaxes. They were obviously planning on also taking care of him along with the others.

Wrapping his hand around a long spear beside him, Han Shuo pulled upwards and grasped the spear in his hand. He didn't wait for the forest troll warriors to get closer before he jumped upwards. The spear in his hand was so fast that it was like lightning piercing through the air. The spear first pierced through the chest of a troll warrior and also strung up the warrior that was close behind it.

The two troll warriors only had time to emit two ghastly screams before they died instantly when the spear impaled them. Han Shuo randomly grabbed one of the battleaxes that one of them had wielded and yelled loudly, "Can't blame me if you come looking for your own deaths."

After the matter with the man-eating monsters last time, Han Shuo was no longer timid nor did he waste time hesitating when it came to killing someone. He also somehow felt vaguely excited.

Han Shuo knew that mercy or pleas would be absolutely useless with these bandits and robbers. Only cold and cruel methods would be able to shock and awe them. The more timid and cowardly you were, the more they would act without reservation. Therefore, Han Shuo had acted extremely cruelly just now, directly using violent killings to face them.

Indeed, after Han Shuo had displayed his brutal methods, panicked expressions appeared on the glistening green skin of the other four forest trolls that had followed their brethren's charge. They retreated quite a few steps backwards in cowardice. Even the leader of the forest trolls looked at him with some horror, and an apprehensive expression appeared on his face.

"Brave warrior, please rescue me!"

At this moment, the short fatty, that the mercenaries shoved to the back for protection, suddenly cried out with excitement. He looked at Han Shuo with a fervorous expression, as if Han Shuo was his savior.

“No interest!” Han Shuo replied decisively. He picked up the battleaxe with a cold snort and prepared to leave.

The short fatty immediately lost his calm and cried out wildly upon seeing that Han Shuo was about to leave. “Brave warrior, I am willing to pay you a rich reward if you save me. I promise that you’ll be satisfied!”

Han Shuo had already taken a few steps forward when he heard those words. He suddenly stopped and turned with a faint smile, looking at the fatty. He said, “Noble sir, how large of a reward are you willing to give?”

The fatty was momentarily stunned, then hesitated. He grit his teeth and stamped his foot, yelling loudly. “Fifty gold!”

“Sorry, please find someone else!” Han Shuo thought that if it had been before, he probably would have been tempted by the fifty golds. Now that he’d entered the Dark Forest and discovered that his skills were absolutely enough for him to catch Windblade Wolves by himself, he no longer felt that fifty gold was enough for him to take the risk.

Fatty grew anxious seeing that Han Shuo was about to leave. He yelled out again. “Seventy at most!”

Han Shuo continued walking forward without even looking back.

“80. 100! 120, 150! 200! 200!!”

The moving figure abruptly stopped, Han Shuo suddenly looked back and rushed speedily back. He said, “Alright, 200 it is then. I’ll eat up the loss and count it as making a friend.”

“Oh my word. Two hundred golds! You’re robbing me just like they are. Two hundred gold is enough for more than ten slaves. Damnit, get me out of here!” Fatty hollered with a look of pain on his face.

Chapter 46: Little skeleton acts violently

When Han Shuo had moved behind the fatty, he discovered that out of the ten or so mercs defending the fatty, the strongest of them were two mid-ranked warriors, followed by six novice warriors and a few other warrior apprentices.

All of them were covered with wounds, and the two strongest mid-ranked warriors were injured the most heavily to the point where they had almost lost the ability to fight.

“Master Fabian, we’re the ones who are supposed to protect you!” The mid-ranked warrior with blood still bubbling out of a bloody hole in his rib cage grew agitated as he saw Han Shuo quickly draw near.

“The situation now is quite apparent that you have lost the ability to fight and cannot offer me effective protection. I paid half of the gold to your mercenary band earlier, but because you were unable to escort me back to the Empire, I will not be paying the second half.” Fabian said with a face full of resignation and then pasted a warm, slight smile on his face. He bowed slightly and said to Han Shuo, “Mighty warrior, please take me away from here and I will pay you two hundred gold.”

“Alright, give me one hundred gold first and I’ll start immediately!” Han Shuo was at ease and also responded with a slight smile.

At this moment, upon seeing that Han Shuo did not seem to be leaving, the forest troll leader finally screamed with violent rage, “Devious and evil humans, kill them all!”

When the leader’s words sounded, the troll warriors, hunters, and priests that had been standing blankly in their places called out in the weird language of the forest trolls and rushed over in large strides.

“Alright, this is one hundred golds. When you safely take me away from here, I’ll give you the other hundred gold. Damnit, they’re coming for us, make your move!” Fabian hastily took out a money bag and poured out one hundred gold coins for Han Shuo when he saw that the forest trolls were rushing over with ugly expressions and wielding weapons.

Having received the one hundred gold coins, Han Shuo suddenly smiled at Fabian. Before Fabian had a chance to react, Han Shuo had swung Fabian onto his back and ripped out a few tattered pieces of gauze from an open pocket. He firmly tied Fabian onto his back without further ado.

“Let’s go, I’ll get you safely away from here. You must hold on tight, if you fall off halfway, you only have only yourself to blame!” Han Shuo hurriedly instructed as he threw away the battleaxe in his hand, grabbed a new long spear from beside him and abruptly dashed towards the perimeter.

Seven troll warriors had long since blocked the way, with a few other hunters and priests behind them. They had already thrown out their long spears and javelins with whooshing sounds when they saw that Han Shuo was rushing towards them.

Even with a fatty on his back, Han Shou still navigated the rough and windy paths with ease. He agilely changed direction and easily evaded several long spears and javelins.

When Han Shuo had rushed to the side of the seven troll warriors, the long awaiting troll warriors rushed towards him, carrying their battleaxes. He clenched the long spear in his hand tightly as Han Shou rapidly closed the distance, and the spear stabbed towards the chest of the first troll.

A blood red flower suddenly blossomed on his chest, and the troll warrior fell directly backwards after he shuddered. At this moment, the troll priest towards the back started singing healing and Fire of the Soul magics. A few beams of green light descended onto the troll warriors.

The troll warrior who had fallen shakily got back to his feet. When the other troll warriors had been enveloped by the magic of the Fire of the Soul, it was as if a layer of metallic skin had been applied to their already tough green skin. Their skin shone with a metallic gleam, followed by simultaneous increases in speed and strength. They rushed at the two with loud wails.

“Hurry! Hurry and get me out of here!” Fabian was frightened out of his wits and started screaming in a panic on Han Shuo’s back.

His expression unchanged, Han Shuo ignored Fabian's calls and yells. He abruptly threw out the spear in his hand and impaled the troll warrior, that had just unsteadily clambered to its feet, through the neck and nailed it to the floor. He then pulled out the spears and javelins stuck on the ground and threw them, one by one, towards the priests hiding the back.

One of the priests didn't dodge in time and was immediately pierced to death. Another two troll hunters also died due to being impaled from the front. At this moment, Han Shuo randomly pulled out a long spear and started to directly confront the troll warrior in front of him.

Having had the Fire of the Soul cast on it, all of the troll warrior's bodily functions had increased significantly. However, Han Shuo's current condition had had some small achievements in practicing magic, and the toughness and flexibility of his body still far outstripped them. He maneuvered the long spear and flicked out the battleaxes one by one.

Throughout this process, when the battleaxes had been sent flying from the troll warriors' hands, they would pull out a javelin or long spear from the ground at the same time, thoroughly blocking the way and entangling Han Shuo. He was up against six with a fatty on his back. Even though he dodged with high speed, he still wasn't able to fully avoid all the injuries.

Whenever danger approached him, Han Shuo would very evilly use Fabian on his back as a shield, using the latter's fat, stocky body to decrease the damage inflicted on his own body.

"Damnit, you can't do this, otherwise don't even expect receive the one hundred gold coins after." Fabian's butt had been poked by a long spear, and his back had been bloodied by a few javelins. He wailed in continuous complaints on Han Shuo's back.

Unfortunately, Han Shuo completely ignored all of Fabian's complaints. He conveniently pulled a long spear embedded in the chest of a troll warrior, and the resulting spray of flesh blood fully splattered all over Han Shuo. Han Shuo's expression had been cold and vicious to begin with and he looked even more like the reincarnation of a bloodthirsty god with all the blood over him. This momentarily shocked Fabian senseless and he didn't dare speak further nonsense, merely whimpered and cried on Han Shuo's back.

"Kill him, kill him, rush him together!" The forest troll leader suddenly exploded into an irate roar upon seeing that Han Shuo had killed quite a few forest trolls. He even pulled out a battleaxe from behind him and rushed over.

Currently, although Han Shuo wasn't particularly breaking a sweat facing off against five trolls, it was still exceedingly difficult for him to break through. When the troll leader had finished speaking, even more forest troll warriors rushed over. Han Shuo dodged the crushing blow from a battleaxe and backed up a few steps.

"Souls of the fallen soldiers, heed the dark herald's call and reveal your existence!" Han Shuo spread out his hands and suddenly chanted the spell used for a necromancy summons.

"Oh, my gosh! You're also a mage!" Fabian had been sobbing in a low voice when he was momentarily shocked by Han Shuo starting an incantation. He looked blankly at Han Shuo with an odd expression and called out weirdly.

The forest troll leader off in the distance was startled and then increased its speed, screaming loudly, "Kill him, hurry up and kill him."

A small skeleton that wielded a bone dagger suddenly materialized in front of Han Shuo. Its small, thin body stood there in solitude as its empty eye sockets patrolled the area a bit at a loss.

"Aw come on, just one little skeleton, and such a thin, small one. What use is it?" Fabian started wailing with surprise when he saw that Han Shuo had summoned just one skeleton.

"Wahahaha, so it was just one skeleton. That scared me... kill them all!" Upon seeing that it was just one skeleton after being shocked, the forest troll leader immediately jeered loudly and directed the troll warriors to quickly approach.

Han Shuo's two eyes were cold as a trace of a mocking smile also made its way to his lips. When the forest troll leader had spoken, he immediately gave the order for the little skeleton to attack.

When the little skeleton received the command to attack, its small leg bones bent down and then extended, suddenly flying out like a sharp sword. The bone dagger in its hand drew a line of black light through the empty air as it flew out first. The first troll warrior, that came rushing up, was directly pierced through its forehead like cutting paper, and it fell straight down backwards.

The little bone dagger didn't stop after running through the head of the first troll warrior. It whistled through the air according to the little skeleton's motions, just like a ghost out for blood. Ear deafening whistling sounds accompanied secretive and unpredictable curves as it ran through two more troll warriors with another stroke. When the little skeleton drew close to the troll warriors, the dagger returned automatically back into the little skeleton's hands.

The mere loosening of the bone dagger had instantaneously taken the lives of three troll warriors. The previously exceedingly disappointed Fabian and loudly jeering troll leader were both dumbfounded after the little skeleton's single strike. They stared closely with a face of incredulity at the little skeleton. It was like a tiger that had entered a flock of sheep. The little bone dagger that was grasped tightly in its hand began to nimbly reap the lives of the troll warriors.

"Oh my goodness! Am I seeing things? Is that really only just one skeletal warrior?" Fabian had finally recollected his wits and began to shout excitedly. If it wasn't for the gauze that had completely wrapped around him, he might have even fallen off and landed on the ground in his excitement.

"Don't get close to him, everyone stay away from the skeleton and use long spears, javelins, and battleaxes to kill that skeleton." After the troll leader had recovered from its shock, it issued loud commands with a look of fear. Its originally advancing body stopped in its tracks as it began to back up in cowardice.

The troll warriors, that had been close to the little skeleton, had all retreated. When they had left, long spears, javelins, and even the troll warriors' battleaxes filled the air and descended upon the little skeleton.

Han Shuo was startled. As strong as the little skeleton was, it would most likely be hit under such a strong barrage of attacks, b. But he wouldn't be able to recall it in time even if he started the incantation now. Han Shuo grew anxious and started truly worrying for the little skeleton.

Except, the little skeleton's succeeding fancy, incredible performance completely upended Han Shuo's understanding and knowledge of it.

Chapter 47: The horror of seven bone spurs

At this moment, the seven bone spurs on the back of the little skeleton suddenly waved in the air with a creaking sound. When the barrage of javelins, long spears, and battle axes were about to land on the little skeleton, the seven bone spurs instantaneously detached themselves from the little skeleton's spine and whirled into the air, dancing in an interweaving pattern in front of the little skeleton and above its head with great whooshing sounds.

The little skeleton held its ground, wielding the bone knife, and its little body capered madly, as if it was having an epileptic fit. The seven bone spurs drew mysterious curves through the air, as if manipulated into a dance by invisible hands according to the little skeleton's will.

Continuous cracks rang out as the flying javelins, spears, and battle axes were all struck down and broken by the interweaving seven bone spears. Not a single one made it near the little skeleton's body.

Han Shuo pinched his own waist and only knew this moment was truly real after he felt pain radiating from his side. Not only could the little skeleton manipulate the bone dagger and face off against enemies, but it could even activate the seven bone spurs on its back and make them form such a frightening weapon. This made Han Shuo feel that in this moment, the little skeleton was really quite incredible.

The "Law of Activating Magic" was a law that activated magical treasures to attack. The last time Han Shuo had bafflingly transmitted those memories to the little skeleton [1], he had seen the little skeleton immediately activate the bone dagger in a flying dance. This was already enough to astonish Han Shuo, but now that the little skeleton could even activate the seven bone spurs on its back, this thoroughly flabbergasted Han Shuo.

[tl: [1] = Han Shuo transmits memories to the skeleton at the end of chapter 27 ]

In order to activate the “Law of Activating Magic”, other than an understanding of the law, a magical treasure, that was tied with the caster’s life and shared one mind with the caster, was also needed in order to call upon the law naturally. It looks like that, unbeknownst to anyone, the seven bone spurs and bone dagger had become the little skeleton’s magical treasures under the constant reforging from the magical yuan.

Han Shuo didn’t have a magical treasure at hand and thus couldn’t activate the “Law of Activating Magic”, but who would’ve thought that a dark creature, a little skeleton, was walking ahead of Han Shuo and had been the first to successfully activate it?

“Oh my gosh! What, what kind of monster is this little skeleton!” Fabian gave an excited and high strung moan, exclaiming in a low voice while being tongue tied and with eyes bugging out.

After the flying javelins, long spears, and battleaxes had all been demolished, the forest trolls were also completely shocked. Following that, the seven bone spurs, that had been circling the little skeleton’s body, abruptly flew in all directions and pierced through the bodies of the seven forest trolls that were standing there in a stupor.

“Demon, this is a demon within a skeleton’s body. Run!”

An extremely panicked and horror filled scream rang out from one of the forest troll’s mouth. It was as if this was a signal to retreat, as all the forest trolls started fleeing for their lives in various directions, like lost dogs. Even the forest troll leader had no more crap to say as it ran heedlessly in a sprint for escape.

A situation’s development was always so out of expectations. Han Shuo had only planned on breaking out and escaping from here and hadn’t reckoned on the fact that the little skeleton’s seven bone spurs would be equipped with such scary power. When Han Shuo had recovered himself, the surroundings were littered with more than ten forest troll corpses and there were no longer any living forest trolls.

“Hahaha, good boy, good boy!” Han Shuo suddenly had an exceedingly proud feeling and couldn’t stop from laughing wildly.

At the same time, the seven bone spurs whirled in a circle in thin air and then accurately landed back on the little skeleton's spine. The little skeleton stood up straight afterwards, with bone dagger in hand, and started searching the forest troll corpses with practiced motions. It took everything on the bodies, except for the clothes.

"Give it to me, the other one hundred gold coins." Han Shuo smiled lightly as he let Fabian down from his body and asked for the remaining payment from a Fabian, that was still shocked silly.

At this moment, Fabian's eyes were still patrolling over the little skeleton's body. He only came back to himself when Han Shuo's voice sounded. Just as Fabian was about to bring out the gold coins, he suddenly thought of something and glared at Han Shuo. "No... you dared to use me as a shield when fighting with the forest trolls just now. Your actions have completely harmed the position of the employer. How dare you think of the other one hundred gold coins?"

His face suddenly stilling with a cold look, Han Shuo's frigid gaze roved over Fabian's body. He randomly plucked a javelin from the ground and asked lightly, "Mr. Fabian, are you trying to cheat me?"

On the other side, the little skeleton, that had been collecting the spoils of war, suddenly stopped as well, its empty sockets looking at Fabian.

Coldness suddenly emanated throughout Fabian's body as he heart gave a shudder. He reluctantly squeezed out a smiling face and took a few timid steps backwards, saying, "Joking, it was just a joke. Heh heh, haha, here's a hundred gold coins and not a single one short. You've done great work."

Han Shuo lightly "hmm"ed as he put the one hundred gold coins away without further blather. A feeling of carefree enjoyment rose in his heart as he thought powerful strength is never unfavorable.

"Noble warrior, the items on the forest trolls..."

"Mine, all mine."

Han Shuo abruptly cut off his words before Fabian had a chance to finish, matter-of-factly presuming that all those items were his spoils of war.

Squeezing out a forced laugh, Fabian continued, “Of course, of course they’re all yours. I mean to say that I can purchase the items you’ve gleaned off the forest trolls.”

His brow furrowed, Han Shuo looked suspiciously at Fabian and a smile made its way to his face. Han Shuo mimicked Clark and bowed urbanely, “Does Mr. Fabian mean to say that he plans on buying these items from me by means of gold coins?”

That face changes swiftly! Fabian cursed inwardly, pasting the same smile on his face and nodded. “Indeed, I am a merchant and venture in and out of the Dark Forest to purchase items found within, then bringing them back to the Empire for profits. As infamous robbers within the Dark Forest, the forest trolls should have some of what I need. If you don’t mind, I plan to buy them off you.”

At this moment, the little skeleton walked silently over to stand beside Han Shuo with eight handbags hanging off his hands. Under Han Shuo’s orders, the little skeleton put the eight bags down and used the bone dagger in hand to flip them open one by one. Han Shuo also took out the treasures he’d gleaned during this trip and put them on the ground, awaiting Fabian’s appraisal.

“Eight level 5 magical creature cores, six level 4 and one level 3. Three complete Windblade Wolf Pelts, three fangs from the Venom Lizards, one egg from the Deepwater Venom Python, and five blades of Mooneating Grass. I can give you one thousand gold for all of this together, what do you say?” Fabian appraised the items silently after he had categorized them all and lifted his head to smile at Han Shuo.

Shaking his head, Han Shuo said with an odd air. “That’s nothing. The Deepwater Venom Python is a level 3 magical creature. Its egg alone should be worth a great deal, not to mention the core of a level 3 magical creature. You offer only one thousand gold coins... do you take me for an idiot?”

Han Shuo knew that the price for a level 3 magical creature would naturally not be too low, but he didn't clearly quantify how many gold coins, because he was unsure of the actual price. However, it was a given that merchants would always offer a price far below market price, so Han Shuo naturally wouldn't let him have the items so easily.

"The Deepwater Venom Python is a level 3 magical creature, but the rate of success for raising a Deepwater Venom Python from an egg is pathetically low, and it's not a guarantee that it will identify someone as its master. Therefore, the price can't be too high. How about this, I offer 1,500 gold coins, what do you say?"

Han Shuo said nothing and only looked at Fabian with a slight smile.

"Two thousand gold coins, this is my final offer. If you're unwilling to sell then forget it, I'll leave!" Fabian grit his teeth and finally raised his own price up another five hundred gold coins.

Seeing as this was about the limit, Han Shuo smiled lightly and said faintly, "Two thousand it is. The items are yours, but what about the gold coins."

These items would surely be worth more than this in the Empire, but Han Shuo was still in the Dark Forest and without a space ring, it would be inconvenient to take these things with him. In addition, Han Shuo's status was just an errand slave in the Babylon Academy of Magic and Force, it would be difficult for him to dispose of the items in the Empire. It would be easier and more convenient to directly hand them over to Fabian.

"This is a crystal card with two thousand gold coins saved in it. You can take this crystal card to any savings firm and exchange it for gold coins. Oh right, what's your name? I can print your name into the crystal card for you." Fabian took out a thin card made from golden colored crystals and asked Han Shuo.

"Bryan."

"Oh, okay Bryan." Fabian took out another thin, needle-like item after taking out the crystal card and slightly drew it over a thin slot in the corner of the crystal card. A faint, golden light winked and the crystal card went back to normal.

Han Shuo had arrived at this world for a while and after purposefully getting to know this world, understood that a crystal card functioned like an ATM card in his original world. Gold, silver and bronze coins were all tangible items with heft to them. No one could possibly carry thousands or tens of thousands of gold coins on themselves. These crystal cards were a necessity for nobels. Crystal cards could be used at will in the omnipresent savings firms to save or withdraw gold coins.

“Here, Bryan, this crystal card is yours from now on.” Fabian gave the crystal card to Han Shuo and smiled, looking at him. “I’m called Fabian, a member of the Empire’s Boozt Merchant Guild. You can come find me at the Guild if you ever have anything to sell in the future. This is my address, put it away carefully.”

The Boozt Merchant Guild was one of the biggest merchant guilds in the Empire. Controlled by the Boozt family, even Han Shuo, who didn’t get much in the way of rumors and news, had heard about the wondrous resources of the Boozt Merchant Guild. Listening to Fabian’s words, Han Shuo immediately carefully put away the crystal card and smiled, “Mr. Fabian, nice to meet you. Perhaps I really will have something to bother you with in the future. The forest trolls won’t dare disturb you now, and our matter is concluded. Good bye.”

Han Shuo didn’t say much after those words and he gave the little skeleton an order. One man and one skeleton quickly vanished off into the distance.

“Hello brave mercenaries. I think our business can continue to be conducted.” Fabian called out to the mercenaries who were looking after their wounds and walked towards them upon seeing Han Shuo suddenly leave.

Chapter 48: The allure of gold coins

After departing from Fabian, Han Shuo's path took him straight to the outskirts of the Dark Forest. He took paths that their group had all taken before.

During his journey, Han Shuo continued to practice magic. Having gone through the reforging of the "solid realm", it was as if Han Shuo had been reborn. Now that his magical training had bore fruit, the magical yuan could travel to all parts of his body according to his will.

There were nine levels in the world of demonic magic, and Han Shuo had now reached the "open passages realm". The training for the "open passages" and "solid" realms differed slightly. This was a realm that primarily focused on the expansion of the body's meridians, greatly increasing the width and durability of the meridians. In every instance of training, the process of "opening passages" filled his body with splitting agony, as if there were insects biting and gnawing within the meridians.

The first three levels of demonic magic of solid, open passages, and molded spirit were the most foundational realms. Training became increasingly difficult as one progressed, but with the experience of training in the "solid realm", Han Shuo already understood that agony and inhumane torture accompanied his magical training. The inhumane pain of the "open passages" realm was also within his expectations. He used magical yuan to repeatedly expand his meridians without letting up for a second, basing it purely on indomitable will.

After twelve days of training and traveling, Han Shuo still hadn't run into Fanny and the others along the way. He finally made it out of the Dark Forest alone and made it to the town of Drol again when dusk fell.

Compared to a month ago, Han Shuo had weathered through the trials of the Dark Forest, and since then his strength, mindset, and appearance had all undergone drastic changes. Han Shuo was now over 170 cm, and although his body wasn't too muscular, he was no longer thin and scrawny.

After baptism by fresh blood, Han Shuo had greatly improved both his pluck and knowledge. His entire aura was also undergoing mysterious changes. He was slowly changing under circumstances that even Han Shuo himself wasn't even aware of.

At dusk, the town of Drol was enclosed in a happy, carefree atmosphere. Many adventurers had returned from the Dark Forest. Some wore expressions of sorrow, having lost companions, while others had satisfied smiles on their faces due to obtaining rich rewards, and they planned on a thorough night of depravity within the town of Drol.

When it was dusk, Han Shuo first came to the place where Gene and the others had borrowed and stabled their battlesteeds. He observed the place from a distance and noticed that the battlesteeds that they had spent money to borrow were still present. He immediately understood that Fanny and everyone else probably hadn't returned to Drol yet.

Although they had spent money on the battlesteeds, the necromancy teachers and students only had the rights to use them. When they returned to Zajoski, they would have to return the battlesteeds to the Zajoski guards in precisely the same condition that they had received them. Since the battlesteeds were still here, that meant Fanny and them had definitely yet to leave.

Han Shuo naturally knew that traveling with such haste by himself, he was sure to return much more quickly than Fanny's slowly plodding group. Perhaps Fanny and the others had been delayed by magical creatures along the way, so it was within his expectations that Fanny and the others hadn't returned yet.

He went to the small hotel that everyone had stayed in previously, walked to the main counter, and said with a smile, "I need a room."

The owner was eating fruit with his eyes almost shut. He raised his head to flick a glance at Han Shuo and said lazily, "Oh, it's you. Give me ten bronze coins. That warehouse is always empty... you can go there now."

The last time Han Shuo had come with the others, Gene had especially rented out a warehouse for Han Shuo, and Han Shuo had been scorned by the owner because of this. Therefore, when the owner saw that it was Han Shuo, he naturally assumed that with Han Shuo's status, he could only rent the warehouse.

He didn't become angry, but rather smiled and took out the money bag at his waist. He clinked and poured out one gold coin from it, dumping it onto the round wooden table. He looked sideways at the owner and said, "I don't want to stay in the warehouse."

The owner had been lazing about when he suddenly sat up, swiping the gold coin off the round table. A professional smile swiftly pasted itself to his face and he raised his voice, "Of course, of course. How would a warehouse be worthy of one gold coin. Cute little fellow, tell me whatever kind of room you want to stay in. A gold coin will be more than enough."

His treatment was drastically different from last time's with the presence of gold coins. Han Shuo smiled faintly and nodded, "I want the room the female teacher was in last time. Arrange it for me."

"No problem, not a problem at all. This is the key. One gold coin is enough for up to five nights there. Do you have any other desires, young man?" The owner asked further with a toadying expression. The owner's face was wreathed in smiles as he merrily took out a key from a drawer behind him and handed it to Han Shuo.

"Nothing else, just go about your own business!" Han Shuo walked directly towards the room that Fanny had occupied before after receiving the key, thinking that money had the same miraculous power no matter what world one was in. It would seem that in order to gain one's footing in this world, gold coins were a requisite item.

Han Shuo unloaded his belongings after arriving at the room Fanny had stayed in before, leisurely taking a hot bath in the tub. Recalling the pleasant affair that had taken place here last time, Han Shuo felt a burst of flames erupt from him and his lower body bore certain uncontrollable, strong signs.

Cursing in a low tone, Han Shuo stood up naked and grabbed a towel from the side to dry his body off. Just as he was about to leave the bathroom, he caught a glimpse of his athletic, sculptured body in a wide mirror that had been off to the side.

Han Shuo's body in the mirror displayed bulging muscles all over his body and a fit figure. The sun had turned his skin copper colored during this time, and he looked exceedingly healthy and full of masculine energy, a marked difference from his previous waif-like, thin self.

He squeezed his two chest muscles with satisfaction. They were neither too big, nor too small, and he struck some poses in front of the mirror. Han Shuo pointed at his reflection in the mirror with quite some narcissism, laughing as he complimented, "Little fellow, looking good eh!"

Han Shuo came to a clothing vendor after he left the hotel and spent one gold coin to purchase a soft, high-quality undergarment, wearing it inside the errand boy uniform that the Academy had handed out.

He then came to a weapons vendor and spent ten gold coins to purchase a higher quality dagger, four gold coins for fifteen sharp steel needles and hid them in his pant legs, and another six gold coins to purchase a miniature crossbow to hide in his sleeve, fully arming himself.

Afterwards, Han Shuo went to a pharmacist and took out forty gold coins to buy a few solutions and powders. Apart from a few simple medicinal supplies, tranquilizing and psychedelic aphrodisiacs were also part of the mix, as well as a bottle of poison.

These items were prohibited within the Empire's city of Zajoski. Even if Han Shuo had the money, he didn't have the means to procure them, but in the town of Drol, open trade was allowed because adventurers needed them. Since Han Shuo had come here with money in hand and now that he understood the importance of strength, he naturally bought some in case they would be needed later.

After he had bought all these items, Han Shuo finally sighed and thought that it was good to have money. He felt that even his spine was more upright than normal after walking out of the pharmacist. Everything became so much easier when there were gold coins in his moneybag.

On the way to the hotel, Han Shuo's stomach roiled as he looked at the hotels decked out in colorful lights. He followed his body's needs and ducked into one of the hotels.

The din was loud and deafening within the hotel and neon lights flashed randomly on the roof. Adventurers and merchants had formed small groups and had congregated on the tables and chairs within the hall, loudly chattering about their adventures.

These people's faces were flushed red and they held wine glasses in their hands, drunkenly calling out and conversing without any reservations. Delicacies were placed everywhere on the tables and a few young male and female waiters continuously threaded the throng, serving them more fragrant wine and dishes.

Han Shuo made a beeline for the only empty table in the corner of the hall and sat down. A shy young waiter quickly walked in front of Han Shuo afterwards and asked politely, "Excuse me, what would you like?"

"Good wine, good meats, give me some of both of them." Han Shuo fished out one gold coin and flicked it into the waiter's serving platter with his thumb, commanding loudly as he opened his mouth.

When the server saw the gold coin land, his eyes immediately brightened and he immediately bowed even more respectfully. He put away the coin without a change in expression and smiled with a gentle voice, "Yes sir, please wait just a moment, it will be up right away."

One should enjoy themselves when they had wealth to spend. Han Shuo lazily lounged against the chair and sized up the various adventurers and merchants in the hall with slitted eyes. Some of these had possibly just returned from the Dark Forest, or were about to enter to Dark Forest. Some of them had just escaped from danger, whereas others were planning on heading into unknown perils. They were all releasing their energy in great waves, enjoying the depravity of the town of Droll to their heart's content.

After a while, the shy server placed a bottle of light purple wine, three large platters of meat, and two bowls of fruit on Han Shuo's table."

"This is Purple Leylan, the most renowned wine in the town of Droll.

Adventurers all love drinking this, I hope you will be satisfied with it.” The waiter pointed at the bottle of light purple wine and introduced it after placing everything on the table. He then bowed and retreated.

Han Shuo couldn't wait and grabbed a piece of meat and started tearing away at it. Although it didn't taste as good as the ones he'd prepared, it was still quite good. He twisted the top off the wine bottle and gulped down a large mouthful of Purple Leylan. The luscious sweetness also embodied a certain fire to it, and a mellow aftertaste was left in the mouth after it had travelled down to the stomach, bringing another kind of enjoyment to Han Shuo.

Good wine indeed, Han Shuo complimented. When he raised his head to look around, he suddenly saw two familiar figures walk in the door – Claude and Irene.

Claude and Irene scanned the area, searching for an empty seat. Both started when their gazes landed on Han Shuo, after which they actually started walking towards Han Shuo in pure coincidence.

Chapter 49: A belated revenge

“Isn’t this the necromancy major’s errand boy?” Claude asked with a frown as he’d made his way to stand next to Han Shuo.

“Necromancy errand boy Bryan... who would’ve thought that we’d bump into each other here?” Han Shuo nodded, gulped down another mouthful of Purple Leylan, and smiled in response.

“There seems to be no seats left. Claude, why don’t we switch to another place for dinner?” Irene raked a gaze over Han Shuo with a trace of disdain in her eyes.

“No need, at this moment, most of the hotels in Drol must be packed with people. There’s only Bryan at this table. Since we’re all from the Academy, I’m sure Bryan wouldn’t mind if we sat down with him, would you Bryan?” Claude said to Irene with a smile and then stared merrily at Han Shuo.

“Of course I don’t mind! If you don’t feel that sitting with an errand boy like myself detracts from your dignity, I’ll gladly share a table with you two.” Claude had injured his little skeleton in the past in order to appease Irene. Perhaps Claude had long since forgotten about this matter, but Han Shuo had silently remembered it. Now that his strength had increased, Han Shuo had lost more and more reservations when taking action. He’d been fretting that he had lost his chance to enact revenge on Claude, but who knew that he’d come knocking on Han Shuo’s doorstep. Han Shuo was naturally loathe to let this opportunity pass by.

“I hate everyone from the necromancy major, even errand slaves are without exception!” Irene creased her brow, flicked a look at Claude and spoke coldly.

Claude started, then threw a meaningful glance at Irene. He smiled and said to Han Shuo, “Bryan, aren’t you with the rest of the necromancy major? How come we don’t see any sign of them and you’re here by yourself? Oh, come to think of it, you, an errand boy, would be able to enjoy such a rich feast of food and wine. How surprising!”

Irene also looked at Han Shuo with surprise upon hearing Claude's words. She seemed to particularly mind about Claude's questions and was in no hurry to leave at this point. When Claude saw that Irene had displayed an expression that indicated her interest, he eagerly wiped off the dust on the seat in front of her. She finally sat down unhurriedly after he had indicated that she should sit.

Han Shuo ripped apart the grilled meat in his hand and sent it into his stomach completely as if nothing had happened. He belched in satisfaction after another mouthful of wine, rubbed his stomach in self satisfaction and said with a smile, "Master Fanny and the others should be back soon. They were afraid that I would be a burden and so gave me a few gold coins for me to wait here for them. Are there any problems?"

"No no. So that's the situation. Right... Bryan, how was your haul this time? Any high level magical creatures?" Claude winked at Irene and asked Han Shuo with a smile.

Irene revealed an expression of interest and likewise stared intently at Han Shuo, seeming to suddenly care quite a bit about the necromancy major's haul.

Shaking his head, Han Shuo said, "I don't know, I returned halfway. I don't know if they had any major gains, but I think their haul this time wouldn't be too small."

"Huh. Those people? What kind of haul could they get? They could at most hunt down some level five magical creatures, and likely find it hard to kill even a level four." Irene looked at Han Shuo contemptuously and snorted coldly.

Han Shuo only faintly flicked a glance at Irene in the face of her jeering and didn't say much. At this moment, Claude had already hailed the waiter and also used one gold coin to arrange for some wine and meat.

Han Shuo inwardly took stock of the situation, wondering how to take his revenge on Claude. After thinking for a while, an involuntary trace of a wicked smile appeared on his lips. He calmly and subtly took something similar to a banana peel from the plate in front of him and threw it underneath his foot. When a fast walking waiter carrying a plate appeared, Han Shuo pushed out with the toes of his right foot and sent the fruit peel abruptly flying out from beneath the table.

The waiter was setting a fast pace with plates in hand when he set one foot on the fruit pool, stumbled with a exclamation of surprise and fell forwards. The plate in his hand flew out and hurtled towards Claude and Irene from behind.

Claude and Irene reacted upon hearing the commotion and suddenly turned around. Claude's right hand abruptly rose and deftly caught the plate crashing towards them. At the same time, Han Shuo's left hand flashed out like lightning and with a flick of his pinky finger, the grey-white psychedelic aphrodisiac landed quietly in Claude's wine glass.

"Be careful when you walk." At this moment, Claude's brow was furrowed as his right hand handed over the plate he'd caught to the waiter, who had stood up once again. His voice was displeased.

"Thank you noble knight. I will be careful in the future!" The waiter fearfully took the plate from Claude and quickly left after a bow.

Han Shuo was composed and collected. His head was lowered as he lifted his glass, drinking wine as if nothing had happened, like he hadn't noticed what had just happened.

Claude and Irene didn't say much to Han Shuo afterwards. Claude fawningly talked with Irene, putting away glass after glass of Purple Leylan with psychedelic aphrodisiac mixed in. Irene's expressions were cool, responding to Claude on and off. It looked like she had yet to accept Claude's love.

"You guys take your time. I still have some matters to attend to and will be heading off now!" Han Shuo knew with certainty that the psychedelic aphrodisiac powder had been absorbed by Claude when he'd drained down several glasses of Purple Leylan. He immediately stood up and dropped this sentence.

Claude and Irene were originally derisive of Han Shuo to begin with. They'd absolutely paid no heed to him and wished devoutly that Han Shuo would leave, as opposed to being an irritating sight in front of them. They waved their hands in unison after Han Shuo's words, indicating that Han Shuo should have left earlier if possible. After a bit of time, they no longer concealed the scorn on their faces.

Leaving the hotel with a smile, Han Shuo stood alone in an undetectable street corner beside the hotel. After a while, a hotly-flushed Claude and a slightly pink cheeked Irene walked out side by side, heading for the north side of Drol.

The sky was dark by now and the festivities of the town of Drol had reached their peak of the day. Adventurers formed in groups of three or five staggered drunkenly, loudly down the streets. Han Shuo followed the two noiselessly, and stood by the side of the street, waiting for a good show upon seeing the two of them enter a luxurious hotel.

According to Han Shuo's observations just now, it seemed that Claude had yet to move Irene's heart. If at this moment, under the influence of the psychedelic aphrodisiac, Claude did anything that exceed boundaries, he was sure to be severely beaten by Irene.

Fruit in hand, Han Shuo ate leisurely and thought wickedly. No disturbances had come from the hotel after a while. Just when Han Shuo was beginning to lose his patience, the hotly flushed Clark suddenly walked out from the hotel and walked onto the streets with great haste.

Han Shuo's thoughts moved. He hadn't thought that Claude's willpower would be so strong, that he hadn't fully lost all rational thought by now, but judging from Claude's appearance, Han Shuo knew that he wouldn't be able to hold out for much longer and he quickly caught up to Claude, following him from afar.

Indeed, he'd only made it about ten or so meters when Claude slightly lost control after a wave from a heavily made up, scantily clad older woman. He panted heavily as he made for the alley, looking like he would resolve his biological needs at close proximity.

"Eh? Wasn't that Claude?" An exclamation sounded from the adjacent street. Han Shuo swiveled his head to sudden joy, inwardly exclaiming “Even the heavens are helping me!”.

The light major teacher, Beacher, and a few light major students happened to be passing by. One of the female students with particularly sharp eyes just so happened to see Claude and the coy, revealing woman dart into the alley and had cried out in astonishment.

“No way, how could Claude be that kind of person? He is a noble knight and wouldn’t demean himself in places like this. Not to mention that Claude is pursuing Irene right now, so there is no way that he’d do so.” Beacher frowned and said in unconvinced confusion.

“It really was him, I’m sure I didn’t see improperly. If you don’t believe me we can go inside and check.” The female student, who had spoken first, thought for a moment, and then said decisively.

“Come Katie, it’s none of your business here. Don’t go poking your nose where it doesn’t belong.” Beacher was silent for a moment, and then hurried the students to leave quickly.

Katie looked angrily at the alley and stomped her foot after a moment’s thought. “How can this be allowed?! I’m going to tell Irene. If Claude isn’t in his room, then it must be him. I will absolutely not allow Claude to defraud Irene’s feelings.”

Katie left in a fast, huffy pace as soon as she’d finished talking, making a beeline for the hotel that Irene was staying at. The other light major students looked askance at each other when she left, not knowing what to do.

Han Shuo almost couldn’t hold his raucous laughter in. Who would’ve thought that things would work out like this? Han Shuo had been planning on doing things himself and think of a scheme to lure Irene here. Who knew that Claude was really so unlucky? Looks like it would be difficult for him to avoid bad luck today even if he tried.

After a while, an Irene with a frigid expression and a huffy Katie walked swiftly from afar. One look at Irene’s expression was enough to know that she was feeling incredibly wrathful. Claude would find it tough to get out of this one.

“Claude was indeed not in the hotel. Looks like I didn’t see incorrectly! That must have been him just now. Irene, I think if we should go in now we’ll be able to catch him in the act. How could he commit such despicable acts as a noble knight! Claude is too disgusting.” Katie looked angrily at the alley after she’d arrived.

Irene nodded with an icy face, wasting not a moment more with talk and grabbed Katie in a rush to the alley. Beacher and the others were afraid that a messy situation would develop and followed after a moment’s hesitation.

When they’d all gone in, Han Shuo unhurriedly made his way into the alleyway with a sinister face dressed in an evil smile.

Chapter 50: A harsh reality

A ear-piercing round of screams first sounded, then all sorts of noises followed, coming from a house on the left side of the alley. After a while, Beacher and the others came out dragging a bedraggled Claude, who wasn't quite there.

Irene's face was full of rage as she grimly lectured Claude while staring at him. She spoke vehemently, "Claude, you're disgusting. I never want to see you again! Katie, let's go."

With the way that things had developed, Han Shuo knew that his revenge had been exacted and that there was no further need to stick around. When he saw Irene and Katie walking quickly in his direction, he hastily hid himself and leisurely made his way back to the hotel.

Back in the hotel, Han Shuo washed up and then sat cross legged on the bed to practice magic. The magical yuan slowly expanded his meridians inch by inch. Han Shuo grit his teeth against the heart wrenching pain and continuously circulated his magical yuan according to the instructions of the "open passages realm".

Unbearable pain often accompanied the process of practicing magic. This caused Han Shuo's personality to shift from its previously lackadaisicalness to firmly resolute. Whether it was his willpower or ability to stoically endure pain, Han Shuo had significantly increased both.

Han Shuo's entire personality and character had unknowingly continuously changed with the advent of practicing magic. As his strength slowly increased, the previously timid and cowering Han Shuo had already experienced great changes. The way he viewed and understood things were vastly different from the thoughts that he had held prior.

A solid, dull footstep suddenly sounded in Han Shuo's heart. Han Shuo abruptly stopped all magic practice, held his breath, and concentrated. All his bodily functions instantaneously sank into a frozen and unmoving status.

The footsteps that had sounded until now had been from the southern intersection of the town of Drol and the Dark Forest. Based on the dullness and rhythm of the thumps, Han Shuo could draw the conclusion that this came from a magical creature with high speed. This creature's weight was definitely heavier than a battlesteed, and their numbers consisted of more than a few.

Creasing his brow, Han Shuo thought for a while and walked out of the hotel, slowly moving towards the direction of the magical creatures, wanting to see what the situation was.

Just as Han Shuo had emerged from the hotel and arrived at the southern streets of Drol, two figures had also rushed over with a look of haste. It was an elderly, thin wizard and a female elven archer with green-tipped ears. The two displayed expressions of shock seeing Han Shuo upon arrival, as if they hadn't thought that Han Shuo would be here.

"Little fellow, what are you doing here?" The thin, small wizard gazed at Han Shuo and asked with a smile.

From their cautious attitudes, Han Shuo understood that they had most likely also detected the disturbance coming from the south. Weighing things up internally, Han Shuo made a slight bow and responded, "Noble wizard, I've become separated from my companions. They said they would return here after a few days, so I've been waiting here."

The wizard nodded and frowned in consideration. He said to the female elven archer next to him, "Blanche, go scout and see if it's wolf riders from the orcs. They always send wolf riders every year before winter to raid and loot the villages on the outer edge of the Empire.

But the town of Drol is in a unique location and is filled with large quantities of adventurers and mercenaries. The orcs had never sent wolf riders to attack Drol, why would they act so oddly this time? Not to mention that there was still quite a bit of time before winter!"

"Yes, Master Felix." Upon hearing the old wizard Felix's words, the female elven archer called Blanche immediately headed south, floating in front of Han Shuo like a gust of wind.

"Little fellow, the town of Drol isn't a peaceful place. It's late at night, so you should head back early to rest. Your companions should come looking for you when they return, so there's no need to continue waiting here." Felix looked at Han Shuo with a smile as he tried to convince Han Shuo.

"Alright, then I'll be heading back now." Han Shuo responded calmly and started picking his way back as soon as he'd finished speaking.

After Han Shuo had left, Felix mused as he stared oddly at Han Shuo's retreating figure. He finally murmured to himself after a while. "I must be overthinking the situation... there's no way that this kid is more perceptive me, a wind archmage!"

On his way back to his hotel, Han Shuo noticed that a few others walked out from nearby hotels with the same surprised expression, hastily making their way to the southern street. It looks like they too had detected the disturbance and had gone to the southern street to check things out.

"Bryan, I have some matters with you! Come here for a second!" On the way back, Han Shuo bumped into Claude on the street to the hotel. Claude's face was heavily overcast, and it appeared that he was in an exceedingly bad mood.

His heart skipping a beat, Han Shuo had a vague premonition of unease. He could strongly feel repressed rage emanating from Claude. Although Claude looked at him with a calm gaze, his teeth were gnashing slightly, still enabling Han Shuo to feel the strong ripples in his emotions.

Staring at Claude dumbly, Han Shuo thought furiously. At this moment, Han Shuo understood that his actions in the hotel just now had still been too heavy handed and impulsive. When Claude had sobered up, he would have surely detected his body's condition and certainly deduced that it was something caused by the Purple Leylan in the hotel. Claude wasn't a stupid person. Only Irene and Han Shuo had been at the table then, and Irene would never do anything like this. Connecting the dots to when the waiter suddenly tripped, Claude must have sussed out the entire situation.

"Okay." Han Shuo thought carefully and knew that the situation was bad. He was prepared for a brutal beating from Claude as he followed behind the knight, walking slowly out of Drol and arriving at a secluded patch of forest to the south of Drol.

Moonlight filtered through the forest as bugs chirped lightly nearby. However, Han Shuo's sensitive ears were able to catch the low breathing from Claude's strongly repressed fury.

Looks like it'll be quite a beating. Han Shuo thought wryly, but didn't feel too much fear. He had gotten used to the beatings during this time and knew his body's situation quite well. He knew that the usual type of blows would be unable to hurt him, so his heart was relatively calm.

Pa.

Just when he was thinking wryly, a ringing slap sent him staggering towards the left before he was able to react preventatively. It was a good thing that Han Shuo's body far outstripped normal people's. He steadied himself in the mess, regained his footing, and scrunched up his face as he smiled wryly at Claude.

"You damned lowly slave. Pig! Who do you think you are to scheme against me!?" Claude's firmly repressed anger had finally exploded. An ugly, vehement face stared at Han Shuo as his usual, sunny, gentlemanly demeanor had long since vanished above the clouds.

Pilapala. A wave of attacks rained down on Han Shuo's body. Han Shuo clutched at his head with both hands and didn't raise them to defend himself, taking the hits from Claude's thundering rage. He finally abruptly curled into a ball and fell to the ground, looking like he couldn't take any more hits.

"Well, does that hurt? I won't let you die so easily. Do you know who I am? I am Claude Asche, the son of the commander of the Empire's Gryphon Legion, Commander Bob Asche. You lowly errand boy dares to scheme against me and ruin my relationship with Irene. I will make you experience agony and pain in full before letting you die slowly. Ahaha." Claude stared venomously at Han Shuo as he drew his longsword with a cold smile, walking slowly towards Han Shuo.

Up until now, Han Shuo had finally understood that he had always committed a huge error. Whether it was Fitch or Bach, his methods had always embodied a large amount of risk. With his status as an errand slave, no matter who killed him, they wouldn't have to endure too much backlash. Even if Bach killed him, the Academy would probably only admonish him for a few words and demand a few gold coins in compensation.

Han Shuo had originally thought that Claude would at most brutally beat him up for a prank like this, but the result now had finally facilitated Han Shuo in understanding the harsh reality. Claude not only wanted him to die this time, but also wanted him to fully experience agony and pain before dying. This was the harsh reality.

At the moment, Han Shuo finally understood what kind of world this was. Status and position were a foundational, integral existence. A yawning difference in status existed between the two, allowing Claude to kill him without reservations and without a need to bear any particular responsibility. Claude had called him to this deserted forest because he didn't want to ruin his noble status and self. Even if he'd killed Han Shuo in Drol, it would have been quite matter of fact with no one thinking about it twice.

Growth always came at a cost. Han Shuo curled up on the ground, still emitting loud wails and pleas for mercy. A heart, that only held vague thoughts of evil, slowly hardened with cold.

"I will dice you into several pieces, letting you wail as you bleed. You will slowly, fully experience pain before dying. Remember your status in your next life. You're a mere errand slave, a pig. Never attempt to challenge the temper of your superiors." Claude snickered sinisterly as the long sword in his hand pierced towards the chest of a Han Shuo who had seemed too long since losing the ability to defend himself.

At this moment, the continuous howls suddenly disappeared as Han Shuo's curled figure abruptly moved, rolling towards Claude's feet. His speed was such that it caught Claude off guard.

When Claude was about to dodge, he suddenly emitted a ghastly wail. A few iron needles stuck out from the tops of his feet, firmly nailing his feet to the ground. A wave of bone-cutting pain emanated from his lower abdomen. Claude lowered his head to find a dagger sticking out of his stomach. Han Shuo looked at him with a cold and distant gaze, the look in his eyes giving Claude a very foreign feeling.

“I am the son of the commander of the Gryphon League. You damned errand slave, how dare you harm me?” Claude’s body was wracked with pain as he yelled furiously with a weak voice.

“Thank you for letting me know the harsh truth of reality. It’s because of your vaunted status that not only will I harm you, I’m going to kill you!”

After saying this words in a remote tone, another iron needle appeared in Han Shuo’s right hand and directly pierced through Claude’s throat amidst Claude’s terror-filled screams.

Chapter 51: The calm aftermath after killing someone

This wasn't the first time that Han Shuo had killed someone, but compared to killing forest trolls, the impact Han Shuo's heart received from slaughtering Claude was exceedingly great.

After all, forest trolls were a different race from him, and were renowned robbers. Han Shuo killing them felt as natural as killing magical creatures, but Claude was completely different from them. Han Shuo had been forced to kill him because he knew within his heart that if Claude didn't die, Han Shuo could put all thoughts of peacefully living his life in the future out of his mind.

Watching Claude weaken and sag into a pool of blood, Han Shuo felt a bit numb in that moment. There was an empty feeling in his heart, he hadn't hesitated when he made his move, and it was only when he watched Claude die in front of him that a feeling of nervousness grew in Han Shuo.

Claude was a noble, and the youngest son of the commander of the Empire's Gryphon Legion. If news of this matter leaked, only death awaited Han Shuo.

Gazing at Claude's corpse, Han Shuo stared dumbly into space for a while. His originally slightly panicked expression became more and more resolute and harshly cold.

Finally, Han Shuo rearranged his clothes and stood up, walking up to Claude with a calm face and rummaging through his clothes. He poured out a few gold coins from his money bag, a crystal card, and some scattered medicine.

After thinking for a bit, Han Shuo only put away the gold coins. He set aside the potentially incriminating crystal card and Claude's other belongings.

A little skeleton, wielding a bone knife, appeared in front of Han Shuo after his incantation had finished. Han Shuo searched out a desolate clearing as one man and one skeleton wielded bone knife and dagger spent a few minutes digging a deep hole. After burying Claude in the hole, Han Shuo carefully cleaned up the traces of blood that Claude had left behind. He even slowly covered up the traces in which he'd fallen down and rolled around.

Circling around the forest patch and confirming that no clues had been left behind, Han Shuo did not return along the original way. Rather, he made an additional circle and dug a deep hole to the north of Drol, burying all of Claude's belongings. Finally, he returned to Drol using another street.

He did all this because he was careful and cautious. They hadn't garnered anyone's attention on the way to the forest with Claude earlier because Claude had intentionally done so.

Now that Han Shuo had killed him and carefully buried his body, logically speaking, no one should discover it. Even if someone unintentionally discovered Claude's body, Han Shuo had taken all the belongings off the body, creating the impression of murder in the course of robbery. These things happened quite often in the town of Drol and should be able to conceal the original reason of death.

After Han Shuo had dealt with these loose ends, he concealed himself in the surroundings of the hotel of Irene and the others for the next two days, silently observing the movements of the light major students. He discovered that whether it was Irene or Beacher, none of them came looking for Claude. It looked like they thought that Claude had wronged them first and so left him alone.

Claude was certainly the one who understood his bodily condition the most. No matter how he tried to explain under those circumstances, it was more than likely that not many would believe his words, and judging from the timing in which Claude had come for him and his understanding of the psychedelic aphrodisiac, he more or less surmised that Claude had come looking for revenge as soon as he'd sobered up, and hadn't had time to explain anything to Irene or Beacher.

After two days of observation, Han Shuo finally relaxed and let down his guard upon seeing that Irene and Beacher made no moves to look for Claude and only focused their attentions on spending money as they visited various weapons and armor vendors as well as pharmacists.

At dusk on this night, Han Shuo did not venture out again to keep an eye on Irene and Beacher, but instead stayed inside to quietly practice magic. He repeatedly expanded the width of his body's meridians and improved their pliability.

Han Shuo was seated primly on the edge of his bed, completely naked, sweat pouring down his entire body, starting from his forehead. The tendons of his body jumped as they bulged out like endless numbers of worms moving through the surface of his body. It looked even more cringe worthy and scary than even the most evil tattoo.

During this entire process, a sudden tremor ran through Han Shuo's mind as he sank into a senseless realm. For the moment, he forgot himself, forgot time, and was like a sculpture, without life. Only a faint hint of black splendor circulated beneath his skin.

Dondondon.

A sudden round of fierce knocking abruptly awakened Han Shuo. When Han Shuo came back to himself, he took stock of himself internally and understood that he must have unknowingly sunk into the demonic mental state just now.

Dondondon.

The knocking was still continuing and Han Shuo was a bit irritated that his training had been interrupted. He grabbed a random towel and wrapped it around himself, saying with irritation, "Coming. Coming!"

When the door was opened, Han Shuo received the shock of his life. The irritable expression on his face vanished without a trace as it immediately transformed into a smiling face. He said merrily, "Eh, it's you guys. I've been waiting a long time for you. You've finally come back."

Standing outside the door, Fanny and Lisa looked a bit worn out and their hair was a bit messed up. They carried items in the hands and packs on their back, looking quite tired from the road. It appeared that they'd just returned from the Dark Forest.

"You Bryan, you actually made it back to Drol such a long time ago. We were worried about you for quite a while. Oh, how'd you get money to live in such an expensive room? If it's wasn't for the owner's certainty, I truly wouldn't have believed that you were the one living in this room." Fanny's clear eyes swept over Han Shuo and she spoke with a bit of a bite to her words.

"Bryan, what happened the day you left? You didn't return for two days and I thought something happened to you?" Lisa said.

"I got lost after I left, and when I found the original camp, I discovered that you'd long since left. I couldn't find you guys, so I went one step ahead and returned to the town of Drol to wait for you. Good thing that everyone is fine. That's wonderful." Han Shuo smiled slightly and faintly explained himself.

Fanny raked a gaze over Han Shuo, thought for a moment and spoke to Lisa beside her. "Lisa, go and finish arranging the rooms with Master Gene and the rest. I have some things to discuss with Bryan."

Lisa looked at Fanny with some suspicion and said, "Master Fanny, that incident has passed for quite some time now. Bryan even saved our lives... are you still holding a grudge against him?"

Her face reddened when Fanny heard Lisa mention last time's incident again. She said furiously, "No, I have other things to discuss with him. Go select a room for me and I'll be over shortly."

Lisa still wasn't fully at ease upon hearing Fanny's explanation, but didn't say anything further as she turned to leave, muttering something in her mouth.

As soon as Lisa had left, Fanny raked her gaze over Han Shuo and looked at the room she'd once lived in, seeming to remember what had happened last time as her cheeks flushed even redder. She humphed lightly and said, "Aren't you going to invite me in?"

“Eh, Master Fanny, this way please.” Han Shuo was taken aback and hurriedly turned his body to the side. When Fanny had stepped inside, he stuck a head out for a look in the hallway and hastily shut the door tight, like he was acting with a guilty conscience.

“What are you doing so surreptitiously? I ask you, what happened the day after you left camp? How do you have the gold coins to stay in this room?” Fanny nailed Han Shuo with a patrolling look after she sat down.

Han Shuo still hadn't fully recovered from killing Claude. Upon hearing Fanny's words, he was a bit surprised. He thought for a bit and then explained with a laugh, “When I left the camp that day, I stayed nearby practicing necromancy magic. I met an injured Windblade Wolf afterwards. I kept chasing the injured Windblade Wolf and finally killed it when it wasn't paying attention. When I returned to the camp, I made my way back here after I realized that you had gone.

After returning to Drol, I sold the Windblade Wolf core and pelt. That's how I got the gold coins. I thought that you guys would likely be staying here again after returning, which is why I rented the room to wait for you guys. This is what happened.”

Fanny didn't immediately speak after Han Shuo had finished, but rather gazed upon Han Shuo in apparent thought. She exhaled lightly after a while, “Bryan, you're truly completely different from before!”

He started and managed to squeeze out an honest smile. He scratched his head, “Really? Where am I different?”

“In many ways. Your appearance, body, and height, as well as your personality and expressions when you talk are all much too different from how I knew you before. It looks like you were the one who changed the most after experiencing the trials of the Dark Forest. All the students have undergone some changes after constantly facing battles of life and death, but who would've thought that your change would've been the biggest? How shocking!” Fanny stared dumbly at Han Shuo and said with a face of severity.

Han Shuo understood that during this time's outing in the Dark Forest, unbeknownst to him, a change had truly occurred in the way he viewed things. This change had accompanied the increases in his strength and the dangers that he had faced. After killing Claude with his own hands the day before yesterday and a serious round of reflection, Han Shuo had gained a clearer understanding of the harsh realities of this world, and with it, his heart had become colder and crueler.

“Master Fanny, you left a note saying that you guys had met the two man-eating monsters. Did you get into a conflict with them in the end?” Han Shuo laughed lightly and didn’t explain things in further detail, but rather started asking Fanny what had happened to them afterwards.

“Of course, the two man-eating monsters kept following us. They even colluded with a few forest trolls to attack us. We finally made it out, but our paths were deviated significantly from our original direction because we were avoiding the man-eating monsters and the forest trolls. That’s why we returned to Drol so late.” Fanny responded.

Nodding, Han Shuo was about to open his mouth, when he suddenly frowned and abruptly stood up. He said with a face full of seriousness, “Looks like we’ve got trouble.”

“Everyone on alert! The orc wolf riders have appeared in the southern part of Drol. They are headed this way, everyone make ready for battle!”

Large yells suddenly sounded from the streets outside the hotel, all having to do with the imminent invasion from the orc wolf riders.

Chapter 52: Wolf riders invade

Han Shuo had been talking with Fanny when he immediately yelled upon hearing the voices ringing out from outside, “Master Fanny, let’s hurry and meet up with them!”

Fanny didn’t mince words and started for the door to Han Shuo’s room in a rush as soon as his voice had sounded. After Fanny had left, Han Shuo randomly flung off the bathrobe that had been wrapped around his body and quickly put on his clothes. He carefully put away the iron needles, dagger, crossbow, and bottles of medicine he’d bought over the past few days and finally left the room.

Adventurers’ darting bodies and merchant’s loudly calling voices were apparent all over the main street. These people had been drinking in their hotels or enjoying themselves in places of temptation, but they had all immediately left their rooms when they heard news of the wolf riders’ invasion and surged onto the main street.

Adventurers and mercenaries all lived their lives on the edge, living on the edge of a knife’s blade, and so were long used to such dangers. When they left their rooms, they all methodically organized their weapons and armor, congregating onto the South street according to the origin of the voices.

Han Shuo walked out from the room and realized that even the hotel owner had grabbed a longsword when he’d walked back to the front desk of the hotel. The owner was standing in front of the door with a fierce expression on his face. It seemed that the citizens of Drol were indeed fierce and valorous.

Fanny and the others were all standing in front of the door. All the students hastily put their belongings down in the room and hurriedly rushed out again. After the adventure to the Dark Forest, these young, sapling mages had learned how to be composed and self possessed, and didn’t cry out randomly in panic.

“Bryan, hurry and come over here. We must set out for South street immediately. Since orc wolf riders dare to invade the Empire's town of Drol, we mustn't let them succeed!" Lisa immediately raised her hand high and called out as soon as she saw Han Shuo appear, as if deathly afraid that Han Shuo wouldn't be able to see her.

Apart from Fanny and the others in front of the hotel doors, a couple other adventurers and mercenaries had also formed into groups of three to five people. The necromancy students continued to walk out of their rooms. Each one was armed to the teeth and bristling with weaponry. Fanny counted heads shortly after Han Shuo had made his way toward Lisa's side. When she discovered that they were all accounted for, she immediately shouted, "Follow me to South street and don't get separated."

Han Shuo followed behind Fanny on a main street crowded with figures, arriving at South street shortly thereafter. When they'd arrived, Han Shuo saw that almost a hundred adventurers and mercenaries were nearby. The old mage, Felix, and female elf, Blanche, that Han Shuo had seen last time were also there. Judging from the way things looked, they were acting as leaders. Felix was hovering in the air and was loudly shouting something.

"Eh, this old mage can hover in midair using levitation magic. It looks like he must be at least of the archmage level." Gene exclaimed in shock after they'd arrived and started explaining to the students. "When a mage trains to a certain realm, he/she will be able to use levitation magic to fly. However, only mages who've reached the archmage level can cast levitation magic. Therefore, mages ,who can fly, are all without a doubt noble and exceedingly powerful characters."

"Brave warriors of the Empire, the orcs' wolf riders are moving towards the town of Drol. According to my observations, the wolf riders are moving in a formation of five hundred. As an encampment of the Empire, our town of Drol has zero tolerance for being trampled on by these savages. Warriors raise your weapons and give them a taste of the fury of the Empire's warriors!" Felix hovered in midair and clutched an exquisite magic staff, embedded with sapphires, in his right hand, speaking loudly to raise morale.

"Eh, aren't these the people from the necromancy major? Heh heh, fancy meeting you here.” Beacher’s voice suddenly sounded from the side at this moment. Han Shuo twisted his head to see that the light major students had all cast their eyes this way.

“Hello Master Beacher, to think we would run into you here. I trust that you have gained rich rewards from this time’s outing?” Gene nodded and smiled in greeting, asking his questions afterwards.

“Nothing much, no big rewards, just that the students have truly improved.” Beacher responded faintly with a smile.

Dull, thudding sounds, that originated from the south, sounded in the distance. Under the instructions of Felix and Blanche, the warriors had long since armed themselves and bristled with weaponry as they stood in the front. Mages, archers, and priests stood in the back, separated from the warriors by a distance of five to six meters. They had taken out their magic staffs and gazed intently towards the south with grave expressions.

Seeing that everyone had assumed their positions, Beacher and Gene didn’t waste time in furthering their idle chitchat, instead moving to stand with the mages. Although Han Shuo’s body had greatly improved, he wasn’t so dumb as to stand in the front and draw attention to himself. He too followed Fanny and stood with the mages.

Just as everyone had taken up their respective positions according to profession, dull, clapping sounds sounded like dull drums in the hearts of the assembled people. A concentrated, heavy sense of strong aura slowly found its way into everyone’s hearts. The wolf-riding orc wolf riders slowly materialized out of the flying dust cloud and into everyone’s vision.

A grave, killing aura immediately enveloped the entire town of Drol. The wolf riders immediately started charging forward as soon as they’d appeared, accompanied by sharp howls and screams. The longswords in their hands flashed with cold light, and the strong flare of aura from five hundred wolf riders charging in union immediately gave others a strong sense of oppression.

“Mages ready, release your magic on my mark!” Felix was relatively calm as he hovered in the air, gazing down on the wolf riders. He spoke calmly only when the wolf riders had truly started charging.

“Everyone be careful! Don’t let anything happen to you.” Fanny was also a bit nervous at this moment and she turned to give a few reminders to the students standing next to her. Just as Fanny was about to remind Han Shuo, she suddenly discovered that there was a type of numbing, cold severity in his eyes that were set in a face of calm. There was no panic at all. He gripped a sharp dagger in his hand, and a frigid aura slowly started emanating from the dagger.

Noticing Fanny’s gaze, Han Shuo’s concentration lapsed and the bone-piercing, frigidly cold aura that he had infused the dagger with as a result of guiding the magical yuan in his left hand into the dagger after activating the Mystical Glacial Spellfire suddenly faded away, without a trace.

“Is something the matter Master Fanny?” Han Shuo looked at Fanny and asked with an honest smile hanging on his face once again.

“No, nothing. You be careful!” Fanny looked at Han Shuo and responded in a bit of a weird tone.

At this moment, Fanny had finally realized that the honest, dumb smile that Han Shuo had worn on his face was merely his disguise. The calmness and composure that he had while facing danger was most likely Han Shuo’s true state.

Damnit, you lied to everyone. I’ll make you pay for that sooner or later. Fanny thought fiercely in her heart on one hand, and on the other surreptitiously appraised Han Shuo, suddenly feeling that a calmly serious Han Shuo had a very different quality to him.

Chapter 53: The perils of the town of Drol

“Loose!”

Felix’s high call drew open the curtains for magic attacks.

Suddenly, all the mages next to Han Shuo and the others started chanting magical incantations. A column of sharp windblades, multiple large, blazing fireballs, several ice bolts shaped like spikes, lightning landing violently from the skies, and even the longswords from the light major students’ Radiant Slash all abruptly appeared, rushing towards the charging wolf riders.

Fanny and Gene also chanted their incantations and skeletons and zombies staggered out, one after another. They ran out from the side of the foremost warriors and rushed at the wolf riders.

The orcs on the backs of wolves were engulfed in magic in an instant and suffered brutal blows. Beneath the howling of the windblades, multiple injuries appeared on the wolf riders and the large wolves they rode on. When the large fireballs came crashing down, several wolf riders were completely swallowed up by the blazing fire. Soon after, the ice bolts and lightning also took down ten or so wolf rider lives.

However, there were five hundred or so wolf riders. When this wave of magic came crashing down, it only killed the thirty or forty wolf riders in the very front. The rest of the wolf riders did not display the slightest hint of fear or cowardice upon seeing their companions die. They continued to thunder forward in excitement, caring not a whit for their deaths.

Just as the mages were about to sing the second wave of magical incantations, crossbows appeared unbeknownst to anyone in the hands of the charging wolf riders. They raised the crossbows and clouds of sharp arrows flew like the wind, soaring over the first row of heavily armored warriors and making for the mages and archers.

“Everyone be careful!” The elven archer, Blanche, called out in a melodious voice, also directing the archers to counterattack.

The mages had been chanting incantations, planning to attack the wolf riders. When they saw the sharp arrows flying towards themselves, they immediately changed the direction of the magical attacks and released waves of magic to crash down onto the arrows in the midair, destroying them before they could strike their targets.

However, not all the sharp arrows were destroyed by magic. Ten or so sharp missiles still shot down, and the strong force behind them immediately pierced two thunder novice mages to death. Three or so mages more or less suffered some sort of injuries. At this moment, the three priests suddenly started singing healing incantations, taking care of the three injured mages.

Because this wave of magic had all been used on countering the sharp arrows, the wolf riders hadn't suffered much damage. They rushed over with an even faster speed. The large wolves charged over with an extremely fierce aura. The skeletons and zombies, that bore the initial brunt of the attacks, were demolished within seconds.

Beneath the charge of the large wolves, the lowest level skeletal warriors were abruptly trampled into bits of bone and didn't have much effect at all. The zombie warriors stood up to the onslaught for a brief moment, but under the slices of the orcs' longswords, the heads of ten or so zombie warriors were simultaneously sent flying as they fell to the ground.

"Humph. The dark creatures of the necromancy major are indeed useless!" Upon seeing that the dark creatures from the necromancy major weren't having much effect, Irene and a few other light major students started jeering at them.

Han Shuo grasped a dagger in his hand, his entire being still calm and composed. He eyes gazed at the figures of the wolf riders in the distance, completely ignoring the mockery coming from Irene and the light major students.

The crossbows in the wolf riders' hands rose again, and another hail of arrows rained down. The mages in the back all used magic to defend themselves. A couple mages with more training destroyed the sharp arrows that flew towards them and were still able to continuously release magic to attack the wolf riders careening towards them.

Five sharp arrows suddenly shot over with a whooshing sound, heading towards the students of the necromancy major. Fanny and Gene's facial expressions changed as they both sent out bone arrows, destroying three of them in midair. One of them had veered off course and shot towards a corner in which no one was standing, whereas the other made a beeline for Amy.

At this moment, Amy became panicked and started chanting magic. Gene and Fanny were also a bit anxious and also started to swiftly chant magic, but the speed in which they all chanted at was obviously slower than the speed of the sharp arrow.

A dagger suddenly drew a cold line through the air and flew into the sky like a bolt of lightning. A sharp crack sounded out as the arrow that had been flying towards Amy broke into several pieces. At the same moment, Han Shuo's body suddenly squirmed out, stopping in front of Amy and catching the dagger before it landed on the ground.

"Thank you Bryan!" Amy smiled widely after the crisis had been averted and was full of gratitude towards Han Shuo.

"You're welcome!" Han Shuo nodded with a faint smile, returning once again to Fanny and Lisa's side with dagger in hand, surveying the surroundings with a face full of calm.

Finally, after paying the price of seventy injured or dead wolf riders, the wolf riders broke through the constant waves of magic attacks and came into direct conflict with the warriors of Drol. A large battle suddenly commenced with fifty to sixty warriors armed to the teeth, wielding broadswords and long spears. There were even ten or so knights wielding lances, fighting with the wolf riders from the back of their battlesteeds.

The mages chanted their magics as they flew across the air in glorious sparkles, landing on the wolf riders in the back. The entire southern part of the town of Drol had sunken into the heat of battle amidst the sounds of violent explosions.

Han Shuo, Fanny, and the others were situated behind the warriors and continuously chanted magic. Bolt after bolt of bone spears and arrows flew out towards the orc wolf riders that were charging at the defensive line of warriors.

Felix, hovering in midair, became the main target of all the orc wolf rider crossbows. More than ten sharp bolts came whistling towards him, but Felix showed no trace of panic. He chanted an advanced wind magic after which a ten meter tornado formed in the air behind the wolf riders. Wolf riders were swallowed up wherever the tornado touched, and ghastly screams and wails sounded endlessly.

After the tornado had appeared, Felix gave a wave of the magic staff in his hand and more than ten windblades instantaneously flew out from his body, demolishing the sharp bolts that flew to him. At the same time, a magic shield appeared and completely covered him. The few sharp missiles that finally made it past his magic were blocked by the magic shield. Felix didn't suffer any harm to his body whatsoever.

"So strong! That's the true power of a mage!" The light students were watching Felix's relaxed expressions besides Han Shuo and all of them displayed expressions of adoration and worship as they sighed with emotions.

Just as everyone was reflecting on how amazing Felix was, the previously relaxed Felix suddenly gave a great yell. "Oh dear, more wolf riders have appeared in the distance. There also seems to be a few orc shamans with them. Let's retreat! Everyone split up and make for the city of Zajoski."

Felix's words immediately had a huge impact on everyone assembled. Han Shuo was the first to react as he grabbed Fanny's small hand and said calmly, "Follow me, hurry."

Fanny was startled and when she saw Han Shuo's gravely calm expression, the curses that had made their way to her mouth transformed into, "Alright, but where do you want to go?"

"To where the battlesteeds are kept. We must hurry and find the battlesteeds. Only on the backs of horses will we have the chance to escape to Zajoski, otherwise it will be difficult to guarantee our escape from the grasp of the wolf riders.” Han Shuo’s mind was thinking very quickly at this moment and he spoke with decisiveness and grim determination.

Fanny immediately reacted likewise when she heard Han Shuo’s explanations, calling out hurriedly. “All students, follow me.”

Han Shuo knew that Fanny agreed with his plan when he heard her call out. He turned his head to see Lisa looking covetously at the hand that he’d used to grab Fanny’s small hand. Han Shuo’s expression turned wry as he also reached out a hand to grasp Lisa’s hand.

He then paid no attention to either of their expressions and hauled them off to where the battlesteeds were kept.

Chapter 54: Dog eat dog

Because of Felix's words, the originally smoothly cooperating warriors and mages, that were defending against the orc wolf riders, abruptly sank into panic. People started becoming distracted from defense and instead frantically contemplated their means of escape.

In the span of a moment, an impregnable defense collapsed. Apart from the warriors in the front, who were fighting as they retreated, the mages and the archers panicked and escaped in all directions.

Han Shuo had grabbed Fanny and Lisa's wrists and was forcefully hauling the two with great haste to where the battlesteeds were stabled. Behind Han Shuo, Gene directed the other necromancy major students to follow closely behind him.

After a few rounds of life and death battles, Han Shuo was no longer naive nor terror stricken when faced with danger. He quietly thought of what actions he should take next as he calmly sped forward.

Also retreating with Han Shuo and the others, like tidewaters, were a few other mages and archers. If these people blocked Han Shuo's forward movement, they would've been shoved to the side without a moment's hesitation.

The archers and mages were hard pressed to increase their speed in the chaos of the crowd. Somehow, with Han Shuo as a meat shield, they managed to rush to the front after a moment's work.

After fifteen minutes, Han Shuo had finally hauled Fanny and Lisa to where the battlesteeds were stabled, with Gene and the others following far behind. The master of the place had also gone to the southern streets to observe the earlier events and had only left a servant inside to watch over the horses. Han Shuo directly broke down the door and pulled Fanny and Lisa in the direction of the stables in the back.

"What are you doing? Just what are you doing?" The elderly servant immediately stood up in a panic when he saw Han Shuo break down the door and rush towards the stables. He yelled angrily at them.

“The orc wolf riders have already fought their way here. If you continue to stay, you’ll face only death. We’re here to pick up the battlesteeds that we’ve stabled here. If you want to live, then hurry, choose a battlesteed, and flee!” Han Shuo explained calmly as he rushed towards the stables.

The elderly servant had already heard the chaos and commotion from outside at this time. He blanked for a second and then also made swiftly for the stables. It looked like he’d accepted Han Shuo’s suggestion.

Han Shuo finally released Fanny and Lisa’s little hands and his eyes made a desperate sweep of the surroundings. His eyes landed on a handsome battlesteed and vaulted onto its back without another word. He landed on the back of the horse in a second, swung the dagger in his hand, and slashed through the ropes that restrained the battlesteed.

He turned his head to find that Gene and some of the light major students had also made it to the stables. All were panting and joined Fanny and Lisa in looking for the horses they’d stabled here last time.

“Are you all idiots? The orc wolf riders will be here any second, what are you looking around for? Not to mention the battlesteeds we stabled last time were all inferior beasts, there were only six of them... do you want to die?” Han Shuo could finally hold in his impatience no longer and suddenly yelled out upon seeing that these people were still looking amongst the crowd of stabled battlesteeds.

Han Shuo’s violent roar sounded throughout the stables. The necromancy students and teachers, who were looking for their battlesteeds, were all lectured. They all froze in that moment – Han Shuo had called them idiots! It was a bit tough for them to accept that!

“Then what do we do?” Lisa froze and then asked Han Shuo as she looked at him.

“Choose the best, strongest battlesteeds. We’ll each take one. The lives of others have nothing to do with us. If you all want to die, then continue looking for the inferior battlesteeds that we had!” Han Shuo’s face darkened as he resolutely called out.

This was originally a simple concept, but the pity was that these necromancy students and teachers had always functioned in the necromancy major that encompassed a multitude of rules and customs. For them, following the rules was the natural thing to do. They hadn't thought at all about the fact that all rules could be broken in times of crisis.

These people's faces all froze beneath Han Shuo's curses of "idiots", which then changed to contemplative frowns as Han Shuo continued in the vein of paying no heed to the lives of others. His words caused another round of impact to these students and teachers who were used to following the rules.

The commotion outside grew bigger and they made swift decisions when faced with a crisis of life or death. They no longer hesitated and ran over to the fiercest and most valiant battlesteeds with looks of resolution.

When the necromancy students and teachers had all occupied the best battlesteeds in the stables under Han Shuo's urging, they rushed out of the stables. This was when the light major students from the Academy and other clearheaded mages and archers finally made their way to the stables.

"Damnit, they're riding our battlesteeds." Irene's sharp eyesight immediately discovered that the handsome battlesteed, that Han Shuo was currently riding on, was the one that she had ridden just days before. She immediately voiced a loud complaint.

However, at this moment Han Shuo and the others were already riding on the fiercest battlesteeds in the stables and had rushed out with due haste. They ignored the curses from Irene and the others and only left behind silhouettes that moved further and further away.

"Bryan, where should we go now?" Fanny immediately asked Han Shou as soon as they'd left the stables and made it onto the chaotic streets.

The warriors had already retreated into the town of Drol and the orc wolf riders had rushed into town. Whirling their longswords mightily, the defenseless merchants were the first ones to suffer as they often lost their heads when the swords chopped down.

Because these wolf riders were riding giant wolves, they were in no hurry to immediately pursue the escaping warriors and mages. They only followed the street and starting looting the first stores they found. There were large bags hanging from the bodies of the giant wolves and the resources of all the surrounding stores made it into the bags of the giant wolves.

“As long as it’s not in the direction of Zajoski City, it doesn’t matter where we flee to!” Han Shuo surveyed the surroundings and swept a glance at the eastern street. He noticed that there were fewer people fleeing on the northern street, and called out after a moment’s thought. “Follow me, we’ll head north.”

Because the town of Drol was about to fall, the most heavily fortified city in the southern part of the Empire, Zajoski City, became the ideal target in the hearts of the frantic escapees. Han Shuo observed for a moment and noticed that seventy percent of the people from the town of Drol were fleeing in the direction of Zajoski.

However, out of this seventy percent, there were only ten or so on battlesteeds. When the orc wolf riders had finished raiding the town of Drol, their first target was sure to be this crowd of people.

With giant wolves as steeds, the wolf riders’ speed was sure to be faster than those who were still on foot. Because the flow of people was seventy percent of the town’s inhabitants, the orcs were sure to send the most wolf riders after them. In this way, the ones most likely to die were the seventy percent of people escaping in the direction of Zajoski.

As soon as he’d started his calm deliberations, Han Shuo immediately realized that his thoughts were very clear. After a brief consideration, he immediately led battlesteeds with Fanny and the others racing to the northern street.

With the convenience of battlesteeds, Han Shuo and co. moved exceedingly fast. Han Shuo met two swift wolf riders, who’d come to the northern street, along the way. The bags on their giant wolves were bulging. They ignored Han Shuo’s crew and were about to rush into another store to loot.

Snorting coldly, Han Shuo lifted the reins and directed the battlesteed beneath him to change its direction, charging towards the two wolf riders, who were raising their longswords with no abandon.

The two wolf riders started. It seemed that they hadn't thought that someone would dare to take the offensive towards them. They withdrew the longswords that they've planned on slashing down on the shop's merchant and turned their bodies, abruptly splitting up. They waved the longswords in their hands and chopped towards the quickly approaching Han Shuo.

"Bryan, are you crazy?! Run!" Lisa, off in the distance, saw that Han Shuo's battlesteed had suddenly changed direction and was rushing towards the two wolf riders. She screamed out in panic and drew the attention of the necromancy students and teachers. They all involuntarily turned their heads and looked in Han Shuo's direction. Wielding a dagger in his hand as his horse charged, Han Shuo quietly chanted a magical spell, and a bone arrow abruptly materialized in midair, whistling as it flew towards one of the wolf riders. As the wolf rider waved his longsword to defend himself, the dagger in Han Shuo's hand was already rushing towards the other wolf rider.

The dagger drew a cold arc of light as it slashed the air and sank into bone with a soft sound. The dagger had passed through the longsword's defenses and pierced a bloody hole in the wolf rider's chest. At this moment, Han Shuo's battlesteed had arrived in due haste. He clawed at the reins and the horse abruptly halted in the midst of violent whinnies.

Han Shuo's left arm reached out and yanked up, suddenly dislodging the longsword from the orc, who was already dead. Wielding the longsword, Han Shuo's right hand sank down and a bloody hole suddenly opened in the head of the agitated giant wolf. The rioting giant wolf suddenly ragdolled as it fell to the ground.

With a flick of the sword, the large pocket hanging on the giant wolf suddenly shot out from the fallen wolf, landing directly on Han Shuo's battlesteed. Afterwards, Han Shuo's battlesteed changed direction and he charged with a face of cold cruelty at the other wolf rider, who had just pulverized the bone arrow.

“Oh my word, did I see incorrectly? Bryan just cast the bone arrow magic. What the hell is going on?” Gene pulled tightly on his battlesteed’s reins and called out in with shock. The other students also bore a dumbfounded expression like similar to Gene’s, looking dully at Han Shuo like it was the first time they were meeting him.

“Damnit, what is Bryan doing?” Fanny had known that Han Shuo could cast bone arrow magic and thus wasn’t too surprised. What she was surprised about was that Han Shuo’s current actions were robbing the wolf riders after they had looted the stores.

Chapter 55: A change in status

The other wolf rider, upon seeing Han Shuo rush over wielding a longsword, forcefully widened his eyes that rested beneath his furry forehead. He roared furiously, obviously unpracticed in the common language, “Tri... tricky humans, you are... looking for death!”

The giant wolf, beneath his legs, howled and the orc wolf rider whipped out a crossbow from behind him, raised it, and shot it at Han Shuo. It whistled with an ear-piercing sound as it flew towards Han Shuo’s neck.

His magical yuan churning quickly, Han Shuo focused his concentration. That sharply whistling crossbolt suddenly seemed to slow down in his eyes, as bizarre as the slow motion scenes in the movies that Han Shuo used to watch. In stark contrast to the crossbow bolt’s speed, was Han Shuo’s strong and speedy perception.

When the crossbolt had flown to about a meter away from Han Shuo, the longsword in his hand abruptly thrust out and it landed an unerringly accurate hit on the head of the bolt. A sharp crack resounded and the crossbolt suddenly exploded into pieces.

Even after destroying the oncoming crossbow bolt, Han Shuo’s speed, although still on the back of the battlesteed, wasn’t affected at all. Before the wolf rider had the chance to fire off a second bolt, Han Shuo had already raised his longsword and rushed in front of the wolf rider.

The cold arc of a blade flared out from Han Shuo’s right hand, wielding the sword. The longsword had been solid and heavy, but it was as light and graceful as a feather in Han Shuo’s grasp.

The orc wolf rider also raised its sword, but just as the two swords were about to clash together, a smaller, brown crossbow bolt suddenly flew out from Han Shuo’s right sleeve. The crossbolt whooshed as it flew past the orc’s longsword and sank into the orc wolf rider’s neck with a soft sound.

“Trea... treachery!”

Its mouth frothing with bloody bubbles, the orc wolf rider finally spat out this word with much difficulty as the large hand, which had been holding up the longsword, suddenly lost strength. The heavy longsword brought down its fit and bulky body into falling off the huge wolf's back. It was obvious from the looks of things that it was dead.

"A race with low intelligence indeed. Heh!" Han Shuo's previously stern and cold expression vanished as he came to the side of the huge wolf with a face filled of traces of an evil smile. A flick of his longsword sent the bag on the huge wolf's body flying towards the battlesteed behind him. Afterwards, the sword stabbed downwards and the giant wolf also toppled over in a pool of blood.

"Kill, kill, kill!"

At this moment, a wave of figures suddenly materialized from the corner of the northern street. More than ten wolf riders were howling loudly as they desperately chased a band of mages and warriors. Amongst the escapees were Beacher and the others from the light major of the Academy, riding on inferior battlesteeds.

"Hurry and go!" Han Shuo immediately reacted after pausing momentarily. He lifted the reins in his hand and the battlesteed trotted out with dull, hasty clops as it changed directions once more to charge towards the north.

Fanny and the others were tongue tied as they watched Han Shuo's dog eat dog performance. Seeing Han Shuo suddenly rush out, they too understood that the situation was dire. They also urged their battlesteeds to follow behind Han Shuo, pathing their escape to the north.

Han Shuo's crew made their way to a large canyon after half a day's worth of frantic galloping on the back of their horses. The sides of the canyon were steep, and a vast river was at its end. Han Shuo and the others reined in their battlesteeds at the end of the canyon and gazed at the river's azure waters, suddenly sinking into a quandary.

"This should be the Empire's Nirolan River. We can make our way to the city of Balthazar in the southern part of the Empire after crossing the Nirolan River. Balthazar City and Zajoski City aren't too far apart.

Although it's not as heavily fortified as Zajoski City, it's sure to have a heavily armed guard. I think we'll be safe as long as we can make it to Balthazar City."

Gene creased his brow in thought as he looked at the vast Nirolan River and then suddenly spoke afterwards.

"In order to make it to Balthazar, we must cross the Nirolan River first, but this Nirolan River is so vast. I think we'll be unable to make it across without a ship ferrying us." Fanny's face was full of anxiety as she sighed while gazing at the azure river waters from afar.

Han Shuo hadn't said anything after reaching this place and only self absorbedly rifled through the two large bags on the battlesteed. The shops of the town of Drol were set up for the adventurers and mercenaries, so the shops mostly sold goods needed for battle.

Han Shuo took inventory and realized that out of the two bags looted from the two wolf riders, there were four crossbows and more than ten bolts of the highest quality, three daggers of high quality, two longswords and mage staffs of ordinary quality, and three sets of leather armor designed to be worn next to the skin. Apart from this, there were also a few bottles of healing medicine and all sorts of poisons.

Han Shuo first picked out the sharp dagger with a sapphire embedded in it and naturally concealed it close to his body. He then carefully put away the bottles of various poisons and finally poured out the weapons and armor out of the bags and onto the ground. He raised his head, looked at everyone, and said calmly. "Put these things away and prepare to fight!"

The necromancy students and teachers, who had been sighing and frowning in deep thought of potential strategies, all suddenly started at Han Shuo's words. Gene paused and suddenly remembered Han Shuo's performance just now. He exclaimed in surprise and stared at Han Shuo in question, "Bryan, did you use the bone arrow magic just now?"

Gene's question caused everyone except for Fanny to stare at Han Shuo with a face full of shock. Lisa even squealed with fright and pointed her right finger at Han Shuo with a face full of incredulity. "That's right...

Bryan, how can you use magic?"

"This isn't the time to discuss such matters. A portion of the orc wolf riders were headed this way. I think those damned wolf riders will reach here quite soon. We have a canyon in front of us and the vast Nirolan River beneath us. What we should do now is consider how to handle the orc wolf riders that are about to arrive." Han Shuo's expression was calm as he neatly arranged the weapons that had been within the bags, calmly explaining as he did so.

"If it wasn't for you leading us to this forsaken place, how would we be in such dire straits?" Bella glanced at Han Shuo disdainfully upon hearing his words and jeered at him with a cold expression.

His brow furrowing, Han Shuo's calm face suddenly grew cold as irrepressible sense of disgust and dislike grew involuntarily in his heart. He lifted his head to look at the mocking Bella and said, "Do you mean my decision was wrong?"

Bella had been about to open her mouth and say "precisely" when she suddenly realized that Han Shuo's gaze was sinisterly cold. Bella's body shuddered involuntarily upon seeing his gaze was like that of jackals and wolves sizing up their prey. She smiled fearfully and stammered, "I, I didn't mean that."

Nodding, a smile found its way onto Han Shuo face again as he smiled as though nothing had happened. "Since that's the case, everyone pick your weapon. Our mental strength is limited and the casting range of magic isn't as far as crossbows. I think we should first use weapons, and when the weapons are useless, then use magic to attack. Come, let's make some preparations and wait for those wolf riders to come to their deaths."

Han Shuo's performance now was quite like the style of someone in charge. This would have originally been a very comical scene. After all, he was an errand slave for the necromancy major and had no right to call the shots.

However, after experiencing the horrors of Han Shuo going berserk in the Dark Forest and his previous cold and cruel killing of the two wolf riders, no one thought it was funny to follow Han Shuo's orders.

It was like they were all getting to know Han Shuo all over again. Even Fanny and Gene came docilely over and started to choose crossbows from Han Shuo's hands. No one raised any objections in defiance of Han Shuo.

Unbeknownst to anyone, the original errand slave Han Shuo had established authority amongst them, causing them to willingly listen to Han Shuo's directives.

Chapter 56: The pain that accompanies the happy fate of a man

Steep hills bordered the sides of the large canyon with a passage that was five meters wide, right down the middle. This kind of location was the best for laying a trap for the wolf riders.

Since everyone had agreed with Han Shuo's plans, they all started busying themselves. Han Shuo didn't know much about how to set traps up himself. A group of people first used tough and tensile ropes to set up tripwires and snares along the passageway. Fanny and Gene then used advanced necromancy magics to release an acid bog behind the tripwires.

The acid bog spell was an advanced necromancy spell. It could transform a large area of land into a muddy and miry bog. When the acid bog was formed, it would immediately eat away anyone who ventured within, leaving behind only a pile of bones. This was one of the more diabolic advanced magics of the necromancy major.

However, a great deal of mental strength was needed in order to successfully cast the acid bog magic. The acid bog's range would differ according to each necromancer's mental strength. Fanny and Gene had teamed up, but only created a bog that measured five meters by five meters. Judging from how the two of them looked, they were already at their limit.

A few large boulders were placed on the top of the hills on both sides, ready to crash down on the arriving orc wolf riders. The bodies of the students and teachers of the necromancy major were all extremely frail and delicate, therefore it was naturally Han Shuo who completed the mission of moving the large boulders by himself.

After making these preparations, Gene, Bella, Bach, and a few others took cover and laid in wait on one side of the passageway. Han Shuo, Fanny, Lisa, and a few others were in charge of the other hill.

"You've changed a great deal now. If we make it back alive to the Academy, your contribution will be the greatest. I'll be sure to report this to the school authorities and obtain some rewards for you!" Fanny's body was crouched behind a large boulder and patrolled her eyes over Han Shuo's body, whispering as she did so.

Han Shuo was in the middle, with Lisa on his left and Fanny on his right. The three were very close together and when Fanny spoke in a low voice, her breath smelled like the fragrance of orchids and directly breathed onto Han Shuo's right cheek. The faint perfume made Han Shuo's heart caper like a monkey and mind gallop like a horse. He suddenly felt that this time's danger was also full of gentle charm.

He scratched his head out of habit and smiled honestly. Turning his head to boldly stare at Fanny's charming features. Fanny's hair was tousled and messy at this moment, and her face was a bit pale after expending quite a bit of mental strength to cast the acid bog. This was in stark contrast to her usual alluring beauty and overbearing air, bringing out another type of beauty for Han Shuo to see.

"Damnit, I'm talking to you, stop staring at me!" Fanny grew angry when she saw that Han Shuo was staring at her, mesmerized and not paying any attention to her. This fellow is becoming even more bold... he even dares stare so insolently at me now.

"Heh heh, Master Fanny, you're so beautiful. It won't cost you anything if I stare at you, so why must you be so stingy?" Han Shuo flirted with a light laugh.

A sudden wave of pain travelled from Han Shuo's left arm. His face turned wry and he turned his head to cast a glance at Lisa. Upon seeing that Lisa was staring at him viciously, he hastily squeezed out a smile and said, "Of course, Lisa you're also very beautiful, heh heh."

Holding her head high with a light snort, Lisa glared at Han Shuo and said huffily. "Don't think that I can't take you down a notch now that you're stronger. Humph. Since we have some free time now, hurry and tell me how you came to have mental strength and even mastered the bone arrow magic. How many secrets have you not told me?"

“Eh, what secrets? I could master the bone arrow magic thanks to you. If it wasn’t for you using the Agony of the Soul and torturing me half to death, I would definitely still be as useless as before. Thanks to you!”

Her face saddening, Lisa suddenly hung her head and sighed lightly. She said in a low voice, “You still haven’t forgiven me. I know you’ve always hated me for using the Agony of the Soul on you, but I didn’t mean anything by it originally. I didn’t know either that it would almost kill you!”

“No, I really don’t blame you. Stop thinking crazy thoughts Lisa. It’s not like you don’t know my feelings towards you. How could I hold a grudge against you?” Han Shuo started and suddenly remembered his role and hastened to speak words of comfort to Lisa.

Just at this moment, Han Shuo’s right arm also felt the same pain and he turned his head to see Fanny’s slender jade fingers were also forcefully pinching him. A wave of wryness rose from his heart as he sighed silently, thinking that the happy fate of a man was indeed something that couldn’t be enjoyed. He asked wryly, “Master Fanny, what’s wrong now?”

Fanny also started slightly upon hearing Han Shuo’s words and thought, what’s wrong with me? What do the two of them talking have to do with me? How come I also couldn’t resist the urge to pinch him? She flung her head slightly and also snorted, then pasted a faint smile on her face and raised her voice slightly. “Lisa, what did he mean by the bit about his feelings towards you just now?”

A panicked expression suddenly appeared on Lisa’s face as she hurriedly waved her hands in concealment. “Nothing, nothing. Master Fanny, you must have misheard. Haha, isn’t that so Bryan?” She didn’t forget to throw a threatening glance at Han Shuo in warning after she spoke, indicating that you’re dead meat if you dare speak of it!

Nodding his head wryly, Han Shuo glossed over the matter. He smiled, “Yes, Master Fanny must have expended too much mental strength and something must have developed, causing interference with your hearing?”

“Is that so?” Fanny looked suspiciously at Han Shuo and asked with an odd tone.

“Of course, of course. Oh right Master Fanny, when we return to the Academy, I’d like to remove my status as a slave. I’ve earned enough gold coins in the Dark Forest this time and don’t want to bear the status of a slave forever!”

“Don’t worry, if we can really safely return to the Academy this time, I will contact the authorities on your behalf. Not only will we remove your status as a slave, but I’m going to remove your status as an errand boy as well. You’ll be a student in the necromancy major in the future and I will personally teach you more advanced necromancy magics. With your potential, I think your future accomplishments will definitely surpass that of all the current students in the necromancy major!”

Fanny looked at Han Shuo with gratification and gave him a resolute promise. She thought privately, when he becomes a necromancy major student and if his magic increases rapidly, then he’ll be able to truly throw off his current shackles. At that time, maybe... eh. What am I thinking about? Looks like I’ve truly expended too much mental strength. Otherwise, why would I be thinking such crazy thoughts.

Han Shuo had had an overjoyed expression on his face, but at this moment his brow suddenly furrowed and he closed his eyes, concentrating silently for a moment. He suddenly called out to the other side, “Master Gene, be careful, I can already hear dull footsteps. I think the orcs’ wolf riders will be arriving soon.”

“Understood, you guys need to be careful as well. Bryan, Master Fanny and I have just expanded a lot of mental strength, so you’ll have to protect Master Fanny well!”

“Don’t worry, since Master Fanny is by my side, unless I die first, Master Fanny won’t suffer a bit of harm!”

Han Shuo felt more pain on his left arm as soon as he’d finished speaking. He knew immediately that Lisa must have taken action in her anger. He hastily turned his head to the left and explained to Lisa. However, he didn’t notice that on his right, Fanny’s gaze at him at this moment had subtly gained a few hints of complicated emotions.

Finally, the dull footfalls slowly traveled in from the distance. Even the ordinary students and teachers of the necromancy major had heard those repressed, dull sounds and all involuntarily concentrated their attention, fully focused on how to spring the sudden attack afterwards.

“Damnit, why is it Beacher and the others from the light major?!”

Just as everyone was holding their breath in concentration and were about to roll the giant boulders down the hills, Han Shuo’s sharp eyes suddenly realized that the incoming people weren’t the orc wolf riders, but rather Beacher, Irene, and the others from the Academy’s light major, who happened to be fleeing in stricken, bedraggled panic. A few unfamiliar mages were mixed in, and then all rode shrilly whinnying battlesteeds that looked like they were about to collapse. Expressions of extreme weariness were on all their faces.

Fanny frowned and suddenly poked her head out from behind the giant boulder. Her slender neck stretched out as she yelled loudly, “Master Beacher, stop immediately. There are traps here that we’ve laid down to deal specifically with the wolf riders.”

Beacher and the others hurtling towards the tripwires hastened to stop themselves in that crucial moment after hearing Fanny’s words. Beacher lifted his head to look at the necromancy students and teachers on the two sides of the hill and immediately understood the situation. He shouted out, “The orcs’ wolf riders are right behind us. What should we do?”

“Give up the horses and make them continue running. Then walk quickly across, we’ll tell you where the traps are. Otherwise if you stay where you are, only death awaits you!” Han Shuo stuck out his head and called back calmly.

Beacher and the others only hesitated momentarily upon hearing Han Shuo’s words and then all moved according to his instructions. They dismounted, used daggers to prick the battlesteeds’ behinds and rushed them onwards after the horses’ had been pricked. Following that, their crew frantically traversed the tripwires and acid bog under Fanny’s voiced reminders and swiftly climbed up the hills on the two sides.

Another wave of dull footfalls once again traveled into everyone's ears. This time, everyone knew that it was sure to be the orc wolf riders chasing in hot pursuit.

“Conceal yourself well and prepare to fight!” Han Shuo called out loudly as everyone carefully hid themselves, planning on giving these orc wolf riders, who were used to pillaging, killing, raiding and looting, a lesson in blood.

Chapter 57: Killing and robbing

A dust cloud formed in the distance as dull footfalls sounded in everyone's heart like a dull drum. A row of gleaming longswords first came into view, followed one by one by the sight of the strong orcs' bodies straddled atop their giant wolf mounts.

These orc wolf riders had obviously already gone through a round of looting. The bags on the giant wolves beneath them were bulging at the seams. It looked like the shops in the town of Drol had surely been raided until not even a single shingle remained.

Perhaps it was because the wolf riders were carrying too many spoils of war, but the speed of the giant wolves beneath had obviously been affected. This was why Beacher and the others, who were riding spindly battlesteeds, had been able to make it here.

Behind the giant rock, Han Shuo gripped a tough and powerful crossbow, calmly focusing at the most stalwart orc who was leading the group. On his side, Fanny was also holding a crossbow and constantly changed the direction she was aiming at, resolute light sparkling in her eyes. It looked like when faced with death, Fanny also knew to steel her heart.

Lisa's hands were empty, but she, along with all the other students, had large boulders next to them. These boulders had been placed appropriately by Han Shuo earlier. All they needed was a strong push to send them rolling, and they were sure to wreak havoc and devastation that was even more frightening than the crossbows.

Accompanied by the howls of the giant wolves, a column of more than ten wolf riders were as swift as the wind and quick as lightning as they finally appeared at the entrance of the passageway. Their speed was ferociously fast and they hadn't expected that an ambush would be sprung on them. They all swung their longswords and yelled out wildly, spurring on the giant wolves and rushing over.

"Awoo awoo awoo."

Some of the leading wolves had their front legs suddenly checked by the tripwires as their front legs buckled and lost balance. They emitted desolate howls as the four wolf riders, carried forward by their momentum, suddenly flew off the backs of their giant wolves.

Papapapa.

The four orcs waved their arms wildly as they uncontrollably landed directly into the acid bog in front, landing with resounding, dull sounds.

The four orcs, who had landed in the acid bog, also emitted ghastly screams similar to their giant wolves. As they wailed like ghosts and howled like wolves, it was as if acid had been poured on their strong bodies. Their flesh, blood, hair, and even their clothes were all turned into bloody water and flowed quickly into the acid bog. The four orc wolf riders had turned into four enormous skeletons within the span of a brief moment.

These four orc wolf riders were only the first ones to be so unlucky. Three more wolf riders behind them were unable to stop their charge in time and also flew into the acid bog. They too turned into three skeletons in the blink of an eye.

“This acid bog is worthy of the title of advanced necromancy alright. Master Fanny, you’re amazing! You must teach me this magic when we make it back to the Academy!” Han Shuo said in low excitement to Fanny upon seeing that the acid bog was so malicious.

However, he suddenly realized that Fanny’s face was ghastly white after he’d finished speaking and noticed that her gaze towards the acid bog wasn’t quite right. He used his body to bump into Fanny and asked again, “Master Fanny, is everything alright?”

Fanny abruptly recollected her senses after being bumped by Han Shuo and said frantically, “No, nothing. This is the first time I’ve tried casting this acid bog magic ever since I mastered it and I really hadn’t thought that this magic would be so pernicious.”

Just as Han Shuo and Fanny were talking, the ten or so orc wolf riders had all crashed into each other in chaos and confusion because the front had abruptly hauled on the reins, stopping their giant wolves, whereas the wolf riders in the back couldn't halt their charge. A few orcs fell off their giant wolves due to the impact.

But this way, the tripwires and the acid bog lost their purpose. The orcs attempted to regain their footing and formation as they called out in the din of voices and in the midst extremely crowded panic.

“Kill!”

At this moment, Han Shuo suddenly gathered his strength and roared out loudly.

Lisa and the others had already busily sharpened their weapons and were itching for action. When they heard Han Shuo's shout, they too yelled out raucously as they pushed the giant boulders beside them down the hill. More than ten boulders leveraged a momentum that had an imposing manner, which flared up at the skies, and alternately rolled or flew down at the orc wolf riders below, accompanied by enormous rumbling sounds.

Suddenly, the orc wolf riders, who had been the hunters, became the prey instead. Those rolling, large boulders became murder weapons that took lives and swiftly reaped the lives of the orcs. The orcs were already crowded like sardines and hadn't had the chance to properly reorganize their formation again. Faced with the descent of giant boulders, they immediately paid a heavy price.

Four giant rocks rained down on them and directly smashed six orcs, and their giant wolf steeds, into a blood mess. The rest of the large boulders followed the downhill slope of the hill with a ferocious momentum. When they crashed into the wolf riders, strings of agonized shouts and wails sounded out.

When this wave of giant rocks had finished, another fifteen wolf riders had died immediately. Another ten or so had been drawn into the chaos and suffered injuries of varying magnitudes. As these orcs screamed out in panic and fright, they suddenly discovered that the way back was also blocked off by large rocks. Many figures suddenly revealed themselves on the sides of the hill slopes afterwards and were accompanied by curses and volleys of crossbow bolts and magic attacks.

“Crude and barbaric orcs! Die! All of you!” On the other side, Irene, from the light major, had stood up on the side of the hill and cursed in a low voice with a face full of disgust. She began chanting light magic afterwards and started attacking the orcs with Beacher. It looks like they had finally found a target to vent their frustrations on after facing such relentless pursuit from the wolf riders.

At this moment, there were still thirty of so orc wolf riders who were still alive in the passageway. However, these wolf riders had to face the various magic attacks from the two sides of the hills. Wielding his crossbow, Han Shuo would shoot calmly as soon as he'd focused on an orc. As long as those orcs were hit by Han Shuo's crossbow bolt, they would still fall down in the short term, even if they hadn't suffered a hit to a vital organ. They would never stand up again.

“Eh? How come the orcs that you've hit all never stand up again, even if they've only suffered a grazing shot? The ones I've hit, as long as I haven't hit a crucial part, suffer only minor discomfort?” On the side, Fanny creased her brow and asked in confusion after observing the situation for a bit.

“Heh heh, that's a given. I took some time earlier to sprinkle some poison dust on my quiver of crossbow bolts. They're absolutely done for if even a tiny bit gets on them!” Han Shuo accurately shot and killed another orc and explained faintly, as if nothing was amiss.

Fanny started when she heard his words, and then angrily pointed at Han Shuo, saying viciously, “You, you're a bit despicable alright. Where did you learn such evil methods? We can't use poisoned arrows even if two countries fight... this is an unwritten rule of the Profound Continent.”

Shrugging, Han Shuo said diffidently, “This is a fight between life and death. Being despicable has nothing to do with it. Killing them with the lowest price possible is the correct way, you adhere too stubbornly to outdated rules and ideas!”

“Yes, Bryan is right. These damned orcs burned, killed, looted, and raided in the town of Drol. They take advantage of us every winter to raid along the borders of the Empire. There’s no need to talk about any rules with them.” Off on the side, Lisa suddenly interjected at this moment, obviously siding with Han Shuo’s methods.

“Hmph, you two brats are both lily-livered. No wonder you’ve become close. Bryan, I’ll let it go this time. You can’t tell anyone what you’ve done once you return to the Empire, and you can’t do so in the future. Otherwise, if anyone finds out, they’re sure to send armed forces to suppress you.” Fanny rolled her eyes at both of them and suddenly admonished them severely.

Han Shuo understood Fanny’s good intentions. The poison powder sold in the town of Drol were all for the purpose of being used against the savage and violent magical creatures in the Dark Forest. Ordinarily, no one would dare use it against enemies like this in broad daylight.

However, Han Shuo only listened to Fanny’s reminders and was still quite disdainful internally. If it came down to the wire and his life was endangered, he would certainly still throw caution to the winds and use even more despicable methods.

Under the attacks of crossbow bolts and various magics, the remaining orc wolf riders could only use their crossbows to attack the ambushers on the sides of the hills. However, Han Shuo and the others had fully occupied the advantage of land and numbers. Under the continual onslaught of attacks, the orc wolf riders fell one by one into puddles of blood, obviously dead as a doornail.

When there were only five wolf riders left, they finally started to be afraid. The giant wolves were unable to climb past the giant rocks, so the orcs jumped down from the giant wolves, even giving up all the resources in the bags on the wolves’ bodies. They started retreating without a care for anything else.

“Oh no, they’re getting away. If they escape, there are sure to be more wolf riders that come by. Everyone chase after them!” Han Shuo’s facial expression changed drastically upon seeing this situation and hastily yelled loudly, but his body remained where it was standing.

Everyone panicked after Han Shuo had spoken and rushed down from the slope, frantically chasing the fleeing orcs. The three warriors, that had been hiding, ran the fastest, racing down the rocky slope like they were on flat ground. They sped quickly after them, with a group of mages following them. Beacher was at the head as well as Gene, Bach, and some other necromancy students. They all raised their staffs and ran out.

Just as Fanny poked out tentatively with her body and was about to run out from behind the giant rock, Han Shuo suddenly reached out and abruptly wrapped his arm around Fanny's waist in a hug. He asked in a low voice, "It's so dangerous, why are you going?"

Fanny's slender waist was suddenly wrapped by Han Shuo's arm, causing her entire body to go numb. She turned her head to see that the other necromancy students, who were also about to walk out, were all looking oddly at her, particularly Lisa, she seemed to be repressing anger.

Fanny blanked and grew agitated when she recollected her wits. A red blush flew onto her face and she began struggling fiercely, saying angrily, "What are you doing, hurry and let go of me. Why are you holding me back?"

"They won't miss us, and don't we have more important things to do right now?" Han Shuo released his grasp and chuckled.

"What else could be more important?" Fanny and the others all asked, perplexed.

"Collect the spoils of war! The resources in those bags on the giant wolves are all dazzling gold coins when brought to a city in the Empire!" Han Shuo laughed heartily as his body had already quickly dashed down from the mountain.

Fanny, Lisa and the others were dumbfounded. They lost their hesitation when they saw that a couple other smart strangers were likewise rushing downhill. They all cried out happily and ran to the fallen wolf riders to collect the spoils of war, with nary a thought for their composure or demeanor.

Chapter 58: The function of skeletal warriors

“Souls of the fallen soldiers, heed the dark herald’s call and reveal your existence!” Han Shuo suddenly started chanting a magical incantation as he ran towards the passageway.

An ordinary, skeletal warrior appeared in the passageway after his incantation had finished. Upon seeing the skeletal warrior materialize, Han Shuo immediately concentrated his mental strength and gave a command – rob them.

This skeletal warrior wasn’t the one that Han Shuo had refined with magical yuan. Its speed and strength paled far in comparison to the little skeleton. Its bones even creaked and rubbed against each other when it moved.

The ink-black, little skeleton with seven bone spurs had caused too much of a disturbance in the Babylon Academy of Magic and Force. If anyone were to find out that he had been the one to summon the little skeleton, it was bound to cause a string of trouble for him. Therefore, Han Shuo didn’t dare let the little skeleton appear at this moment.

“Everyone hurry, otherwise all the items will be taken by someone else!” The ones who’d stayed behind included Irene from the light major. When she noticed that Han Shuo and the others had raced down, she immediately called out and followed.

On the necromancy major’s side, Fanny, Lisa, and the others first started when they saw Han Shuo summon a skeletal warrior and then quickly recollected their wits. They bore expressions of glee and also started summoning skeletal warriors.

More than ten skeletal warriors were abruptly summoned by Fanny, Lisa, and the others. Under the commands from their mental strength, the skeletal warriors all reached out their bony hands and began to pick up the giant bags from the ground.

The resources within the wolf rider's bags had all been obtained through previous raids. Now that the orc wolf riders were all dead, these bags lacked a master and naturally became free game for whoever grabbed it first. On Han Shuo's side, the skeletal warriors lacking in battle strength were finally of some use. Although their speed was slow, a bag still dangled from the hands of every skeletal warrior.

As their masters, Han Shuo, Fanny, Lisa, and the others naturally didn't sit idly by. Everyone had a bag in their hands and Han Shuo had even grabbed four bags, looking like the cat who ate the canary.

Han Shuo and the others had salvaged eighty percent of the loot that the wolf riders had left behind in the passageway. The other strangers had managed to grab the other twenty percent. Weapons, armor, and medicines from the town of Drol were all highly valuable items. If taken to the Empire and sold there, they were sure to fetch high prices and rich rewards.

After commanding the skeletal warriors to line up in neat rows, Han Shuo looked at Fanny with a smile, "Master Fanny, with these items and our gains from the Dark Forest, I think the school authorities will look at our necromancy major with different eyes when we return to the Academy."

Fanny's mood was also exceedingly jubilant at this time and she had long since forgotten Han Shuo's earlier insolence. A gleeful expression was displayed on her face as her eyes flicked a glance at Han Shuo, saying lightly, "Perhaps not. Many of these things are from the shops of the town of Drol. Although the owners of those shops are now either fleeing or dead, if the Empire were to find out about the origins of these goods, they would confiscate them for sure."

Fanny's worries were not without reason. Han Shuo thought for a bit and suddenly remembered the merchant, Fabian, whom he had met in the Dark Forest. When the two had parted ways, Fabian had left a card with Han Shuo so that Han Shuo could find him and do business. Fabian was a member of the Boozt Merchant Guild and should have an appropriate way to properly dispose of the items if they found him.

When his thoughts traveled to this point, Han Shuo smiled confidently at Fanny and said, “Master Fanny, you need not worry. As long as we make it back to the Empire in one piece, I have ways to dispose of these items, which shouldn’t leave any traces behind.”

Fanny looked askance at Han Shuo and shook her head afterwards, saying with emotion, “Bryan, I realize that I can see through you less and less. How many secrets have you hidden from us... how would you have the methods to dispose of these items?”

Chuckling lightly, Han Shuo said, “Let’s speak of these matters later. I think our first course of action should be how to leave this place and speedily return to the Empire.”

Just as Han Shuo and Fanny were talking, Beacher and the others, including Gene, Bach, and those from the necromancy major on the other side, had returned from the distance they’d travelled. Judging from the relieved expressions on their faces, Han Shuo knew that the orcs had most likely met their impending doom.

Indeed, when Beacher and the others had walked over, he immediately said proudly, “Everyone relax, none of those orcs made it out. We can finally be at ease for a moment.”

He was halfway through his words when he suddenly looked around in surprise, exclaiming, “Eh, what’s going on?”

Apart from the corpses of the orc wolf riders and of the giant wolves in the passageway, all the bags had been split up by the remaining people. Particularly on Han Shuo and Fanny’s side, a row of skeletal warriors, each holding a giant bag, was especially conspicuous.

Fanny was a bit awkward, opened her mouth and didn’t know what to say. Finally, in her agitation, she couldn’t help but glare at Han Shuo and indicate that Han Shuo should respond.

Walking forward as if nothing had happened, there wasn’t a trace of awkwardness on Han Shuo’s face. He put down the two bags on his body and called out to the unfamiliar mercenaries, warriors, and mages who had just returned from afar. He smiled faintly, “These are all spoils of battle, brave fighters come over and take some. Everyone will go their own separate way soon, but we've just repelled the orcs together just now, so let these items be a memento of our battle."

"Sure, alright!"

The ten or so adventurers, who had returned, all cheered simultaneously and ran over excitedly, adeptly picking through the resources in the bags.

Beacher and some of the other light major students had been about ready to join in their ranks when they saw Irene and the others also held stuffed bags in their hands. They started and began walking over to Irene.

"Little fellow, you're a swell friend. If you ever require the services of our Battlewolves Mercenary Company in the future, don't hesitate to speak up."

"Heh heh, I'm very happy to become friends with you. If you need any medicines in the future, just come find me."

These people all chatted and laughed in high spirits when they poked through the items as numerous cards with contact information made their way into Han Shuo's hands.

"Master Fanny, why are we giving those items over to them? What's wrong with Bryan?" A necromancy student, Athena, was watching Han Shuo's open bags with a look of pain as she asked huffily.

"His methods are absolutely correct. If we swallow all these resources ourselves, these people won't gain anything at all and will be sure to report this matter to the Empire. Perhaps they might even think of robbing us in their anger. We'd be in dire straits then.

Bryan has taken out only a small portion right now for them to choose what they will. Doing so also drags them down with us and shuts everyone's mouth. They don't have space rings and can't summon skeletal warriors like us for manual labor, so they can't take much at all. In the end, we still benefit the most and he's also won the friendship of these adventurers. The Bryan of now is truly becoming stronger and stronger!" Fanny's beautiful eyes had continually been focused on Han Shuo's figure, who was talking and laughing with the adventurers as she explained to the perplexed Athena.

“He’s becoming more and more mysterious. I wonder where he’s learned all these random bits of knowledge, and his knowledge actually has some use!” Lisa looked at Han Shuo, remembering the secret way he’d taught her to round out her chest and whispered with a hint of emotion.

“Alright, since everyone’s taken their pick, let’s split up now. I won’t be shy if there are any ways in which I need your help in the future, haha!” Han Shuo was chattering happily with an air of familiarity on the other side. The four large bags on his body were basically empty.

These mercenaries and adventurers had all more or less benefited some and gained items they needed. As they looked at Han Shuo, they felt that he looked incredibly pleasing to the eye. Everyone left one by one after finally exchanging a round of pleasantries. Beacher and the others also left carrying their loot after coming by and thanking Fanny.

Gene finally spoke up in wistful regret when there was only Han Shuo and the others left in the area, “I would’ve stayed had I known earlier. If we hadn’t left, then the bags in the hands of the light majors would be ours for sure.”

Fanny had no comment for Gene’s regret and suddenly felt in that moment that even though he had quite a few years on him, his intelligence seemed to not even measure up to Han Shuo’s. An involuntary wave of contempt grew in her heart.

“Right, what should we do now?” Fanny’s eyes looked at Han Shuo and the question came naturally out of her mouth.

Raising his head to look at the vast Nirolan River, Han Shuo thought for a moment and said lowly, “There are a few towering trees in the canyon below. There are various sharp weapons in our bags and a few tensile bundles of rope. We’ll be able to swiftly construct wooden rafts if we fell a few trees. We’ll be able to travel the Nirolan River with the rafts and directly make it to Balthazar City.”

“I see, then why didn’t you tell the others just now?” Gene suddenly asked upon hearing Han Shuo's words.

“What business is it of mine if they want to leave? Besides, when they leave, they'll be able to draw the orcs' attention away from us, decreasing our danger. Isn't this good?” Han Shuo smiled faintly and explained matter of factly.

Fanny, Gene, and the others were all dumbfounded by his words and privately reflected that Han Shuo was indeed different now. When he had been conversing and laughing happily with others, he'd been inwardly plotting against them already.

Gene, Bach, and Bella suddenly all looked at each other, thinking of what they'd done to Han Shuo in the past. A chill simultaneously gripped their hearts.

Chapter 59: Gifting you a necklace

With the aid of the dark creatures, the operation of felling trees to construct wooden rafts only took half a day under Han Shuo's command before it was fully complete.

Five wooden rafts and ten wooden oars all entered the water with the efforts of the skeletal warriors. Everyone boarded the wooden rafts after all thirteen bags had been placed securely on them, and started rowing down the Nirolan River with oars in hand.

Han Shuo, Fanny, and Lisa were all on one raft, and Fanny had summoned a zombie warrior to row. The three of them lounged leisurely on the sturdy wooden platform, admiring the view of the Nirolan River in a satisfied manner.

It was already dusk, and the glow of sunset painted the sky. The deep, blue waters of the Nirolan River were calm, and a few bold fish leapt out to draw silver lines on the water surface. The towering trees in the distance were covered with leafy boughs, and a few unknown insects called out happily, putting everyone into a quiet and calm state of mind.

As Fanny and Lisa chattered and laughed quietly, admiring the view on all sides, Han Shuo sat cross legged on the wooden raft with his eyes closed, silently training his magical yuan, not giving up even a single second that could be used to strengthen and reforge his body, continuously opening up the passages in his body.

Fanny and Lisa originally had a belly full of questions for Han Shuo, but they didn't disturb him when they realized that he had closed his eyes and wasn't speaking. They actually felt moved by how studious Han Shuo was, thinking that it was no wonder he'd improved so quickly in such a short amount of time. Their beautiful eyes occasionally landed on Han Shuo's body, discussing something in low voices. It seemed that their topic of discussion must have certainly involved Han Shuo.

After a long period of silence, Han Shuo abruptly opened his eyes and looked around when he felt that the wooden raft had shuddered. He discovered that the raft had made it across the Nirolan River and arrived in a lush area, thick with shrubbery and trees.

Fanny and Lisa giddily directed the dark creatures to move the spoils of battle from the wooden raft onto the shore. When Gene and company were all present and accounted for, everyone cheered and used mental strength to command the dark creatures, rushing towards Balthazar City after the direction had been set.

After walking for two days straight, the crew finally arrived at Balthazar city. They first found a large hotel and immediately began to shower and change, feasting on delicacies to their heart's content, and retiring happily for the night.

Han Shuo's treatment was now vastly different from what it had been when they'd first headed into the Dark Forest. He naturally enjoyed the most noble treatment, and shared his room with no one. Everyone had even undertaken the task of moving the resources to the hotel's specialized vault with their own hands. No one dared to let Han Shuo do it.

The next day, early in the morning.

Dondondon. Fanny lived next to Han Shou and he knocked on her door as soon as he'd gotten up.

"Who is it?" Fanny's lazy voice sounded from within the room.

"It's me." Han Shuo responded.

"Oh, wait a minute. I'll open the door for you after I've finished washing up."

Fanny opened her door after a while, wearing a thin, white, silk robe. The long, soft robe thoroughly accentuated her slender and well-endowed body. Her hair was messy and she lazily flicked a glance at Han Shuo, moving aside to let him in. She asked, "What are you doing here so early in the morning?"

Greedy staring his fill at Fanny, Han Shuo automatically sat at the round table after closing the door. He smiled and said, "Master Fanny, I was thinking last night that the loot we hold is still too conspicuous in our hands. I wanted to come discuss with you how to dispose of it.”

“Mm. It’d also be a good thing if we disposed of these resources sooner. We’re not merchants and can’t very well bring these items back to the school with us, but these items come from the town of Drol. If we’re discovered by others, not only will we not receive any gold coins, but we may be in trouble as well. What should we do?” Fanny’s beautiful brows were creased faintly as she spoke after thinking for a while.

“If we had a space ring, we’d be able to resolve this problem. Master Fanny, although space rings are precious, there’s still got to be a price for them. How much would a regular, smaller space ring cost?”

“Typically only space archmages have the ability to refine a space ring. The materials needed to refine a space ring are also quite precious, therefore, the prices for space rings are all quite high. Even a space ring that is of a slightly inferior quality will run for at least one or two thousand gold coins. It isn’t something that just anyone can afford, so you’d best not think these random thoughts.”

“Master Fanny, as an adept mage, most of your necromancy students are from noble families, so how come you don’t have even a space ring?”

“Heh heh, although I’m an adept mage, I rarely leave the Academy under normal circumstances. My income every year is only a few hundred gold coins, so where would I have the spare change to purchase a space ring? The necromancy major is the weakest major. If these students all came from large noble families, then they wouldn’t join the necromancy major. Besides, they haven’t graduated yet, why would their families buy a space ring for them!”

Han Shuo nodded and basically understood the gist of things after Fanny’s explanation. It looked like the necromancy students and teachers were all paupers. No wonder they were all so excited when faced with this batch of resources.

“So that’s the case, a space ring costs one or two thousand gold coins. Heh heh, looks like I should get a space ring first.” Han Shuo thought about the two thousand gold coins saved in his crystal card, rubbed his chin for a while as he mused, then spoke as if deep in thought.

Rolling her eyes at Han Shuo, Fanny was out of sorts. “What gold coins would you have as an errand slave? If you had that much money, would you have been sold and become an errand slave for the necromancy major for six years?”

Chuckling, Han Shuo said, “Times have changed, who says I’ll be poor forever? Don’t worry, I have my ways to get a space ring.”

When he had finished saying these words, Han Shuo surreptitiously looked to the left and right under Fanny’s astonished eyes and took out an agate necklace studded with a ruby. The necklace sparkled with a faint, red hue and the ruby was glittering and translucent, an obviously valuable gemstone.

“Master Fanny, this is for you!” Han Shuo saw that Fanny was staring at the necklace in his hands, entranced. He laughed lowly and gave the necklace to Fanny.

At first, she was abruptly joyful, and then blushed hotly. When she’d recovered herself, she hastily shrank back and said, “I, I can’t accept it. Right, where did you get this?”

“From the orc wolf rider’s bags of course. I have sharp eyes and nimble fingers and saw that a bag was sparkling with red light, and thus discovered this agate and ruby necklace. I thought that since Master Fanny is such a beautiful person, if you were to wear this necklace, it would be sure to display you in an even more charming and alluring light. So I put it away to give specifically to you.” Han Shou’s expression was quite normal as he spoke lightly.

“This item is too precious, I can’t have it, you keep it for yourself!” Fanny’s beautiful face was flushed red as her beautiful eyes stared closely at the necklace, but her mouth stammered words of refusal. It looks like that although she greatly liked it, she hadn’t fully lost her reason.

“Take it, I have no use for it as a man. Besides, you’ve taken care of me all these years, and I’ve been very thankful to you all along. I finally have the chance to repay you, I'd be very sad if you rejected it." Han Shuo was quite serious as his normal, silly, honest look had disappeared. He spoke quite resolutely.

"I really can't, you already saved me last time and you've helped me a great deal along the way. How could I accept your things. Ooh, although last time in the pool, you..." Fanny rambled a bit as she seemed to remember Han Shuo's mischief at the pool. Her face flushed a delicate and charming scarlet as she flung an eyeroll at Han Shuo.

Her beautiful figure almost lured Han Shuo's soul away. His thoughts racing, Han Shuo hastily stood up with a strong sense of righteousness. He smiled, "You must accept this or I will always feel ashamed and uneasy. I have other matters to attend to, good day."

Han Shuo didn't wait for Fanny to deny him again after he'd spoken, and directly pulled open the door to leave. His footsteps gradually faded away into the distance.

Fanny was panicking in her heart as her eyes landed on the agate and ruby necklace. Her expression was indescribably odd. Her eyes would be resolute one second, and tender the next. Then her face would flush angrily as another, complex emotion continuously played out on her face.

Chapter 60: We also have a space ring

“This, this space ring... where did you get it?” Fanny looked askance at Han Shuo and asked in shock.

“I bought it.” Han Shuo responded faintly and glanced at the necromancy students, whose eyes were green, full of jealousy and admiration. He added, “I bought it for 1,800 gold coins in the city’s magical items shop. This space ring can hold up to a small room’s worth of items.

“Of course I knew that you bought it, but I’m asking how you came about 1,800 gold coins?” Fanny’s astounded expression remained as she glared fiercely at Han Shuo in question.

Apart from Fanny, all the other teachers and students of the necromancy major were also present. All of their minds short circuited as they couldn’t quite comprehend why Han Shuo suddenly had so much money.

“Did, did you sell all the spoils that we looted?” Bella blanked for a moment, suddenly remembered something and exclaimed softly. She hastily went through the battle loot that they had stored in the room.

Snorting coldly, Han Shuo flung a disdainful look at Bella, mocking her, “Then you need to take a good look to see if I’ve filled my own pocket with public funds. Huh. All 13 bags are still here, untouched. Do you have eyes or not?”

“Then where did your gold coins come from?” Gene was also looking oddly at Han Shuo, his eyes roving greedily over the space ring on the index finger of Han Shuo’s left hand, thinking I’m a necromancy teacher and I can’t afford a space ring. Is there any logic left in this world if you, an errand slave, has one before even me?

“That’s not the point, I have a space ring now, so take inventory of all the items in the bags and I’ll put them away. When we get back to the Academy, I’ll be in charge of selling it and then we’ll distribute the gold coins after we get them.” Han Shuo smiled a deep and mysterious smile and said faintly to Gene.

“Master Fanny? What is your opinion?” Gene paused, turned his head to look at Fanny, and asked her opinion.

“Mm, let’s do it this way then. Bryan’s accomplishments have been the greatest in us being able to grab these items. Since he has a way to dispose of them, let’s do it according to what he’s said. After we receive the gold coins, Bryan gets 40% and we can split the rest evenly.” Fanny mused for a moment and proposed with a creased brow.

“Why is it that he gets 40%? We also put our effort forth too?” Bach immediately raised faint dissent upon hearing Fanny’s words.

“Indeed indeed, he’s just an errand boy, so he shouldn’t receive so many gold coins.” Bella had finished counting inventory and hastened to assent.

Scratching his head, Han Shuo wore an honest smile as he raked his gaze over the two. He chuckled, “Then your meaning is...?”

Bach and Bella had met many troubles at Han Shuo’s hands during this entire expedition and had long since understood that Han Shuo’s dumb, honest exterior was just a facade. His methods against enemies were brutal and cruel, and Bach and Bella had long since witnessed them. Seeing the honest expression appear on his face again, the two of them felt their scalps go numb and stammered, not daring to say much.

“Alright alright, Bryan don’t scare them. Then it’s decided. If it weren’t for Bryan, you guys wouldn’t even be alive at this point. Besides, we were the ones who gained these resources, you guys all went to chase after the orc wolf riders and didn’t do anything. You’re the ones with the least right to speak.” Fanny rolled her eyes at Han Shuo first, then placed her hands on her waist and lectured Bach and Bella with an arrogant air.

“Since this is the case, I’ll store these items into the space ring first. We’ll hire horses to directly head towards Zajoski City. I’ve asked around and the orc wolf riders seemed to have left after ravaging and pillaging all the nearby villages. I think we shouldn’t run into any further danger.” Han Shuo swept his gaze at the assembled and spoke lazily.

When Han Shuo saw that Fanny, Gene and the others had all nodded in agreement, he released a tendril of mental strength and activated the space ring. With Han Shuo using his two hands afterwards, the thirteen bags all disappeared one by one into thin air. The blue space ring on his left hand flashed with blue light thirteen times.

Under the admiring and envious gazes of the necromancy students and teachers, Han Shuo stored the battle loot into the space ring. He discovered that after storing thirteen bags, the low-level space ring was already at max capacity and could no longer store anything else.

The group of people took out more gold coins afterwards, rented a few battlesteeds, and left Balthazar City. They made it back to Zajoski City in the span of two days.

Using the transportation matrix in Zajoski City, everyone returned to the Babylon Academy of Magic and Force in the city of Ossen. Gazing upon the familiar buildings in the academic surroundings, a joyous feeling of being reborn again arose in the hearts of the necromancy teachers and students as they'd been delivered from great danger.

“Bryan, you no longer have to deal with the errand duties of the necromancy major anymore. I’m going to have a talk with the school authorities right now to dispel your status as an errand boy and a slave, allowing you to become a true necromancy magic apprentice.” Fanny spoke to Han Shuo after she’d gotten over her elation of returning to the Academy.

Han Shuo’s heart also gave an ecstatic lurch upon hearing Fanny’s guarantee and a faint smile made its way onto his face. After the trials of the Dark Forest, Han Shuo’s entire being had undergone a significant change. He had a deep appreciation for the fact that his errand boy and slave status would directly impact his actions in the future. Now that he could not only dispel both of these statuses, but truly become a student, he was naturally elated.

“Understood Master Fanny, I will dispose of the resources within the space ring. I’ll come back here to find you after I resolve all of these matters.” He smiled at Fanny and then thought for a moment, fishing out three gold coins from his pocket and giving them to Lisa. “If you see Jack, please give him these gold coins for me.”

Lisa looked oddly at Han Shuo, put away the gold coins and said, “Looks like you’re pretty good to that little fatty. I really wonder how you got so much money all of a sudden. Three gold coins are enough for Jack’s family expenses for a year. You’re quite generous.”

No matter if it was the Bryan from before or the current Han Shuo, they’d always been on good terms with little fatty Jack. Now that Han Shuo had money, the first target of his charity would be Jack. The three gold coins weren’t much to Han Shuo now, but would undoubtedly be a huge sum for Jack. This would also count as repayment for Jack’s help during these days.

After leaving the Academy, Han Shuo took out the card that Fabian had given to him and hired a carriage to travel to the southern part of Ossen, heading towards the address on the card.

“Boozt Merchant Guild.” The carriage traveled for quite a while before stopping. The groom’s voice sounded from outside.

Walking down from the carriage, Han Shuo handed over two silver coins and sent the groom on his way. He then took in the Boozt Merchant Guild. Two warriors, wielding long spears, stood on either side of the dark, black metal doors. A row of houses towered in the distance, and it was apparent from the presentation that wealthy people lived inside.

“Kid, what are you doing sneaking around here?” One of the guards, in front of the doors, called out a bit impatiently when he saw Han Shuo looking around randomly.

“This is the Boozt Merchant Guild right? I’m here to call upon Mr. Fabian.” Han Shuo blanked, swept his gaze over the guards, and responded faintly.

“Fabian? Haven’t heard of him. Does such a person exist within our merchant guild?” The guard had a stony face as he asked the other guard.

“I think so, and he seems to work for the young miss. He’d just returned from the Dark Forest a few days ago and made quite a large haul.” The other guard responded. Pausing, the first guard looked suspiciously at Han Shuo and weighed him from head to toe, with a few hints of contempt appearing in his eyes. He asked arrogantly, “And what business do you have with him?”

“I’m here to talk business.” Because his status as an errand slave had yet to be lifted and the fact that they had hurried without stopping to return to the Academy, the errand boy uniform, that Han Shuo was wearing, was tattered and in pieces. It was obvious that he was being looked down upon.

“Business, haha. That’s funny. Do the likes of you look like you’re here to do business? Our Boozt Merchant Guild is a famous guild in the Empire. I think you must be in the wrong place.” The guard laughed loudly and jeered.

Just as Han Shuo was about to become angry, an ornate carriage suddenly stopped in front of the guild doors. After two tall, bulky warriors dismounted, a young beauty stepped out from the horse carriage.

The girl was tall and slender with a head of brown hair, wearing a dress embedded with diamond fragments. She looked classically elegant and gorgeous, but a faint trace of aloofness was on her stunning face. She had the naturally proud demeanor of someone born to a higher station in life.

“What is the matter?” The girl stared coldly at the guards after she’d gotten out, speaking with a cool voice that was pleasing to the ear.

“Young miss, he says he wishes to see Master Fabian. I felt that he was suspicious because he was looking around surreptitiously and is also wearing tattered, cheap clothing. I was questioning him.” One of the guards bowed politely and explained.

“You know Fabian?” This stunning girl creased her brow and flung a glance at Han Shuo, asking distantly.

Han Shuo’s eyes had been boldly roving over the beautiful girl’s body when he abruptly came to himself after he heard the question. He immediately nodded, “Yes, I conducted a deal with Mr. Fabian in the Dark Forest. My name is Bryan and I’m sure Mr. Fabian will remember me.”

“Bryan... Bryan. I think I’ve heard Fabian mention you. Since this is the case, why don’t you come in with me?” She didn’t look at Han Shuo again after she finished speaking and just walked inside.

Han Shuo glared fiercely at the two guards at the doors and said in a low voice, “Idiots with no eyes!” He then laughed and swiftly walked inside.

Chapter 61: Embroiling innocent bystanders in trouble

There was water flowing through an artificial mountain in the Boozt Merchant Guild and the environment was classically elegant and luxurious. A hallway, paved with oval stones, ran through the entire building. Guards wielding longswords and javelins would walk by periodically. It would seem that the defense of this merchant guild was quite serious.

While he had been in Balthazar, Han Shuo had sought information about the Boozt Merchant Guild. He understood that this Guild specialized in trade. To put it simply, the Boozt Merchant Guild leveraged the footholds they had in all the merchant guilds in the Empire to purchase resources and materials from all over the empire and then resold them to places in need, earning their profits from the price margins.

This load of weapons and medicines from Drol would definitely be disposed appropriately if handed over to the Boozt Merchant Guild. This was why Han Shuo had come in search of Fabian. Therefore, he was absolutely looking for the right person.

After traversing three hallways and walking for a few minutes, just as Han Shuo was reflecting that this Boozt Merchant Guild was quite large, the young miss of the Guild stopped outside a loft.

“Farmer, go get Fabian. Giles, you stand guard at the door. Mm. You’re called Bryan right? Come with me.” The girl looked around a bit when standing before the door to the loft and then issued orders to the two strong warriors behind her.

Han Shuo didn’t chatter idly and followed the girl inside after nodding. Soft carpet met his feet and priceless drawing scrolls lined the walls. The room was decorated in an opulent and grand way with a vast chamber inside. A round table was placed in the center, and several chairs were placed around the table.

The girl found a chair and sat down, then creased her brow without saying a word, as if contemplating something. Several strands of brown hair landed on her translucently white, clean forehead, setting off her fiercely furrowed brow and beautiful cheeks. She had lost a few traces of the aloof arrogance she'd held earlier and gained a few hints of melancholy.

She didn't play host to Han Shuo and he wasn't shy about things either. He spun a chair around and sat down, taking in the room's decorations, as if nothing was out of the ordinary, sneaking a few glances at her every now and then.

After a short while, that fatty Fabian came walking in with a fawning smile on his face. When he'd shut the room door, he quickly strode in and bowed in greeting to the girl. "It's so wonderful that Miss Phoebe has returned safely!"

"Mm. This person has come to find you and says that he wants to do business with you. I also have to discuss a few things with you and so I brought him directly here." Phoebe nodded her head and said to Fabian.

"Heh heh, so it's Bryan. It was thanks to you that I was able to escape from the evil hands of those forest trolls last time in the Dark Forest. I thought I would never see you again. Who would've thought that you'd come find me a few days after I'd returned to the Empire. What kind of business would you like to do this time?" Fabian had plastered on a professional smile and asked Han Shuo enthusiastically.

"I have a load of resources with slightly murky origins. I was wondering if you'd be willing to purchase them off me?" Han Shuo hadn't planned to say much with Phoebe sitting there, but then he thought for a moment and noticed that even Fabian seemed to follow Phoebe's orders. It looked like there was nothing to hide and so he spoke candidly.

"Heh heh, this is definitely not a problem. Anything dirty that makes its way to our Guild will become clean. Don't worry!" Fabian turned his head to look at Phoebe in the distance and only responded with a sudden smile after he saw Phoebe nod slightly.

Since that was the case, Han Shuo had no further need to conceal things and released a tendril of mental strength, withdrawing the thirteen bags from the space ring. He spoke after placing them in the room. “These are the items. Come have a look and see how much it’s worth.”

Originally sitting there with cold aloofness, Phoebe’s eyes swept a sharp gaze in their direction as Han Shuo took the items out one by one. She suddenly said, “These items come from the town of Drol, don’t they? Judging from the bags holding the items, they should be the tools in which the orc wolf riders use in raiding. Have you seized all of these from the hands of the orc wolf riders?”

Looking at Phoebe in surprise, Han Shuo thought privately that this girl’s eyes were sharp indeed. She had guessed the particulars of the situation with just one glance. No wonder she was the young miss of the Boozt Merchant Guild. Nodding his head, Han Shuo didn’t conceal this information either. He smiled lightly and said, “Correct. I’ve seized these items from the hands of the orc wolf riders.”

Phoebe had been wholly uninterested in Han Shuo prior to this, but her eyes lit up as soon as he’d finished speaking and she stared intently at him, sizing him up. She then opened her mouth and asked in astonishment, “You mean to say that you were the one who seized all these items from the hands of the orc wolf riders?”

“Young miss, Bryan is a very strong mage swordsman. He was the one who singlehandedly scared off all the forest trolls who had encircled me and were attacking me.” Fabian hastened to explain to Phoebe upon seeing that she seemed to doubt Han Shuo’s strength.

Phoebe was even more surprised with Fabian’s words, and her sharp eyes patrolled over Han Shuo’s body. Even Han Shuo felt his heart tighten in worry when she looked at him like that, like some of his secrets would be picked up on.

Coughing lightly, Han Shuo laughed dryly. “I wasn’t the only one who seized items from the orc wolf riders, but I’m in charge of them now. I think you guys should know to take inventory and then give me a fair price, so we can quickly conclude this matter.”

“Alright, Fabian take inventory of these items.” Phoebe nodded and looked at Han Shuo strangely. She didn’t seem to anticipate that Han Shuo would honestly admit that he hadn’t seized these items himself.

An exceedingly soft sound suddenly made its way into Han Shuo’s ears at this moment, like that of a longsword slowly being drawn from its sheath. Han Shuo’s heart leapt as his expression changed slightly. He raised his head to look at the dim roof and said with a cold face, “Who’s on the roof?”

Phoebe and Fabian’s face immediately changed drastically with his words, but three crossbow bolts had already flown towards the three of them with an ear-piercing hiss before the former had a chance to react.

Han Shuo had originally been enraged because he’d thought that Fabian and Phoebe wanted to kill and rob him, but when he saw that the three crossbow bolts were shooting towards each of the three of them, that was when he realized that that couldn’t be the truth.

The ear-piercing sound at which the three crossbow bolts were slicing through the air with indicated how shockingly high the force and speed behind these bolts were. They were obviously fired by experienced experts. Han Shuo’s facial expression was uncommonly calm at such a crucial moment like this. He leaned backwards and swiftly dodged the bolt aimed at him. His right hand had already drawn out his dagger as he chopped at the other bolt, which had been aimed at Fabian.

The bolt, that had been aimed at Fabian, broke apart with a sharp crack as Han Shuo’s right hand became abruptly numb under the extreme force of impact. His entire right arm twinged with pain. This allowed Han Shuo to understand that the force behind this crossbow bolt was incomparably fierce and vicious. If an ordinary person had been holding the dagger during the impact, his whole right arm would have probably been shattered to bits.

Don.

Phoebe suddenly fled in Han Shuo’s direction with a face full of panic and fright. The chair she had been sitting on had already been pierced through by the crossbow bolt. The bolt had cleaved through the chair and was directly nailed onto the carpet. There was an even more durable floor beneath the carpet, so it was clear to see just how frighteningly strong this bolt's force was.

“Assassins! There are assassins!” Fabian screamed shrilly in this moment and shoved Han Shuo hard in Phoebe's direction. He called out urgently. “Bryan, hurry and protect the young miss. As long as you can save our miss, I will pay you an additional five hundred gold coins. Please!”

It looked like Fabian knew that Han Shuo wasn't the type to play hero and save a damsel in distress. His first thought was to use gold coins to buy off Han Shuo in this critical moment.

Just as Fabian's shrill scream rang out, three sharp cracks sounded from the roof as three inky-black figures suddenly materialized and three longswords, sparking with dark green light, had started cleaving down at Phoebe and Han Shuo. That bone-deep chill made Han Shuo feel awful, like his flesh had been abraded by the blades of the swords.

Dark green fighting aura, this meant that the attackers consisted of three senior knights!

Han Shuo understood that with his strength, it would be difficult to fight one senior knight face to face. Facing off against three senior knights would likely lead to death. The purpose of the three people were obviously to kill everyone in the room. Even if he threw up his hands and retreated now, he would be hard pressed to escape such a fate. The only way out was to delay things until reinforcements arrived.

His magical yuan churning speedily, Han Shuo's body suddenly moved. Phoebe had already moved to front of him at this time. Han Shuo reached out his hand and grabbed her right hand, pulling her into his embrace. He held Phoebe's body and suddenly fell to the ground, abruptly rolling beneath the round table in the chamber.

Pilipala sounded violently from the top of the round table. The sturdy, round table broke apart into pieces over Han Shuo's head. Three sharp blades shot directly at Han Shuo and Phoebe after demolishing the round table.

At this moment, Han Shuo's necromancy incantation was already complete and the bone dagger wielding little skeleton also materialized out of thin air. It rushed directly towards the first assassin. Beneath the table, Han Shuo lifted his left hand and the crossbow bolt hid in his sleeve shot abruptly at another assassin.

Chapter 62: I like this big trouble

Of the three longswords that had been about to stab into Han Shuo, one of them split off to handle Han Shuo's small skeleton. Another changed direction midway to ward off Han Shuo's crossbow bolt, and the remaining one pierced towards Han Shuo.

Han Shuo pushed out with the hands wrapped around Phoebe and sent Phoebe rolling in Fabian's direction. His right hand clasped tightly around the dagger's handle, Han Shuo suddenly rushed out from behind the shattered round table. His magical yuan flowed onto the dagger and drew a pale purple arc in thin air, aiming for the longsword that was rushing at him.

A metallic sound rang out along with a dull grunt from Han Shuo. His dagger-wielding right hand went numb again, and the forward momentum of his body was halted. He fell involuntarily down beneath the table as the assassin's body also shuddered and fell onto the shattered table.

He had been wielding a sword with his right hand, but the collision just now seemed to have frozen his hand through usage of the "Mystical Glacial Spellfire" from Han Shuo's dagger. His longsword suddenly swapped to his left hand and his ice-cold eyes swept over Han Shuo. The longsword stabbed forward again and a wave of wild fighting aura flowed into Han Shuo's body through his chest taking advantage when he was off balance.

The bone-piercing pain immediately spread throughout Han Shuo's entire body. When the dark green fighting aura surged into Han Shuo's chest, the magical yuan churned furiously and broke it into thousands, tens of thousand of strands, deathly entangling that cloud of fighting aura, preventing the fighting aura from spreading to other areas.

Even so, Han Shuo still spurted out a mouthful of fresh blood and he fell down with unsteady steps. The assassin was now full of confidence upon seeing that Han Shuo had been filled with fighting aura from his sword. He didn't bother with another glance at Han Shuo after seeing he'd been hit, and directly turned his back to deal with Phoebe and Fabian, who were on the other side of the room.

Except, there was no way that he could have realized how durable and strong Han Shuo's body was after countless reforging from magic. Add to that the wondrous effects of the magical yuan, what was originally a definitely fatal blow couldn't take Han Shuo's life at all.

In the moment that he'd turned and was about to leave, Han Shuo suddenly sprang up from where he'd fallen on the floor like a ghost. A tendril of frosty light emanated from the dagger in his right hand, abruptly stabbing towards the assassin's back.

The assassins were senior knights alright. He hadn't lost his sense of vigilance, even in such a critical moment. He turned his body in that critical, crucial moment and the longsword in his left hand once again sent out dark green fighting aura, blocking Han Shuo's stabbing dagger with a clang.

Except, he'd defended against Han Shuo's dagger, but not Han Shuo's sniper shot. The crossbow bolt in his left sleeve shot out and fiercely pierced through the assassin's remote, merciless left eye. As he wailed out in agony and reached out his hand to cover his left eye, the dagger in Han Shuo's hand moved and a line of blood floated out from the assassin's neck. He fell listlessly, but solidly to the ground.

At this moment, Han Shuo's left hand wiped away the fresh blood that was leaking from the corners of his mouth and tightened his grip on the dagger, calmly taking in his surroundings.

The little skeleton wielding the bone dagger had actually started fighting one of the assassins. After countless refinements by magical yuan, the little skeleton was so strong that it was almost a bit perverse. The speed of its evasions and dancing bone dagger was extraordinarily high.

Even when its body had been hit, the inky black skeleton only wavered slightly. The little skeleton would regain its footing whenever it stumbled backwards and came forward with another attack, making the assassin at his wit's end.

On the other side, the assassin, who had broken the crossbow bolt that Han Shuo had shot towards him, had already dashed at Phoebe. Fabian was stricken with panic and fear and hollered frantically, “Be careful young miss, Bryan help!”

Han Shuo started and with one glance, knew that it was too late to save Phoebe. He sighed lowly and was about to command the little skeleton and find a chance to slip out when something outside his expectations happened.

Phoebe’s eyes, in her panic stricken face, were calm and aloof. When the dark green light from the assassin’s sword came crashing down on her, when, unbeknownst to anyone, a thin, long dagger suddenly appeared in her hands. A milky white aura suddenly flared out from the dagger in Phoebe’s hands like a blossoming lotus flower. A milky-white fighting aura interwove with dazzling sword light, thoroughly swallowing up the assassin.

“Ah ——” A desolate wail sounded. When the dazzling, milky-white sword light faded away, it was as if the assassin had been pierced by a thousand sharp weapons. His entire body was pockmarked and blood flowed out from a hundred holes.

Not only was Han Shuo astounded, but even Fabian and the last assassin facing off with the little skeleton was also dumbfounded.

It was no big deal if Han Shuo and Fabian were shocked, but when a break in the assassin’s concentration appeared, his left arm was directly hacked off by the little skeleton. He cried out in agony, and Phoebe suddenly threw out the dagger in her hand when he was about to escape. The dagger sank into the assassin’s waist and the last screaming assassin abruptly made no sound, falling solidly to the floor.

“Young... young miss, you... you’re a swordswoman?” Fabian’s mouth had fallen open greatly, tongue tied as he pointed at the coldly aloof Phoebe. He stammered out his question.

Swordsmen were also similarly divided as knights: Swordsman apprentice (pale-blue fighting aura), swordsman-at-arms (dark blue fighting aura), journeyman swordsman (pale-green fighting aura), senior swordsman (dark green fighting aura), swordmaster (white fighting aura), great swordmaster (silver fighting aura), and divine swordmaster (gold fighting aura).

Han Shuo also hadn't thought that Phoebe had always been concealing her strength. It looked like Fabian didn't know either. Phoebe was actually a swordswoman at an even higher level than that of a senior knights. With her strength as a swordswoman at her age, it would shock many if news of this was leaked.

"Looks like I went to unnecessary effort!" Han Shuo laughed faintly as he chanted an incantation. The little skeleton, wielding a bone dagger standing there blankly, suddenly vanished without a trace.

"No, without your help, I wouldn't have been able to kill all the assassins from 'Shadow Ghost' by myself. I would have been able to defend against them, but I wouldn't have been able to prevent their escape. Therefore, your aid was great help to me. I'm very grateful to you!" Phoebe glanced at Han Shuo and spoke seriously.

Phoebe's brow furrowed as she mused deeply after a moment, suddenly looking oddly at Han Shuo. She asked, "Mister Bryan, why didn't I feel any fighting aura from your body when you made a move just now? And if I didn't see incorrectly, you've also trained in necromancy. Except, I've never known that a skeletal warrior could have the same battle capabilities as a senior knight. Mister Bryan is truly an amazing person!"

What a sharp woman. Han Shuo flung a glance at Phoebe and said with an enigmatic tone, "Miss Phoebe has the strength of a swordmaster at such a young age. The truly amazing person here is you. Compared to yourself, I'm just a misfit."

"You're too humble." Phoebe responded to Han Shuo and didn't ask further. Turning to look at the still shocked and bewildered Fabian, she said softly. "Fabian, take inventory of the items he's brought us. Bryan's saved us this time, so we must give him a good price."

A serious expression appeared on the previously dumbfounded Fabian's face after he heard Phoebe's words. He looked oddly at Phoebe and then at Han Shuo, finally lowering his head to count the items on the ground.

"Niece Phoebe, my niece Phoebe, are you alright? What's wrong?" A loud exclamation came from afar at this moment, coming closer with the sound of hurrying footsteps.

Phoebe's usually aloof face suddenly displayed an expression of hate and disgust. It reverted back to normal in a second, with even the faint trace of a smile on her face. She said harmoniously, "Uncle Grover, I'm fine, thank you for your concern."

A band of five guards broke down the door with a sinister-looking, thin old man in the front. He was wearing luxurious clothes, first swept a look around the room, assessing the situation, before displaying an anxious expression. "I've just heard your cries for help and saw from afar that the two warriors in front of your door were on the ground. I came as fast as I could. It's good that nothing has happened to you, it must've been your dead father who protected you."

"I've caused you to be concerned Uncle. However, it wasn't my dead father who protected me, but that this noble warrior who saved your niece's life. Otherwise, your niece's life would have long since been taken by these killers." Phoebe displayed an expression still lingering in fear as she pointed to Han Shuo in her explanation.

Han Shuo watched Phoebe and Grover's conversation with a cold eye and closely observed everything. He'd formed a slight understanding in his heart. He'd also clearly seen the hate and disgust on Phoebe's face earlier.

He'd discovered that when Grover had come in, his attention had been placed wholly on the three assassins in the chamber first. He'd only expressed his concerns to Phoebe after he'd assessed the situation. This already explained that relations between the two were not as harmonious as they appeared on the surface.

"Thank you warrior! I will be sure to reward you well!" Grover exclaimed, looking at Han Shuo upon hearing Phoebe's words. His eyes continuously raked over Han Shuo's body, seeming to want to completely size him up.

“Uncle, thank you for your good intentions, but Phoebe would like to personally thank him for saving my life. I’m fine now, Uncle is always overworked and overtired for the sake of the Merchant Guild everyday. You should go back and rest earlier!” Phoebe spoke seriously and bowed as she spoke to Grover.

“Alright, alright. As long as you’re alright. I’ve been investigating the origins of the killers for you lately. Be at peace good niece. When I find out who’s behind all this, I won’t let him off so easily. Mm, you must be even more careful in the future. I’ll be heading back now.” Grover put on a hypocritical show of affection and turned, leading his men out the door. When he reached the door, he suddenly turned and looked at Han Shuo. “Brave fellow, what’s your name?”

“Bryan!” Han Shuo bowed slightly and smiled urbanely as he answered.

Nodding, Grover said, “Bryan, mm. Good name, good name. I’ll remember you!”

Grover finally left the room after saying this.

“I think I’ve gotten myself into big trouble thanks to your purposeful actions. Miss Phoebe, how do you intend on compensating me?” The faint smile on Han Shuo’s face withered away when Grover left, and he stared coldly at Phoebe.

“Apart from the money for these resources, I will pay you three thousand gold extra. Three thousand gold is enough to buy quite a few lives, what do you say?” Phoebe laughed faintly, speaking softly as a wise and farsighted light shone in her eyes.

Han Shuo’s heart shuddered as his face became adorned with a smile once more. He spoke in satisfaction, “I like this big trouble!”

Chapter 63: Snobbish base person

Han Shuo knew in his heart what three thousand gold coins meant. This was indeed enough to buy a lot of lives. Even when he understood that he had been inexplicably embroiled into a sticky situation, his original anger was instantaneously crushed by gold coins when Phoebe mentioned the astronomical price of three thousand gold coins.

“Don’t be happy too early. At this point, I think you can probably guess what’s going on without further words from me. The person who’s purchased murder and wants ‘Shadow Ghost’ to kill me is my ‘dear and beloved’ Uncle Grover.

My uncle has wealth that speaks louder than others. There are many skilled talents by his side who can make you die unknowingly. Besides, after the events of today, my uncle is sure to tell ‘Shadow Ghost’ that you were the one who killed the three assassins. ‘Shadow Ghost’ is a killer organization that is renowned for seeking revenge for the smallest grievances. I think you’ll have many troubles ahead of you.” Upon seeing Han Shuo’s satisfied smile, Phoebe thought for a moment and felt that she had to speak up and warn Han Shuo.

“Heh heh, this has nothing to do with me. When I leave the Boozt Merchant Guild, I’ll hide myself well. Whether it’s ‘Shadow Ghost’ or your uncle, none of them will be able to find me. It won’t be that easy for them to kill me.”

Han Shuo had already thought of these matters when he accepted this matter. After he left the Boozt Merchant Guild, he would immediately conceal traces of his movement. After he’d given the gold coins to Fanny, he’d directly asked for some time off and made use of the transportation matrix hidden within the space ring to train at the cemetery of death for some time. He’d be able to avoid Phoebe’s troubles in this way.

“I see, I’m at ease then since you’ve made plans already. I’ve pushed everything onto you because I didn’t wish to reveal my strength too early. Otherwise when ‘Shadow Ghost’ sends even stronger assassins, I would be hard pressed to handle them even with my strength as a swordmaster.”

Nodding, Han Shuo smiled, “I understand. Since you’ve already paid gold coins for me to be your scapegoat, then I, naturally, have nothing to say. I have absolutely no interest in the internal affairs of your Boozt Merchant Guild. If there’s nothing else, can you take inventory of my items? I’ll leave after receiving the gold coins.”

“Alright, Fabian, take out the items in his bags and look them over.”

Fabian had calmed down by now and upon hearing Phoebe’s words, immediately walked towards Han Shuo’s thirteen bags and took out the items within the bags one by one, counting them up. He finally said respectfully to Phoebe, “Miss, these items should be worth about four thousand gold.”

“Plus the three thousand gold I promised you, that makes seven thousand gold in total. Are you satisfied?” Phoebe looked at Han Shuo remotely and asked.

“No problem, I think we will still have many opportunities to work together in the future. Except, this Boozt Merchant Guild doesn’t seem to be too safe. Can we switch to a different location next time we do business?”

Phoebe’s black eyebrows creased in a pleasing manner upon hearing Han Shuo’s words. She nodded afterwards, saying, “That old thing’s confidantes are arranged all throughout the Guild, I haven’t dared to live here for extended periods of time. The old thing has dared to start something within the Guild this time, this means he’s becoming emboldened, secure in the knowledge that he has a strong backing. It looks like he must’ve bribed the others within the Guild.

Fabian, find me a new place to live. We move out today. I can no longer live within the Guild. I will communicate as quickly as possible with the other founding members of the Guild. As long as I prove my abilities to do business and obtain the support of the other founding members, we can then harry that old thing off the stage.”

“No worries miss, I’ve thought of this already. I’ve already found a new place for you to live before you returned today. The new residence is on the north street, next to the Babylon Academy of Magic and Force. Many of the Empire's nobles and aristocrats live there. I think even if the 'Shadow Ghost' wanted to run rampant, they would have to think twice before committing any atrocities there."

"Very good, we move out today then. When that old thing is out of the picture, I will be sure to treat you well!" Phoebe nodded with satisfaction and smiled at Fabian.

"It's my honor to serve you miss!" Fabian shed tears of joy and gratitude as he bowed, and took out a card and gave it to Han Shuo afterwards. "This is our new address, you can come find me if you have any further business. You've saved my life twice, so I will be sure to give you the fairest prices. Mm, give me the crystal card and I'll transfer the seven thousand gold into your account."

When Fabian had transferred the seven thousand gold into Han Shuo's crystal card and Han Shuo had verified that all was in order, he finally nodded in satisfaction and with a slight smile. "Since our business is concluded, I'll be on my way now. I'll be sure to find you if there's any more business to be conducted in the future. Farewell, to the both of you!"

"Be careful along the way and make sure you're not followed by anyone!" Phoebe bore her customary remote expression and suddenly passed on a reminder when Han Shuo was about to leave.

When Han Shuo had left the room, Phoebe finally said huffily in a low voice, "This snobbish base person, where is he from? He grabbed my hand and hugged me, but only thought about his gold. He didn't even apologize damnit!"

"Eh... Miss. You didn't mention this incident either and so I thought you didn't mind at all!" Fabian smiled with embarrassment upon seeing Phoebe's face change drastically with Han Shuo's departure.

"Hmph! I am a girl who's been educated in the courtesies and graces of nobility. How could I bring up this matter first? I feel that this fellow only has money in his sights. Not only did he not feel the least bit guilty, but he seemed to think that I owed him something. What an incredibly wicked person.” Phoebe complained angrily and then took in a breath, asking Fabian with gritted teeth. “Right, this person is also quite odd, where does he come from?”

Shaking his head with a wry face, Fabian responded, “I don’t know that either, just that I happened to bump into him in the Dark Forest. I paid him two hundred gold coins to save me from the forest trolls. I gave him our Guild’s address after he conducted a business transaction with me for the items from the forest trolls. I really don’t know anything about him.”

“I see. Mm, notify me if he comes to find you in the future to conduct more business. I’ll personally transact with him.” Phoebe creased her brow and thought for a moment, clamping her teeth slightly and leaving these instructions with Fabian.

“Understood, miss!” Fabian agreed trustworthily.

After walking out from Phoebe’s, Han Shuo made ample preparations to handle Grover’s possible revenge at any time, but perhaps due to the sudden death of the three killers from “Shadow Ghost”, Grover hadn’t had time to make other plans and so not only did he not run into any motions of revenge along the way, but even the guards he had seen earlier had all vanished without a trace.

However, when Han Shuo walked out of the Boozt Merchant Guild’s front door, the two guards he’d cursed at before seemed to have been waiting for Han Shuo. When Han Shuo appeared, the two of them looked at each other and directly blocked the door. One of them looked at Han Shuo wrathfully and asked, “What did you say when you walked in just now?”

“I said the two of you are idiots with no eyes. What about it?” Since he knew that these two were on Grover’s side, it wouldn’t harm the relationship between him, Fabian, and Phoebe if he pummeled them. Han Shuo naturally unceremoniously cursed at them, confident in his knowledge that he had firm backing.

“Die!”

The two of them shouted angrily and came at Han Shuo directly, waving their fists.

Laughing coldly, Han Shuo's body suddenly dashed forward and arrived in front of them before their punches had landed. His left and right hands pressing down on their chests, the activation of the "Mystical Glacial Spellfire", and a faint cloud of magical air respectively tinged purple and red sank into their chests.

Giving way to a long laugh, Han Shuo had already taken great strides out before they'd had a chance to react, swiftly leaving the Mystical Glacial Spellfire. Although the two clouds of purple and red magical air wouldn't take their lives, it was enough for the two to be in agony for quite a while.

After leaving the Boozt Merchant Guild, Han Shuo's extraordinary senses allowed him to sense that there seemed to be someone following him. He raised his attention to the highest and weaved rapidly within large streets and small alleyways, constantly changing his directions and barrelling towards areas with a lot of people.

After quite a while, when Han Shuo felt that no one was following him, he found a random clothes shop and obtained a new set of clothes. He then hired a carriage and started out in the direction of the Academy.

Chapter 64: A new identity

Babylon Academy of Magic and Force, necromancy major.

After the trials of the Dark Forest, the necromancy major had obtained rich rewards. The ability of the students to handle matters had also similarly increased. When Fanny talked with the school authorities and displayed the magical creature cores that the necromancy major had obtained, she immediately received high compliments from the school dean, Emma.

Emma was a woman who was around seventy years old and majored in space magic. She had long since advanced to the realm of archmage and had once accomplished distinguished achievements for the Empire. Her reputation was quite illustrious within the Empire and she was highly valued by the king.

Within the training fields of the necromancy major, Emma was wearing a loose-fitting black magic robe, gazing upon the necromancy students and teachers benevolently. She smiled faintly and said, “The necromancy major has had a very successful outing in the Dark Forest this time. It’s said that you have greatly helped the Empire by destroying so many of the orc’s wolf riders. Master Fanny, I hope you lead the necromancy major to another level and revive the glory days of yesteryear for necromancy magic. I’ve agreed to all your requests, and the children also need to work hard.”

“Thank you for your kind attention Dean Emma. I think after this time’s outing, the students of our necromancy major should have understood the importance of strength. I think they’ll be even more studious and industrious when studying magic in the future and become competent mages for the Empire, being able to contribute to the Empire earlier.” Fanny’s face was serious as she gravely promised Emma.

“Oh right Master Fanny, why isn’t the fellow that you’ve continuously complimented here? I’d love to meet this magical creature!” Emma looked at Fanny with a smile as she asked gently.

“Bryan is traveling on some business, I think the principal will surely have the chance to meet him in the near future. He is a mage with very high potential. I can guarantee that it won’t be long before Bryan will become a very strong mage of the necromancy major.”

Emma nodded her head in gratification and smiled, “I look forward to his growth and hope that you will all rally the necromancy major to its past glories.”

After she’d said those words, Emma’s body twisted like that of a reflection in water, giving others an exceedingly unrealistic feeling. White light flashed afterwards, upon which Emma vanished without a trace.

“As an archmage of space magic, Dean Emma has already grasped the true meaning of space magic and can directly transfer her body through short distances. Don’t be shocked everyone!” Gene hastened to explain after seeing the students emitted astonished gasps after seeing Emma suddenly vanish.

“Amazing magic indeed!” Han Shuo voice came from outside the training fields as he strode in shortly after his voice had sounded out.

“Eh, it’s Bryan. The dean wanted to see you just now... why didn’t you come back earlier?” Lisa immediately exclaimed softly after seeing Han Shuo appear.

“There will be plenty of chances later. I’ve already disposed of the resources from the orc wolf riders. I’ve sold them for a total of four thousand gold. I took one thousand, you guys can split the rest. Who has a crystal card?” Han Shuo didn’t waste time with idle chatter after he arrived and immediately opened his mouth to ask.

“Four thousand gold, oh my gosh. Those resources fetched such a high price! If I’d known they were so valuable, I wouldn’t have gone to chase the orcs that ran away!” Bach cried out in astoundment as he berated himself with a face full of regret.

Even Fanny and Gene had expressions of shock, not to mention Bach. They hadn’t seemed to anticipate that this batch of resources would be so valuable. Smiles crept across all the students’ faces when they heard there were gold coins to be had and they all displayed expressions of joy.

“I have a crystal card. Here, take it.” Fanny directly gave her crystal card to Han Shuo after a moment of surprise.

Crystal cards could conduct transactions through the mental brand on the cards, in addition to the slot located on the card. It was exceedingly convenient. When Han Shuo received Fanny’s card, he realized that Fanny had already approved the transaction and transferred the three thousand gold coins from his card into Fanny’s card.

When Han Shuo returned Fanny’s crystal card to her, Fanny also gave a card to Han Shuo. “This is your new student ID. You’re no longer a slave or an errand boy from this day henceforth, but a magic apprentice in the necromancy major of the Babylon Academy of Magic and Force. You can borrow books from the library with this ID and practice necromancy magic in the training fields as well as officially attend classes in the necromancy major.

The tuition for this year is fifty gold coins, but I’ve already paid it for you. You can officially make use of all the resources of the necromancy major now. I’ve also arranged your new quarters. Bryan, I hope you can cherish this opportunity and thoroughly leverage your potential to foster and enhance your necromancy magic!”

Han Shuo felt heartfelt great pleasure after accepting the student ID from Fanny’s hands. He said to Fanny, “Many thanks to Master Fanny, I will try very hard in the future. I’d like to go borrow some books from the library now and will take my leave. Please disburse the rest of the gold coins to them.”

After leaving the training field, Han Shuo brought the student ID and travelled to the library. Little fatty Jack was currently organizing the books in the library, and immediately cried out with glee upon seeing Han Shuo appear. “Oh, goodness, Bryan you’re finally back. I almost can’t recognize you anymore. You’re taller and stronger than when you left, and even seem to have gotten more handsome.”

“Heh heh, hello Jack. Has Borg and the others bullied you during the time while I was gone?” Han Shuo was also rather happy to see little fatty Jack. He dragged Jack to a corner and started questioning him.

“No, maybe because you taught them a lesson last time, they’re a lot more well behaved now.” Jack chuckled, paused and looked around. He lowered his voice and asked, “Bryan, did you really give Lisa three gold coins to pass on to me?”

Nodded, Han Shuo said with a smile, “Of course, I’m a student of the necromancy major starting from today onward. You didn’t believe me when I said I was going to learn magic before. Heh heh, this is my student ID, do you believe me now?”

“Oh my gosh, how did you do it? This is too incredible!” Jack held Han Shuo’s student ID and looked at it, emitting a cry of astonishment again.

“Alright alright, I’ll give you another fifty gold coins. Don’t stay here as an errand boy any longer, but you must absolutely be careful and don’t let anyone know you have so many gold coins on you. Otherwise, you’ll be in big trouble. These gold coins will help you live an easy life. If you run into any trouble in the future, you can come find me at the necromancy major. I’ll settle things for you.” Han Shuo took out another fifty gold coins from his space ring and shoved them into Jack’s pockets, speaking in a low voice.

“Fifty gold coins, fifty gold coins...” Jack sank into a momentary stupor as he listened to the gold coins clink in his pocket. He stood there dumbfounded, continuously muttering to himself, seeming to have forgotten even Han Shuo’s existence.

Fifty gold coins was such an enormous sum to Jack that he had never thought of it before. Han Shuo could absolutely understand his reaction.

He didn’t bother responding to him and left Jack with a slight smile. He came alone to the section where necromancy books were kept and selected “Beginner Magics of Necromancy”, registered it at the door, and left.

After leaving the library, Han Shuo returned to the warehouse, leaving after he stored the other two books in his space ring. Han Shuo planned on using the transportation matrix within the space ring and headed directly to the cemetery of death for training. Therefore, whether it was the warehouse or the new dorms that Fanny had arranged for him, someone must know about either of them so it would definitely not be safe to set up the transportation matrix there.

After creasing his brow and thinking for a bit, Han Shuo directly headed to the mountains behind the Babylon Academy of Magic and Force and walked to the cemetery there. Not only was it quiet there, but people and beasts basically didn't come and go through here. Some of the tombs were even more secluded, and he wouldn't have to worry at all if he set up the transportation matrix there.

Arriving at the random tombs on the mountains in the backmost land of the Academy, Han Shuo searched for the most isolated tomb and even moved a large piece of rock to the tomb's entrance. He moved the large rock after he went inside, sealing off the tomb entrance.

After finishing these tasks, Han Shuo took out a candle from his space ring and lit it. He discovered that apart from being a bit damp, the tomb was still relatively clean. The various racks of broken bones on the ground was absolutely not sinister to Han Shuo training in necromancy magic, but he rather felt that they were familiar and warm.

Tidying up the inside slightly, Han Shuo thought carefully and finally summoned out the little skeleton. Using the dagger within the tomb, he cleared a new, small area within the tomb. This new area was in the blind spot of the tomb, and Han Shuo could only enter it when he turned to the side. Although the space inside was a bit bigger, it could only contain Han Shuo alone, similar to the closet of an ordinary room.

Observing everything carefully, Han Shuo finally took out the six magical sticks when he confirmed that this area was secure enough. He arranged them according to the diagram of the six pointed star, standing in the middle of the diagram and activating the matrix with his mental strength when all was done.

White light flashed by and Han Shuo opened his eyes to discover that he'd already appeared within the Dark Forest, inside the large magical matrix in the center of the great hall within the mysterious cemetery of death.

“The mysterious cemetery of death is a country that belongs to me alone in the future!” Han Shuo gazed around his surroundings and muttered in satisfaction.

Chapter 65: A quick way to train

In the vast expanse of the southern reaches of the Dark Forest, near the cemetery of death.

There was a raging waterfall that flowed down with grand, magnificent momentum into an expansive deep pool below. There was a bubbling stream that ran off the side of the pool and forked into three directions. The towering trees by the side of the pool were luxuriantly green and all sorts of bizarre and exotic large stones could be seen everywhere. Fish could be seen swimming in the clear, crystalline pool waters.

The silvery sheen of flowing water cascaded down like the Milky Way, concentrating in the pool below and emitting loud roars. The water flowing down like a long river spewed violently, crashing down onto the random rocks below and giving cause to impressive traces of water, splashing down on all four sides.

There was a hard piece of round stone in the corner, slightly off to the side of where the waterfall crashed down. A naked person sat on the round stone and the muscles on his body were evenly fit and full of energy. His legs were crossed as he sat on the round stone, using his body to withstand the violent force of the strong cascade of water.

The agitated water currents sounded out with loud pilipala sounds when they landed on the surface of his body. His body wavered slightly, the expression on his face was cold as the meridians on his body bulged and pulsed. A faint, black light seemed to sparkle over his flesh and skin.

This person was naturally Han Shuo. After he'd arrived at the cemetery of death, his first order of business was to thoroughly digest the fighting aura that the "Shadow Ghost" killers had left in his body.

After his magic level ascended from the "solid" realm to the "open passages" realm, Han Shuo's body had been reforged again. Even the behavior of the fighting aura within his body had also changed. Previously when he had visited the Boozt Merchant Guild, the fighting aura that had cleaved its way into Han Shuo's body had always been enclosed by the magical yuan. Han Shuo had originally thought that things would proceed as they'd always had, with the magical yuan slowly being absorbed as Han Shuo went about his business.

However, the truth proved that Han Shuo's judgment was wrong. The fighting aura wasn't digested and absorbed by the magical yuan like he had suspected. On the contrary, the magical yuan seemed to be slowly and purposefully loosening its restraints, letting this cloud of fighting aura continuously run rampant within Han Shuo's meridians, causing continuous damage to Han Shuo's meridians and even breaking a few bones beneath the stress.

Logically speaking, this should have been a very painful matter. However, Han Shuo astonishingly discovered that the meridians and bones, that had been damaged by the fighting aura, once again underwent some sort of change. The reforged meridians had become more tensile and widened compared to before, and the magical yuan circulated at a much higher speed here than compared to the other areas of his body. The bones were also similarly much more durable.

After understanding this, Han Shuo discovered to his great joy that if he continued training at this speed, then according to the rule of magic rebuilding after a breakthrough, the training speed of the "open passages" realm would be several times faster than the speed of normal training.

Whilst he was remarking with emotion that practicing magic was indeed a path of masochism and death, Han Shuo happened upon this waterfall. According to the importance of building up one's body while practicing magic, Han Shuo suddenly had the unique thought of utilizing the waterfall's force to practice magic. The truth proved that Han Shuo's thought was absolutely correct.

Just as Han Shuo was using his physical body to withstand the force of the violent waterfall on one hand, while experiencing the pain brought about by the fighting aura wreaking havoc in his meridians on the other, the speed of his magic training progressed at an astonishing pace. The meridians that were ravaged and broken by the fighting aura all became incredibly, pervertedly stronger.

The force within the center of the waterfall was the greatest, Han Shuo had only tried it for a brief moment before seeing stars from the enormous force. He held on for three seconds before almost fainting dead away. In his resignation, he could only rely on a corner to train in which the waterfall wasn't too violent, hoping that once his physical body was strengthened, he would be able to stand in the most wildly raging center to withstand the largest amount of the waterfall's force.

He caught fish to bake a meal when he was hungry, and used the rest of his time to practice magic. After who knew how long, Han Shuo suddenly realized that the training speed of the "open passages" realm had slowed down again after the fighting aura, that the assassin had left in his body, had disappeared completely.

"Looks like I need to think of another way to hurry and breakthrough the open passages realm. It doesn't seem to be the thing to do in order to keep training so slowly." Han Shuo muttered to himself as his body was as agile as a large fish, flying through the pool beneath the waterfall.

His two hands probed out like lightning in the pool, grabbing two strange looking fish. He swam back to shore, put his clothes back on, and took out his fire starting implements to bake the fish. When Han Shuo had eaten his fill and planned on returning back to the cemetery of death, his ears heard the faint sounds of footsteps.

Han Shuo's senses were now more and more perceptive. He focused his concentration and then shot swiftly towards the origin of the sound. There was danger lurking in every corner of the Dark forest.

Not only were there high level magic creatures, all sorts of exotic races and numerous adventurers on exploration, Han Shuo had even seen a silvery, long dragon one day, flying to an even deeper portion of the southern region of the Dark Forest.

Dragons were the mightiest existence in this world. Legends said that their bodies were as tough as iron rocks and their mastery of incredibly powerful magic was high. It was an exceedingly strong advanced magical creature that was a level higher than a level one magic creature. Every dragon boasted of unparalleled power, and the appearance of a dragon often meant that treasure existed nearby. Every warrior that could slay a dragon received the respect and admiration of all.

Of course, with Han Shuo's current strength, he wouldn't be so foolish as to go be some dragonslayer, but the appearance of the silver, long dragon had alerted Han Shuo to the fact that an even more frightening region existed deeper within the Dark Forest.

After a while, Han Shuo arrived at the scene where the sounds had originated. After he'd taken in his surroundings, Han Shuo smiled involuntarily. Who would've thought he'd run into familiar faces here.

Ten swarthy dwarves with long, braided mustaches standing only a meter tall were wielding iron hammers, pickaxes, and spades used for mining ore and using them to fight against thirty or so forest trolls. Two dwarves had already been hit by long spears and lay on the ground, dead. The dwarves were all flushed red. Although they knew they wouldn't win against their enemies, none of them retreated and fled. They all stayed where they were, doing battle against the forest trolls.

Han Shuo no longer professed complete ignorance of the wondrous races of the Profound Continent. Dwarves possessed extraordinary beer brewing abilities and were even more adept at forging weapons. Their personalities were conservative and valued beer as much as they valued their lives. Their temper was stubborn and fiery, but once someone gained their friendship, their generosity would know no bounds.

Looking at the dwarves still raising their hammers and pickaxes, hollering and shouting bravely, wholly unafraid of death, even though they were no match for the forest trolls, Han Shuo actually felt a bit kindly disposed towards these dwarves.

Han Shuo also thought that the two areas in which dwarves were proficient in may be of some use to him, so he only thought for a brief moment before suddenly rushing out, slashing quickly with the dagger in his hand, resulting in the fall of one of the forest trolls.

When Han Shuo was standing between the forest trolls and the dwarves and had summoned the little skeleton after chanting an incantation, the green face of the forest troll leader turned very ugly indeed, fearfully calling out, “That evil human has brought the demon back. Retreat, retreat!”

These forest trolls were obviously very afraid of the little skeleton with seven bone spurs on its back. As soon as they saw the dagger wielding little skeleton appear, they actually broke up in an uproar under direct orders of the forest troll leader.

“Mighty warrior, I, Bennett, thank you for your help.” After the forest trolls had left, one of the strongest dwarves, who wielded a metal hammer, raised it in the manner of the trolls to express his gratitude.

“Not a problem. I very much admire your staunch fighting spirit. Right, why were these forest trolls attacking you?” Han Shuo spread out his hands and spoke with humility and politeness.

“Huuh. Those greedy scoundrels are robbers. They never put themselves to work and only think of how to rob others. They wanted us to forge weapons for them for free so that their pillaging would go more smoothly. We refused their request and those dastardly robbers harassed us endlessly and killed our kin.” Bennett blew out his mustache and said huffily.

Nodding, Han Shuo added, “So that’s the case. They once wanted to rob my merchant caravan. These dastardly scoundrels are evil indeed!”

“Noble warrior, you’ve saved us. We want to use fine beer to express our gratitude. Please follow us back to our village!” Bennett looked at Han Shuo as he expressed an invitation out of friendliness.

Chapter 66: Operation of the Original Demon Cave

Just as Han Shuo was privately celebrating with himself and was about to open his mouth and accept, another dwarf suddenly intervened and said, "Bennett, the village chief said that we can't bring humans into the village, have you forgotten?"

"But Benson, he saved us from the hands of those forest troll scoundrels!" Bennet looked at the dwarf and responded.

"I know, but we must listen to the village chief or we'll be punished." Benson said stubbornly.

"No problem, no problem, I won't be going. It's very nice to meet you. I have been adventuring in this area lately, perhaps we'll run into each other again. Farewell." Han Shuo understood that he couldn't be overly hasty when dealing with dwarves. It wouldn't be the matter of a second to receive their approval and friendship, so he immediately opened his mouth to speak up.

"Dear friend, we are truly sorry. This is a wineskin of beer that we brewed. Please treat it as a token of our gratitude. I hope you can forgive us." Bennett took out a wineskin and handed it over to Han Shuo, speaking apologetically.

Han Shuo had hoped that they would forge a decent set of weapons in return, but he naturally wouldn't express this now. He smiled and accepted the wineskin, humbly expressing his understanding and left along with the little skeleton.

If his magic could be trained to the true demon realm, Han Shuo would naturally be able to refine magical weapons on his own, but if Han Shuo wanted a decent weapon right now, obtaining it through the dwarves was actually a good method.

There was a magical treasure called Demonslayer Edge. It was a bit longer than a dagger, but a bit shorter than a sword. Its two edges were cuttingly sharp without parallel, and its tip a keen triangular spine. After activating it, the Demonslayer Edge would reap enemy heads in mid flight. It was an incredibly frightening weapon left behind in Chu Cang Lan's memories.

With Han Shuo's current magical training, he definitely couldn't refine iron items and directly create the magical treasure Demonslayer Edge. However, Han Shuo wanted to use the dwarves to forge a prototype, and then slowly improve on it with his magic first. When he found the appropriate materials and his magical training had reached an appropriate stage, he would start over and refine it from scratch a couple of times, forming a perfect Demonslayer Edge.

After returning to the cemetery of death, Han Shuo stopped in the empty plot of land in front black moat. There were bone fragments all over the ground. The cemetery of death never saw the light of the sun because of the enchantment, and the sky was shrouded in a thick cloud of grey clouds. Han Shuo felt quite close to the surroundings, and that the thick gloom inside was very suited to necromancy creatures.

"Souls of the fallen soldiers, heed the dark herald's call and reveal your existence!" Skeletal warriors slowly appeared in front of Han Shuo one after another as Han Shuo continuously chanted the skeletal warrior incantation.

Han Shuo finally felt that his mental strength had been slightly depleted when five skeletal warriors had appeared in the open space. He stopped his summoning at this moment.

Although Han Shuo's mental strength had greatly improved compared to before, he was limited by his ability to control them, so including the little skeleton, he could control six skeletal warriors. After releasing his mental strength, Han Shuo gave a command and the six total skeletal warriors started moving, bone daggers in hand, according to Han Shuo's commands.

A few oddly shaped deep pits and gullies slowly formed on the ground according to Han Shuo's mental manipulations and the dance from the bone daggers of the skeletal warriors.

The gully in the middle connected these deep pits like a long line, and when looking at it from afar, the gully-connected deep pits looked like the grimacing face of a ghost that was roughly six meters wide. The deep pits formed the nose, eyes, and ears of the grimacing ghost and it looked a bit sinister and evil.

The “Original Demon Cave” was a matrix left behind by Chi Cang Lan for the refinement of “original demons”. 18 specters needed to be placed within the “Original Demon Cave” for them to slaughter and swallow each other through the operations of the matrix. Only the three most powerful specters would survive in the end and they would be refined into “original demons” after the operation and concentrated refinement of the “Original Demon Cave”.

The “Original Demon Cave” needed to operate for at least 36 days, and it would continue to absorb the yin qi from the heavens and earth during this time. The refiner would need to feed it six drops of fresh blood every day and inject magical yuan into it. When the “Original Demon” was formed, it would have a direct mental link with the refiner and could soundlessly invade the opponent’s body. When the “original demon” made its way into the enemy’s body, it would automatically eat away at the enemy’s vitality and blood.

In Han Shuo’s memories, demonic practitioners called the “original demon” one of the “demon generals”. according to their own level of training, demonic practitioners could refine four “demon generals” that were of different levels. They were respectively divided into – original demon, yin demon, mystical demon and spirit demon.

Of these four, the original demon was actually the lowest level general and its method of refinement was the easiest. It only needed the yin qi between heaven and earth and the fresh blood of the demonic practitioner.

Of course, because of this, the power of a small demon general such as the “original demon” was also the weakest. Many things could harm it.

Flames and ice could demolish it, even if it entered an enemy's body, as long as the enemy possessed enough true yuan and magical yuan, they could also kill it from within their body.

However, with Han Shuo's level of training, he could only refine such minor demon generals. Not only was his current level not up to the task of refining stronger demon generals like the "mystical demon", but he also temporarily didn't know the method to.

Han Shuo refined the "original demon" in order to use them as a scouting tool on one hand, and on the other to render some assistance to Han Shuo when they invaded an enemy during battle. The enemy would at least have to split their concentration to deal with the "original demon", and in that way Han Shuo would have the opportunity to act. If the enemy was too weak, then just the invasion of the "original demon" would be enough to kill him.

When the "Original Demon Cave" was complete, Han Shuo commanded the skeletal warriors to clean up the "Original Demon Cave". Relying on the round green ball and the same method as before, Han Shuo trained his mental strength for a night and on the second day, exhausted all of his mental strength to summon eighteen "wraiths", placing them all within the "Original Demon Cave".

"wraiths" were from another dimension and on the same level of existence as the "specters" that Han Shuo already understood. After learning necromancy magic, Han Shuo didn't need to venture out to collect these "wraiths" at all. He merely needed a simple incantation to take care of it all. This was truly exceedingly convenient.

When the eighteen "wraiths" had entered the "Original Demon Cave", a chilly wind suddenly whipped around the surroundings and currents of cool presence aggregated from all over the cemetery of death and into the "Original Demon Cave". The concentration of the yin qi greatly exceeded Han Shuo's expectations.

At this moment, Han Shuo suddenly remembered that whether it was necromancy magic or his training of magic – they all walked the path of evil. These two roads were both different and evil cults in their respective worlds. They had much in common, and it was half the effort with twice the results when they were used in tandem, saving Han Shuo much effort.

When the “Original Demon Cave” had absorbed enough yin qi, the grimacing outline of the ghost face that formed the “Original Demon Cave” suddenly seemed to become alive, twisting with endless changes. Spheres of black air rose from the seven orifices of the ghost’s face.

When he saw this scene appear, Han Shuo immediately understood that all was as his speculations. The “wraiths” could act as pseudo “specters” and become the foundational material of the “Original Demon Cave”. As Han Shuo bit his finger and dropped in six drops of fresh blood in the “Original Demon Cave”, and after he infused it with his magical yuan, the eighteen “wraiths” suddenly sank into a berserk fervor and emitted ghastly screams. Continuously battling and slaughtering each other to vie over the six drops of fresh blood.

“Done. Now I just need to wait 36 days for three yin demons to form!” Han Shuo smiled as he looked at the “Original Demon Cave” and turned his head to look at the skeletal warriors on the side. He suddenly realized that the magically refined little skeleton seemed to be attracted to the “Original Demon Cave”. It set one foot into the “Original Demon Cave” without Han Shuo’s orders and lay lazily within one of the deep pits. It actually crossed it two calf bones and displayed an odd posture.

That odd posture looked like – enjoyment!

Han Shuo was dumbfounded as he sent out his mental strength and was prepared to command the little skeleton to leave the “Original Demon Cave”. However, he felt the little skeleton’s joy in his heart, greatly startling Han Shuo. He glanced with a look of surprise and shock at the little skeleton leisurely relaxing in the “Original Demon Cave”.

After a while, Han Shuo was still unable to understand what was going on. He observed the “Original Demon Cave”, discovered that it was still operating as usual, and that the “wraiths” were still killing each other within it, seemingly unaffected. Han Shuo shook his head, muttering, “The little skeleton is becoming odder and odder. Ah forget it, it doesn't look like it affects the matrix operations. I'll just leave him be."

He murmured to himself as Han Shuo walked to the cemetery of death, planning on studying the book of "Beginner Magics of Necromancy". He wanted to proceed on two fronts and breakthrough both simultaneously.

Chapter 67: Sharing in the secrets of the dwarves

Han Shuo stayed within the cemetery of death for the next couple of days, studying the book of “Foundational Magics of Necromancy” on one hand, while looking after the “Original Demon Cave”.

Utilizing the round green ball, that most likely originated in the cemetery of death, Han Shuo would receive a large increase in mental strength whilst experiencing a high degree of agony and pain in his mind.

Except, with his increased usage of the round green ball, Han Shuo could clearly feel that his mental strength was no longer growing as speedily as before. It looked like this strange round green ball couldn't help him continuously. As the number of times he used it increased, the benefit that Han Shuo received continually decreased.

One day, Han Shuo meditated for a while and left the cemetery of death after infusing the “Original Demon Cave” with his blood and magical yuan.

After investigating the vicinity in which he met the dwarves last time, Han Shuo finally found traces of a dwarf. He followed the dwarf tracks while maintaining his composure. After walking for a while, he finally discovered that the dwarf tracks had stopped in front of a highly concealed cave entrance.

There was luxuriant shrubbery near the entrance of the cave, and the surroundings had obviously been fixed up. If it weren't for a dwarf moving aside the large patch of leaves, Han Shuo wouldn't have been able to discover that there was a cave here.

After observing the cave entrance for a while, Han Shuo noticed that several dwarves had appeared nearby again. They were holding iron spades and hammers as they filed into the cave. After a short while, the dwarf who'd given Han Shuo the bag of beer, Bennett, was helped out of the cave by two dwarves. He seemed to have been injured.

A soft sound came from afar. Han Shuo's ears were sharp and could immediately tell that it was likely the sounds of magical creatures approaching. He crouched on the branch of a big tree and waited for a while. Shortly after, he saw two Windblade Wolves slowly approach in the distance.

His thoughts moving, Han Shuo snapped one of the dry branches off the big tree and threw it towards the shrubs next to the cave entrance. The sound of the dry branch falling to the ground obviously attracted the attention of Windblade Wolves. The two moved according to the noise and padded softly, quickly as they changed direction, heading for the cave entrance of the dwarves.

When Bennett and the other two dwarves looked around their surroundings after hearing the movement, the two Windblade Wolves had already appeared in their range of vision.

"Oh, damnit. It's Windblade Wolves. Let's hurry and return back to the cave!" The injured Bennett threw out an involuntarily complaint upon seeing the two Windblade Wolves appear and decided to head back into the cave.

"Bennett, it's too crowded inside. If these two Windblade wolves follow us into the cave, then the ones inside will be in danger." One of the dwarves shook the hammer in his hand as he heard Bennett's words.

Bennett thought for a moment after hearing his words, "Mm, then we'll kill these two damned Windblade Wolves at the door."

"No way, it's impossible for the three of us to do so. I think we should let the dwarves within the cave stop mining for now and join forces to kill the two Windblade Wolves." The dwarf said.

Just at this moment, Han Shuo suddenly jumped down from the big tree and arched his body on the ground, dashing out like lightning. After he revealed himself in the far off shrubbery, he nimbly dashed towards the two Windblade Wolves. The dagger in his hand was like a bolt of cold lightning as it shot towards one of the Windblade Wolves. Han Shuo followed closely behind with the speed of cheetah, facing down the other Windblade Wolf with his bare hands.

The two Windblade Wolves had been staring at the three dwarves as fiercely as a tiger does and had their backs to Han Shuo. The back of one of them had already taken a hit from the fierce strike of Han Shuo's dagger. The other Windblade Wolf turned around and sent a blade of wind whistling towards Han Shuo. While performing his high speed dash, Han Shuo suddenly changed direction and magically evaded the wind blade's attack, his body already dashing to the front of the Windblade Wolf.

The Wolf that had released the wind blade didn't give any impression of weakness as it raised its sharp claws, pouncing towards Han Shuo when it saw that the enemy was at hand. A crossbow bolt from the left sleeve first shot towards the claws of this Windblade Wolf, with Han Shuo slamming down on its head using a fist interspersed with with the glacial air from the "Mystical Glacial Spellfire".

With a shrill scream, the Windblade Wolf fell stiffly to the ground, like a block of frozen meat, cold air emanating from its body.

On the other side, the dwarves suddenly flung out the sharp axes in their hands, aiming for the other Windblade Wolf. However, the strength of the two dwarves was visibly subpar to Han Shuo's. The thrown axe wasn't traveling too fast, and the injured Windblade Wolf could actually still evade it.

However, although it could evade the axes from the two dwarves, it couldn't dodge Han Shuo's crossbow bolt. The Windblade Wolf finally couldn't escape and fell down listlessly.

"Oh, Brave friend, you've saved Bennett again! How could I possibly thank you?" The injured Bennett cried out involuntarily upon seeing Han Shuo dispatch of the two Windblade Wolves, calling out loudly to him.

After relieving the Windblade Wolves of their magical cores and pelts in a practiced manner. Han Shuo waved his hand and smiled, "You shouldn't thank me, these two Windblade Wolves were my prey to begin with! Not only did I not help you, but it was your two friends who helped me with their axes!"

“You’re too polite. Eh, do you not want the bodies?” One of the dwarves asked in astonishment upon seeing Han Shuo take only their magical cores and pelts, but displayed complete disinterest in the corpses.

“Yes, I only need the Windblade Wolf cores and pelts. This way, I can sell them for a good price.”

“Then, dear friend, could you give us their bodies?”

“Of course, but, what do you want them for? They’re not worth much.”

“The bodies of Windblade Wolves can be used to prepare food.” Bennett looked strangely at Han Shuo and explained. “To us, the flesh of the Windblade Wolves is a very sumptuous delicacy!”

Han Shuo had also eaten Windblade Wolf meat before, but he’d found it dry and hard to chew. It didn’t seem to be a delicious type of meat... who would’ve thought the dwarves would be interested. Han Shuo rather thought it was odd upon hearing Bennett’s words, but the dwarves weren’t human, perhaps their habits were different from human habits, Han Shuo thought.

“Right, what are you doing here?” Han Shuo asked.

“This is a mining cave that we’ve discovered. There are some copper and iron ores inside. However, it often collapses inside and large stones will crash down from above. The process of mining has been exceedingly difficult and dangerous, a lot of tribesman have already been injured. A tribesman was smashed to death yesterday. I was also accidentally hit just now and thus had to come out.” Bennett seemed to be kindly disposed towards Han Shuo as he blurted out the secret that the dwarves were concealing without hesitation.

The other two dwarves had wanted to stop Bennett, but realized that Bennett had already finished before they’d had a chance to speak. They blew on their beards and glared at Bennett, as if admonishing his undiscerning mouth.

“So that’s the case. If you don’t mind, I can help you with the mining. I think with my help, a lot of the dangers will decrease for you guys.” Han Shuo's thoughts raced as he proposed with a smile.

"No, it's too dangerous inside. You'd be smashed by the rocks if you went inside. If you happened to run into a widespread collapse, you wouldn't be able to walk out from there and would be trapped to your death." Bennett offered a reminder out of good faith.

"Don't worry, I won't be taking action myself. I'm a necromancer and can summon necromancy creatures. There won't be any problems if the necromancy creatures go in and mine for you." Han Shuo smiled.

"I see, then let me go in and discuss with them to see if they agree." Bennett thought for a moment, responded, and walked back into the cave with the two dwarves helping him walk.

After a while, one of the dwarves walked out and said politely to Han Shuo, "Noble friend, we are willing to share the secrets of this cave with you. Please come in and mine this cave with us!"

Happiness making its way to his heart, Han Shuo said humbly, "Thank you for your trust, I'm very happy to work together with you."

After he spoke, the dwarf dragged the bodies of the two Windblade Wolves into the cave and, along with Han Shuo, covered up the cave with tree leaves, finally walking into the cave with Han Shuo afterwards.

Chapter 68: Black iron ore bestowed from the gods

It was narrower inside the mining cave than Han Shuo had thought. The dwarves had shorter statures and could walk around with ease, but Han Shuo found it a bit inconvenient. Even with the light from oil lamps along the way, it was still rather gloomy inside the cave.

After a few minutes of walking, Han Shuo had to start stooping his body. The farther down they walked, the danker and more humid it got. Broken shards of stone could be found all over the ground, and when Han Shuo discovered that it was becoming difficult to progress even when stooped over, that was when the three dwarves finally stopped.

The dwarves ahead held metal spades and hammers in their hands, exerting themselves to the utmost as they mined. The sounds of tapping rang out continuously. When they discovered that Han Shuo had come in, they all involuntarily stopped their motions and measured up Han Shuo with suspicious gazes.

“The cave will become more and more spacious as we make our way past this narrow juncture. Although there are more iron and copper cores inside, rocks rain down from above when we transport the ores. There was a collapse a few days ago, and we spent an enormous amount of effort to reopen the path.” Bennett leaned back somewhat tiredly on the hard rock wall as he looked at Han Shuo when explaining.

Nodding, Han Shuo said, “Alright, make some space for me. I’m going to summon the skeletal warriors and have them go inside to mine the ore.”

In accordance with Han Shuo’s instructions, the dwarves cleared out of the area, starting from those furthest inside the cave. When there was no longer any dwarves within the cave, Han Shuo started the necromancy magic incantation. Seven skeletal warriors, in a row, appeared within the passageway, completely blocking it off.

Han Shuo had only been able to control six skeletal warriors originally, but now that he had meditated using the round green ball, his mental strength had improved again and was now able to manipulate seven skeletal warriors simultaneously.

“Put your iron spades and hammers on the ground. I’ll command the skeletal warriors to use your tools and mine the ore inside.” After the seven skeletons had appeared, Han Shuo looked at and spoke to the dwarves who had retreated.

The dwarves hesitated upon hearing Han Shuo’s words, and then flung out the mining tools in their hands one by one upon Bennett’s persuasion. Han Shuo manipulated the skeletal warriors, commanded them to cast out the bone daggers from their hands, and pick up the mining tools on the ground instead. Each of them arched their bodies and slowly plodded into the depths of the mining cave.

A “wraith” was released and floated into the depths of the cave along with the skeletal warriors, according to Han Shuo’s instructions. With the aid of this wraith, Han Shuo could observe the environment surrounding the wraith. With the wraith leading the way, Han Shuo could observe the sights of the depths of the cave as if he were there in person.

It was as the dwarves had said, the skeletal warriors had to stoop and slowly thread their way through an exceedingly narrow entrance, after which the space became increasingly larger. Except, there were no light facilities inside. Thus, Han Shuo was unable to clearly see all of his surroundings.

As the “wraith” and the skeletal warriors covered a large distance, to the point where Han Shuo felt that he would no longer be able to manipulate these dark creatures, he issued the mission to start mining ore. According to the “wraith” vision intermediary, Han Shuo focused his concentration and manipulated the seven skeletal warriors to start tapping and hitting the ores around them.

Loud rumblings noises sounded out, accompanying the skeletal warrior’s movements. After a short while, Han Shuo could clearly feel via the “wraith” that because of the skeletal warriors’ digging, the rocks at the top of the mining cave had started to shift. Some large rocks actually fell down after a while, directly smashing the skeletal warrior in a pile of bone fragments.

Focusing his concentration, Han Shuo closed his eyes and stood in front of the dwarves, carefully manipulating the skeletal warriors. He sent the “wraith” floating to the top of the cave and observed the loosened rocks with utmost care. He would hastily send the skeletal warriors dodging to the side whenever the rocks fell.

After proceeding like this for a while, another skeletal warrior was directly smashed to smithereens by another large rock. Han Shuo’s mental strength was severely depleted and he felt a wave of vertigo in his mind. He immediately understood that he had over exhausted his mental strength and hastily commanded the remaining five skeletal warriors to stop mining ore, pick up the ore fragments that they’d extracted, and start moving them backwards.

When the five skeletal warriors started moving the ores on the ground one by one to the narrow pass, the dwarves on Bennett’s side cheered and started walking to the pass without waiting for Han Shuo’s instructions. They picked up the ores from there and moved them safely to Han Shuo’s side.

After this went on for a few minutes. Han Shuo felt that his mental strength could no longer sustain the skeletal warriors’ continued actions and so immediately and decisively chanted an incantation again, sending the remaining skeletal warriors and the “wraith” back to the other dimension.

At this moment, the cave opening in front of Han Shuo was already filled with dozens of large and small pieces of ore. The dwarves cheered as they fell over each other to free the ore from the surrounding rocks, placing the ore into the packs behind their backs.

“Oh, dear friend, because of your help, our haul today is greater than the amount of ore we’ve obtained in a week. These adorable iron and copper ores can be used to forge beautiful weapons after they’ve been refined.

What a joyful happening.” Although Bennett was very tired due to his injuries, he was in extraordinarily fine spirits now as he gazed upon his companions jubilantly knocking off the excess rock and picking up the ores. He excitedly expressed his gratitude to Han Shuo.

The other dwarves picked up the ores with great delight, laughing heartily as they took out the wineskins that they always carried with them, happily pouring beer down their throats, emitting hearty “glugging” sounds.

“Oh, goodness, what’s this, what’s this?” A dwarf suddenly screamed shrilly, attracting the attention of all the other dwarves as they all surged up to this dwarf.

Han Shuo was also similarly surprised and glanced involuntarily at this dwarf, but he had already been surrounded by the other dwarves, completely blocking Han Shuo’s vision. He speculated to himself, was something the matter?

Just as Han Shuo’s mind was rife with suspicion, Bennett suddenly lost his composure and laughed wildly, even throwing the wineskin of beer into the air as he cut a caper. Exceedingly elated, charged yells came out of his mouth, “Black iron. Damn, black iron. I am sure this is black iron. Oh my gosh, there’s black iron inside. The chief will go crazy when he finds out about our find!”

The other dwarves also flushed thoroughly red upon hearing Bennett’s words as they too danced wildly, raising their hammers to crazily hammer at the walls on all sides. The loud sounds they raised rather gave Han Shuo a fright.

Han Shuo heaved a private sigh of relief upon hearing Bennett’s words, understanding that the dwarves must have obtained a marvelous metal to be so crazy with excitement. He too was happy on the inside.

After a while, Han Shuo asked after the dwarves, who were finally began to calm down, “Bennett, what kind of ore is this black iron? Is it very precious?”

Bennett nodded repeatedly like a little chick pecking at rice, saying excitedly, “Of course, exceedingly precious. Precious to the utmost! The density and hardness of black iron is the highest amongst all ores, but its weight is the least amongst all metal. It also never rusts, and can change color through adding other materials. It’s the most supreme material in crafting weapons, and a gift bestowed upon us from the gods!”

Han Shuo was about to congratulate them when something suddenly flashed through his mind and a patch of memories flooded in. He suddenly realized that according to the properties of this black iron, the black iron, according to Chu Cang Lan’s memories, was actually a precious material used to forge magical treasures – Mystical Metal.

“What a pity there’s only a small piece. Looks like there’s only enough to forge a small dagger.” After expressing his excitement, Bennett looked at the black iron in the dwarf’s hand and said with a bit of regret.

“Bennett, don’t be dejected, there’s bound to be more black iron inside. Perhaps we’ll be able to mine a larger piece next time, that way we can forge the sharpest weapon!” The dwarf Benson said.

“Dear friend, thank you so much for your help. We are willing to share our mining cave with you. Can you continue to help us? We are willing to share the ore that is mined.” Bennett turned a face full of desire towards Han Shuo and pleaded after hearing Benson’s words.

“I’m very happy that you trust me so, and am also quite willing to help you, but I’m too weary today and need to rest a night. I’ll come back tomorrow and continue helping you mine, alright?” Han Shuo chuckled privately to himself and said humbly to Bennett.

“Of course, of course. We’ll be here early tomorrow morning with the village chief. I hope you can stop by again!” Bennett hastened to reply.

Nodding, Han Shuo smiled, “Then I’ll see you tomorrow!”

Han Shuo didn’t leave with a single piece of ore after saying this and walked in a natural and unrestrained manner to the mouth of the mining cave, leaving behind a few widely excited dwarves continuously taking large gulps of beer.

Chapter 69: Obtaining the friendship of the dwarves

When his mental strength was depleted, the replenishment he received from meditating came at a noticeably faster pace compared to his normal training conditions. When Han Shuo returned to the cemetery of death and meditated for a night, his mental strength was once again filled to the brim. Thus, Han Shuo deduced such a conclusion.

However, for necromancers, they would be unable to release any sort of magic if they had no mental strength. This would undoubtedly place them in a very precarious position. Therefore, no mage would expend all of their mental strength in one shot under normal circumstances.

Since the dwarves were willing to share the mining cave, Han Shuo couldn't help but form other plans. There seemed to be high amounts of metal and copper ore inside the cave. Therefore, it would take quite a while for the dwarves to excavate the entire cave.

For Han Shuo, he could absolutely leverage summoning creatures to increase the speed of mining. If these copper and iron ores were shipped to the Empire, they were sure to fetch rich rewards for Han Shuo, particularly the black iron ore inside. According to Han Shuo's understanding and the dwarves' expressions today, Han Shuo understood that these black metal ores were very precious resources, and perhaps could be sold for whopping prices.

There should be quite a few dwarf villages in the Dark Forest, and there weren't too many dwarves in this group. All of them combined probably didn't need this much metal and copper ore. Since this was the case, Han Shuo made some other plans in his heart.

After infusing fresh blood and magical yuan into the "Original Demon Cave", Han Shuo left the cemetery of death early in the morning and rushed in the direction of the mining cave.

Han Shuo had thought that he had arrived early enough, but he discovered that the dwarves had already arrived by the time he arrived at the entrance of the cave. There was double the usual amount of dwarves today, and it seemed like they had been up all night long due to their excitement. Their eyes were all bloodshot, but their spirits were still highly stimulated.

One of them had a grizzled beard and was leaning on a staff, in the middle of solemnly relaying instructions to the other dwarves. All the other dwarves, which included Bennett, all listened respectfully to his admonishments.

Purposefully letting the sound of his steps attract the attention of the dwarves, Bennett immediately raised the iron hammer in his hand and called out when he saw Han Shuo appear, "Hi, dear friend, we've waited for you for a long time!"

When Han Shuo had walked close, the old dwarf with the grizzled beard bowed in the manner of humans to express his thanks to Han Shuo. He said benevolently, "Brave and strong friend, thank you for your repeated help. I am Chief Calvin of the dwarf village, and am very pleased to make your acquaintance."

"I'm called Han Shuo and am very honored to obtain your trust!" This place was far from the Academy and no one knew of his identity. Han Shuo therefore used his true name to interact with the dwarves.

"Brave Han, your name is quite marvelous. I've never heard of anyone using such a name. Heh heh, the children say that you're a man worth trusting. Our village is willing to share the secrets of this mining cave with you. I just hope that we can coexist in harmony in the future!" Calvin first looked at Han Shuo oddly, seemingly befuddled by his name, but his face then became wreathed in smiles and continued to talk.

"Then, I think we can begin working." Although Calvin was neither in a rush nor too leisurely, the gazes of the other dwarves all flitted towards the cave behind them, obviously exposing their eager thoughts. Han Shuo did not speak further and directly proposed to start working.

"No rush." Calvin thought and stared at Han Shuo. "Han, why are you helping us like this? We are willing to share the mining cave with you, but why didn't you take half of the iron and copper cores yesterday?"

The elderly indeed thought more, and it seemed that the dwarves weren't an exception. Han Shuo looked at Calvin, was silent for a moment and explained. "First, I also had a bone to pick with the forest trolls. Not to mention I was conquered by the death-defying battle spirit displayed by Bennett and the others. That's the reason as to why I helped them the first time.

In addition to this, they actually helped me fight off the Windblade Wolves. Those two Windblade Wolves were actually my prey, and helping you mine ore in the cave is just a small matter. I don't know how to forge weapons, and I don't think I'll have any use if I take the iron and copper ores. That's why I didn't take any when I left. Elder Calvin, you must believe me, I really don't have any other dubious motives."

"Yes chief, Han is a great friend and he's not like the other humans." Bennett suddenly spoke up and said to the old dwarf.

Nodding, Calvin bowed towards Han Shuo, saying humbly, "My apologies Han, I'm older and have seen too many wily humans. That's why I questioned you. I hope you don't mind."

"Your way is correct, I completely understand your concerns!"

"It's difficult for us to mine the ore further inside these caves with our strength alone. Since we're willing to share our secret with you, we're willing to share all that is inside with you, including the black metal bestowed by the gods. We're willing to share everything equally with you and hope you don't reject it, otherwise we'll truly be embarrassed." Calvin thought and made this solemn promise.

Upon hearing his words, Han Shuo thought that although the dwarves were stubborn and possessed fiery tempers, they were indeed a race worth befriending. Han Shuo became a bit shamefaced about his own intentions after hearing Calvin's promise. He thought deeply for a moment, "Please be at ease elder, I absolutely agree with your suggestion. In addition, when I have enough black metal, may I sincerely request that you forge it into a weapon for me?”

“No problem Han, be at ease. If there is enough black metal, I will personally supervise them and create a weapon worthy of your use.” Calvin promised with a smile.

“Alright, I think we can begin working!” Han Shuo finally set aside his plans, thinking that his plans for the Demonslayer Edge were finally in motion. He smiled as he headed into the cave with the dwarves.

After a half day of mining, Han Shuo’s mental strength was depleted once again and he left the cave in utter exhaustion. Today’s haul was even richer than yesterday’s. Apart from large amounts of iron and copper ore, they had once again obtained two pieces, one large and one small, of black metal. Han Shuo magnanimously handed the bigger piece over to the village chief and threw the smaller piece into his space ring.

At the entrance of the cave, the dwarves packed everything away neatly and shouldered the ores with smiles that brightened their faces, planning on carting today’s haul back to the village.

“Dear Han, what kind of weapon do you wish to see forged?” Calvin asked before he left.

After thinking for a while, Han Shuo took out his dagger and drew a sketch of the Demonslayer Edge on the ground. He pointed at the weapon outline on the ground and explained to Calvin, “This type of weapon would be nice. I would like the best and the sharpest, would you be able to complete it?”

Calvin squinted his eyes and stooped down, observing the Demonslayer Edge sketch for a while. He spoke in deep thought, “I’ve never seen a weapon like this, I think this will be interesting. There should be no problem in creating it, but if you would like the best and the sharpest, we would need a few more materials. Our village likely doesn’t have enough of them in supply.”

His thoughts racing, Han Shuo thought of the Boozt Merchant Guild and privately thought that he really was going all out for this Demonslayer Edge. He said, “Please tell me what other materials are needed, elder. I will find ways to collect all the missing or insufficient materials. I need a high grade weapon.”

“Do you have pen and paper?”

“Of course!” Han Shuo took out the pen and paper he had prepared before going to the cemetery of death from his space ring and handed it to Calvin. “Don’t worry about the insufficient materials. I will find a way to gather all the materials together as quickly as possible.”

“Then alright.” Calvin nodded and started noting down a list of materials on the paper. When he finished, he handed it over to Han Shuo, saying, “Han, as long as these materials are gathered, I can assure you that I will forge a weapon with an unparalleled edge for you.”

“When the amount of my black metal is enough to forge this weapon, I will think of a way to collect these materials. I will be here earlier tomorrow to help mine the ore,” Han Shuo said as he left the mines.

Just like this, Han Shuo spent his subsequent ten days with the dwarves, mining the caves.

When Han Shuo had obtained enough black metal and the dwarves had all obtained a rich haul, Calvin proposed temporarily halting their mining operation and said that they should start forging these ores into weapons. They could mine again in the future when they ran out of weapons.

Han Shuo had already obtained the dwarves’ trust during this time and accepted Calvin’s invitation to visit their village and drink heavily in celebration. Thus, he knew the correct way to their dwellings.

After Han Shuo infused fresh blood and magical yuan into the “Original Demon Cave” earlier than usual. He then made direct use of the transportation matrix to leave the cemetery of death.

Chapter 70: Help me kill two lackeys

Han Shuo appeared directly within the secluded tomb, located in the mountains behind the Academy through use of the transportation matrix, in the blind spot that he had dug.

He put away the six magic sticks and removed the stone slab that blocked the entrance of the tomb before walking out of the tomb. The sky was only just brightening hazily, and Han Shuo didn't walk towards the Academy. Rather, he took his bearings and circled the area, walking directly to the northern street according to the directions indicated on Fabian's card.

The northern part of the city of Ossen contained many tall, ornate buildings. Many of the Empire's nobles and aristocrats lived here. The city's defense guard was also found in the highest numbers here, and there were many armored guards, wielding various weapons, patrolling early in the morning. Han Shuo cleaned up his clothes and wiped off the dust he had just acquired, walking towards the northern street, according to Fabian's instructions, afterwards.

Han Shuo stopped in front of a house after a while. There were no guards at the door and it didn't seem as conspicuous as the ones around it. Han Shuo walked up to the front door, gathered his concentration, and looked around him, finally knocking when he concluded that no one was paying attention to him.

Last time in the Boozt Merchant Guild, Phoebe had killed the assassins from "Shadow Ghost" and shifted the blame onto him. When Grover left the chamber, his expression was apparent that he was harboring resentment in his heart. According to Phoebe's explanation, whether it was "Shadow Ghost" or Grover, both had associates who could kill her at anytime. Therefore, Han Shuo had to be extremely careful when returning to the Empire this time. He was deathly afraid of attracting "Shadow Ghost" or Grover's attention.

After a while, a butler with warm features opened the door and gazed at Han Shuo, bowing with a smile. “Good morning sir, whom are you looking for?”

“My name is Bryan, and I’m here to discuss some matters of business with Fabian!” Han Shuo also responded politely.

“Mr. Bryan! I’ve heard Fabian speak of you, please follow me!” The butler immediately turned his body sideways upon hearing Han Shuo’s name and invited him in.

When Han Shuo had walked in, the butler stuck out his head, carefully observed for a while in front of the door, and finally closing the door tightly afterwards. He was quite cautious and prudent as he led Han Shuo inside.

The buildings inside were still quite ordinary. It all seemed rather dull when compared to the luxury of the Boozt Merchant Guild. The surface area of the buildings were far less expansive and spacious than those of the Boozt Merchant Guild.

The butler led Han Shuo into the main lobby after walking for only a minute. An ordinary looking maid served tea and snacks, after which she said, “Please wait a moment Mr. Bryan, I’ll go get Fabian for you.”

When the butler left, the maid also left the lobby after pouring a full cup of tea for Han Shuo. After a while, the chubby Fabian walked in from outside the lobby, laughing heartily. Bright and clear laughter rang from his mouth, but his face looked a bit wan and his spirits didn’t seem too good. He seemed to have been going through a difficult time lately.

“It’s Bryan! It’s so good to see that you’re safe and sound.” Fabian pulled out a stool for himself after entering and laughed loudly.

“I too am very glad to see you unharmed. I hid after leaving the Boozt Merchant Guild last time, so whether it’s ‘Shadow Ghost’ or Grover’s men, they’ll all be unable to find me. Therefore, you don’t need to worry about me at all, but you on the other hand, you don’t seem to have been living that well!” Han Shuo sized up Fabian as he spoke slowly.

“Don’t mention it, Grover is becoming more and more domineering lately. Our lives have become a bit difficult. Right, what business would you like to discuss this time?” Fabian sighed and said with some resignation.

Han Shuo didn't want to pay attention to the old scores between Grover and them, and Fabian wasn't willing to truly discuss his feelings in detail. He thought for a bit and said, “I've come to find you this time not to sell any resources, but to purchase a few rare materials from you.”

“Oh, what rare materials?”

“Take a look at this list, I need all the materials on it. How many gold coins would this cost?” Han Shuo handed over the list that Chief Calvin of the dwarf village had written out to Fabian and asked.

Fabian took the list from Han Shuo's hands and looked carefully at it, thinking for a bit before saying to Han Shuo. “Bryan, even I don't know some of the materials on this list. I'm afraid I can't make the decision. If you don't mind, I'd like to ask our Miss Phoebe to discuss with you?”

Han Shuo was startled, thinking did Calvin ask for some very precious items? He mused for a bit and nodded, “Alright, it's the same if I talk to Miss Phoebe. I have urgent need of these items, when can I see her?”

“Our miss is right here. I'll go request her instructions, please wait a moment.” Fabian rose and left Han Shuo with these words before leaving the lobby.

Phoebe swept a nonchalant gaze over Han Shuo after she entered, making him feel a bit befuddled. She found a seat and thoroughly perused the list that Han Shuo had brought. She furrowed her brow slightly as she lifted her head to look at Han Shuo, “These materials should be for the use of forging weapons. Some of the items within are very rare indeed. You've come to the right person to purchase them.”

Joy flooding his heart, Han Shuo kept a calm expression on his face and randomly tapped his right finger on the table. He said lightly, “What's your price?”

Nodding, Phoebe's wise eyes sparkled cunningly as a slight trace of a beautiful curve marked her slightly tightened lips. She said, "With the exception of the black gold ore, we can sell all the other ingredients to you. Particularly because you helped us last time, I'll even give you a discount. It will only cost you 3,500 gold. This price is absolutely fair."

3,500 gold! Han Shuo's heart leapt in shock. He hadn't thought that the ten or so missing ingredients that Calvin had listed would be so pricey. And judging from the connotations from Phoebe's words, this price was already quite low, and that the Black Gold ore seemed to be of some difficulty.

His brow furrowing slightly, Han Shuo thought deeply and said, "3,500 gold is no problem, but is your Guild unable to obtain black gold ore?"

"Black gold ore is the same as black iron ore, they're materials of the utmost quality used for forging weapons. The price of these kinds of ore is beyond your imagination. A piece of black gold ore the size of a fingernail can fetch the price of 5,000 gold on the marketplace. Under normal circumstances, there is no supply for both black gold and black iron ore, at any price.

I have a piece of black gold ore the size of my thumb in my possession, but I only gained this piece of black gold ore at extreme effort. I was planning on forging the best sword for my respected teacher when I collected enough material, that's why I've kept it all this time. Therefore, even though this piece of black gold ore can satisfy your needs, I will not sell it to you no matter how high a price you offer." Phoebe's face was solemnly grave as she said resolutely to Han Shuo.

Phoebe was a swordswoman, and Han Shuo could figure out with even his toes what kind of level of character her teacher would be. The kinds of swords used by such a character would naturally be uncommonly sharp. As Phoebe had reached the level of swordmaster at such a tender age, she must not have been taught at an ordinary academy of magic and force. Phoebe was a mysterious character indeed.

However, Han Shuo truly needed the black gold ore. He wanted to create the best possible Demonslayer Edge in one go, and naturally needed the exact amount of the rarest materials. If he was short on the valuable black gold ore, then the quality of the Demonslayer Edge would decrease greatly. This was what Han Shuo didn't wish to see the most.

His brows locked tightly, Han Shuo pondered hard and finally asked Phoebe, "Apart from you, who else would have black gold ore in their possession?"

"Don't wish for the stars. I think even if someone had some, they would cherish it like treasure and wouldn't sell it to you." Phoebe looked at Han Shuo's anxious expression with interest, a hint of a faint smile curving at her lips as she said with some pride.

Han Shuo felt an involuntary wave of depression when he heard these words, but suddenly detected Phoebe's unintentional hint of a smile at her lips when he was shaking his head and sighing. His thoughts spun furiously as Han Shuo thought silently. He finally stared straight at Phoebe and asked lowly, "Miss Phoebe, if you're willing to give the black gold ore in your possession to me, you can name whatever condition you wish!"

Phoebe started and looked at Han Shuo in some surprise. She then frowned and pretended to turn the matter over in her mind. She finally said with some reluctance, "I can bear the pain of giving up something I value very much because you helped us last time, but you must help me with another task..."

"Help in doing what?" Han Shuo privately thought that Phoebe had indeed been scheming early on. Although he felt angry, he didn't let it show on his face and responded with a grave face.

"Fight by my side and assist me in killing the two lackeys most loyal to Grover – Darnell and Yuna, those two b*tches that should be hacked to death by a thousand cuts!" Frost grew on Phoebe's charming face as she spoke through gritted teeth.

"What are their strength, respectively?" Han Shuo's face was calm as he asked.

"Darnell is a senior swordsman and his strength is almost at the level of breaking through to swordmaster, while Yuna is a fire adept mage and her strength is extremely frightening. The two are a couple who are beyond depraved and exceedingly shameless. They basically do not spend long amounts of time apart from each other. They currently both live within the Boozt Merchant Guild. If you're willing to aid me, I have a sixty percent chance of assassinating them without a sound!" Phoebe's body abruptly straightened, highlighting the soaring twin peaks in front of her chest as she spoke excitedly.

"I promise to help you!" Han Shuo didn't hesitate as he spoke in a low voice.

Chapter 71: A moment of grace before the prelude of assassination

After spending an entire day preparing, Han Shuo and Phoebe took a carriage at dusk to the Boozt Merchant Guild in the southern part of the city.

Han Shuo and Phoebe sat shoulder to shoulder within the carriage. Two primitively simplistic crossbows, decorated with intricate carvings, were placed in front of the two. In addition to this, there was a dagger that sparkled with cold light.

“This crossbow and dagger will be of much better quality than the ones you obtained from the orc wolf riders last time. I’m giving all of these to you for free.” Phoebe held a clean piece of silk in her hands, carefully wiping away at the longsword in her hands as she spoke coldly to Han Shuo.

Han Shuo played with the crossbow and dagger in his hands, so delighted with them that he could hardly bear to put them down. He was quite satisfied with Phoebe’s generosity and said with a light laugh, “Don’t count on me too much for this operation, I’m not as strong as you think I am. My main purpose is to keep a lookout and act as your supporting assistant. You’re still going to be the one who has to take action.”

“I know, just listen to my orders later. I’ll be telling you what to do then.” Phoebe rolled her eyes at Han Shuo and said with some anger.

Han Shuo took out a small bottle from within his space ring and carefully poured some powder onto his fingertip, very cautiously coating the tips of both the dagger and crossbow bolts. He hastily and repeatedly cleaned the fingertip that had been covered by the powder.

Phoebe was a bit curious about Han Shuo’s actions and slightly shifted her body closer to where he was sitting, proceeding to stare at and observe his actions for quite a while. She finally asked, seemingly perplexed, “What are you doing?”

A strand of fragrance, similar to the scent of orchids, wafted into Han Shuo's mouth and nose as Phoebe moved closer to him. He involuntarily flicked a glance at her as his heart suddenly lurched. Phoebe was like Han Shuo today, dressed in tight-fitting, black, nightwalker clothes. The tight nightwalker clothing caused Phoebe's marvelous body to become visible without a doubt. She had a pair of exquisitely chiseled cheeks, and stunning beauty which blossomed from the movement of her clear eyes. All of which caused Han Shuo to have a heart like a capering monkey and a mind like a galloping horse.

I already have Fanny... although this Phoebe is pretty, her personality is too cold and she comes with too much dangerous baggage. Han Shuo said silently to himself and turned his head away afterwards, continuing to concentrate on coating the dagger and crossbow bolts. He responded diffidently, "Nothing much, just applying some poison powder to my weapons."

"Despicable! Shameless! This goes against the regulations of the Empire. If anyone were to know of your actions, you would be in great trouble!" Phoebe's face was full of contempt as she spoke coldly.

"Doesn't matter... what we're about to do today isn't the most honorable task anyways. Besides, no one will find out about this. Heh heh, you're my accomplice and even I don't believe that you're dumb enough to rat yourself out." Han Shuo cackled a low, evil laugh as he spoke with a trace of pride.

Phoebe was a bit suffocated by her anger upon hearing Han Shuo's words, but since she had looked to him for help, she could only snort coldly and couldn't say much else.

When Han Shuo had applied poison powder to all the crossbow bolt and his dagger, he thought for a moment and pulled a few iron needles from his thigh. He spared no trouble and was exceedingly patient as he also applied the same poison powder to the iron needles. Phoebe once again snorted lightly, seeming to hold Han Shuo's methods in high contempt.

When he'd settled everything appropriately, Han Shuo put away all his weapons and looked at Phoebe, asking, "Right, why are you not directly attacking Grover and are attempting to kill his two ineffectual lackeys instead?"

"Grover has some critical items belonging to the Guild in his possession, he's put those items in a trusted mistress. If Grover dies, his mistress is sure to publicly reveal those items. This would be of destructive impact to us. So before I kill Grover, I must find his mistress first and regain control of those items." Phoebe glanced sideways at Han Shuo, explaining with some reluctance.

The larger a merchant guild was, the more likely shady dealings would occur. Take the resources that Han Shuo had seized from the orc wolf riders for example. These items had originally belonged to the shops of the town of Drol. The Empire had long since had an official regulation that if citizens obtained such resources, they must be turned in.

Fabian and Han Shuo's transaction had already violated the Empire's regulations. If the Empire were to find out about the methods of the Boozt Merchant Guild, the Guild was sure to find it hard to escape their inevitable punishment. For a guild like the Boozt Merchant Guild, there were surely more similarly illegal transactions. It looked like this critical matters was handled by Grover. No wonder Phoebe didn't dare to act rashly against Grover.

The two discussed some of the details in low voices until the horse carriage suddenly stopped unbeknownst to anyone. The groom at the front said softly, "Miss, we've arrived at the back door of the guild."

"Let's go!" Phoebe glanced at Han Shuo and took the lead in alighting. Han Shuo poked his head out to look around and then hopped off as well.

"Miss, hurry inside. Be careful. Grover has just taken a few strong men and left the guild. I don't know where they've gone. They always return at the end of the night." An old man in the Boozt Merchant Guild was guarding the back door and hastily turned his body to the side to allow Phoebe and Han Shuo to enter when he saw them arrive..

"We've caused you to go to great efforts!" Phoebe said to the old man.

She glanced at Han Shuo as they rushed inside the guild. Han Shuo followed tightly behind Phoebe as he, too, quickly moved forward.

“Although the Guild is mostly controlled by Grover’s men, I can mobilize a few older men, and this is all because Grover isn’t aware of my relationship with them. There are many guards inside, so we must be careful and cautious. Otherwise, not only will the assassination fail if we’re discovered, but it would be hard to even escape with our lives.” Phoebe was exceedingly familiar with the Boozt Merchant Guild as she evaded quite a few areas with guards when she lead Han Shuo with a fast pace. She didn’t forget to remind Han Shuo during this time.

It was completely dark now. There was no moon tonight and thick layers of dark-colored clouds completely absorbed all light. The few lights along the hallways of the Boozt Merchant Guild were unable to shine out too far.

Phoebe had the strength of a swordmaster alright. Her agile body greatly surprised Han Shuo. Her body flew soundlessly and her speed was exceedingly fast.

His magical yuan churning madly, Han Shuo was greatly astounded by the extraordinariness of his senses when he calmed down. The black night was completely unable to obstruct his range of vision. Even without the illumination of lights, Han Shuo could clearly see the fish swimming in the pools beneath the artificial mountains in the far distance. He could also clearly hear the footsteps coming from quite a distance away and the rustlings of low voices within passing rooms.

Han Shuo’s calm walk was also agile and fast beyond comparison. He was like a hunting cheetah, searching for his prey, following soundlessly behind Phoebe.

Suddenly, Han Shuo quickly approached and grabbed Phoebe, abruptly hauling her body and stuffing themselves into a crack in the surrounding artificial mountains.

The crack in the artificial mountains was exceedingly narrow, and their chests were tightly mashed against each other as they squeezed inside.

Han Shuo could feel the fully rounded peaks in front of Phoebe's chest. Her charming face was infuriated as she glared fiercely at Han Shuo, her eyes seeming like they could spit out fire.

"Shh!" Extending a finger to make a silencing motion, Han Shuo's eyes rolled rapidly, indicating to Phoebe that there was an unexpected situation.

The wrath on Phoebe's face still didn't dissipate upon Han Shuo's actions. A trace of bashful red flooded Phoebe's slender, white neck and nape. Their two thighs were somewhat enmeshed and rubbing against each other, they could even feel each other's heartbeat through their connecting chests. A strand of of ambiguous atmosphere started to emanate between the two of them.

Seemingly too shy to look at Han Shuo, Phoebe's cheek made its way next to Han Shuo's ear as she said in an incredibly low voice, her breath like orchids, "I will kill you if there isn't anything going on."

Han Shuo's expression was wry as he regulated his breathing and concentrated, not saying anything. He felt the exceedingly light footsteps draw near. His breathing became slower and he even slightly shook his head, wanting to warn Phoebe of danger. Who knew that because Phoebe was pursing her jade lips in a low whisper to Han Shuo, Han Shuo's shake of his head actually caused Phoebe's tantalizing lips to directly plaster themselves onto Han Shuo's cheeks.

Just as Phoebe's breathing was uneasy and about to erupt into rage, Han Shuo turned his head with extreme difficulty and used a very resolute gaze to tell Phoebe to be careful.

Phoebe had the training of a swordmaster after all, and the strength of her mental state was quite strong. She merely inhaled a deep breath at this critical moment and immediately calmed her rapidly beating heart. However, because of her deep breath, the full peaks in front of her chest involuntarily lifted, rising so that Han Shuo almost lost control and moaned.

"My wind screen truly felt a disturbance and I came here at the fastest speed possible. Why didn't I discover anything? Have I been too careful lately?" The murmuring sound of a man talking to himself sounded out, not too far away from the two.

Exceedingly light footsteps only slowly sounded in the vicinity after the voice came into earshot. If Phoebe hadn't raised her concentration to the utmost, it would have been exceedingly difficult to detect these footsteps unless the man had been quite close by.

Since he was a wind mage, he could indeed use enhancement magics of the wind major to greatly decrease the weight of his body. His walking speed would be faster than normal mages and warriors, and his footsteps would be even more lithe with no sound. No wonder that even with Phoebe's strength as a swordmaster, she was able to detect his movement only after he drew near.

This person surveyed the surroundings, finally departing without a sound while Han Shuo and Phoebe remained on tenterhooks.

However, Phoebe didn't dare take reckless actions this time. She was deathly afraid that her judgment would be flawed. Her pair of clear eyes bore straight into Han Shuo, as if wishing to gain some clues from Han Shuo's face.

After a while, Han Shuo exhaled lightly and said lowly, "He's gone!"

As soon as his voice sounded, Phoebe used her hands and legs together to firmly squirm out from the crack of the artificial mountains. She lowered her head and said lightly with a fierce tone, "I'll let it pass this time, but the next time something like this occurs, find a more spacious place, otherwise I won't let you off."

Phoebe circled around the area after she'd finished speaking and was about to head in another direction. She walked two steps and realized that Han Shuo was smiling wryly, having yet to catch up. She stuck her hands on her waist and lightly rebuked, "You don't want the black gold ore anymore?"

"Coming!" Han Shou responded and followed with some resignation, thinking when can I find a spacious hiding place when things go south!

They didn't meet with any more unexpected twists afterwards. Phoebe led Han Shuo on a longer path, avoiding a few waves of guards and finally making it into Darnell and Yuna's room.

"Let's set things up, make our preparations, and wait for this dog couple to come back!" Phoebe immediately spoke through gritted teeth upon entering the room, seeming to want to vent her frustrations from earlier on the two of them.

Therefore, Han Shuo and Phoebe started working busily, preparing to assassinate Grover's loyal lackeys who were about to return.

Chapter 72: An alarmingly breathtaking completion of an assassination

Phoebe and Han Shuo had set up the room accordingly after a while.

“Why were you able to so miraculously discover traces of the wind mage Ellis when he made his way over?” Phoebe creased her brow, perplexed, and looked at Han Shuo in inquiry as she was inspecting the inside of the room.

Han Shuo was stooped close to the ground at this moment and carefully collected some sawdust from scraps of wood. He conscientiously stored it within his space ring and responded without lifting his head. “This is my business and has nothing to do with you!”

Snorting lightly, Phoebe shut her mouth, but couldn’t help but observe Han Shuo’s actions after a while. She gave an involuntary cry of astonishment, “Were you a killer before? How come you are so steady and cautious right now, and even possess such extraordinary perception?”

If it was Han Shuo’s original personality, he naturally wouldn’t face any matter with such a steady and cautious mentality, but his magical training forced him to continually exist in a state of enduring inhumane pain, unconsciously creating Han Shuo’s firm and indomitable personality.

After the trials of the Dark Forest and Claude’s death, Han Shuo’s careful prudence and steadiness had been unconsciously and soundlessly trained into being. Add to that his extraordinary perception – this truly gave Han Shuo the characteristics of a professional killer. No wonder Phoebe would dare to ask.

“No, do you think I’m you? Tonight, I’ve been operating under your watchful instructions ever since we entered the Guild up until our preparations just now. I think that you certainly wouldn’t have grasped such methods if it weren’t for certain experiences. Looks like you were the one who was a killer before, otherwise why would you be so well-practiced?” Han Shuo finally cleared the sawdust from the bed panels and raised his head to rake Phoebe with his eyes.

“You’re the one who was a killer before!” Phoebe rolled her eyes coldly at Han Shuo. She continued to say, “However, my honored master has passed onto me knowledge of these matters. The particulars of assassinating someone was also one of my required subjects of study.”

“Oh. Looks like your master was a very proficient killer!” Han Shuo said diffidently.

“Shut your mouth, don’t you dare slander my honored master. My honored master is a true swordsman. He wouldn’t do such things!” Phoebe’s face was even colder as she glared ferociously at Han Shuo.

It was at this moment that faint footsteps could be heard approaching from afar. Han Shuo’s brow knitted as he carefully discerned them. He said to Phoebe, “They should be coming back, I can hear them!”

Phoebe also focused on her hearing and listened. She only heard the sound of footsteps draw near a few breaths after Han Shuo’s warning had sounded. She looked at him in shock and said in a low voice, “No matter how strong or weak your strength is, you’re already quite frightening just based on your foresight and extraordinary senses.”

Han Shuo didn’t respond and moved according to Phoebe’s earlier instructions. He crouched down, turned to the side, and rolled underneath the bed. Upon seeing that Han Shuo was in position, Phoebe scanned the four corners of the room with her beautiful eyes and suddenly sprang upwards. Leveraging the chandelier in the room, she hid herself in the shadows of the rafters.

Holding his breath and concentrating, Han Shuo slowed down the frequency of his breaths and heart rate, until he was appeared to be dead. His mind completely clear, Han Shuo rifled through his mind, going over the items they had set up in the room once more in his mind, then placing all of his concentration on the people arriving.

At this moment, footsteps sounded at a volume in which even normal people could hear. The coy laughter of a man and woman flirting sounded from far out the room door, accompanied by various sounds of them making out.

The room door creaked open as the two of them slowly walked in, slowly approaching the bed under which Han Shuo was concealed.

“Darling, were you feeling that itchy today that you had to be so wild at the banquet tonight? Who’s caught your eye now?” Darnell laughed softly as he teased Yuna.

“What’s my business is mine, are you a beast that only knows how to think with your lower body? You only have that b*tch Phoebe in your heart now. If it wasn’t for you wanting to do something last time, we would’ve completed Grover’s mission and killed that b*tch. Her guards got there in time because of your mistake, we almost didn’t get out in time.” Yuna berated Darnell. She’d already sat down on the edge of the bed.

“Heh heh, her skin is as smooth as silk and her face seems like it was exquisitely sketched by a painter. It’s said that she hasn’t had a man yet. Wouldn’t it be such a pity for her if such a beauty doesn’t experienced the manliness of my strength before she dies?” Darnell leered.

At this moment, Han Shuo’s concentration had been raised to the utmost. Although Darnell and Yuna couldn’t detect Phoebe waiting in ambush, Han Shuo could hear her heartbeat and breathing quicken. It looked like she was exceedingly furious. He gave an internal start of surprise and concealed himself even more carefully, ready to act, in case Phoebe sprang the ambush earlier than planned.

“Damned lecher, you’ll die beneath the crotch of a woman someday!”

“Heh heh, I’ll let you die beneath my crotch first!”

The shifting sounds of clothes being taken off slowly spread throughout the room, mixed in with Darnell’s depraved laughter and Yuna’s light panting sounds.

Sucking and kissing sounds followed after as Darnell’s depraved laughter and Yuna’s moans grew louder and louder. The wooden bed above Han Shuo’s head became a small boat in the midst of large waves as it rocked endlessly. A wailing moan, like someone crying, suddenly emerged from Yuna's mouth, followed by the sounds of repeated smacking sounds and heavy pants fillings the ears, mixed in with Yuna's uncontrollable wails in between.

Beneath the bed, Han Shuo could hear the sounds from above and could feel the bed swaying. He knew, without needing to see, that the depraved couple above him had started their battle. His blood boiling, Han Shuo couldn't help but imagine the scene going on just above him, and he desperately wanted to climb out and take a good look. His body had long since uncontrollably risen in a certain male fashion.

An exceedingly light breathing sound came within Han Shuo's earshot. He started, and immediately detected that this sound came from Phoebe, who was still up in the rafters. He wondered if she was furious or also similarly affected.

Han Shuo could only hear the sounds from beneath the bed, whereas Phoebe had to continuously keep an eye on the two. She probably had caught a huge eyeful of their motions. Because even the slightest break in concentration wouldn't be allowed during an assassination operation, Phoebe couldn't even move her gaze away from the two. According to Darnell's words, Phoebe was still a maiden. This type of stimulus was probably more effective to her than to Han Shuo, who was stuck underneath the bed and unable to see anything that was going on.

After a while, just as Han Shuo noticeably heard Phoebe's breathing hitch higher and was afraid that she would be unable to further conceal herself, but the movements of the depraved couple above him became more and more intense. Enormous panting and moaning sounds grew louder as the movement of the bed frame grew bigger. Things had obviously reached the climax.

Just at this moment, a light sound pierced the air. Han Shuo's entire body tensed when it sounded, immediately knowing that Phoebe had already made her move. He focused all the concentration in his body.

"Ow!" Yuna cried out in pain and abruptly yelled out, "Assassin!"

Before Yuna has even finished saying the word "assassin", the dagger in

Han Shuo's hand was already aimed at a hole, that had been previously bored through the bedframe, and he stabbed it ferociously through the hole.

A ghastly wail ten times more desolate than Yuna's suddenly sounded out from Darnell's mouth, like a pig being slaughtered. The minds of the two quickly cleared up from the original heights that they had almost scaled. They screamed continuously as they jumped from the bed and made for the room outside, the cries of agony never once ceased to flow from their mouths.

Han Shuo had already rolled out from beneath the bed after his stab. He raised his head to see that Phoebe's body was enveloped by the black nightwalker cloak, and that a ball of milky-white aura was flaring out from the longsword in her hand. The ball of aura was lustrous and brilliant in the dimness of the room. It dazzled so brightly that one could barely keep their eyes open, and it closed in on Darnell and Yuna, who were attempting to make their escape.

Han Shuo lifted the crossbow in his hand and realized that both were completely naked when he aimed and fired at Darnell. There was already a crossbow bolt stuck on Yuna's snow-white left thigh, and she gritted her teeth with pain as she moved, her body was obviously not as agile as before. Darnell was even worse off, as the lower half of his body was a mess of blood and flesh. He wore a devastated expression of tragedy, wailing continuously like a wolf.

Who would've thought that this dagger would stab directly into Darnell's private parts. No wonder his cries were a lot more desolate than Yuna's, Han Shuo thought in happy viciousness.

The crossbow bolt flew out like lightning and shot towards Darnell's back. Darnell could actually still detect the danger from behind him when he was in the throes of horror and fright. Dark green light flared from the longsword he had long since wielded and demolished Han Shuo's crossbow bolt with an abrupt spin.

A wall of water suddenly appeared after a hastily muttered incantation.

The dark blue wall of water enveloped their two heads and turned Phoebe's milky-white fighting aura into a sky full of rain, watering their two bodies.

But the appearance of this wall of water was timely and won a few seconds of time for the two. The two screamed and ran for the outside of the room, but halfway through the room, the hanging chandelier suddenly crashed down, forcing Darnell to halt his steps again and smash the chandelier to the side.

Phoebe had already descended from the rafters by this time and Han Shuo had just fired his crossbow. They rushed the two at the same time like cheetahs. Phoebe had planned on finishing off Darnell, but displayed a trace of panic and disgust when she saw his naked body. She shifted her sights and longsword to Yuna.

The crossbow in Han Shuo's hand fired again and was then flung to the side. Just when Darnell had demolished the crossbow bolt, Han Shuo's dagger was already rushing to greet him. Darnell had already sunken into a crazed frenzy and due to the pain and heartache of losing his manhood, he increased his fighting aura to the maximum and clashed with Han Shuo's dagger.

Pffsht.

A mouthful of fresh blood splurged out as Darnell's wild fighting aura rushed into Han Shuo's body. Although he had the restraints of the magical yuan, it still wasn't enough to fully defend against it. Han Shuo stumbled a few steps backwards after that clash.

Upon seeing Han Shuo hastily retreat after clashing with this sword, Darnell wanted to crazily pursue Han Shuo, but he suddenly discovered that the longsword in his hand was boiling hot, and that the skin of the right hand, that was grasping the sword was suffering from extreme burning pain. He immediately flung out the longsword in his shock.

"Hurry and run!" Yuna called out at this moment.

A water serpent had appeared at some time and had surrounded Phoebe, attacking fiercely. Except, part of its body would be severed whenever Phoebe waved her sword, turning into watery mist before it even hit the floor.

Darnell glared viciously at Han Shuo, but didn't pursue him further. He covered his lower body with his left hand and continued rushing out the door.

At this moment, Han Shuo's ears caught the sound of faint footsteps coming from afar. Agitated internally, he once again rushed towards the two. Phoebe had also destroyed the water serpent by now and chased the two with speed that was on par with Han Shuo's.

Han Shuo and Phoebe both understood that if they didn't kill these two now, they would no longer have the chance to once they left the room. Therefore, they strived with all their might to keep the two in the room.

At this moment, a prearranged prop was curiously effective. Han Shuo had made some modifications to the table legs of a round table set in front of the door. In their unparalleled haste, the two didn't circle around the round table, but actually leap towards it, intending to use it as a lever to quickly leave the room.

The unexpected happened. Their two bodies landed on the table, and the table legs all broke with a sharp crack as they were unable to hold the weight of the two bodies that had suddenly landed on it.

The two of them had already used all their strength to begin with, planning on using the table as a stepping stone to push off of, but the table collapse caused their bodies to lose balance. With the sudden lack of a support, their bodies followed the table in a wobbly fall.

Han Shuo and Phoebe had both arrived at this moment. Phoebe's sword stabbed out, her aura already enclosing the two.

The two had just regained their balance when they saw that they had been fully surrounded by Phoebe's fighting aura. Darnell suddenly pulled Yuna and, under her terrified and panic stricken eyes, thrust her straight into Phoebe's attack. He didn't even turn back to look at Yuna as he gave no second thoughts about anything else, rushing out of the room.

However, the poison powder that Han Shuo had applied to the dagger finally took effect. Darnell's footsteps suddenly became as heavy as a thousand tons after he took two steps. Han Shuo swiftly closed the distance before he had time to react and waved the dagger again, taking his life.

After killing Darnell, Han Shuo's eyes fell on the space ring on Darnell's fingers. He reached his hand out for it, but felt that it took a bit of effort to do so.

Time was of the essence and Han Shuo ended up chopping off Darnell's middle finger with a slash of the dagger. He put away the finger with the space ring and turned his head to see that a bloody hole had opened in Yuna's chest. Phoebe seemed to have killed her.

"Let's go!" Han Shuo called out softly, rushing to Phoebe's side. A light fragrance suddenly emanated from Yuna and Phoebe's direction. Han Shuo took in a breath, but paid it no heed. He only saw that the look in Phoebe's eyes were a bit strange, and rushed at the girl, who was staring off into space.

He used the same method to break off the ring finger on Yuna's left hand, taking her space ring as well. He grabbed the crossbows that had been discarded with a smooth motion, and grabbed Phoebe, and with a mighty leap, using a hole that had opened in the roof previously, and made their escape along the roof.

Chapter 73: Pervert, what have you done to me?

Around midnight, Han Shuo and Phoebe had just left when Grover brought a pack of Boozt Merchant Guild guards and barged into the room.

“Who did it, who did it? I’ve spent so many gold coins to keep you guys in vain. Not a single one of you discovered that an assassin had snuck in. If the target was me, then it likely wouldn’t be those two on the ground.” Grover immediately started bawling furiously upon entering the room, yelling at the people behind him.

“Mister Grover, this assassin was very proficient. He managed to avoid my windwall and assassinated both Darnell and Yuna in such a short amount of time. This proves that the killer’s strength is absolutely beyond our imagination.” A mage with long hair and a somewhat ugly expression said to Grover after observing for a while.

Exhaling lightly, Grover looked at the long-haired mage and said in an apologetic tone, “My apologies Ellis, I was a bit out of line.”

The wind mage Ellis was still expressionless, and looked at the dead Darnell’s left hand with some surprise. He went, “Eh?” And walked up to the body, noticing that the left hand was missing a finger. Ellis asked, perplexed, “The left middle finger, on which Darnell wears his space ring, has been chopped off. What’s going on?”

“Not only Darnell, but Yuna as well. Could it be that this killer killed them because he wanted to rob them?” Grover was also a bit confused and asked after hearing Ellis’ words.

“Impossible.” Ellis denied decisively and looked around the surroundings, explaining. “If the assassins wished to kill them for the sole purpose of robbing them, then he never would’ve picked these two, because the two of them together are the most difficult to fight against. Not to mention there are many valuable items within the Guild. If he only wanted valuables, he wouldn’t have needed to do anything to them. With the abilities demonstrated by the killer, he absolutely could have obtained more from the Guild without making a single sound.”

Grover thought for a bit after his words and nodded. He said with a darkened face, “If he wasn’t in it to murder for gain, then it must have been thanks to my dear niece Phoebe. It seems like she finally couldn’t bear it longer after enduring things for so long.”

“Indeed, Phoebe must be behind this. Darnell and Yuna both tried to assassinate Phoebe once. Although they retreated when they didn’t succeed, I feel that Phoebe must know that it was the two of them.

After all, Darnell’s gaze towards Phoebe was simply too lecherous and unique. Even I, an outsider, could tell. As the one involved, Phoebe must have had an even better understanding of things. The fact that we’re fine, and they’re the only ones who have died is enough to explain things. Except, it seems that the killer is a bit greedy. Otherwise he wouldn’t have remembered to take their space rings in such dangerous circumstances. When did such a character appear beside Phoebe?” Ellis furrowed his brow and said slowly while turning things over in his mind.

Grover started and mused deeply for a while. His face suddenly darkened and he said coldly, “I know who. It must be that “Bryan” who killed those three assassins from ‘Shadow Ghost’ a while back. I heard the guards say that this person came to do some business with Fabian and thus needed some money. Since his strength is enough to kill three of the senior swordsmen sent by ‘Shadow Ghost’, then he would have the strength to kill Darnell and Yuna.

Damnit, how did Phoebe get her hands on this kid. I don’t know where Phoebe’s hidden him. He hasn’t appeared by Phoebe’s side since he left the Guild last time. I’ve sent people to surveil where he is, but have still been unable to find traces of him. This will be quite difficult.”

Nodding, Ellis concluded. “Looks like it is him. I think we should get rid of this person first at all costs. Otherwise we may be killed by him in due time.”

“Alright, pass my orders on, not to kill Phoebe for now. Put forth all effort into finding this person. He's ruined my plans twice, and I'm going to make his existence a living hell." Grover's face was sinister as he spoke coldly.

At this moment, Han Shuo, deeply hated by Grover, had already brought Phoebe far away from the Boozt Merchant Guild and was rushing towards Phoebe's quarters in the northern part of the city.

Something was odd with Phoebe, as she seemed a bit out of it. Her body was sluggish and hot to the touch. Han Shuo was dragging her in his haste to cover distance. The two of them were dressed in nightwalker clothes and chose to thread through small alleyways in the dark of the night, staying completely out of sight.

But as they neared the northern part of the city, the city guards started appearing more frequently, forcing Han Shuo to continuously hide and evade. Phoebe had still known to make good time when dragged behind Han Shuo, but at this moment, her steps started to drag as her body grew hotter and hotter.

With no alternatives, Han Shuo flung Phoebe onto his back, completely disregarding whether or not she agreed. In order to avoid the attention of the city guard, Han Shuo temporarily gave up his idea to send Phoebe back to her quarters and took her to the cemetery behind the Babylon Academy of School and Magic instead.

It was the quietest place he knew, and no one patrolled there. Add to that, Han Shuo was exceedingly familiar with the area, and that was why this was the first place he thought of in a time of crisis like this.

When Han Shuo had circled past the northern part of the city with Phoebe on his back and made it past some narrow roads into a forest patch, he suddenly felt that Phoebe, on his back, was tearing at her own clothes and her two hands were roving unconsciously over Han Shuo's body.

Astonished, Han Shuo's body suddenly stopped. After relaxing, Han Shuo could clearly feel the well rounded mounds in front of Phoebe's chest pressed against his back, the wondrous sensation of them closely mashed against his well defined back. A blaze of fire suddenly ignited from his chest, uncontrollable like the sparks of a fire. Add to that Phoebe's restless hands were still unconsciously moving all over Han Shuo's chest, and it finally grew so stimulating, that Han Shuo could no longer control himself.

He swung Phoebe down from his back and suddenly held her marvelous body in his hands. He thrust Phoebe's body onto a tree nearby, and Han Shuo's two hands moved in tandem, kneading the forbidden areas of Phoebe's body.

Even with the nightwalker clothes separating them, Han Shuo could see feel the wondrous curves of Phoebe's bodies. Her well-rounded chest kept changing shape beneath Han Shuo's ministrations and when his hand roamed over Phoebe's slender legs and pert bottom, the amazing, strong stimulus attacked Han Shuo's senses, making him want to experience it even deeper.

Phoebe had yanked her own face mask off, and at this moment her eyes were glassy, filled with the tempting lure of desire. Her stunningly beautiful face burned to the touch and brought with it a heart leaping beauty. The faint fragrance emitted by the breaths between her open mouth made Han Shuo's heart caper like a monkey and mind gallop like a horse. He was about to lose himself in it entirely.

Han Shuo's right hand tore off a piece of Phoebe's nightwalker outfit near the chest. The snow white expanse of her breasts immediately blossomed in front of Han Shuo's eyes, along with a dot of pinkish red.

Han Shuo finally couldn't contain himself and he lost control of the strength in his right hand.

"Oh... ow."

At this moment, a small, feeble protest came out from Phoebe's small mouth. Her beautiful brows quirked vaguely because of the pain coming from her breasts, finally unconsciously mouthing a weak sign of pain.

Calmness blindsiding his mind, Han Shuo abruptly came to his senses. When he looked at Phoebe, he also recalled that he too had taken in a breath of that odd scent earlier. He immediately understood that Phoebe had fallen victim to an aphrodisiac, and also reflected that his loss of rational thought was likely because he had taken in a breath of the same toxin.

His thoughts spinning furiously, Han Shuo measured up his potential gains and losses and resolutely gathered Phoebe in his arms again, furiously dashing out to the front.

Han Shuo was very familiar with this area and came to a winding creek after not too long. The creek was quite narrow, and he wasn't sure where it led to either, but he knew that this river was very shallow due to often frequenting in the area.

As soon as he reached the river, Han Shuo walked directly into the waters, still holding Phoebe. Because it was almost winter, the weather was exceedingly frigid. The river waters were even more icy in the middle of the night, and when Han Shuo carried Phoebe into the water and splashed some water onto her head, Phoebe suddenly sneezed a few times.

Han Shuo also submerged his head into water and when the ice cold water covered his head, it chilled his previous urges. His body's reactions also completely calmed down.

"Achoo... achoo..."

After Phoebe sneezed a few times, her mind slowly came back to her senses due to the effects of the cold river water. When she spat the cold water out of her mouth, the blush on her cheeks slowly disappeared and her glassy stare slowly disappeared.

"Where is this, why I am here? Achoo!" Phoebe looked around in confusion and sneezed again. When she lowered her head to sneeze, Phoebe abruptly realized that the two well-rounded peaks of her chest were exposed to the night air. The snow-white expanse of her skin and the dots of red at the peak greatly affected Phoebe.

Pa! Han Shuo's face had already suffered from a slap.

Phoebe's face held anger that was almost madness in its ferocity as she screamed shrilly at Han Shuo, "Pervert, what have you done to me?!"

Han Shuo truly did feel a bit apologetic towards Phoebe at this moment, and he stammered, unable to speak clearly as he gazed upon a girl who was about to lose her mind. Phoebe suddenly broke out in loud sobs when she saw Han Shuo's reaction, instantly losing her usual cold arrogance and demureness. She gave no thought to anything else and began beating at Han Shuo with her fists and feet. Water splashed every which way in the creek and drenched Han Shuo.

But because Phoebe had suffered from such a great shock at this moment that she seemed to have completely forgotten that she was a strong swordmaster. She was more like a bad-tempered shrew, beating Han Shuo in a disorganized fashion without any fighting aura whatsoever.

If Phoebe had used fighting aura, with her strength as a swordmaster, even with Han Shuo's small accomplishments in magic, would cause him to be gravely injured, if not dead after her string of blows, but these types of attacks felt like scratching an itch when they landed on Han Shuo's strong body, not hurting in the slightest.

Han Shuo endured Phoebe's venting with a wry expression. When the strength behind her fists decreased more and more and she herself became tired, Han Shuo laughed wryly, "We were both under the influence of an aphrodisiac, but your body is still clean."

Phoebe came to her senses after Han Shuo spoke and halted the motions of her hands. She stood in front of Han Shuo with a distance spanning two fists, sizing him up with slightly puffy eyes, as if afraid to endure another shock. Her voice trembled as she asked, "Truly? You really didn't do that to me?"

Nodding his head firmly, Han Shuo held up his right hand in resignation and solemnly promised her, "I swear that I really didn't do anything inappropriate to you."

A trace of relieved joy suddenly appeared on Phoebe's beautiful, tear-streaked face. She was about to open her mouth and say something when she suddenly saw the nudity of her chest and hastily pulled the nightwalker outfit up, covering her naked breasts. She lifted a head full of anger and glared at Han Shuo, roaring lowly through gritted teeth, "Then can you explain to me why the front of my clothes were ripped open?"

Shrugging his shoulders, Han Shuo said with a face full of innocence. "What does that have to do with me? You're the one who lost your mind and started ripping off your clothes. I controlled myself tightly and brought you here, using cold water to revive your senses. I am an honorable gentleman, don't misunderstand me."

"Screw your honorable gentlemanliness, you despicable, shameless, profit-seeking knave! You held my hand last time and hugged me without even a word of apology. You purposely took advantage of me in the crack of the artificial mountains in the Guild and didn't apologize. You've gone even further now, I'm going to chase you to the depths of hell for this!" Phoebe's face was full of wrath as she made threatening gestures and rushed at Han Shuo. Phoebe had obviously activated her fighting aura after coming to her senses this time.

Han Shuo was startled and knew that Phoebe had most likely remembered her clothes being torn in front of her was from his hands. He hastily turned and scrambled up the river bank, protesting his innocence along the way. "Miss Phoebe, listen to me. I also took in a breath of the aphrodisiac, causing my emotions to get out of control, but when I came to myself I immediately took you to this river. The heavens and earth are my witness, I really didn't take advantage of you.

When you were still under the influence, you also touched me all over and took advantage of me. Apart from you, no other girl has ever touched me before. I'm still a virgin. I'll have scars deep in my heart after being violated by you. I've also suffered losses, let's say that we're even for this matter. Don't pursue it any further..."

As Han Shuo ran away bedraggedly, words shot out of his mouth like bullets. It was as if he'd returned to the time when Chu Cang Lan had brought him to the moon and he'd let the old man have it with his words when Han Shuo lost his composure. Except, it was insults last time, and explanations this time.

“Shut up, you petty villain who should die a thousand, ten thousand times. Stop saying nonsense.” Phoebe’s clothes were drenched through at this time and her wet hair exuded another type of allure, but her motions with her sword in her hands were quite violent.

“Forget it, count me unlucky. I’ll be leaving now and will come find you for the black gold ore after you’ve calmed down. Farewell.” Han Shuo knew that there was no use in talking to Phoebe at this time. A woman who’d lost her senses was the scariest magical creature in the world, not to mention one who was a swordswoman. The danger of this to Han Shuo was on par with that of a super magical creature, like a dragon.

Sighing inside about how unlucky he was, Han Shuo didn’t dare slow down his footsteps as he quickly rushed out, making for the direction of the cemetery and slowly leaving Phoebe, who was unfamiliar with the terrain, far behind.

Chapter 74: The little skeleton that wants to soar and fly

The first glimmers of dawn appeared in the sky after using the transportation matrix to return to the cemetery of death.

One full day and night had elapsed since his departure, and he hastened to move to the “Original Demon Cave” and infuse more fresh blood and magical yuan, finally breathing a sigh of relief after he did so.

The operation of the “Original Demon Cave” must not be halted for even a day. If fresh blood and magical yuan weren’t infused everyday, then the work of the previous twenty some odd days would be in vain.

Planting his butt firmly on the ground, the fighting aura that had rushed into his body from Darnell’s blow finally slowly started rampaging through his body. A sudden impact brought an upwelling of blood to Han Shuo’s throat – he almost spat out a mouthful of fresh blood again.

Happy instead of startled, he abruptly stood up and threw his head back in laughter. He quickly strode out of the cemetery of death, towards the waterfall that he used to train his magic. Han Shuo braved the long river rushing down and sat down in his usual place. His body wobbling strongly in the beginning, Han Shuo quickly sank again into his training mode.

For the next seven days, apart from infusing the “Original Demon Cave” with fresh blood and magical yuan at periodic intervals, Han Shuo stayed beneath the waterfall to train his magic.

Han Shuo’s strength improved in spades in the midst of harsh training. Leveraging the fighting aura that Darnell had left within his body and the violent force of the waterfall, Han Shuo reforged the meridians and bones of his chest, waist, and stomach. When Han Shuo felt that Darnell’s fighting aura no longer remained within him, he could clearly feel that his own body had emerged in an unprecedentedly better state.

In the next few days, Han Shuo halted all magical training and spent his time looking after the “Original Demon Cave” and studying the “Beginner Magics of Necromancy”. He was now fully able to recite the latter from memory, and had basically committed it to memory.

Han Shuo had noted the parts in which he didn’t understand. As he continued to use the round, green ball to meditate, his mental strength grew with each passing day. Under his continual experimentation, he finally released the “Agony of the Soul” magic one day. Han Shuo was overjoyed and elated at that time. He understood that over the accumulation of several months and his greatly increased mental strength, he had finally graduated from the ranks of magic apprentice to being a novice mage.

A novice mage in necromancy could grasp the three magics of “Agony of the Soul”, summon zombies, and bone spears. Except after trying for quite a while, Han Shuo had only happened to cast “Agony of the Soul” by mistake. He was unable to release the other two magics of summoning zombies and bone spears no matter how he tried.

He connected that fact to the other of not being able to understand many parts of the “Beginner Magics of Necromancy”. Han Shuo understood that only perusing books was not the fastest nor best way to increase his knowledge of magic. It looked like he should look for Fanny and inquire about the areas he didn’t understand, as well as pick up the weapon forging materials that Phoebe had promised him, along with the black gold ore.

But before he’d return, Han Shuo still planned to finishing refining the “original demon”. The Original Demon Cave had been operating for a full 34 days and would be complete in two more days. Han Shuo was in no rush to leave immediately, and thus went to the dwarves’ village to socialize with them.

He came back to the mining cave again and mined for the entire day, obtaining a small piece of black iron ore and a couple pieces of iron and copper ore.

Han Shuo understood from Phoebe that black iron ore was a very rare and very valuable ore. He could often only obtain a very small piece after mining for an entire day. Therefore, he directly stored the black iron ore within his space ring. When he returned to the cemetery of death afterwards, he threw all the iron and bronze ores into a space storage room within the great hall.

“Haha, this is interesting indeed. With these three “original demons”, I have three extra pairs of eyes. If I let them loose, I will no longer be afraid of being followed and ambushed. If I use the three “original demons” to assassinate others, it’ll be an absolute nightmare for my enemies!” Han Shuo laughed wildly as he repeatedly used his will to release and withdraw the “original demons” from and into his body, practicing tirelessly.

At this moment, the little skeleton, that had been lying in the “Original Demon Cave” all along, suddenly stood up, slowly climbing out of the pit. The seven bone spurs on its back actually started flapping furiously as its body shot towards the sky with a strong push from its legs.

The seven bone spurs on its back were divided into two rows, like the wings of an insect, with the remaining one pointing down at its butt like a tail. As it shot towards the air, it capered shakily, with the two rows of bone spurs whirring furiously and its tail wagging continuously. It seemed to be the steering wheel of a bike in helping him move agilely through thin air.

When the tail-like bone spur moved to the left, the little skeleton’s body would also shift to the left. When the bone spur waved to the right, the little skeleton’s body would fall to the right. It looked quite amazing!

Han Shuo was gobsmacked as he looked at the little skeleton descend in a wobbling fall, his face full of shock. He didn’t know how to react in the span of that moment.

After a while, the little skeleton fell from midair with a crack as the bones of its body emitted a long string of creaking sounds. The little skeleton seemed to be dazed from the fall as it staggered around in circles after picking itself and the bone dagger up, as if it was drunk.

“Damn brat, you’ve only learned how to walk for a few days and now you want to fly?!” Han Shuo felt a deep pain in his heart as he looked at the little skeleton's current state. He hastily walked up to the little skeleton and knocked on the little skeleton's bright, smooth forehead.

An interesting thing happened! When Han Shuo knocked down with his finger, the little skeleton immediately stopped its drunken staggering and sat down hard like a child. It even extended a finger to scratch its head, seemingly unable to comprehend what it did wrong.

Han Shuo had protected the little skeleton with great care ever since first being summoned by Han Shuo. Under the continual refinement of his magical yuan, it started to display human-like behaviors. Han Shuo's feelings towards the little skeleton was far more than those he felt for anyone else in this world. He was worried to death when he saw it fall from high up in the air.

Han Shuo breathed a sigh of relief when he verified, with his own eyes, that the little skeleton hadn't shattered, and that it had only been rattled by the fall with nothing else worse for the wear.

After looking over it carefully, he suddenly realized that a few specks of dark red could be found within the inky blackness of the little skeleton's originally dark bones. It was no longer that pure, deep black. If it wasn't for his careful gaze, he likely would have been hard pressed to discover it.

"Eh, this is strange. The 'Original Demon Cave' was original meant to refine a small demon chief. He purposefully squirmed his way in and even had an expression of leisurely enjoyment. His body had undergone some changes as soon as he left the pit, and even wanted to imitate those demon generals in my body and fly. Looks like this brat has changed again. I wonder if these changes are for the better or for the worse. Even I don't know what this brat is now." Han Shuo carefully stared at the little skeleton in close observation and muttered to himself.

After a round of deep musings, in which Han Shuo realized that he couldn't understand the little skeleton's changes, he shook his head and thought no further. Looking at the now normal "Original Demon Cave" since the "original demon" general had emerged from it, Han Shuo started an incantation and sent the little skeleton back to the other dimension.

With his injuries recovered and the three “original demons” refined, and even the little skeleton recovering its mobility, Han Shuo traveled back to Ossen City through the transportation matrix when he thought of the incomprehensible magical knowledge and the black gold ore that Phoebe owed him for his services.

Chapter 75: Close the doors, you get in bed first

Ossen City, the Babylon Academy of Magic and Force.

Han Shuo ate breakfast and first bought a set of new clothes, arriving at the academy later in the morning. He went to the library first and surreptitiously put back the two books of “The Foundations of Necromancy” and “A Magical Dictionary” that he had asked Jack to steal before. He then walked to Fanny’s lab.

The doors to the lab were open and Fanny was wearing black robes trimmed with gold, wearing a set of black framed glasses and holding a magic staff in her left hand. She held a pen in her right and was drawing some magical patterns on the pedestal in the center, explaining something with her speech.

Next to her, Fitch had put on the appearance of conscientious listening, but his eyes often travelled over Fanny’s face. Fanny had lost a few traces of her charming beauty with glasses on, but gained solemnness and the beauty of intellectuality. In Han Shuo’s eyes, her beauty wasn’t diminished at all, and he rather stared soulfully at her, mesmerized.

Fanny delivered a string of words then lifted her head to look at Fitch, who was busy staring off into space. She frowned, “Fitch, do you understand?”

Fitch suddenly woke up from his musings and nodded, smiling, “Master Fanny, you were very clear, I understand.”

When Fanny lifted her head to look at Fitch, she happened to see Han Shuo standing in front of the door. Han Shuo was now a bit taller than Fitch, and his body was muscular and well defined due to continuous training and fighting. He stood there with his spine straight, like a javelin, without the slightest bit of the usual, frail external appearance that mages usually possessed.

Fanny first blinked, a bit astonished by Han Shuo’s unnoticed changes, but when Fanny also saw Han Shuo staring at her, mesmerized, her heart gave a leap and her face blushed red as well. Her right hand tightened on the pen and almost snapped the pen in two.

What's wrong with me? Fanny said to herself and involuntarily took a deep breath, seeming to pout as she glared at Han Shuo. She lifted her head to call out, "Long time no see Bryan. You've disappeared for a month after last time's training. Where have you been skulking around for so long that you only remembered to return now?"

Han Shuo's mentality immediately returned to normal after hearing Fanny's words. He laughed lightly, not waiting for her to greet him and strode purposefully into the room. He responded, "Last time's outing in the Dark Forest made me realize the many deficiencies in my abilities. That's why I borrowed a magic book and did some remedial studying on the foundational knowledge of magic. I've come to Master Fanny with some questions because I've encountered many difficulties."

"Huh. Who would believe you?! You're always so mysterious." Fanny rolled her eyes at Han Shuo, obviously not believing his words. She turned her head to look at Fitch, suddenly feeling that his presence was irritating, for some inexplicable reason. She instructed, "Fitch, I have a few more matters to discuss privately with Han Shuo. Since you understood my explanation, you can go back and practice well."

Fitch started. He hadn't seem to think that Fanny would want him to leave because of Han Shuo's appearance. He blanked for a while, then finally viciously glared at Han Shuo, saying lowly, "Errand slaves will always be errand slaves. It's not like you've become a real student just because you put on the uniform."

Fitch finally left after saying this. A smile was constantly apparent on Han Shuo's face, completely oblivious to Fitch's low mutterings. Han Shuo knew this was because of Fanny's attitude towards Fitch that caused Fitch to carry a grudge, but until Fitch took action to express his hatred, Han Shuo couldn't be bothered to spend an ounce of strength on him.

"Go and close the door tightly!" Fanny put down the pen and raked Han Shuo with her gaze, instructing in an imposing manner as soon as Fitch had left.

Close the doors? Han Shuo's heart jumped, gazing upon Fanny with a deep and meaningful look. He displayed a trace of an odd smile, hastily got up, and hastened to say, "Alright alright, I'll go close the doors."

When Han Shuo had jubilantly and gleefully closed the doors to the lab, Fanny raked Han Shuo with another gaze and continued instructing, "Get on the bed first!"

Nodding his head like a chicken pecking corn, Han Shuo didn't even bother saying much this time and directly shucked off his shoes, falling directly backwards on the white bed. He proudly crossed his legs and smiled, "Master Fanny, you come over as well!"

Fanny watched Han Shuo with an amused expression as her mouth closed with an audible click. "Come, close your eyes first."

He had never been so docile as Han Shuo obediently closed his eyes, thinking dirty thoughts. A depraved smile blossomed on his face.

"Ah!"

A painful howl emitted from Han Shuo's mouth. He suddenly felt that a large surge of mental strength had invaded his mind, completely startlingly Han Shuo from his beautiful dreams.

When Han Shuo saw that Fanny was gazing at him with a small smile, he asked with a hint of anger in his voice, "Master Fanny, what are you doing?"

"Examining your body! Didn't I say last time that you're the subject of my experiments, and that I would use the school facilities to conduct a thorough examination on you when we returned to the school, like I've just done? What did you think I wanted to do with you after closing the doors and make you lie on the bed?" Fanny spoke with a face full of seriousness and glared at Han Shuo, but even with glasses on, they couldn't hide the proud smile in her eyes, one that was proud of successfully executing her scheme.

The Han Shuo of now was not the Han Shuo of before, he immediately discerned the joy in Fanny's eye with one glance. He sat up with a wry smile and said, "Forget it, don't examine me in the future. These things can't be explained by rational logic. If you truly turn me into an idiot by intruding my mind that way, my life will be over."

Fanny vaguely creased her brow in thought upon hearing Han Shuo's words and sighed involuntarily after a bit of contemplation. She smiled, "Forget it then. I'm willing to lose an experimental subject, but not a talented student."

Seeing that Fanny was letting him off the hook so easily, Han Shuo heaved a huge sigh of relief and immediately thanked Fanny sincerely. He then took out the book of "Beginner Magics of Necromancy" and started asking Fanny all the parts he didn't understand.

Upon seeing Han Shuo withdraw the "Beginner Magics of Necromancy" from his space ring, and then seeing that many parts of the book had been highlighted and noted by Han Shuo, Fanny immediately looked askance at Han Shuo. She exclaimed lightly, "You're already reading this book? Have you grasped all the magics that magic apprentices should know? Um... and you've taken a lot of notes. Looks like you really didn't slack off during this month... I've thought wrongly of you."

"Of course I've already grasped the magics that magic apprentices should know!" Han Shuo smiled.

He thought for a moment and released the "Agony of the Soul" magic in front of Fanny. Fanny immediately said, "Oh my goodness! Bryan, you're too amazing. You actually have enough mental strength to release the 'Agony of the Soul' magic. This means that your mental strength has truly reached the level of a novice mage. You're a genius, a true genius!"

Han Shuo wasn't sure if he was a genius or not, but he knew that his mental strength could only improve so rapidly due to that odd, green, round ball. He still hadn't figured out what this green, round ball was, but he was absolutely sure that it had something to do with the cemetery of death.

After a string of surprised exclamations from Fanny, Han Shuo started seriously asking Fanny all his questions about magical knowledge that he didn't know. As an adept mage, Fanny's constant homework had always been to teach students how to understand magic and was very familiar with this foundational knowledge. She went out of her way to resolve all of Han Shuo's difficult questions.

During the process, the two were quite close to each other and Han Shuo could smell the fragrance wafting off of Fanny's body. Their gazes would interlock during explanations and have a sense of mutual admiration due to shared enlightenment. Fanny didn't feel distaste at Han Shuo being so close to her, and would actually clap his shoulder as she complimented him whenever he clearly understood one of her explanations.

Time passed unknowingly in Fanny's lab. The two of them had conversed for several hours, yet Fanny wasn't the slightest bit impatient. She seemed rather delighted and would never be bored because she had met a good student.

It wasn't until when the bells started ringing that Fanny came to herself with a shock. When she recovered her senses, she said lightly, "Oh no, I almost forgot that I still needed to preside over class at the training fields later this afternoon. Bryan, your comprehension abilities are very high. Looks like you've chosen the right path in learning necromancy magic, but let's stop here for today, I'm going to the training fields to teach my class, do you want to come with me?"

Shaking his head, Han Shuo smiled, "I'd rather not. I've already thoroughly grasped some of the lower level magics. I've understood from you today many of the things that I didn't previously understand, and need some time to carefully think about them. I won't be going to the training fields."

Nodding, Fanny didn't press further and hastily cleaned up the lab. She picked up a book, adjusted her collar, and said, "That works too. You can come find meet with me in private in the next couple of days and I'll help you go over the areas that you don't understand. Oh. right. Lisa seems to have been very worried that you were gone for so long. She asked me where you went?”

“Heh heh, I haven’t been up to much. Please tell her not to worry. I’ll be going now, and will come disturb you quite often in the next few days. Thank you in advance, Master Fanny.” Han Shuo said carelessly and left before Fanny left her lab. He thought for a bit, avoided the crowded areas, and started walking outside the Academy.

After leaving the Academy, Han Shuo circled past two roads very carefully, finally making his way towards Phoebe’s residence.

Han Shuo vaguely felt that he was in a bad place after the assassination at the Boozt Merchant Guild. Not only had he offended Grover, but it was likely that even Phoebe held a grudge against him, but for the black gold ore, Han Shuo had to grit his teeth and come find Phoebe again. He only hoped that the past ten or so days had been enough to calm her temper.

The same old butler answered the door again, with Fabian coming by shortly after Han Shuo had walked in because he’d heard the news. He still wore a faint smile when he saw Han Shuo, saying, “Bryan, how come you have time to swing by today?”

Smiling wryly, Han Shuo shook his head and sighed, “Don’t mention it. I helped your young miss assassinate Darnell and Yuna in the Boozt Merchant Guild last time, but somehow offended your Miss Phoebe. Not only did I receive no compensation, but she actually beat me up. Terribly unlucky!”

“Oh? Although Miss Phoebe comes from a wealthy family, she isn’t the type to throw a tantrum without cause. What happened between you and Miss Phoebe? After she came back in the dead of the night that day, she spent the next couple of days being angry. I happened to overhear her curse you as despicable, shameless, and disgusting. I truly don’t understand what could have happened for her to be in such a terrible mood!” Fabian looked at Han Shuo with confusion, saying slowly as he seemed deep in thought.

His face wry, Han Shuo sighed lowly once again. “Forget it, let’s not mention those things again. I have to find her again for my materials. Is Miss Phoebe home right now?”

“Apologies, the miss is out and temporarily not available, but I think she’ll return shortly, so if you’re not in a hurry, you can wait here a bit.”

“Alright, then I’ll wait for her for a bit.”

Indeed, Han Shuo’s ear caught the sound of someone knocking at the door from far away after waiting for a short while. As his heart started to agitate with unease, he privately weighed up what he should say to Phoebe when he saw her later.

Just as Han Shuo’s brow was deeply furrowed in thought, a man’s voice sounded lightly. “Eh, you’re Bryan, what are you doing here?”

Han Shuo started and immediately lifted his head, realizing that the warrior Lawrence, who had spent five gold coins to hire him as a human target last time in the warrior’s academy, was standing at the door with Phoebe.

“Senior brother Lawrence, you know him?” Outside the door, Phoebe looked at Lawrence, astonished, as she asked in surprise.

“Of course, he’s Bryan, the errand boy from our Academy!” Lawrence answered matter-of-factly.

“Errand boy?” Phoebe and Fabian both exclaimed at the same time. Phoebe measured up Han Shuo with an odd look as she asked Lawrence, “Senior brother, your Babylon Academy of Magic and Force is the most renowned school throughout the Empire. Why would such a despicable, shameless, and disgusting person be present?”

Lawrence started upon hearing these words and shrugged his shoulders at Han Shuo, smiling at Phoebe, “Little junior sister, how did Bryan offend you? I rather admire his tenacious and unyielding personality.”

Han Shuo’s face was wry as he sat there without a word, drinking tea with a lowered head, one sip after another. He privately reflected that he was in quite the pickle. He hadn’t thought that Lawrence would be Phoebe’s senior brother. Now that his identity had been revealed, if Phoebe wanted to pursue previous events, it would be troublesome for even him to avoid this.

Chapter 76: He's my boyfriend

"Senior brother Lawrence, come with me, I'll give you the items you need!" Phoebe said to Lawrence, seemingly a bit bored after Han Shuo made no response to the round of sarcasm directed towards him. Han Shuo only drank mouthful after mouthful of water with a wry face.

Before she left, Phoebe's clear eyes glared viciously at Han Shuo as her body halted, "If you're not in a hurry, wait for a while."

Han Shuo lifted his head to look at Phoebe, clearly perceiving her repressed anger. Remember that the materials for his Demonslayer Edge were still in her hands, he immediately nodded out of resignation.

Phoebe led Lawrence off to the side. Fabian looked at Han Shuo with an extremely odd look after they left, asking with surprise, "Bryan, to think that you're only an errand boy at the Babylon Academy of School of Magic. My gosh, but you're so strong, what's going on?"

"Nothing much. Oh right, this Lawrence is part of the warrior academy at our Academy, a very ordinary sergeant knight, but Miss Phoebe has the strength of a swordmaster. How could the two of them have the same master?" Han Shuo was quite perplexed as he asked Fabian.

Although knights and swordsmen could train the same fighting aura, Lawrence was merely a sergeant knight, whereas Phoebe had the strength of a swordmaster while training underneath the same master. The gap between the two was simply too great, particularly when Han Shuo had clearly heard from their mouths that Lawrence was the senior disciple brother and Phoebe was just the junior sister. This made Han Shuo feel that it was even odder.

"I'm not too clear about the young miss' situation either. I was just an insignificant character in the Boozt Merchant Guild before. I'd only heard that the young miss was studying abroad before the Guildmaster passed away, and would only return once or twice each year. If it wasn't for the fact that the Guildmaster suddenly passed away, Miss Phoebe likely wouldn't have suddenly stayed.

Lawrence only appeared recently. Their relationship is indeed quite close, but I have no way of answering your questions either.” Fabian looked apologetically at Han Shuo as he explained.

Han Shuo didn’t ask further after this explanation, but merely nodded and frowned in contemplation.

After a while, Phoebe and Lawrence once again stood at the door. Phoebe looked at Fabian and instructed, “Fabian, show senior brother Lawrence out the door for me. I have a few words to speak to Mr. Bryan in private!”

“Yes, miss!” Fabian stood up, knowing how to behave in a delicate situation and walked outside.

“Bryan, I’m very happy to see you here. If you’d like to earn a few more gold coins in the future, you can come find me at any time. However, I think you won’t be needing that anymore. Alright, see you later Bryan, I think we’ll have plenty of opportunities to meet in the future.” Lawrence looked meaningfully at Han Shuo, laughed lightly and followed Fabian out.

When the two had left, Phoebe walked in with a cold face and flicked a glance at Han Shuo after sitting down, snorting lightly, “How dare you come back here again!”

“And why wouldn’t I dare?” Han Shuo’s eyebrow flicked, not taking anything lying down as he stared back into Phoebe’s eyes. “I haven’t done anything against my conscience, not to mention you still owe me from last time. As long as you give me the materials you promised and the black gold ore, I’ll leave immediately and won’t come do business with you ever again!”

Phoebe slammed her hand down on the table and glared at Han Shuo furiously, “You, how dare you demand things from me! Damnit, you violated me and I’ve been nice enough not to kill you!”

“Bullshit, both you and I were influenced by the aphrodisiac then. I was the one who dragged you out of the Guild, otherwise you’d be long dead by now. Not to mention I didn’t really do anything to you, otherwise I wouldn’t have brought you to the river.” Han Shuo was truly angry now.

He had toiled all night long and not only had he gained nothing, but he'd suffered a beating at her hands. This Phoebe wouldn't let go of this matter, was she truly trying to avoid paying up?

Phoebe drew out her longsword with a clang and glared wrathfully at Han Shuo. Han Shuo also abruptly slammed the table and immediately stood up, glaring ferociously at Phoebe, seeming to want to break into a fight as soon as the two disagreed.

The two of them glared at each other and maintained this position for nearly a minute. Phoebe curled her lip and stuck her longsword back into the sheath with another clang. She turned her head, no longer looking at Han Shuo and said coldly. "Just what do you want?"

"Very simple. I'll purchase the other materials according to the estimate you gave me and give me the black gold ore that you owe me. Our debts will be resolved this way and we won't have anything to do with each other in the future. I won't conduct any more stupid transactions with you anymore." Han Shuo sat down with a darkened face and drained the water from the glass in front of him with one gulp, saying decisively.

"You dratted, profit-seeking jerk. Here, take it all and get out of here!" Phoebe felt an involuntary surge of rage upon hearing Han Shuo's words as uncontrollable anger showed in her expression. She withdrew a large bundle of items rather irritably from her space ring and slammed it down on the table, throwing it in front of Han Shuo, leveling a harsh glare at Han Shuo.

"Eh, you prepared it all, why didn't you say so? We were harming our amiability for nothing." Han Shuo had planned on taking the items and leaving, but saw that the bundle of items were packaged orderly. There was a piece of odd-looking ore, contained in a clear flask, with the words "black gold" written on it. It looked like Phoebe had been long since prepared for his arrival and hadn't planned on going back on her word.

But what Han Shuo couldn't wrap his mind around was that since Phoebe hadn't planned on going back on her word, why did she come in with such an explosive temper and say that she hadn't planned on giving him anything. This was rather baffling, and Han Shuo couldn't make any sense of it.

"Give me your crystal card, I'll transfer the appropriate amount of gold coins into your card. Heh heh, I actually didn't have any other meaning and just wanted to take back what was owed to me." Han Shuo smiled rather awkwardly, but still put this bundle of items into his space ring, then talked to Phoebe, somewhat abashed.

Still not properly looking at Han Shuo, Phoebe had a face of cold arrogance and said stiffly, "No need. I'm not as miserly as you. It's only thirty five hundred gold... treat it as a gift. Don't let me see you in the future, just get out!"

Seeing that she was so sarcastic and jeering, Han Shuo's face froze and he nodded, slapping down the piece of black iron ore that he had mined the day before. He too said coldly, "I don't like owing favors to strangers. Treat this ore as compensation of me purchasing your other ores. Good bye Miss Phoebe, I won't be doing business with you in the future."

Just as Han Shuo was about to resolutely leave the room, Phoebe suddenly lost her composure and stood up, looking at Han Shuo with a lost expression. Her wise eyes were full of weakness and weariness. She spoke with a desolate voice, "You're going to treat me as a stranger from now on?"

Shrugging, Han Shuo said naturally and unconstrained, "Since you don't care to treat me as a friend, I, of course, will not shamelessly impose on you."

Han Shuo smiled naturally after these words and began to walk outside, but Phoebe suddenly called out lightly before he walked out the door, "Wait!"

Turning his head to look at Phoebe, Han Shuo asked calmly, "Miss Phoebe, what other matters are there?"

Phoebe's expression was a bit odd. She lowered her head and thought silently for a bit, but when she lifted her head, a good half of the weakness and weariness had actually vanished. Her direct stare at Han Shuo made him feel very odd. She even quirked her lips at the end and revealed a trace of a smile, asking, "Bryan, you mean that you already viewed me as a friend?"

Astounded, Han Shuo nodded and replied matter-of-factly, "Of course, we've gone through two life or death experiences in the Boozt Merchant Guild, not to mention you've helped me on several occasions. I already consider you a friend, but you're not willing!"

"Who says I'm not willing, huh? Apart from monetary transactions, are you so heartless to all your friends?" Phoebe's expressions had returned to normal by now and had a few more traces of human interest compared to her normal, remote aloofness, and she used the same attitude she had used towards Lawrence just now when talking to Han Shuo.

"Of course not." Han Shuo responded.

Han Shuo could clearly feel that Phoebe's words had been permeated with sincerity and worry. He felt a bit touched inside, and his facial expressions became more tender. After thinking carefully, Han Shuo felt that Phoebe's words should be fine. He frowned and said to Phoebe, "Then, what do you think I should do?"

"Eliminate Grover with me, otherwise we will never have days of peace!" Phoebe's charming face grew cold as she bit off her words.

Musing for a bit, Han Shuo suddenly felt that perhaps a life ensconced in danger was more suitable for him to break through. His life had been too simple and monotone before, perhaps additional stimulus would make it more interesting. Add to that what Phoebe had said, if the threat of Grover wasn't eliminated, he may truly be faced with endless troubles.

After musing for a bit, Han Shuo said resolutely, "Alright, I promise you!"

"Then, accompany me to the personal banquet held by the Guild tonight. Several of the founding elders will be present at this banquet." Phoebe's charming face was gladdened upon seeing Han Shuo agree, and she immediately opened her mouth in inquiry.

"Eh, a banquet held by your Guild? What am I going to do there?" Han Shuo started and asked.

“Gain the goodwill of the other founding elders and take precautions against the schemes of that old thing. Bryan, I need your help, you just said that we’re friends right?” Phoebe looked straight at Han Shuo and asked.

He suddenly had the feeling of the feeling that he’d boarded a pirate ship and was about to be taken advantage of, Han Shuo felt a bit odd. But he had indeed admitted that the two were friends earlier according to Phoebe’s intentions. He was unable to back down now, and could only grit his teeth and agree.

Exclaiming softly, Phoebe said happily, “Wonderful, wait a moment and I’ll have someone tailor a tuxedo that fits you. I also need to teach you some basic noble courtesies. I’ve already learned from Lawrence that you’re from the Babylon Academy of Magic and Force. Eh... I think you’re probably not too well versed in such things.”

Throwing an ill-tempered look at her, Han Shuo said, “I was an errand boy, but that was in the past. There’s nothing untowards about it and nothing that can’t be talked about!”

“Sorry Bryan, I really didn’t mean anything by it, truly!” Phoebe was a bit agitated and hastened to apologize with genuinity.

“No worries, tell me, I’ll listen carefully!” Han Shuo waved his hand with indifference and indicated for Phoebe to begin.

“This, this is black iron ore!” It was as if she’d just discovered it as Phoebe looked at the black iron ore that Han Shuo had set on the table. She looked at Han Shuo with astonishment. “You actually have black iron ore, it looks like you truly want to forge the best weapon!”

“Absolutely!” Han Shuo responded firmly.

Phoebe gave Han Shuo an overview of the basic courtesies of nobility. Han Shuo understood that in order to climb to a higher level in this world, he must indeed have a grasp of such mannerisms. Therefore, he docilely listened to Phoebe’s descriptions and even tried to make a few of the basic gestures of courtesies according to Phoebe's demands.

When night fell, Han Shuo had already changed into the tuxedo that Phoebe had specially prepared for him and actually cleaned up nicely. He followed behind Phoebe and rode in a carriage to arrive at the Boozt Merchant Guild for the third time.

Many luxurious and opulent carriages were parked in front of the doors and the guards had been changed out. They were two unfamiliar faces to Han Shuo. When Phoebe and Han Shuo both alighted from the carriage, they walked in with the ease of experience without having to greet the guards. Phoebe led the way past two hallways and appeared at the entrance of the banquet hall.

"Niece Phoebe, this is a private banquet of our Guild, it doesn't seem too appropriate that you've brought him?" Grover's hand held a wine glass filled with fine wine at the front of the door and happened to be conversing delightfully with a couple obviously well off guild elders. When he saw Phoebe and Han Shuo walk in, he first looked balefully at Han Shuo and then addressed Phoebe.

"Uncle Grover, Mr. Bryan isn't an outsider!" Phoebe thinned her lips and laughed lightly, glancing at Han Shuo with some shyness as she explained.

"Oh? Then dear niece, can you tell me why he isn't an outsider?" Grover's eyes squinted as he sized up Han Shuo with venomous, snake-like eyes, speaking sinisterly as he did so.

"He's my boyfriend!" Phoebe threw her head back, looking at Grover directly in the eyes without fear as she said proudly.

Chapter 77: The position of Guildmaster

“Boy, boyfriend?” Grover was startled and had an exceedingly odd expression as he looked at Phoebe. His gaze at Han Shuo afterwards was even more odd, and confirmed again as if he didn’t believe what he had just heard. “Is he really your boyfriend?”

“Of course.” Phoebe nodded affirmatively, and stretched out her arm with a red face and held Han Shuo’s left hand, like she wanted to prove the relationship between the two.

Han Shuo’s mouth was open as if someone had shoved an egg into his mouth, an expression of dumbfoundedness appearing on his face. He didn’t react until he felt Phoebe secretly apply pressure to his arm with her small hand, laughing dryly and nodded without explaining anything.

One of the Guild elders talking jovially with Grover said doubtfully to Grover in a low voice, “What’s this kid’s background?”

Grover didn’t say much, only throwing a look at this person and turned his body to the side. He smiled, “Since he’s your boyfriend Phoebe, then there’s no problem. Hurry and come on in.”

Dragging Han Shuo, Phoebe’s facial expression was as usual as she walked into the hall. She greeted a few founding members with a smile and continued to drag Han Shuo to a place with fewer people.

Waiters held platters filled with fruit and fine wine throughout the hall, placing them on square tables located in a spacious area. A large chandelier overhead sent bright light into every cranny of the room. The decorations, that littered the entire hall, were incredibly luxurious, giving a rustic countryman, such as Han Shuo, quite a shock.

But, what shocked Han Shuo the most was Phoebe’s words just now. When he saw that there was no one around, he immediately smiled wryly at Phoebe, “Miss Phoebe, what did you mean to do by doing all of this?”

Conveniently snatching a wine glass, Phoebe poured a glass of delicious red wine for herself, gracefully raising it to her lips for a light taste, finally speaking afterwards, “Don’t think too much, I’m just finding a cover for your presence and don’t mean anything else by it. If I didn’t say such things, you probably wouldn’t even be able to make it inside.”

Nodding, Han Shuo sighed resignedly and said, “I knew that nothing good would result from me following you here.”

“You have to act more natural, I’ll cover things for you. This is the annual gathering of the Guild and all the founding elders will attend. As bold as Grover is, he wouldn’t dare to make a move at this time, so we don’t have to worry.” Phoebe spoke softly to Han Shuo as her eyes continuously scanned his surroundings.

Also grabbing a wine glass to pour himself half a glass, Han Shuo took a sip and found it tartly delicious. He observed his surroundings once more with keen interest, finding that many of the Guild members had also brought their other halves. There were twenty or thirty people in the entire hall. There were some elderly members and some handsome youths. There were also some beautiful married women with the graceful bearing and demure of noble ladies.

Without an exception, all of these people were dressed richly and their motions urbanely polite. It looked like this was the so-called style of the upper class. Grover held a wine glass in hand and threaded through all the people, amiably greeting everyone and looking quite friendly.

“The Boozt Merchant Guild has always been controlled by the Boozt family. My family had always been the Guildmaster before, but because I was always traveling outside, that old thing temporarily took the position of Guildmaster after my father passed away, but don’t think that he has good relations with many of the elders. No one really knows what goes on in the dark, otherwise there’d be no point in me coming back.”

As Han Shuo silently observed the surroundings, Phoebe gave her explanations in a low voice. When Phoebe was finished, a thought struck Han Shuo as he suddenly asked, “How did your father die? Did you know nothing beforehand?”

When he said this, a trace of killing intent instantly blossomed in Phoebe's eyes. She suppressed her voice and said with a cold expression, "I'm still investigating how my father died. I haven't found any evidence yet because I'm usually not in the Guild and thus am not too certain of many things. The founding elders probably don't really trust my abilities and thus their attitudes are all vague and indefinite. My current task at hand is to win over the support of the founding elders, otherwise I'll be unable to shake that old thing from his position with my power alone."

Han Shuo understood that Phoebe was also suspecting the reasons behind her father's death with these words. He didn't say much more and held his wine glass, observing those in the hall and privately considering a few things.

A few more people entered after a while. An elder with grizzled sideburns walked in last into the hall with the support of a butler.

When this person appeared, many people in the hall made their way over to make their greetings. Phoebe immediately pulled Han Shuo in this direction as well when she saw him, quickly explaining in a low voice, "He's Andrew. He founded the Boozt Merchant Guild along with my grandfather and is currently the founding elder with the longest record of service within the Guild. Even Grover doesn't dare to act too wildly in front of him. We won't be as passive if he helps us."

Arriving in front of Andrew, Phoebe made a restrained bow and said with a smile of joy on her face. "Grandpa Andrew, you've come as well!"

"Eh, it's our beautiful little Phoebe. Grandpa hasn't seen you in quite a while heh heh, you've grown so tall." Andrew's left hand grasped his cane, while his right hand was being supported by a butler as he chuckled at Phoebe.

"Good niece, don't just stand around talking, hurry and let the elderly sit down. When one is at that age, it must be very tiring to take a carriage the whole way here. He mustn't be kept standing." Grover said to Phoebe as he walked over in Andrew's direction, seeming to want to lead Andrew in a seat on his side.

"Heh heh, no worries. I'm having a delightful conversation with little Phoebe. I haven't seen our little Phoebe in quite a while." Andrew evaded Grover's support and actually raised his cane to walk in Han Shuo and Phoebe's direction.

Grover's brows involuntarily knit into a frown as he saw Phoebe lead Andrew to the other side with a look of surprise on her face. His gaze patrolled over Andrew's body, seeming to be contemplating something.

When Phoebe, Andrew, and Han Shuo had all sat down in a corner on the other end of the hall, Phoebe and Andrew hadn't even had a chance to speak before Grover had raised a glass and said with a chuckle, "Founding elders of the Boozt Merchant Guild, today is the annual gathering of our Guild. It's a pleasure to see everyone again this year. It's a pity that because of health reasons, my dear brother has passed away from an illness. This is quite a tragic event."

"Don't worry Grover, everything is orderly under your management. I think if the Guildmaster knew, he would be touched and gratified." One of the founding elders suddenly spoke up at this time with two others by his side chiming in.

Han Shuo watched their performance with a cold eye, having a clear understanding of things in his heart. He knew that these people were sure to have close relations with Grover, and were merely declaring their stance with these words.

At this moment, Han Shuo, seated next to Phoebe, could clearly hear Andrew snort in a very low tone. Phoebe was even closer to Andrew and naturally heard things clearly. She glanced involuntarily with surprise at Andrew, and exchanged a look with Han Shuo.

"The Guildmaster has already passed away, but our Boozt Merchant Guild cannot be without a Guildmaster forever. I think we should take advantage of this opportunity to thoroughly discuss the particulars of a new Guildmaster. What does everyone think?" The same person called out in a carrying voice, and the two founding elders, who had chimed in before, once again assented. Grover's face was calm, only sitting there and continuously looking around the four corners of the room, with his gaze pausing a bit longer on Phoebe and Andrew.

“Of course, the position of Guildmaster cannot be empty for too long, but who will be the Guildmaster? This is an important question.” A stocky founding elder said in a seat not too far away with a low, muffled voice.

“What else is there to discuss, Grover should be the new Guildmaster of course. Since the Guildmaster’s passing, Grover has been the one to manage the Guild’s affairs. Everyone has also seen that the Guild has been stable and orderly in his hands. I don’t think anyone else is qualified to sit in this seat other than Grover.” The Grover supporter abruptly stood up and called out, winning the other two people’s assent.

Grover stood up with a smile, his face full of hypocritical humility as he spoke words that his abilities were limited or that he was embarrassed by undeserved praise. The three were resolute in that it must be him, and the merry band demonstrated quite outstanding partnership.

“Uncle Andrew, who do you think is more suitable to be the new Guildmaster?” At this moment, the founding elder, who had previously spoken in a low, muffled voice, looked at Andrew from afar and asked.

All the looks from the surrounding founding elders focused on Andrew, as if waiting for him to express his decision.

Andrew looked in Phoebe’s direction, the latter pretending to be calm and composed. He slightly stood up and chuckled lightly, “It’s not me at any case, I don’t have that many days left to live, heh heh.”

Everyone displayed friendly smiles after his words. Grover also smiled and laughed softly, like he was heaving a sigh of relief because he was truly afraid that Andrew would step forward and seize the position of Guildmaster from him.

“However,” Andrew’s gaze swept over the assembled and he continued, “I think that little Phoebe has grown up. Since she is the daughter of the Guildmaster and a member of the Boozt family clan, logically speaking, she is the most qualified person to be the new Guildmaster. Why has no one mentioned this?”

“No, absolutely not. Miss Phoebe is too young and has always been traveling outside. She doesn’t even know of all the matters within the Guild. If she were to become the Guildmaster, she may ruin the business of the Guild.” The founding elder, who’d been upholding Grover, immediately protested violently.

“Kiro, that may not be the case. Although Miss Phoebe is young, I see that she’s quite knowledgeable and mature, she also knows the proper limits for speech and action when doing something. Perhaps with her at the helm, she’ll even be able to bring further development to the Guild.” A founding elder suddenly opened his mouth. All the other elders who had been staying silent without a word suddenly chimed in upon seeing Andrew express his support for Phoebe. Three or four other elders still remained quiet, as if expressing their neutrality.

“How, how will this do? We can’t take the future of the Guild as an experiment for her competency.” The loyal Grover supporter called Kiro immediately complained.

“How can we not? If I recall correctly, when the old Guildmaster first took over the Guild, he was only twenty three himself, but under the guidance of Andrew and a few others, the old Guildmaster quickly grew up and helped the Guild become more prosperous with every passing day. I believe that Miss Phoebe will also be able to do so. Not to mention with us aiding her, no major problems will develop as well.” The person continued to say.

Grover’s face had darkened and he’d stopped speaking after Andrew had spoken out. Finally standing up at this time, he said to Phoebe, “Good niece, your boyfriend was once an errand boy for the Babylon Academy of Magic and Force, and had the status of a slave. Don’t think that I’m poking my nose in too many places, but if people found out that the two of you were together, it would affect the reputation of our Guild.”

Several of the founding elders shifted their focus towards Han Shuo after these words, unable to conceal the contempt and disdain on their faces.

Han Shuo gave a horrified startled look, finally understanding that Phoebe's worries weren't without reason. It looked like he had underestimated the power of Grover and Shadow Ghost. Who would've thought that they'd be able to investigate his background with only his first name? It was a good thing that he had spent most of his time in the cemetery of death lately. Otherwise if he'd stayed at the school, he may have long since been assassinated by highly trained killers.

"Uncle, what do you mean by this?" At this moment, Phoebe suddenly stood up, her charming face cold as she stared at Grover angrily, wanting to throw all decorum to the side.

"Don't get angry dear niece. I just wanted to say that your judgment doesn't seem too good. In order to manage the Guild, a daring, wise, and far sighted judgment is most important. If you choose even your future husband from the slaves, then I don't think I'm content to let you be Guildmaster." A peaceful smile was still on Grover's face, but the words he said were quite vicious.

"I think a person who can murder his own brother for profit and continuously send out killers to attempt to harm his own niece is even less worth of the position of Guildmaster." Han Shuo also stood up and watched Grover with a cold smile, completely fearless and seemingly unaware of how shocking his words were. Pausing in the astonished gaze of the entire hall, Han Shuo said again, "Please remember that I am a student of the Academy now. I no longer have the status of a slave and never will again."

Chapter 78: A blood battle in the deep alleyways

“Shut your mouth! Don’t make unfounded accusations! I had such a deep relationship with my elder brother, how could I possibly kill him? Dear niece, I feel so bad for you since you found a boyfriend that doesn’t understand the principles of propriety!” Grover’s face changed drastically as he surged to his feet, slamming his hands down on the tabletop and roared angrily.

His expression as usual, Han Shuo lightly laughed and glossed over the matter, “Everyone already knows this. Phoebe is the Guildmaster’s only daughter and should be the candidate most qualified to inherit the position of Guildmaster. If she were to be assassinated, who stands to profit?”

“When was it an outsider’s turn to talk about the matters of the Boozt Merchant Guild? Phoebe, you should keep this outsider, who doesn’t know what he’s talking about, in line.” Grover glared viciously at Han Shuo as he turned to talk to Phoebe.

At this moment, Phoebe had already calmed down from her earlier panic. She’d always maintained a veneer of civility with Grover, but how was she to know that Han Shuo would have no qualms whatsoever and stand in sharp opposition from the beginning, almost having a throwdown with Grover instantaneously, throwing all her plans into disarray? She didn’t know what to do for the span of a moment.

However, just as Han Shuo and Grover were denouncing each other, Phoebe’s thoughts churned and she felt that Han Shuo’s actions were clear and decisive. Because of his actions, her attitude would clearly be displayed in front of the founding elders. This would also show the founding elders that she wasn’t some weak person who wasn’t willing to fight for her position.

Except, it was the time to measure her gains and losses. Since Han Shuo had already so sharply announced his stance, there wasn’t a way that Phoebe could salvage the situation even if she wanted to. Immediately after Grover's words had been cut off, she said confidently, "Indeed, Uncle Grover, I believe that I have the qualifications to be a competent Guildmaster."

"Although in recent years I have spent my days outside, father has never given up his tutelage of me. The knowledge I have learned is also relevant to operating the Guild. Father has long since arranged all this. I hope you can support me uncle, and teach me if I am found lacking in any places. I am confident that I can take good care of the Guild."

"Good niece, your courage is worth complimenting. However, a matter such as this is not child's play. One misstep is enough to doom the Guild beyond redemption. Uncle is cowardly and cannot afford to shoulder such responsibility." Since they were laying everything out, Grover no longer hid and concealed his intentions as he spoke with a darkened face.

At this moment, Andrew suddenly grasped his cane and tottered to his feet. He spoke in a conciliatory tone, "There's no point in arguing further. How about this... why don't we let little Phoebe try first? If the Guild is still expanding smoothly in her hands after three months, then let Phoebe be the Guildmaster. If not, Grover will continue to be. What does everyone think?"

Since Andrew had spoken, apart from the three founding elders who supported Grover, all the other founding elders expressed their consent. Andrew waited until they all had expressed their opinions before smiling at Grover, saying merrily, "Since the majority has agreed, let's do this for now. What do you think?"

As unwilling as he was, since the majority of the founding elders within the Guild had agreed, Grover had no way of changing the situation. He could only grit his teeth and say with resignation, "Since this is the case, then let's move according to your wishes."

Nodding, Andrew smiled, "Then good. I have a few matters to attend to, so I will be taking my leave. Ah, little Phoebe, I haven't seen you in so long. If you have nothing else to do, come to my house for a chat!"

“Sure, I happened to want to ask grandpa about your experiences in managing the Guild!” Phoebe smiled faintly and stood up. She put down the wine glass, threw a look at Han Shuo, and walked out without even looking at Grover.

Han Shuo put down his wineglass and flashed a contemptuous, cold smile at Grover, who was staring at him frostily. He followed behind Phoebe and headed outside the hall.

After leaving the Guild, Phoebe looked around and saw that it was empty. She said softly to Han Shuo, “Go back to my residence first. I’ll rush back after chatting with grandpa Andrew. We’ll talk later!”

“Heh heh, little Phoebe, your boyfriend is quite bold! He dared to argue with Grover in the hall, I think you have quite the eye!” Andrew stood on the side of his carriage as he looked benevolently upon Phoebe and Han Shuo.

Her charming face blushing red, Phoebe looked at Han Shuo and whispered, “Be careful.” She then walked to Andrew and said cutely, “No way. You don’t know how frustrating it is because he’s so pudding-headed sometimes!”

Han Shuo didn’t listen further to their conversation any longer and didn’t take the carriage that he had arrived in with Phoebe, but rather set out for the northern part of the city alone.

Since it was late at night anyways, there were almost no pedestrians on the road. When Han Shuo had just left the Boozt Merchant Guild, he didn’t feel that he was in too much danger, but when he threaded past a street and just walked into an alleyway, he suddenly became alert.

His thoughts moved as three original demons were soundlessly released from the back of his neck. When the original demons left Han Shuo’s neck, they immediately assumed the form of nothingness and lay in wait, in three different directions, without leaving a trace behind in the darkness.

As if he’d gained additional pairs of eyes, Han Shuo could clearly see not only the direction in front of him, but even the area behind and to the left and right of him. Refined by magical yuan, there wasn't the slightest bit of fighting aura or magic pulse from the original demons. Under the status of nothingness, it was quite difficult for the human eye to detect any trace of them. Thus, the departure and concealment of the original demons didn't startle anyone.

The wind adept mage Ellis, whom Han Shuo had seen last time, was floating like a wispy ghost behind Han Shuo. He hung soundlessly waiting. Four killers, clad in black clothes and head coverings, were also on the roofs of the houses on either side of the alleyway. They walked on soundlessly, quietly following behind him and slowly closing in on him.

Startled, Han Shuo hadn't thought that Grover would be so daring. He had just left the Guild when the latter made his move. It looked like Grover's hatred for him was bone deep.

Han Shuo suddenly calmed down when it came to the moment of his survival. There were five in total. Apart from the wind adept mage Ellis, the other four weren't that weak either. According to the observations of the original demons, Han Shuo discovered that the four of them were divided into two warriors, one mage, and one archer. If it wasn't for the fact that the original demons could monitor their movements at any time, Han Shuo would be hard pressed to escape his death.

However, with the addition of the original demons, although Han Shuo still didn't have any advantages, he wasn't without the hope of escaping. From Phoebe's descriptions, Han Shuo knew that there was a mansion up ahead that was the residence of the Empire soldiers stationed here. Han Shuo had chosen to walk through this gloomy alleyway precisely because of the manor that lay before him.

His thoughts churning madly, Han Shuo understood that these people could only make their move within the alleyway. Otherwise once he made it through, they would lose their chance. The space ring lit up faintly as Han Shuo clasped the dagger in his right hand. His footsteps moved forward at a measured pace, neither too slow nor too fast, as he continuously paid attention to the movements of the enemy through the observations of the original demons.

Finally, when Han Shuo made it to the center of the alleyway, the five killers – including Ellis – seemed to believe that this was a good chance as their approach speed suddenly picked up.

An exceedingly light sound of an arrow whistling through the air suddenly fell into Han Shuo's hearing range. The arrow was uncommonly sharp as it made straight for Han Shuo, its momentum exceedingly fierce.

This arrow had come from a professional archer. The angle and tip were exceedingly brutal. If it hadn't been for the fact that Han Shuo had clearly observed his actions through the original demons, then it was very likely that he would've fallen to the arrow on the spot.

His originally measured paces suddenly picked up, but he didn't rush forward, but rather dodged to the left. The arrow shot past the corners of Han Shuo's clothes with a whooshing sound, whistling violently towards the front.

The arrow suddenly fractured into pieces in front of Han Shuo, as Ellis had long since released a few sharp windblades. He seemed to be waiting for Han Shuo to subconsciously move further in, but Han Shuo had already detected this and evaded them.

At the same time, the air above his head suddenly lit up as a patch of fire wall abruptly formed and came down over his head. Two nimble figures, wielding longswords, came flying down from the roofs. Han Shuo could clearly see the pale-green and dark green fighting auras thanks to the light provided by the fire walls.

Abruptly increasing his speed, Han Shuo's speed suddenly raised instantaneously and circled to the left, avoiding the obstruction of Ellis' windblades and dashing out of the entrance of the alleyway. Han Shuo had just left his position when the fire wall slammed down, and sparks flew up from the place he had just been standing.

No matter how they imagined things, they would never know that Han Shuo had already clearly seen their intentionally concealed tracks through the eyes of the original demons. They had thought it was absolutely an unexpected attack, but it had already been completely observed by Han Shuo. This is what caused the extraordinarily talented group of five to fail their first wave of attacks completely.

“Don’t let him leave the alleyway alive!” Ellis’ soft voice was purposefully sharp and hard as it sounded at this moment.

The archer and fire mage stood on either side on the rooftops of the alleyway. When Ellis’ words were spoken, they made their move at almost the same time. The archer grabbed three arrows and notched them to his bow, shooting them all at the same time with a whistling sound. They flew fiercely towards Han Shuo’s forehead, back, and thigh.

Another wall of flames suddenly formed in the direction that Han Shuo was dashing in, blocking off his escape and forcing him to take the long way around. Otherwise he would be hard pressed to escape the funeral pyre of the flaming walls.

The two swordsmen who had just landed took advantage of the situation to quickly approach with their longswords. They were only ten or so meters away from Han Shuo. Ellis’ feet hovered above the ground as he quickly closed the distance from behind, obviously planning on keeping Han Shuo here.

Tilting his body, Han Shuo once again changed directions and made for the right. He planned on circling past the fire walls and rush out onto the street. Several windblades came whistling in, but it was all within Han Shuo’s expectations. The dagger in his hand moved swiftly as he cut away at five windblades. However, three of them still drew across his thigh and arms.

Him suffering three hits was under the circumstances of Han Shuo knowing that Ellis had sent windblades there earlier, otherwise if ten windblades connected with his vitals, it would be likely that he would be unable to take another step forward.

Han Shuo bore up beneath the injuries to his thigh and arms and rushed out from the windblade ambush, simultaneously evading the fire wall and flying arrows, dashing to the alley’s entrance like lightning. He was about to rush out onto the street.

At this moment, an exceedingly ghastly wail cut through the quiet night sky. In the midst of running, Han Shuo used the original demons to discover that the archer's bow had been cleaved into two, and was falling listlessly from the rooftop with blood at the corners of his mouth. Phoebe stood where he had just been standing, a longsword in hand and standing with a proud, majestic looking air.

"Pho... Phoebe, you're a swordswoman!" Beneath the head covering, Ellis was so surprised that he forgot to modulate his tone and used his original voice to exclaim in surprise. He didn't talk to the others as his quickly dashing body suddenly halted. He abruptly turned back and escaped towards the back with an even higher speed.

Phoebe snorted coldly and didn't bother chasing the escaping Ellis. After all, if a wind mage were to attempt a full out escape, it would be difficult indeed to catch up to him. The longsword in her hand waving, the majestic-looking Phoebe alighted gently from the roof towards the two warriors. It looked like she was planning on taking care of those who were still around.

Han Shuo was about to rush out of the alleyway at this time and was overjoyed when he saw Phoebe suddenly appear. He swiftly did an about face and opened his mouth to summon the little skeleton, running quickly towards the two warriors himself.

The little skeleton wouldn't have been that useful when Han Shuo was fleeing for his life previously. With the presence of Phoebe the swordmaster now, Han Shuo had turned from the hunted to hunter. The little skeleton could naturally make an appearance to kill enemies.

When the bone dagger-wielding little skeleton appeared, it started running quickly under Han Shuo's commands. The seven bone spurs on its back waved as it shot towards the roof, attempting to finish off the fire mage.

The fire mage was shocked as he had never thought the little skeleton would be able to make use of its momentum to directly vault onto the roof. In his panic, he immediately muttered an incantation as the wildly blazing fire wall made an appearance again, blocking the path that the little skeleton would take.

However, the little skeleton paid no attention to the obstruction of the fire wall and flung himself into it. It walked out with its body reddened from the fire wall and arrived in front of the fire mage's dumbfounded expression. The bone dagger in its hand danced as it turned the mage into a beehive.

Chapter 79: Breaking through the boundary

There were only two swordsmen left, one senior and one journeyman swordsman. Phoebe herself was enough to make the two of them unable to escape death. Han Shuo turning back merely accelerated their deaths.

With a flash of his space ring, Han Shuo held a crossbow in his hand and fitted a crossbow bolt into the string. He'd already targeted one of them, and shot at the back of the senior swordsman when they abruptly started retreating and wanted to take themselves out of the fight.

The senior swordsman, who planned on leaving had to turn back in resignation and block the bolt, but in the instant he'd destroyed the bolt, Phoebe was already standing in front of him.

The little skeleton that had stabbed the fire mage to death held a bag in his left hand, jumping down from the roof with a whoosh. After his skeleton wobbled a bit, he was already standing with dagger in hand in front of the other journeyman swordsman.

As Han Shuo strode over with a cold smile, one of the swordsmen suddenly drew his longsword across his neck and fell down.

"These are people from 'Shadow Ghost'. If they know that there's no way out for them, they'll choose to end their own lives!" Phoebe shook her head, storing the longsword in her hand back into a space ring and said with a frown.

The little skeleton had arrived in front of the two corpses at this moment and began to search them with practiced motions. When two more bags hung on its left hand, it walked over happily to Han Shuo with bone dagger in hand, offering the three bags to Han Shuo.

Caressing the little skeleton's skull with a faint smile, Han Shuo took the three bags and cursed after one glance. "Damn it, three poor sods. They only had ten or so gold coins!"

Rolling her eyes at him with ill temper, Phoebe didn't search the corpses and directly said to Han Shuo. "I've never seen someone as greedy as you. Don't bother searching their bodies, you won't discover anything. The people of 'Shadow Ghost' never bring anything important with them when they go out on missions, so forget it, they won't bring any riches to you."

Han Shuo cursed again when he heard Phoebe's words and chanted an incantation to send the little skeleton back. He then grinned and asked softly, "Didn't you leave with Andrew? Why did you suddenly return?"

"You're hurt?" Phoebe was shocked and immediately rushed to Han Shuo. When she saw the blood wounds left by the the windblades on Han Shuo's body, she immediately revealed a worried expression. The space ring on her finger lit up and some gauze and medicine appeared in her hands. She didn't shy away as she said softly, "Don't move!"

It was rare that Han Shuo saw Phoebe display such an expression, and he felt vaguely touched inside. He stood there dumbly, not moving at all and looked at Phoebe carefully apply medicine to his injury, then using gauze to wrap it all up for him.

When Phoebe was finished, she tugged at Han Shuo and exhaled lightly. "You sure know how to pick a place. Two manors are on the two sides of this alleyway and both families are out. No one's come out even after such a violent fight, it looks like the house hasn't been sold yet. However, we can't stay here for long. Although the security isn't too tight here, the guards will still patrol the area after a while. It'd be better if we leave earlier."

"Let's go." Han Shuo agreed and left with Phoebe, rushing to the northern part of the city. He asked along the way, "Oh right, you still haven't told me, why did you suddenly come back?"

Seeing that there was no one around, Phoebe frowned and said in a low voice, "Grandpa Andrew told me in the carriage that Grover has been conducting transactions with the barbaric orcs, and has actually been selling the Empire's weapons to them. The implications of this matter are huge, and if the Empire knew, they wouldn't let him off easily."

"Grover must know that if I'm in charge of the Guild, he won't be able to cover this up anyone. So he must kill me before I take control of the Guild. Otherwise once this matter is uncovered, as strong as he is, Grover will be hard pressed to escape from the punishment of the Empire. Once I knew of this matter, I knew that he would try to kill you first. I worried about you so I left Grandpa Andrew halfway through to come find you.”

Nodding, Han Shuo said, “So that’s why. No wonder Grover wanted to kill us so quickly. It looks like as soon as you have evidence in hand, Grover will be done for without a doubt.”

“Exactly!” Phoebe laughed coldly, but then sighed as she thought. “However, Ellis has learned of my strength this time. I think Grover will think of a plan and even I will find it difficult to deal with his next assassination attempt.”

Han Shuo knew that his power was limited, if even Phoebe couldn’t handle things, then he wouldn’t have much effect either. The only thing he could do to help Phoebe was with his perceptive senses towards assassins. He thought for a moment and said, “I’ll leave for a bit. I’ll come find you when my injuries are healed. Grover is our mutual enemy now, I know what to do.”

“Alright, but don’t go back to the Academy no matter what you do. Since Grover knows your identity, you’ll face tremendous danger if you stay in the Academy the next couple of days!”

Phoebe mused and said to Han Shuo.

Nodding his head in understanding, Han Shuo told Phoebe to be careful and left alone. The three original demons accompanied him, but didn’t discover any other disturbances until Han Shuo came to the cemeteries behind the Academy.

After returning to the cemetery of death, Han Shuo trained his magic for a bit. A cool feeling wreathed around his injuries as he circulated his magical yuan, and the feeling of pain was greatly reduced.

After sleeping for a while, it was already noon of the next day. Since all the materials had been gathered now, Han Shuo left the cemetery of death eagerly and headed towards the dwarves’ village. He planned on asking the dwarf chief Calvin to forge the Demonslayer Edge for him.

The dwarf village was located in a small mountain valley. There were enormous trees concealing the entrance of the village. If it weren't for the fact that Han Shuo had once made a trip here with the dwarves, he would have been hard pressed to find their place of dwelling.

Han Shuo was now quite familiar with the route and came to the dwarf village after a while. He threaded past the towering trees, and a dwarf, who stood guard with a sharp axe in hand in front of the village immediately called out with a friendly voice, "Oh! Good friend, you've come to visit us again!"

Following behind the dwarf, Han Shuo traveled through a small path with shrubs on both sides and finally made it to the dwarf village. Calvin, Bennett, and the others had heard the news and were all waiting merrily to welcome Han Shuo. Fine wine was quickly served.

The dwarves lived in log cabins that they themselves had constructed, with some also living in emptied-out tree hollows. There were only a hundred or so dwarves in the village. Women and children were a good half of the numbers, and the warriors, who could truly fight, numbered not that many.

Han Shuo had won the true friendship of the dwarves over this period of time. They were very generous towards Han Shuo. Whenever he came by, there was always fine wine and meats welcoming him, making him feel quite touched.

"Han, how come you have time to stop by?" Calvin said merrily to Han Shuo.

Taking out the materials that Phoebe had prepared from the space ring, Han Shuo handed them over to Calvin, saying, "Elder, these were the materials you requests. There's also enough black metal ore. Will you be able to forge a weapon for me?"

Calvin took the materials from Han Shuo and looked at them carefully, saying with surprise, "Of course, absolutely. With enough materials to forge a great weapon, this is a happy matter for us. Don't worry Han, we'll start working on it tomorrow. We'll be able to forge a weapon for you in about a week, and you're sure to be satisfied for it."

Han Shuo truly breathed a sigh of relief with his guarantee and immediately expressed his genuine thanks to Calvin. The low complaints of some of the female dwarves came from afar. Han Shuo's ears were sharp, and he involuntarily listened closely to them.

"Ai, it will be winter soon. We're never guaranteed of food in the big snow, and the chief has drawn from the stores many times to treat the guest. At this rate, how will we survive through the winter?"

"Yes, I've also heard that the damned man-eating monsters have been around lately. It looks like they've come out to plunder and raid in order to make it through winter. If they discover our village, we'll have to move again. When will these days end!"

The conversations of the female dwarves were all completely taken in by Han Shuo. He was a bit touched. It looked like the lives of the dwarves weren't as good as he thought, but even so, they had still taken out the best food to treat him. This made him feel quite guilty.

He thought for a moment and sighed lightly, saying to Calvin, "Elder, do you not treat me as a friend?"

"Han, why would you say such things? Have we treated you unkindly in some way?" Bennett, who was very kindly disposed towards Han Shuo, was the first to exclaim in surprise and looked at him in consternation before Calvin had a chance to open his mouth.

Shaking his head, Han Shuo sighed, "Why must you worry about food and man-eating monsters, but refuse to tell me, your friend, about such matters?"

"This won't do, since the elder is willing to bring out the winter rations to treat me, as your friend, I must do something. Don't worry elder, I'll head for human society and help you solve the matter of winter rations. What else do you need apart from this? I can bring it all to you."

"How can we allow this? Although we're friends, we can't trouble you.

We too wish to purchase these things in the human's society, but there's a long stretch of Dark Forest between here and human society. Not only are there attacks from magical creatures on the journey, but we may run into adventurers with ill intentions. This is why we're forced to stay here."

"Han, I know that if you're to purchase those things for us, it will spend quite a bit of your money for sure. We can't trouble you like this. I think we'll work a bit harder and still get through this winter." Calvin said.

"This matter is thus decided. I will help you think of ways to handle the matter of winter rations and the threat of the man-eating monsters. Just concentrate on forging weapons and leave the rest to me."

Han Shuo made some internal calculations. There were roughly a hundred or so in the entire dwarf village. He would probably have to make a few trips in order to bring the amount of food they needed to the cemetery of death, based on how much food the space ring could hold. If he purchased the food from Phoebe, he probably wouldn't need to spend that many gold coins. It was just a convenient favor to do, and Han Shuo was naturally happy to do so for the dwarves.

"Thank you so much. I thank you on behalf of my child and the mothers within the village!" A female dwarf suddenly heard Han Shuo's guarantee when she brought over fruit and was so moved that she immediately thanked Han Shuo with the greatest courtesy of the dwarves.

"You're dismissed." Calvin admonished, and then also said with gratitude, "Han, we only create fine wines and forge weapons. Because we have exceedingly little contact with humans, we don't have that many gold coins. We're willing to make some fine wines and forge some weapons for you in exchange, otherwise I won't be able to accept your good intentions!"

Although Han Shuo didn't lust after their wine and weapons, but he understood that with the dwarves' obstinate tempers, they would be unwilling to accept his assistance for no reason at all. He finally accepted after thinking for a while.

With the promise of winter rations from Han Shuo, all the dwarves were beyond excited. Even Calvin drank heartily with Han Shuo, a rare occasion indeed. He had to say that the wine made by the dwarves was truly quite sweet. Even the fine wine that Han Shuo had drank last night at the Boozt Merchant Guild's banquet couldn't compare.

Han Shuo was in an excellent mood after ensuring his Demonslayer Edge, and drank the night away with the dwarves. However, due to him practicing magic, he had already thoroughly sobered under the use of magical yuan when he left the dwarf village. He maintained a state of high alert as he traveled back to the cemetery of death.

Before meditating, Han Shuo thought for a bit and decided to once more explore the boundary that had stopped Han Shuo from descending down to the lower levels of the cemetery of death. He wanted to see if he could break through that barrier with his current level of mental strength.

After using the round, green ball to open the passageway, Han Shuo focused his mental strength and abruptly burrowed him. A piercing pain immediately filled his mind, but because he was used to the pain inflicted by the round, green ball during training, Han Shuo held up beneath the onslaught. He circulated his magical yuan to its highest and burrowed downwards.

Chapter 80: A magical cemetery

Han Shuo fell onto solid ground, regained his footing, and took his bearings. He was in a large laboratory. All sorts of containers and large bones were placed everywhere. Several gloomy lights, like green will-o'-wisps, were placed on the walls on the side, lighting up the interior, making it slightly brighter.

There were also a few rooms in the four corners. Han Shuo went into each of the rooms and discovered that two of them were filled with all sorts of books having to do with necromancy magic, and included a few books on dark magic as well. The books in here were obviously all very old. There was a lot of dust on them, and the number of books greatly exceeded the number of books in the dark studies section of the library in the Academy. Many of them were also books that Han Shuo had never heard of.

Magical supplies were stored in the other four rooms. Each of the containers were sealed tightly and were filled with colorful liquid, with some holding strange bones and teeth of vicious beasts that sparkled with light.

Just as Han Shuo was taking measure of his surroundings, the round, green ball in his hand suddenly sent out an eye-dazzling flash of green splendor. The light encompassed the entire laboratory as a black, shadow-like a ghost suddenly materialized in one of the circular magical symbols within the laboratory.

“My child, when you arrive here and see this mirror image, I will have already returned to dust. If you seek to understand everything about the cemetery of death, then you must pay attention and listen to all that I have to say.”

The black shadow was a concentrated mass, whether it was his eyes or the light from the round, green ball, Han Shuo was unable to see its original form. An unpracticed voice slowly formed each word with a bit of difficulty.

Han Shuo was shocked and then immediately realized that this was a way that mages left messages – mirror images. According to the meaning of the words, Han Shuo hastily focused his concentration and listened to every sentence he was saying.

“First, you must know that the cemetery of death was the sacred ground of necromancers during my time. It represents the peak of necromancy magic. The cemetery of death can move. When you finally grasp all that is present here, you will find that you own a frightening city...”

The wispy voice explained ceaselessly. Han Shuo concentrated and listened to the voice’s slow descriptions. When the voice said, “You will still be able to see me on the next level”, the black shadow suddenly disappeared as well.

Apart from the magic matrix above grounds in the cemetery of death, there were two more levels apart from the laboratory and library on this level. In order to fully grasp all the secrets of the cemetery of death, he must travel to the two lower levels as well. Han Shuo had gained this understanding from the black shadow that the cemetery of death was actually a castle that could move, and it was an incredibly powerful castle. This greatly shocked Han Shuo.

The round, green ball was equivalent to a key to enter the cemetery of death. The evil mental brand of a necromancer was held within. If an ordinary person obtained this round ball, they would be unable to escape the corruption of the ball and would finally turn into a senseless zombie, apart from necromancers with the feel of necromancy magic about them.

Although Han Shuo was just a magic apprentice, he still had the presence of necromancy magic about him and thus thankfully hadn’t been assimilated by the curse, but because he had brashly explored when his mental strength had been too weak, he would have been hard pressed to escape death that day if it weren’t for the help of the magical yuan.

The amazing magical yuan was different from all energy of this world. It had actually saved Han Shuo when his mind was being invaded by the mental strength, and had bafflingly helped Han Shuo increase his mental strength. Han Shuo had reaped great rewards in the midst of inhumane pain. This was probably something that the creator of the round, green ball had never imagined.

From the depictions of the black shadow, Han Shuo received limited information. It seemed that a more in-depth explanation existed in the lower two levels. Han Shuo mused silently for a bit, and then reentered the rooms that were full of magic books.

The magic books were the essence of necromancy magic, the product of a time when necromancy magic was at its peak. These were true priceless treasures to Han Shuo. The Academy already had quite a number of books, but books truly dealing with necromancy magic weren't that many. Most of them only dealt with beginner or journeyman topics, and ones that dealt with more advanced necromancy magic were exceedingly few.

He flipped through the books covered with thick dust in the two rooms. Han Shuo had to sigh in admiration. The magical books here were much more superior compared to the ones at the Academy, whether in terms of quality or quantity.

Three of them were called "Necromancy Magic", divided into upper, middle, and lower scrolls. They were placed in the most eye catching place and had obviously received special treatment. They were placed in a magical container and still looked quite new. They probably wouldn't be damaged even in tens of thousands of years.

The upper scroll of "Necromancy Magic" was already quite thick. Han Shuo discovered that it recorded, in detail, everything from the beginning of necromancy magic to the true essence of necromancy magic. The knowledge held within was quite different from what was taught by the Academy, much of the necromancy knowledge and magics recorded were those that Han Shuo had never heard of.

There were handwritten notes on every page starting from the middle scroll, providing detailed footnotes to the content on the page, but it looked like the three scrolls were of one entity. When Han Shuo read the middle and lower scroll, he still couldn't understand some of the knowledge within even with the aid of the notes.

Han Shuo could just barely understand the first half of the upper scroll, but unfortunately, without the presence of handwritten notes, Han Shuo still felt it very difficult to understand. Perhaps the person who had prepared this set of magical books had felt that people wouldn't need notes to understand the upper scroll, and that's why he didn't leave any explanations.

After thinking for a while, Han Shuo decided to start with the first scroll. He planned on using this complete set of "Necromancy Magic" as his textbooks and slowly study and train from them. After forming his determination, Han Shuo took the round ball and departed from this level, returning to the surface level. He wasn't affected by the boundary and began to study this scroll, forgoing meals and forgetting to sleep.

Han Shuo was preoccupied with this scroll of "Necromancy Magic" for many days in a row, understanding all the words inside by studying every word. From this set of "Necromancy Magic", Han Shuo understood that the knowledge and spells currently taught at the Academy were much more shallow than the explanations in the books.

There were many evil magics that Han Shuo would be unable to learn from Fanny.

"Corpse Reanimation" was a basic kind of necromancy magic. It used necromancy magic to turn those who had died into zombies, and would start fighting according to the caster's will. If mental strength was sufficient enough, a terrifying zombie army could be reanimated.

"Canopy of Necromancy" was another evil magic. As long as "Canopy of Necromancy was released", the battle strength and agility of dark creatures would be greatly increased beneath the coverage of the canopy and the enemy would have difficulty adjusting to this area spell, decreasing their battle strength.

Numerous spells similar to "Corpse Reanimation" and "Canopy of Necromancy" were listed within the scroll. It was said that these magics had been lost for a long time and none of the necromancers today could grasp them, but there were detailed descriptions within this scroll of “Necromancy Magic”.

Han Shuo understood that he had picked up a precious treasure. If this scroll of “Necromancy Magic” was circulated, then it could possibly immediately change the current condition of necromancers, noticeably increasing the level of the necromancer’s strength. The terror of necromancers would then once again materialize.

He studied for nearly ten days, either meditating or studying the scroll of “Necromancy Magic”. “Corpse Reanimation” was a basic spell, but unfortunately Han Shuo had no corpses to practice on. “Canopy of Necromancy” was an advanced spell, Han Shuo was equally unable to practice it because he lacked the mental strength to do so.

But through his practice during this time, Han Shuo mastered the bone spear magic. Even the zombie summoning spell was almost at hand, but he met with some resistance when communicating with the other dimension.

After calculating the time, it was about time that the Demonslayer Edge was complete. Han Shuo thought for a bit and left the cemetery of death with the small skeleton, carefully evading a few level 3 and above magical creatures. He hunted a few low level monsters and took them with him, once again walking to the dwarves’ village.

Midway there, just when Han Shuo was about to enter the dwarves’ village, he heard the sound of weapons clashing. Han Shuo was greatly shocked and picked up his speed, threading through the trees and bushes with the little skeleton and rushing towards the source of the sounds.

A couple dozen man-eating monsters and almost a hundred goblins were wielding weapons and besieging the dwarves. The dwarves held brand new weapons in their hands, and were so much sharper compared to the ones that the man-eating monsters and goblins were using. The goblins in particular were using a few crude blades and wooden sticks, breaking into many pieces whenever they clashed with the dwarves.

It was the superiority of their weapons that had enabled the vastly outnumbered dwarves to defend until now. The dwarf village was behind them not too far away, and women and children with no fighting ability were there. For the safety of the village, they couldn't even retreat into the village in case they exposed the village and endangered the women and children.

Han Shuo took in this scene and immediately became enraged. His crossbow had already appeared in his hand as he ran and several crossbow bolts broke through the air with a whistling sound, shooting down a man-eating monster and two goblins. The little skeleton seemed to sense Han Shuo's anger from the depths of his heart and flew towards the front. The seven bone spurs on its back shot in all directions and lines of blood appeared on the bodies of these man-eating monsters and goblins after ear-piercing sounds rang out.

"Oh, it's Han! He's here!" Bennett, who was hoisting up an iron club and surrounded by five or six goblins, when he suddenly saw Han Shuo's figure and exclaimed in surprise.

Like a wolf entering a herd of sheep, the arrival of Han Shuo and the little skeleton immediately heralded a slaughter. The little skeleton was particularly fierce. Its seven bone spurs danced amongst the crowd of man-eating monsters and goblins, causing injuries and fatalities to them.

After Han Shuo had arrived, he first summoned a few skeletal warriors and they all wielded bone daggers as they dashed towards these villains. Han Shuo himself rather held his ground and targeted the man-eating monster and goblins who had died, beginning to release the spell of "Corpse Reanimation".

After failing a few times, Han Shuo still continued to remain where he stood and repeatedly chanted the incantation, under the surprised looks of the dwarves, attempting to make the bodies, who had just lost their lives, rise again.

Finally, an ugly goblin with a crossbow bolt still sticking out of its chest suddenly stood up after Han Shuo cast his spell. It grabbed a metal club and tottered over, starting to attack the goblin next to him that was still alive. With one success under his belt, Han Shuo calmly recalled the steps he had just taken when casting and once again cast a “Corpse Reanimation” spell.

He succeeded once again, it was a man-eating monster this time. Under the release of Han Shuo’s “Corpse Reanimation” spell, another five or six man-eating monsters and goblins stood up, raising their weapons in accordance with Han Shuo’s commands and starting to attack the living man-eating monsters and goblins.

When the man-eating monsters and goblins discovered this phenomenon, this immediately caused a strong wave of terror and panic to spread amongst them. These man-eating monsters and goblins were shocked out of their wits seeing their dead companions stand up vacantly and attack them. Saying a few sentences in their own language and pointing at Han Shuo in fright, all of them scattered like the four winds as they fled for their lives.

Even the dwarves on the side felt a bit of fear. They all looked at Han Shuo with exceedingly odd looks, different from those they looked at him usually. Han Shuo blanked and then immediately reacted. He dissolved his spell and the dead man-eating monsters and goblins fell down once again.

“Han, this magic of yours is too evil. Even we are a bit afraid.” Bennett walked towards Han Shuo and spoke haltingly.

Han Shuo knew that the spell of “Corpse Reanimation” was indeed quite evil, and ordinary people would be unable to accept it. He thought for a moment and nodded, saying, “Bennett, I understand what you mean, but I’ve done so in order to save all of you.”

“We understand, thank you Han. However, this kind of magic is truly hard to accept. Even the villainous man-eating monsters and goblins were scared witless by you. Heh heh, let’s go. Your weapon is ready and we’ll give it to you when we arrive at the village.”

“You guys have finished it!” Han Shuo was truly astonished upon hearing that the Demonslayer Edge was ready. He brought up the rear and walked towards the dwarf village.

The little skeleton's seven bone spurs reattached to its spine and didn't head for the dwarf village along with Han Shuo. Rather, it followed Han Shuo's orders and looted the bodies of the dead with a practiced air.

Following Calvin, Han Shuo came to the dwarf village and arrived at the site where the Demonslayer Edge was crafted.

"Han, this is the weapon that we've forged according to your requirements. Are you satisfied with it?" Bennett pointed with the hammer in his hand at a weapon on the side as he spoke to Han Shuo.

The Demonslayer Edge was two feet long, and a cold light sparkled along its keen edge. The body was dark brown with three raised thorns at the spiky tip. It was heavy in his hand.

Han Shuo held the Demonslayer Edge and carefully observed it, suddenly stabbing the whetstone beneath it. The Demonslayer Edge sank into the whetstone.

Nodding, Han Shuo looked at the somewhat uneasy Calvin in satisfaction. He smiled, "Elder, thank you for your crafting. I really like this weapon."

"Heh heh, as long as you like it. This weapon has black iron and black gold mixed in as well as more than ten rare metals. I'm also very satisfied with this weapon." Calvin breathed a sigh of relief and looked at the Demonslayer Edge as he spoke.

"Be on the alert, man-eating monster and goblins may appear again during this period of time. I will leave for a while and will bring your winter rations with me next time I visit. Make sure to take care."

After reminding these dwarves, Han Shuo eagerly returned to the cemetery of death, circulating the magic within his body. He used the essence of his blood as a circuit to the Demonslayer Edge, refining the weapon for the next three days and three nights according to the memories left behind by Chu Cang Lan. Han Shuo's blood was intermixed with magical yuan as it slowly flowed into the Demonslayer Edge.

After three days, Han Shuo was drained and worn out and felt that his magical yuan was a running dry. The originally dark-brown Demonslayer Edge had turned dark red. After Han Shuo's magical yuan recovered over the next couple of days, he started practicing the "Law of Activating Magic" with the Demonslayer Edge, attempting to manipulate the weapon with his mind.

During this process, the meridians of Han Shuo's body would occasionally swell painfully. Han Shuo still gritted his teeth against the enormous impact of the waterfall on this day, continuously using magical yuan to refine the meridians in his body. He suddenly sank into a mental state.

Under unbeknownst circumstances, Han Shuo slowly woke up. He discovered that at some unknown time, he had already fallen into the deep pool. When he emerged from the frigid waters of the deep pool, he suddenly discovered that the Demonslayer Edge had disappeared. Startled, he wanted to quickly find the Demonslayer Edge again.

At this moment, a dark-red light suddenly shot out from the waters and flew towards Han Shuo. Han Shuo had thought danger had found him and was planning on evading it when he realized that a bizarre feeling had risen in his heart. It was as if the dark red light shooting towards him had some sort of connection to him.

He first blanked, and then a thought flashed through his mind. Suddenly enlightened, Han Shuo's thoughts moved. The dark red light shooting towards him suddenly started dancing in mid air. Han Shuo then sensed a fish in the waters of the pool and a thought bubbled up in his mind. The fish was instantaneously pierced through by the Demonslayer Edge.

"It looks like I've succeeded." Han Shuo's left hand reached out and the Demonslayer Edge shot out from the waters, landing in Han Shuo's palm.

Circulating his magical yuan, the speed of the "Mystical Glacial Spellfire" was many times faster than usual. Han Shuo was shocked again, and then suddenly discovered that traces of frosty air was leaking out from the Demonslayer Edge, held in his left hand with the mystical glacial air being infused into it. Because the Demonslayer Edge was pointed at the deep pool, a layer of ice had already formed on the surface of the pool as the waters gave off frigid air.

He knew that these were the signs of having broken through the “open passages” and reaching the “molded spirit realm”. Han Shuo was gratified to know that after a few life and death struggles and several sleepless nights of magic training, he had finally once again achieved a breakthrough.

Han Shuo’s magic had once again improved now, and a most excellent Demonslayer Edge was now in his hands. Han Shuo felt that it was time to leave the cemetery of death and thoroughly eliminate the threat known as Grover.

Walking out from the tombs in the mountains behind the Academy, Han Shuo didn’t immediately find Phoebe. Han Shuo harbored feelings of affection towards Fanny. He had planned on asking her a few questions on magical knowledge after their last meeting, but it was a pity that he had received the black gold ore from Phoebe and had eagerly returned to the cemetery of death.

The upper scroll of “Necromancy Magic” contained much knowledge that Han Shuo did not fully understand. This scroll didn’t have many notes. As an adept mage, Fanny was bound to have a more in-depth understanding. Therefore, Han Shuo had long since noted the topics he didn’t understand and wanted to find a chance to ask Fanny again.

The Babylon Academy of Magic and Force had an exalted position within the Empire. Although Grover hated Han Shuo’s guts, he wouldn’t dare brazenly make a move against Han Shuo on school grounds. The teachers of various majors were all quite strong, apart from the necromancy major, the other majors had even more stronger characters acting as overseers. Even if the killers of ‘Shadow Ghost’ came looking for him, it was impossible for them to leave alive once they had been discovered.

It was now dusk and the students were now relaxing or eating meals after a day of learning. Han Shuo didn’t directly go look for Fanny at her lab, afraid that this would attract the attention of others. He waited a while until the sky had completely darkened, before walking to the small building that Fanny lived in without anyone knowing.

Han Shuo had stayed in the necromancy major for so long and had long since learned of where Fanny lived because of his feelings for her. He skillfully deciphered the appropriate direction under the cover of the night, walking to the teacher dormitory building in which Fanny resided.

Chapter 81: Caught in the act in bed

Fanny's quarters bordered those of some other female dark major teachers. However, there was still a bit of a distance between them. His sensitive perceptions could clearly hear voices in low conversation from within the teacher's dormitory building. It looked like they had yet to go to sleep at this time.

All of the teachers at the Babylon Academy were extraordinarily strong. When Han Shuo neared, he purposefully concealed his presence and even slowed down the rate of his heartbeat.

Just as Han Shuo arrived in front of Fanny's door and was about to reach out and knock, the door suddenly opened. Fanny was wearing silk pajamas and an expanse of snow white skin showed at her chest. She was wearing the ruby necklace that Han Shuo had given her, further displaying her beauty.

"Bryan, what are you doing here so surreptitiously?" Fanny was a bit unhappy as she looked at Han Shuo.

Looking around, Han Shuo asked askance, "Eh, how did you know I was here?"

"I felt that someone was following recently times and so became wary. I've cast "Life Reconnaissance" in front of the door so I discovered you as soon as you came over!" Fanny rolled her eyes at Han Shuo and said in an ill temper upon seeing him cast shifty looks around the area.

"Eh, Master Fanny can I come inside?" After all, it wasn't too convenient to stand and talk at the door. Add to this that several teachers had yet to go to sleep, it would be a bad thing if they were seen.

Who knew that when Han Shuo spoke these words, Fanny's charming cheeks would flush faintly red. Fanny hesitated, then also stuck out her head to look around, finally dragging Han Shuo in with a red face and hastily closing the door.

Han Shuo discovered the room was filled with the presence of femininity when he entered Fanny's room. Pink bed curtains, neat and clean tables and carpet, as well as some elegant decorations that demonstrated the female identity of this room's owner.

A thought suddenly striking him, Han Shuo remembered that in his original world, ordinary young girls wouldn't easily let strangers into their rooms. The room of each girl was the window to her soul. One would be unable to enter without her acceptance. When his thoughts travelled here, ripples grew in Han Shuo's heart as he looked at Fanny with a hot gaze.

"What are you looking at? Where have you been again the past couple days? There will be a test in half a month and you must participate, otherwise the school authorities have the power to expel you." Fanny glared at Han Shuo viciously upon seeing his hot and bothered glance, then seemed to think of something and turned her back to Han Shuo, taking off the ruby necklace from her snow white neck.

"I know. I've come to find you this time in order to ask you a few questions regarding magical knowledge. Eh? Why did you take the necklace off? I feel that you are very beautiful and moving when you wear this necklace."

"None of your business. It's already night now, I've taken the necklace off in order to prepare to rest. If you want to ask about magical knowledge, then come find me in the lab tomorrow during the day. It's already night, so it won't be too good if someone discovers that you're here." Fanny look at Han Shuo, out of sorts.

Footsteps sounded outside the door at this moment, and they had already arrived in front of Fanny's door within the blink of an eye. The door was knocked on twice as a female voice sounded, "Master Fanny, you're not asleep yet, can I come in?"

It was truly that whatever one was worried about would happen. Fanny and Han Shuo looked at each other, their faces both stilling at once. Fanny then glared viciously at Han Shuo and then reached out with her hand to make a shushing motion. She opened her her mouth to say, "Master Camilla, just a moment, I'll open the door for you shortly!"

After Fanny spoke, she suddenly started walking around in the room, her eyes patrolling over everywhere. It looked like she was trying to find a hiding spot for Han Shuo. Fanny's room wasn't too big, there didn't seem to be a place able to hide Han Shuo's entire body. In her anxiety, Fanny suddenly saw her room and pointed at it to Han Shuo, her charming face full of joy.

Seeing that Fanny was so anxious, Han Shuo shrugged his shoulders and followed her wishes, standing up from the side of the table and walking towards her bed with the pink bed curtains. He hopped onto Fanny's bed with a whoosh, an expression of great enjoyment showing on his face.

Having walked to the door, Fanny was about to open the door when she was extremely surprised after turning her head. Her mouth opened with no sound, her right hand pointed frantically at the bottom of the bed. It looked like she'd meant for Han Shuo to hide beneath the bed, but Han Shuo had gotten the wrong impression and actually already gotten on the bed that she'd never allowed strange males to touch before.

"Master Fanny, hurry and open the door!" Camilla stood in front of the door and could already see from the light that Fanny was at the door. She opened her mouth and hurried Fanny.

Lying sideways on the bed, a wonderful fragrance wafted around him, Han Shuo ignored the anxious Fanny giving hints by the door and smiled as he undid the bed curtains, taking Fanny's nicely scented blankets and covering his body.

Fanny gritted her teeth angrily with regards to Han Shuo's actions, but Camilla's continued hurrying in front of the door left Fanny no other choice but to open the room door and pretend to be calm. She smiled and responded, "Master Camilla, how come you've come to find me so late at night!"

Camilla was an adept mage of the dark major and was already middle aged. Her looks could only be described as ordinary. When she walked into Fanny's room, she automatically sat down next to the table and said, "Your necromancy major actually won out over the light major through the trials of the Dark Forest last time. This has given us a lot of face. Our major will be heading out for our trials shortly. I'm here to ask you for tips and tricks!"

"What tips and tricks? Our major only managed to hunt down those magical creatures last time simply because we were lucky. Master Camilla you've been in the dark major for many years and have taken the students out on many outings. You should be very experienced, I think you're asking the wrong person by coming to me." Fanny felt uncomfortable with Camilla in the room, deathly afraid that she would discover Han Shuo's presence.

The more she worried, the more her gaze flitted to the edge of her bed. She continued to keep an eye on the movements on her bed, afraid that Han Shuo would emit some sounds and arouse Camilla's attentions.

"Master Fanny's bed curtains are very pretty, where did you buy them?" Camilla suddenly stood up and unexpectedly walked towards Fanny's bed, her eyes staring at Fanny's bed curtains and an expression of extreme interest appeared on her face.

Her heart shuddered as Fanny quickly closed the distance, arriving before Camilla and sat down to block the former's line of sight. Her spine ramrod straight, she hastily said, "From the Mier Decorations Shop. If Master Camilla likes them, then you can go buy them as well. One gold coin should be enough. Um..."

Fanny's bed was not that big to begin with, Han Shuo was already flush against the wall as he lay on his side. In her hasty anxiousness, Fanny abruptly sat down on the bed and actually placed her butt on the back of Han Shuo's left hand. When Fanny came to the end of her explanations to Camilla, her light "um" already explained that she also felt things were inappropriate.

"So you bought it from the the Mier Decorations Shop, no wonder it's so pretty. Too bad I'm old and not as pretty as Master Fanny. If I bought these curtains, I'll be sure to be ridiculed behind my back."

Master Fanny's well rounded bottom was sitting on the back of Han

Shuo's hand. Han Shuo was feeling the wondrous sensation as his heart was like a capering monkey and his mind like a galloping horse. Just as he was enjoying the sensation, he suddenly felt that the wondrous sensation on the back of his hand was no longer there. Disappointment rose from Han Shuo's heart as he carefully snuck a peak. He discovered that Fanny's body still remained in the same position, but had used the muscles of her waist to slightly lift her wonderful behind.

The place where Fanny was sitting just happened to block Camilla's line of sight. If Fanny shifted her body, it was very likely that Han Shuo would be discovered. Fanny clearly felt that she had sat in a place she shouldn't have sat in, yet couldn't move her body and could only lift her buttocks to avoid Han Shuo taking advantage of her.

Watching from the back, Han Shuo could see a red flush creep up Fanny's neck, slender shoulders, and delectable back. Because she had tightened her body, Fanny's curves were fully on display and her well-rounded behind fell completely into Han Shuo's view.

Han Shuo had no idea what Fanny and Camilla talked about afterwards. His lustful gaze roved greedily over Fanny's body. As a mage, it was very difficult for Fanny to maintain her position that was akin to a horse's stances. Her body started trembling after a while. Perhaps it was because she could no longer hold up, or felt that Han Shuo should have moved his hand from the area, Fanny's body relaxed and her two butt cheeks dropped down as she once again sat down.

Another light "um" emitted from Fanny's mouth. Han Shuo had flipped his hand from the back to his palm facing up. His fingers curled vaguely from the pressure of Fanny's buttocks, curling into the space between them, immediately causing Fanny to cry out slightly as she couldn't bear up beneath it.

"Master Fanny, are you alright? Your face is so red and your body is trembling so. Are you sick? Let me take a look for you?"

"No, nothing much. If you don't have any other matters Master Camilla, why don't you leave? I... I'm tired and want to rest early."

Fanny trembled as she tried to lift her butt as she spoke, wanting to stand up from the edge of the bed. Han Shuo had been enjoying the well rounded, slippery sensation of Fanny's butt. When he lost that touch, he subconsciously reached out his hand and plunged into the area between Fanny's butt that she had just lifted up a tiny bit.

Fanny had been about to stand up straight when her body suddenly spasmed because of the abrupt stimulus to her body. Her body once more sat down uncontrollably, swallowing Han Shuo's rampaging left hand.

"What's wrong, what's wrong Master Fanny? Something's dreadfully wrong with your body!" Camilla said frantically and then lifted the bed curtains, wanting to relieve the dazed Fanny from their embrace. She suddenly saw Han Shuo's burning hot gaze and a startled shriek emitted from Camilla's mouth.

This scream startled the dazed Fanny awake. She recollected her senses and hastily stood up, not paying any attention to Han Shuo. She frantically explained in a panic, "Master Camilla, he's my student and has come to ask me some questions. I was afraid you'd misunderstand. That's why I told him to hide."

"Master Fanny, you don't have to explain. This is your private matter. Heh heh, no wonder you've rejected the advanced of many young men and ignored even Gene. So this is why. Your relationship is to the stage of sleeping together, this is truly surprising. Master Fanny I apologize, I've disturbed you. I'll leave now!" Camilla exclaimed in shock and apologized in a bizarre voice, walking directly outside.

Fanny was in an extreme state of panic and disarray, seeking to hold Camilla back and wanting to explain. But no matter how she explained, Camilla continued to retain an ambiguous expression and display an "I understand" expression. She chuckled merrily as she walked out of Fanny's room.

When Camilla had left Fanny's room, Fanny, standing in front of the door, circled the table in her panic and then seemed to remember something. She made threatening gestures at the Han Shuo still lying in bed, crying out, “Damned Bryan, I’m absolutely not letting you off the hook today.”

Fanny had already jumped onto the bed when she finished speaking and commenced a punishment of fists and feet with a face full of wrathful anger, her little fists landing on Han Shuo’s chest like rain.

As a mage, Fanny had no way to use her fists and feet to attack and cause any damage to Han Shuo, but Han Shuo was utterly mesmerized as he watched the highly aggravated Fanny wave her little fists around, tottering and faltering from her movements and even revealing a portion of her snow white, slender thigh because her skirt had become hiked up.

First reaching out a hand to pretend to stop her, Han Shuo was hard pressed to bear up beneath the agitation of his heart. In his feverish mind, he pushed Fanny down onto the bed and used his strong body to completely press down on Fanny’s well endowed, perfect body. He kept saying, “Master Fanny, calm down, calm down.”

Han Shuo paid lip service to asking Fanny to calm down while covering her with his body. Feeling the firm, pert tips of Fanny’s breasts on his chest, his chest tightly adhered to Fanny’s. The friction between the two bodies under Fanny’s struggles caused Han Shuo to slowly lose himself.

Fanny was breathless with anger. He was the one more impulsive than any other and yet he dared tell her to calm down. The pain in her hands becoming more and more pronounced, she couldn’t move no matter how she struggled. As she watched Han Shuo come closer and closer, her heart was extremely agitated as she said continuously, “Damn it, stop already or I won’t go easy on you!”

Chapter 82: The Eye of Darkness

A howl of agony rang out as Han Shuo clutched his lower body, moving off of Fanny. He curled up in pain as his mental state returned completely to normal.

Fanny sat up, dusted herself off and got off the bed as if nothing had happened. She flicked a proud glance at Han Shuo and snorted lightly, “Well, do you recognize my strength now?”

“Master Fanny, there was no need to be so vicious, was there?” Han Shuo grimaced as he clutched at his abdomen in pain.

“Damn it, how dare you say anything. I’ve let the matter at the pool go, but you’ve... you’ve violated me again! I’ve already gone easy on you by not killing you!” Fanny was filled with rage at the thought of what had just happened as she glared at Han Shuo irately.

Han Shuo scrambled down adroitly from the bed and sat down next to Fanny, his face full of seriousness. He said calmly, “Let bygones be bygones. I’m going to recite a magical incantation for you.”

Fanny saw that Han Shuo was all business and knew that he was purposefully shifting topics from what had just happened. A surge of rage grew in her heart and she was about to open her mouth and furiously berate Han Shuo when she suddenly heard Han Shuo’s incantation. Fanny paid it no heed at first, but was then astounded when Han Shuo came to the end. A bafflingly excited light shone in her clear eyes as they focused on Han Shuo. She asked with a trembling voice, “This is necromancy magic... I can feel it, but how come I’ve never heard this incantation before?”

“This is an incantation for an advanced magic, ‘Canopy of Necromancy’. It’s necromancy magic that has been lost for many years. I also gained it unwittingly.” Han Shuo explained slowly upon seeing Fanny’s overjoyed expression.

“Just what is going on, explain it to me clearly! And are there any other lost necromancy magics? Hurry up and tell me!” Fanny had always been embroiled in the study of necromancy magic and had long since forgotten her earlier rage upon hearing the ancient incantation, that had been lost for ages, come out from Han Shuo's mouth. Rather, she asked him frantically instead.

Internally heaving a sigh of relief, Han Shuo first gathered his thoughts calmly and then nodded, saying, "There's also an evil "Corpse Reanimation" magic. I found it unwittingly. Master Fanny, you should know that these are all lost magics of our necromancy major, so I need you to temporarily keep this a secret."

Master Fanny wasn't dumb, she immediately understood what Han Shuo intended and nodded her head like a chick pecking at rice, urging him on with her eyes.

Han Shuo then went over the magical incantation and hand gestures for "Corpse Reanimation" and "Canopy of Necromancy" in detail for Fanny. He then brought out some knowledge that he had yet to fully grasp and inquired Fanny with them one by one. Fanny was delighted without comparison and had long since forgotten Han Shuo's discourteous actions towards her earlier. She patiently explained and detailed the incomprehension that Han Shuo had run into.

Han Shuo understood that he would be casting these spells sooner or later, but, he didn't intend to let others know that he knew these secrets before his strength was enough.

As an adept mage of the necromancy major and someone Han Shuo admired, Han Shuo hadn't planned on continuously hiding the truth from Fanny. Particularly when she was someone whose bark was worse than her bite, and was actually very caring towards him. After all, there was still some knowledge that he'd have to ask Fanny about in order to gain full understanding.

Han Shuo stayed in Fanny's room and talked until the middle of the night unbeknownst to both of them. The previously excited Fanny started yawning successively, then discovered that it was late. Fanny covered her mouth as she yawned and said lazily to Han Shuo, "It's late, I'm going to rest. I've explained these questions to you, so you should return to the dorms and rest too. Oh right, you haven't ever stayed in the dorms I've arranged for you right?"

Nodding, Han Shuo got up and walked to the door. Just as Han Shuo was about to push the door open and leave, Fanny suddenly said, "Bryan, don't think I've forgotten what you've done to me. However, if you can apply yourself to your studies and graduate early from the necromancy major, perhaps I will forgive you!"

Han Shuo started, halting in front of the room door and turned his head to see Fanny looking at him with expectation. Her expression was grave as she said seriously, "Bryan, with your talent this shouldn't be difficult. As long as you're willing to work hard, you're sure to become a very strong necromancer, and then you'll be able to get everything you want!"

"Does that include you, Master Fanny?" Han Shuo asked subconsciously.

Fanny's heart trembled as she looked at Han Shuo leering at her. Her cheeks suddenly reddened and she became irate, admonishing, "Get out! Scram, you sex-crazed bad boy!"

His heart full of joy, Han Shuo felt that Fanny seemed to be a bit interested in him. From their recent conversations, he could tell that Fanny had certain expectations for him. He thought carefully and suddenly understood. He realized that if he wished to gain Fanny's heart, his current strength and status were truly a bit unrealistic.

"Don't worry, I'll work hard. You'll see soon!" Han Shuo whispered as he paused in front of the door, then quickly left in the darkness.

After he departed from Fanny's room, Han Shuo didn't return to the dorm room that Fanny had arranged for him. There were people guarding the doors and some of the rooms were connected to each other. Han Shuo didn't wish for others to discover his tracks, in case he raised the suspicions of "Shadow Ghost" and Grover.

Particularly as he'd just heard Fanny say that she'd felt someone had been following her recently. This made Han Shuo become even warier, afraid to exposing himself in front of others.

Turning over these thoughts in his head, he felt that perhaps he should buy a house outside of the school grounds, otherwise he wouldn't even have a place to stay in the future when he returned to the Empire. If he had his own personal place, he wouldn't need to travel to the cemetery at the back of the Academy every time he wanted to activate the transportation matrix.

Just as Han Shuo was quietly weighing this matter in his heart and walking to the side of the dark major library, he suddenly heard the sound of pages being turned. This caused his heart to suddenly contract in surprise as he immediately concealed himself noiselessly in the shadows of a corner around the library.

Moving his neck slightly, three original demons flew out soundlessly, sneaking into the library under the cover of deep night. Two figures held faint light in their hands, and Han Shuo saw two familiar faces with the help of the feeble light source – the old mage Duke and the senior knight Erick.

Han Shuo had originally received the round, green ball, that opened the cemetery of death, from these people in the cemetery in the mountains behind the Academy. The confident Erick had thought that Han Shuo would be dead without a doubt after his fighting aura imbued slash. Thus, he hadn't checked Han Shuo's body. After a few months, Han Shuo hadn't thought that he'd see these two again in the dark major library.

"Be careful. Strong people are abound in this Babylon Academy of Magic and Force. Don't alert others, or we'll be in big trouble." Duke immediately admonished lightly upon seeing Erick flipping through pages with large motions.

"We still haven't discovered it, the books of the necromancy major have no record of anything to do with 'The Eye of Darkness'." Erick flipped pages with a softer hand as he complained in a low voice.

"Huh. 'The Eye of Darkness' is the key to opening the cemetery of death. We finally obtained it after a great deal of effort, to think that it would suddenly disappear. When Dylan died last time, the item was no longer on him. We went back to his place and searched all of it, but still found nothing. Why would that item suddenly disappear? This is strange indeed. The Babylon Academy of Magic and Force has many books regarding necromancy. Perhaps we can find some clues. Otherwise we can't afford to be targets when the higher ranks throw the blame around." Duke glared at Erick and said lowly.

On the outside, thanks to the original demons' eavesdropping, Han Shuo could thoroughly eavesdrop on their conversation and expressions. He finally understood that the round ball he held was the "Eye of Darkness". It looked like the two were making a visit to the dark major library late at night because they, too, had the same mindset as him, wanting to research the secrets of the "Eye of Darkness" in the library.

After a short while, the two had gained nothing and left the library dejectedly. They left swiftly using a small road leading to the back of the Academy.

From their conversation, Han Shuo could conclude that the two seemed to be a part of some sort of organization. He had now obtained the "Eye of Darkness" and wanted to know more of their secrets, and see if they would be a threat to him. He made use of the three original demons to trail them from a distance, slowly moving to the mountains in the back along with them.

The two didn't pass through the cemetery in the mountains, only changing their direction after they'd left the academy grounds. They left quickly, using the streets of the northern district, finally walking into an isolated yard in the northern district.

The three original demons had followed them here and were about to sneak into the yard for a good peek, according to Han Shuo's instructions, when he suddenly felt the original demons crash into something. "Who?!" Immediately sounded out from the yard.

Han Shuo was startled and immediately understood that some sort of boundary must have been set up around the yard. Otherwise the original demons, being without shape or form, would have never been discovered.

The original demons seemed to sense danger as Han Shuo was recovering from his surprise. They retreated quickly, with Han Shuo hastily manipulating them with his mind, bidding them flee with all possible speed in three different directions leading to the northern street.

After a while, the original demons returned to Han Shuo's body from three different directions, allowing him to heave a sigh of relief. He remembered the yard, knowing that there was a strong expert inside and temporarily gave up his continual observation.

He discovered that these were the streets of the northern district just as he was about to leave. This yard was not too far away from Phoebe's residence. The sky was already growing slightly brighter at the moment. Han Shuo remembered the rations he had promised the dwarves and spent a silver coin for breakfast on the ride, then walked to Phoebe's residence.

When Han Shuo arrived at Phoebe's residence, he immediately noticed that the presence of guards around her residence was much more numerous than before. Exceedingly soft sounds of breathing sounded from both sides of the door. It looked like experts were lying in wait inside. Apart from that, there was also a place within the building in which Han Shuo couldn't feel the flow of air. This let him know that a sort of field or barrier had been set up inside.

Han Shuo knocked lightly when he arrived on Phoebe's doorstep. Someone swiftly arrived as soon as he'd knocked, but didn't directly open the door, asking softly behind the door instead, "Who is it?"

"I'm called Bryan, here to see Miss Phoebe!" Han Shuo stood outside the door and said softly.

"Please wait a moment!" The person inside responded as another set of footsteps quickly faded away. After a while, two sets of footsteps could be heard from the other side of the door.

"Is it Bryan?" Fabian's voice rang out through the door.

"It's me." Han Shuo responded.

Sighing in relief, Fabian instructed, "Open the door, it is indeed Bryan."

The doors were opened to reveal Fabian, standing beside two swordsmen, who wore silver armor. Their faces were weathered and coarse, bearing the traces of many years of standing beneath the wind and sun. It looked like they were two experts.

"Hurry and come on in! I haven't seen you for ten days now. Phoebe often mentions you around me, saying that we'll forgo a lot of hassle with you on our side and your extraordinary reflexes." Although a smile appeared on Fabian's face, he was obviously quite weary.

"It looks like life hasn't been that easy for you. Last time I was here, security wasn't as tight as it is now!" Han Shuo swept his gaze over Fabian as he teased him.

Sighing lightly, Fabian said, "Don't mention it. Since the banquet, Miss Phoebe has been the victim of assassination attempts three times in the past ten days. Each has been more vicious than the last. These people are from the Battlefire mercenary band, Miss Phoebe has spent a lot of money in order to hire them, but in the last couple of days, they've had three of theirs injured and two dead. It looks like Grover is starting to become anxious, but our circumstances have become more and more dangerous!"

They walked towards the main hall as they talked. Han Shuo could sense two more mages and one warrior in the corners of the surroundings, they seemed to be exceedingly strong. With so many experts protecting her and Phoebe's strength as a swordmaster, Grover and "Shadow Ghost's" people must surely be extremely frightening with such a high number of casualties.

Three original demons once again flew out soundlessly from the back of Han Shuo's neck. They avoided the boundary that the Battlefire mercenary band had set and hid in three different parts of the room, silently observing everything around them.

After a while, Phoebe walked in with a tall beauty with fiery-red hair, pinned up in a ponytail. The girl's skin was copper-colored and her body was tall, athletic, and buff. Her breasts, butt, and body were large, and she wore a broadsword on her back. She too looked like a swordsman.

“Bryan, it’s good to finally see you again. This is great!” Phoebe said in surprise as she looked at Han Shuo.

“Phoebe, this is the magical Bryan that you’ve talked about?” The athletic girl with the fiery-red hair looked at Han Shuo skeptically as she spoke.

“Yes, Candice!”

“Let me see if he’s as amazing as you say!” Candice snorted lightly as she pulled out the broadsword behind her in one movement, suddenly slashing downwards at Han Shuo. When the broadsword was unsheathed, red flames immediately crept up onto the surface of the entire blade like a red dragon’s breath. It looked like she was also a mage swordsman.

Chapter 83: Existing and complementing each other

Han Shuo never would have thought that this woman would make such a move out of the blue. She'd only said one sentence before turning to action. The broadsword made its way towards him, its fiery heat already causing some discomfort to his skin.

Snorting coldly, the Demonslayer Edge suddenly appeared in Han Shuo's left hand. He infused it with magical yuan in the manner of the "Mystical Glacial Spellfire", making the dark red Demonslayer Edge suddenly emanate faint amounts of frigid, purple air. The temperature indoors suddenly changed, Candice's side was fiery hot, while Han Shuo's was glacially cold.

Their two swords hadn't even met when the two hot and cold blasts met each other. Clouds of white smoke billowed out, but what surprised Phoebe was that Han Shuo's purple frosty air was different from any other ice magic she had seen before. It rather seemed like something living, and could even proceed in a twisted manner.

When Han Shuo and Candice's swords connected, a violent force, interspersed with fighting aura, crashed into Han Shuo's Demonslayer Edge like an iron hammer. Han Shuo bedraggledly backed up a few steps, but the fighting aura found it difficult to proceed after surging into the Demonslayer Edge. It couldn't break through the Demonslayer Edge's resistance to hurt Han Shuo.

It was rather Candice who suddenly cried out in shock. When the white fog dissipated and Han Shuo once more looked upon Candice, the broadsword in her hands already had a large chip in it. It looked like the Demonslayer Edge had harmed it.

Candice looked like she possessed the strength of a senior swordsman, and her strength was even more unfathomable because she also possessed fire magic. The broadsword in her hand should have been a magical sword of exceedingly high quality, one that enhanced the power of the fire magics it was imbued with. Who would've thought that such a good quality sword would immediately be marked by Han Shuo's.

Just as Candice looked at the broadsword in her hand with a look of shock and anger, seemingly wanting to pursue a fight, Phoebe, standing off on the side, suddenly spoke up. "Alright Candice, Bryan's forte isn't his brute strength. I've already said his amazingness comes from his extraordinary senses."

"He, he ruined my magical sword!" Candice first glared at Han Shuo and then complained to Phoebe.

"Silly, you were asking for it. If you don't improve your brash temper, you'll suffer from a lot of disadvantages in the future!" Phoebe flicked a resigned glance at Candice and tried to speak a few words out of goodwill. As her beautiful eyes looked over Han Shuo, Phoebe displayed an exceedingly interested expression. She exclaimed in astoundment, "Is this the weapon you wanted to forge? Can I have a look at it?"

"There's nothing to see, it's just a bit sharper than ordinary weapons!" Han Shuo put the Demonslayer Edge away without a change in expression, only smiling at Phoebe once he'd put it away.

"Huh! Grinch!" Phoebe exclaimed softly and then pointed at Candice, introducing her to Han Shuo. "This is the vice captain of the Battlefire mercenary band, Candice. She's a friend that I've known for a while. Although her temper is a bit brash, she's a nice person. Don't mind her!"

Nodding, Han Shuo flicked a glance at Candice, smiling, "I won't mind, but I hope she doesn't hold a grudge, heh heh!"

"It's just a magical sword, and it's not completely broken. I'm not that miserly. Phoebe, you chat about your private matters, I'll go guard the door outside. I hope that damned Grover will come to his senses." Candice glared at Han Shuo with disdain, and then walked outside with look of heartache on her face as she looked at the broadsword in her hand.

As he watched Candice walk out of the room, Han Shuo felt that although this girl was a bit hot tempered, she wasn't the petty, grudge-holding sort. Otherwise she wouldn't have left so easily.

“I’ve come to purchase some rations from you, and would like to ask you to find a secluded residence for me. It doesn’t have to be big, as long as it’s guaranteed that no one will find me easily.” Han Shuo didn’t conceal anything as he looked at Phoebe, directly speaking frankly.

“No problem, how much food do you need?” Phoebe was quite decisive and didn’t hesitate at all. She agreed first, and then asked how much food was needed after.

“Roughly enough for a hundred people to weather the winter.” Han Shuo responded.

Phoebe looked at Han Shuo oddly as soon as he’d spoken. When he started to feel completely uneasy from her gaze, Phoebe asked, perplexed, “What are you going to do with enough winter rations for a hundred people? Are you planning on leaving the Empire?”

Shaking his head wryly, Han Shuo knew that she would be suspicious. He said, “Don’t think too much, I’m helping friends resolve a difficult matter. I won’t leave the Empire in the short term without getting rid of Grover first.”

“There’s no problem regarding the food, but you’ll have to give me a few days to prepare it. As for a secluded residence, I advise you to not live alone outside for the time being because Grover and the members of ‘Shadow Ghost’ have continuously viewed you as a thorn in their side. If I look for a residence for you through my means, that may enable Grover to pick up a few clues.”

“Mm, if you don’t mind, you can stay here at my place for now. This way we can help each other as well. When the threat of Grover is neutralized, I can leave this house to you and we’ll return to the Guild again, what do you think?” Phoebe thought for a moment and looked directly at Han Shuo.

Han Shuo thought carefully about Phoebe’s suggestion and felt that what she said did make some sense. However, he was less enthused about accepting the house. After all, even if the threat of Grover was eradicated, there was still a threat if an enormous killer organization like “Shadow Ghost” knew of his hiding place.

“I know what you’re worried about, so don’t worry. As long as Grover is eliminated, I have ways to ensure that ‘Shadow Ghost’ will never make trouble for us again. I’ve formally taken control of the Guild lately and am collecting evidence on Grover’s crime. Grandpa Andrew is also fully supporting me. Grandpa Andrew has even found the tracks of old thing Grover’s mistress. He’s already sent men to take the items back. I think Grover is even more frightened than us right now.” Phoebe spoke words of comfort upon seeing Han Shuo’s brow knit into a frown.

Nodding, Han Shuo said, “Then alright, I’ll stay here for the time being. I’ll leave after the threat of Grover has been removed!”

“That’s great! With you here, those damned assassins won’t be able to ambush us!” Phoebe was overjoyed to see Han Shuo agree.

Phoebe then let Fabian arrange a room for Han Shuo. Han Shuo’s room was also very spacious, with all of the daily amenities present. It was separated from Phoebe’s room by only one wall.

Han Shuo sat cross legged on the bed at night and started circulating his magical yuan, practicing magic as usual.

Han Shuo’s magical realm had now reached the molded spirit level. This level was a process that unlocked the potential of the brain. As long as he made it past this level, Han Shuo’s memory, comprehension abilities, and observation skills would all increase enormously. His mind would be much smarter than an ordinary person’s.

Except, because this level was a type of awakening the mind’s potential, it was particularly risky. One misstep could result in the mind sinking into a state of befuddlement, moving completely according to instinct. If it was serious, then the practitioner might lose their memories or have a split personality even after recovering from that state.

Sitting on the edge of the bed, Han Shuo’s head was enveloped by a cloud of black light. It was like a cloud of black lightning had encircled Han Shuo’s head and was continuously releasing incredible amounts of lightning.

This status was maintained for who knew how long. Han Shuo breathed out lightly and stopped training with a sense of trepidation. After learning the horrors of the “molded spirit” realm, Han Shuo himself proceeded with all due caution. He always chose the most quiet conditions to train, and didn’t dare let any outside matters disturb him.

After he stopped training, Han Shuo saw that he was still in a good mental state and began to cautiously meditate again, wanting to increase his mental strength through meditation. Suddenly, his mind trembled with a crash and his mental strength started gathering at a speed many times faster than normal according to Han Shuo’s thoughts.

Death energy was present everywhere beneath the heavens and earth. Han Shuo could feel very clearly this time that through the use of mental strength, he could even slowly, bit by bit gather death energy. He could sense that the manner of gathering death energy was something that was completely unattainable in the normal course of casting magic.

This time’s meditation brought Han Shuo into a marvelous world. Han Shuo could clearly feel that his mental strength was increasing much faster than before. Although the benefits weren’t as large compared to when he used the “Eye of Darkness”, the mental strength gained from this type of meditation was quite pure and clean and wasn’t accompanied by pain.

When Han Shuo awoke from his meditations, he suddenly remembered that the first two levels of demonic magic emphasized training the meridians and bones of the body, but the level of “molded spirit” was completely made for training the potential of the mind. The meditation of mages were completely used to gather mental strength in the mind. They would never use it to train other parts of their body.

Judging from this, if Han Shuo’s brain potential received a high degree of improvement, then the speed in which his mind gathered mental strength would naturally greatly increase. This would then lead to unquantifiable benefits for when Han Shuo practiced his magic in the future.

“Indeed, it looks like the same evil methods of training from two different worlds can complement each other. It looks like even without the 'Eye of Darkness', the amount of mental strength I receive from meditating is much more than that of ordinary mages." Han Shuo was gladdened and murmured to himself.

"Phoebe, do you like this brat?" At this moment, light sounds of conversation floated in from next door.

This house's soundproofing was good to begin with. If it were any other person, they absolutely would've been unable to clearly hear the conversations from the other rooms through the wall, but Han Shuo wasn't an ordinary person. The perverseness of the sensitivity of his ears allowed him to clearly hear the murmured conversations of the two girls in the dead of the night.

"Candice, what nonsense are you talking? Bryan's helped me a few times, we're just friends who fight side by side." Phoebe had lowered her voice to the utmost and argued.

"I don't think so, if it's just friends who fight side by side, then how come you keep defending him and give him such high praise? I just think you treat him a bit differently, that's all. Has something happened between you two? From my high experienced instinct as a mercenary, you absolutely treat him differently from others!" Candice's voice was suffused with thick mistrust and seemed to speak quite professionally.

"Really, there's nothing. We've been friends for so many years, would I lie to you? Oh, right, what do you think of Bryan?"

"What do you mean?"

"One word – strange! No matter his skills, the weird sword in his hand, or his background, it's all very strange. I think this person must have a secret he's concealing, you better be careful!"

"I'm not asking you that, I knew about that a long time ago... why would I need you to remind me? I'm asking you how is he as a person?" Phoebe's tone was odd as she asked again.

"Huh. And you say you're ordinary friends. I don't see you caring this much about your other friends. His looks are okay, but he isn't handsome or charming either. I haven't come in contact with anything else, but according to your descriptions, he doesn't seem like much. Petty, profit seeking, and sex-craved don't seem like pros!"

Han Shuo heard everything they were discussing and was cursing Candice inwardly when the three original demons in a further location suddenly sensed the approach of assassins.

There were ten assassins this time, one of those in front was dressed in all black and his body was hovering in mid air. It looked like he was at least of the archmage level. Through the vision of the original demons, Han Shuo could see that Grover had also appeared in the distance. His face was gravely cautious, and the experts by his side, such as Ellis and the others, were all part of this time's operation. It seemed that Grover was betting everything on a single cast of the dice. He was planning on making it difficult for Phoebe to escape this time.

The three original demons slowly changed their directions according to Han Shuo's instructions. They carefully avoided the area covered by the archmage's mental strength, and carefully felt out the strength and numbers of those coming. It was the wee hours of the morning at this moment, and the guards were in the heavily fortified northern part of the city. This needed a few minutes and was when security was most lax in the entire northern part of the city. It seemed like these people had already carefully scouted out the conditions here.

Han Shuo measured the strength on his side and he felt that the odds were stacked against him. He could no longer pay attention to Phoebe and Candice's conversation. He rushed out of his room with the fastest possible speed, kicking the door to her room open with his foot and rushing inside with no reservations for anything whatsoever.

Chapter 84: See who's a master of concealment

“What, what are you doing?” Candice squealed in shock and suddenly stood up. Phoebe had been about to undress for bed when she saw Han Shuo rush in. She, too, was startled and hastily pulled her clothes back on, looking at Han Shuo with a face of panic.

“Grover and the people of ‘Shadow Ghost’ are coming. Don’t say useless things and think about what we need to do!” Han Shuo roared in a low tone at the two frantic women with a darkened face.

Candice was still vaguely suspicious when he finished speaking and was about to express her opinions with a war face, whereas Phoebe had an extremely grave face and admonished, “Listen to him Candice, Bryan wouldn’t be wrong!”

Candice didn’t believe Han Shuo, but she believed Phoebe. Upon hearing Phoebe’s words, she immediately pulled out the broadsword from her back and nodded to Phoebe, dashing out suddenly like a ball of fiery shadows. Low sounds of warning immediately came from Candice.

Phoebe didn’t waste any time and grabbed a robe from the edge of the bed, flinging it onto herself. Her space ring suddenly brightened and a longsword sparkling with cold light materialized in her hand.

Nodding to Phoebe, Han Shuo quickly dashed outside of the house and saw that Candice was standing outside, giving orders in a low voice.

Using the vision from the original demons, Han Shuo closed his eyes and said, “Three people are approaching from the left, 130 meters away. Two warriors and one mage. The mage is the wind adept mage Ellis. An archmage along with four warriors and an archer is approaching from the front, roughly 130 meters away. There are most likely people from ‘Shadow Ghost’ on the roof. Several people are lying in wait in an alleyway 50 meters to the right, and they seem to be laying down some sort of trap...”

As if he was watching the action from above, Han Shuo continuously and swiftly detailed the particulars of the people approaching swiftly. Candice hadn't believed it at first, and would've never believed that he could clearly detect the oncomers' movements from so far away, but Phoebe had immediately asked Candice to arrange people according to Han Shuo's descriptions as soon as she walked out of the room.

"Miss Phoebe, I hope you make the preparations to retreat this time. According to my estimations, I think even with you as a swordmaster, we are still possibly not their match. If the situation goes south, I hope you don't linger here, but no matter how dangerous it is, don't retreat to the right. It's a dead end there!" Han Shuo suddenly opened his eyes and stared at Phoebe as he said gravely.

"Thank you, Bryan, I know what to do. You be careful as well!" Phoebe trusted Han Shuo a great deal and when she saw him warn her with such a serious face, she immediately understood that it would be a dangerous battle this time. She immediately nodded gravely at Han Shuo, indicating her understanding.

Breathing in deeply, Han Shuo willed the Demonslayer Edge out of the heart of his palm and checked the dagger concealed on his body, and the steel needles strapped to his legs. He then wielded a crossbow in his left hand and bounded up a nearby tree. The shadows of the house happened to completely conceal his body. Han Shuo stared calmly towards the left, not moving an inch.

"And so they've come, everyone be careful and spread out!" As a swordmaster, Phoebe finally heard the footsteps and inwardly rejoiced for trusting Han Shuo. She cast a gaze at Candice on her side.

It was only now that Candice looked in shock at the Han Shuo, who was concealed in the shadows. She had never thought that Han Shuo would truly be this amazing. Not only could he detect movement from a distance of a hundred meters, but it was as if he had a pair of eyes in the sky, thoroughly deducing all of the enemy's movements.

Candice was a mercenary who had experienced hundreds of battles after all. After a short duration of shock, she looked at Phoebe and the two of them leapt up together. The two of them concealed themselves on either side of Han Shuo and also hid in the shadows.

“Br... Bryan, can you tell me slowly the movements of the enemy, so I can inform the people below?” Candice was about a meter away from Han Shuo when spoke in a soft voice.

Maintaining his position without even a flicker of change in his expression, Han Shuo’s voice was low as he faintly summarized the details of the enemies’ movement. Candice held a magical item in her hand, utilizing it to give her commands to the mercenaries hidden amongst the yard.

The three people from Grover’s side, with Ellis in the lead, were the first batch to arrive. They paused on a nearby roof. Han Shuo and the others didn’t move until the floating archmage appeared at the front door with the other experts from “Shadow Ghost”. It was only then that they held their breaths, focused their concentration, and prepared to make a move.

No one saw how the archmage moved, only that his body was completely enveloped in a black robe. He muttered a few lines of incantations in an almost inaudible voice, and fierce magical pulses suddenly emanated towards Phoebe’s residence. The rooms all began shaking violently as if a large earthquake was taking place.

At the same time, the four warriors behind him swiftly spread out. One archer shifted to a roof on the side, observing the surroundings from a high vantage point. Ellis nodded to the two warriors after seeing the ground tremble and shake like a great beast awakening. The two of them leapt off and descended towards the yard.

Whoosh whoosh whoosh whoosh whoosh.

Five arrows suddenly appeared in the darkness, like five violent vipers submerged in deep waters. They sped swiftly to bite the two descending warriors. The two had concealed their movements and had never expected that they would face such a fierce attacks as soon as they’d leapt off. They were quite shocked and frantically waved their swords to block the arrows.

Three of the arrows were smashed to pieces, one of them was evaded by both of them, with only the one that Phoebe had shot out nailing directly into one of the warrior's calves. When the two landed, they triggered the field that had been laid out there and three bolts of lightning suddenly appeared in the air. Under the illumination of the lightning, Han Shuo could clearly see multiple strands of metal wire as thin as hair tangled together. When the two landed, their ankles were caught in the metal wires.

The lightning crept amongst the metal wires, turning the area into a brilliant silver net with strong electricity flowing through it. The two people's bodies spasmed as they emitted ghastly howls. The one who wasn't injured quickly reacted after being electrocuted and thrust his sword out to cut through the metal wires and escape. The other one, with an arrow in his calf, foamed at the mouth and his hair was a burned mess as he slowly fell down into the metal net.

"This is bad, an ambush!" Ellis had been about to descend like the others, but suddenly cried out upon seeing the two warriors had been hit, raising a hue and cry to warn the "Shadow Ghost" killers who were attacking from the front.

The door cracked into four or five pieces with two loud cracks, and four warriors dressed in black came rushing in. They started searching the two sides of the yard. The archmage floated into the yard, the magic staff in his left hand was wrapped in his long black sleeves. The rooms on the sides started collapsing from the severe earthquake in accordance with his motions.

Out of those of the Battlefire mercenary band lying in wait in the neighboring rooms, two directly died from the impact of the collapsing house. There were also three who had no choice but to rush out as well. They all held their weapons and stood in the yard. Han Shuo took a quick look and noticed that there was only a senior swordsman, a thunder journeyman mage, and an archer left.

(Hello reader, if you're not reading this on <http://volaretranslations.com>, then please be advised that this work has been stolen from the original translator.)

The archmage waved the staff in his hand and a large surge of magic once again ripped outwards. Three earth dragons suddenly erupted out of the earth, like pistons of ice, slashing towards the three Battlefire members, who had appeared. The senior swordsman and journeyman mage evaded in time, adroitly dodging to the side before disaster struck. The other archer raised his bow, gathered his concentration, and aimed at the archmage, but he didn't have the chance to release the arrow before the earth dragon, rising beneath his feet, crushed his chest. The strong force of impact immediately caused him to lose his life.

Calmly controlling his breathing, Han Shuo could clearly sense that Phoebe and Candice on either side of him suddenly started breathing more heavily. It looked like that with the death of this person, the calm stance that the two had always kept vanished completely.

Afterwards, Phoebe and Candice both shot out crossbow bolts at the same time and sent them flying towards the earth archmage who released the earth dragons. The crossbow bolts had fierce momentum, but it was a pity that a wall of earth suddenly rose from the ground with a wave of his left hand. Their crossbow bolts collided with the wall and didn't cause any damage to the killer.

"In the shadows of the big tree!" Ellis didn't disguise his voice this time and suddenly spoke with his original voice. The whooshing sound of a windblade attack accompanied his voice.

When Phoebe and Candice heard the sounds of an imminent windblade attack, they immediately jumped out from Han Shuo's side. Phoebe held a longsword that dazzled with eye-catching light and dashed at the archmage with the fastest speed possible. Candice's broadsword flared with tongues of fire licking at the skies, turning her into a fiery elf in the darkness as she swiftly charged Ellis.

Wielding a crossbow, Han Shuo didn't move as he lay covertly in the shadows of the big tree. He didn't even raise a hand to fend off the incoming windblades. Several windblades ripped through the tree branches, and another two connected with Han Shuo's waist. However, he grit his teeth and bore it all, staying there unmoving, maintaining even his breathing and heartbeat at a very stunningly steady rate.

Phoebe and Candice flew out from the tree, their flames of battle thoroughly stoked. Because the earth archmage had toppled all the houses with a huge earthquake as soon as he'd arrived, this caused many of the traps, that the Battlefire mercenary band had set up, to become ineffective. Phoebe was well aware of the horrors that an archmage was capable of and thus had her sights set on him, immediately rushing forward, bringing all her strength to bear.

When Phoebe made her move, the two senior swordsmen from "Shadow Ghost" immediately converged on the archmage's location, presenting a combination of two melee and one mage to Phoebe. Off in the distance, the "Shadow Ghost" archer also coordinated with the other two swordsmen along with Ellis, starting their attacks on those of the Battlefire mercenary band.

Wielding her broadsword, Candice sent a tongue of fire licking out with every swing of her weapon. The broadsword sent out dazzling light in the night sky, forcing the wind mage Ellis to continuously back up.

Ellis' actions were extremely agile as he leveraged the power of the wind. As he quickly backed up, several columns of windblade tornadoes rushed towards Candice. When one of the journeyman swordsmen rushed to Ellis' side and combined their efforts in battling Candice, even the imposing Candice suddenly seemed to be under a lot of pressure.

At this moment, whether it was Phoebe's side or Ellis and those of "Shadow Ghost", everyone had fully revealed themselves in the broken and battered yard. Only Han Shuo still remained hidden within the darkness, still holding on after taking two direct hits from the windblades. He was waiting for the best moment to attack.

Phoebe and Candice were both in disadvantageous spots, but a few traces of expectation arose in their dejected hearts upon seeing Han Shuo continuously fail to materialize. The two girls were both smart ladies, and had already guessed that Han Shuo must be planning something despite his injuries. They all moved in unspoken accord and slowly brought their opponents towards the big tree.

After a short while, the struggling Phoebe and Candice had both gathered beneath the tree where Han Shuo was concealed, their movement cut off by the archmage, Ellis, and the other assassins.

“Beautiful Miss Phoebe, after a few battles, I greatly admire your strength. However, you’ll have no more chances this time. My deepest apologies!” Ellis laughed gently as the sky in front of him howled and roared after his words, forming a violent tornado. The broken tree branches and rocks around them were all swept into the sky by this tornado as it moved towards Phoebe and Candice.

The archmage said nothing as he extended his left hand, four high walls of earth rising from the ground, thoroughly enclosing Phoebe and Candice in a cage.

The longsword in Phoebe’s hand rippled with a blinding milky-white aura, the light forming into the shape of a cross. It blasted through one wall of earth as she hopped out with Candice. The swordsmen waiting on the side immediately started attacking Phoebe and Candice. Ellis had a sinister smile on his face as he focused his concentration and slowly manipulated the tornado to churn up the two.

Just at this moment, a crossbow bolt suddenly pierced through the air and shot towards the earth archmage wrapped in black robes. The archmage leaned to the side and a swordsman next to him waved his hand to ward off the crossbow bolt. A bone spear then materialized out of thin air, also shooting towards the archmage with a sharp whistling sound.

The archmage seemed to feel a bit irritated as he slightly flexed his left hand. Earth magic once again gathered and a stone slab on the ground suddenly flew out, smashing the bone spear flying towards him into two halves.

The archmage had just breathed a sigh of relief and was about to search for the enemy hidden in the shadows when a ghastly wail suddenly sounded. Ellis, not too far away, clutched his chest and raised a face full of fear to look at the top of the big tree. A sharp weapon burrowed out like a poisonous dragon, leaving his chest with a whistling sound.

Pfft.

An arrow of blood sprayed uncontrollably from Ellis' chest and Ellis raised his head to the sky. His knees suddenly gave way and he sank listlessly to the floor, pausing, and then fell stiffly backwards.

Chapter 85: Earning a profit without working for it

Ellis' sudden death also completely revealed Han Shuo's existence. As the weapon returned to his hand, Han Shuo also jumped down from the tree as well.

At this moment, there was also an arrow sticking out of the side of the thunder journeyman mage of the Battlefire mercenary band. It looked like he'd been hit by the archer from "Shadow Ghost" on the far roof at some point.

The other senior swordsman was also spitting out blood. His body seemed to have been injured by the windblades as fresh blood dripped out of his wounds onto the floor.

"Leave this place!" Han Shuo jumped down adroitly, took in the situation, and understood that even with Ellis dying in the ambush, they were still at a disadvantage. He immediately made the decision to retreat.

Only a few moments had actually elapsed since the arrival of these killers until those several rounds of attacks just now. Before the change of the city guard had completed, the killers from "Shadow Ghost" would have more than enough time to slowly kill his companions, particularly when the original demons that Han Shuo had set up further away sensed that the others, who had been setting up traps, were also rushing this way. He naturally understood that their arrival would mean their chances of living had further decreased.

Phoebe and Candice's beautiful eyes were already sparkling when Han Shuo's command to retreat sounded out, seemingly already considering how to retreat.

Before the two had decided, a thought struck Han Shuo as he suddenly remembered a place and a crafty smile spread across his face. He suddenly said, "Follow me!"

Han Shuo's body suddenly dashed towards one of the fallen walls of the house, the Demonslayer Edge flying out of his palm like a poisonous dragon. A large hole suddenly opened, accompanied by violent explosions. Han Shuo caught the Demonslayer Edge as he arrived, charging out from the hole.

Phoebe and Candice were close already to Han Shuo and were also the closest to the opened hole. When Han Shuo's body moved, the two beauties didn't hesitate and also flew over, escaping through the hole in the blink of an eye.

The remaining two Battlefire mercenaries looked at each other after seeing Candice and Phoebe leave, and also started escaping in two different directions.

"Don't chase after them? After the two girls!" The black robed archmage suddenly opened his mouth at this moment. His voice was exceedingly sharp and unpleasant to the ears.

Thus, all the killers gave up on the remaining two Battlefire members and quickly squirmed through the hole, under the archmage's instructions, and started chasing Han Shuo and the others.

Having trained in magic, Han Shuo was extremely speedy as he furiously dashed. As warriors, the two beauties Phoebe and Candice didn't lag behind either. The two of them paid attention to nothing else, setting their sights on Han Shuo, and chased after him.

One of the original demons was one step ahead and had concealed itself in Han Shuo's path. With an additional set of eyes up ahead, Han Shuo would especially pick isolated areas to flee to as he threaded through various yards and alleyways. With the existence of the original demons, Han Shuo could map everything into his heart and wouldn't take a single wrong path.

Gradually, Han Shuo's band of three slowly widened the gap between them and their pursuers by leveraging the terrain. A fork in the road suddenly appeared, one led in one direction in a more twisting and turning fashion, whereas the other was wider and didn't offer that many areas of concealment in the middle of the road.

Following behind Han Shuo, Phoebe and Candice were incredibly astounded by Han Shuo's familiarity with this region. They watched as Han Shuo used his knowledge of the land to leave their pursuers far behind them.

When the fork in the road appeared, the two of them naturally thought that Han Shuo would dash into the more twisty and turning road and use that opportunity to completely shake off their pursuers. They hadn't thought that Han Shuo would suddenly stop and take out a black mask and cover his face, throwing another two at Phoebe and Candice, hurriedly urging them, "Wear it!"

While Candice was still hesitating, Phoebe had already pulled the mask on without another word, covering her beautiful face entirely. Seeing that the pursuers had already appeared in the corner of the street, Phoebe rushed Candice, "Hurry!"

Candice no longer hesitated after Phoebe spoke up. She frantically put on the mask and then took out another set of black nightwalker clothes from her space ring, seemingly planning on wearing them as well.

"Don't put on the black clothes! Let's move!" Han Shuo suddenly said as he looked at their pursuers behind them. Having paused briefly for a few seconds, his body moved again, running past the quiet, windy path and making for the other broad street without any concealment.

Even Phoebe was startled as she didn't understand why Han Shuo did so, but this wasn't the time to ask extraneous questions. Based on her trust in Han Shuo, Phoebe lightly tugged Candice and ran after Han Shuo decisively.

"Don't run full out, make sure that those who are following us can follow our tracks!" Han Shuo briefly dropped his speed and pulled up side by side with Candice, whispering to the two girls.

"What the heck are you doing? If we didn't slow down and went on the other path, I think we would've escaped by now. Why are we going to such lengths, like using masks to cover our faces? They know what we're wearing, there's no point in doing so and rather makes us appear like idiots!” Candice complained.

“Heh heh, I’m using a mask to cover my face, not to deceive them, but in order not to reveal our faces to another group of people. When I came through here yesterday, I discovered a set of shady, surreptitious people in the house ahead. These people are also very strong and must not be up to anyone good. If the people of ‘Shadow Ghost’ met with them, I think some trouble can be caused. Perhaps we can use this to resolve our ‘Shadow Ghost’ troubles in one go.” Han Shuo explained simply with a sinister tone.

“You’re so depraved!” Candice blurted after a moment of stunned silence.

“Bryan, we can’t bring danger to innocent people! Are you sure they’re not good people?” Phoebe started and asked Han Shuo.

“Don’t worry, I’m sure they’re not good people. I even saw them creeping around the Academy grounds yesterday to steal things. How could they possibly be good people when committing such crimes!” Han Shuo promised to Phoebe and then suddenly said lowly, “Be careful, it’s that yard up ahead. I’ll attack from the distance in a moment and then we’ll immediately flash behind that yard. Be careful not to reveal yourself at all costs.”

His speed suddenly picking up, Han Shuo, Phoebe, and Candice rushed towards the yard that lay before them. Han Shuo suddenly took out a crossbow when he arrived at the front of the door and fired off a crossbow bolt without aiming. He then took out a metal needle and randomly flung it into the yard as well.

After doing all this, Han Shuo grabbed Phoebe and Candice once again and found a hiding place that an original demon had already scouted out – a square, stone box that was a trash dump behind the house that didn’t have a lid.

“Ew... it stinks!” Candice immediately covered her nose and cried out lowly. Phoebe also covered her nose, a morass of disdain and discomfort surfacing in her eyes.

This place was very narrow and there were also a few trash bags present. Han Shuo crouched down in the middle, with Phoebe and Candice crouching down on either side of him. The three of their bodies all pressed tightly together. Han Shuo naturally couldn't avoid the stink that Candice and Phoebe were smelling, and could only use the mask on his face to cover his nose.

Han Shuo didn't say anything and used his hand to make a shushing noise, indicating for the two to talk less and closely observe their surroundings.

"Enemies!" A low call came from inside the yard and slight footsteps sounded from inside, seeming to search for traces of the invaders.

At this moment, the crouching Han Shuo, Phoebe, and Candice saw that the archmage, that had been floating in midair, had caught up with a few killers from "Shadow Ghost".

"They went inside this yard!" A swordsman immediately reported to the archmage when they arrived.

The archmage nodded and waved the magic staff covered by his long sleeve. A strong magic pulse once again appeared suddenly, and the earthquake spell that had been used on Phoebe's house once again showed itself in this yard. All the structures and buildings collapsed one by one as the archmage cast his earthquake spell.

A noisy din of curses and yells suddenly sounded out from inside. Duke and Erick, as well as some of the other people in the yard, flared out their fighting aura and magic without a second warning, attacking the black robed archmage.

Duke also floated in mid air, he was an archmage as well. An ornate magic staff accompanied the conclusion of his wind magic incantation as hundreds of wind blades formed a tornado, churning towards the black robed archmage and the other. The tornado, made of windblades, possessed a frightening force. The sand, little rocks, and small trees in its path were swept up and crushed to dust.

"Damn it, why is there another archmage present?! Grover didn't tell us about this!" A shrill exclamation came from the black-robed archmage's mouth as he raised an earthen wall in front of him and hastily retreated.

The swordsman from Grover's side and an archer from "Shadow Ghost" didn't react in time and were dragged in by the tornado. Endless rounds of ghastly screams rang out as the two were ripped apart in a mass of blood and flesh. They were transformed into a mist of blood and signs of life ceased to exist.

"After them!" Duke snorted coldly and dashed out of the shambles of the yard with Erick and a few others, chased after the other members of "Shadow Ghost" who had already started fleeing in the distance. Magics crashed against each other along the way as endless pilipala sounds of explosion were emitted.

"Eh, where are these people from? They're so strong!" Candice murmured with a face of shock after they'd left.

"This yard is in ruins and there's no one inside. We don't have to stay here anymore." Phoebe hastily jumped out and stayed far away from the stone box that had been used to store trash.

Candice and Han Shuo walked out from inside as Han Shuo laughed lightly, "At this moment, the city guard should have finished changing shifts. I wonder if these two groups of people will alert the guard."

"You're sinister indeed. What should we do next?" At this moment, Candice had started treating Han Shuo as the leader at some unknown time. Now that the danger had been resolved and he had brought "Shadow Ghost" and Grover's people a huge amount of trouble, she opened her mouth and asked Han Shuo.

"Miss Phoebe, I think I may know where Grover's mistress is..." At this moment, Han Shuo suddenly opened his mouth.

Her face showed an overjoyed expression, Phoebe looked at Han Shuo with a look of excitement and asked hurriedly, "Where is she?"

"Follow me. It looks like we won't be resting much tonight." Han Shuo shrugged his shoulders with resignation, took his bearings and led them to traverse the wide road, walking towards a dark and narrow path.

Grover had revealed himself at the very beginning. When Ellis and those of “Shadow Ghost” had rushed into Phoebe’s house, Grover had stayed in a house a short distance away and awaited the news. One of the three original demons had stayed by Grover’s side, monitoring him.

Grover left alone only when Phoebe’s house had collapsed. He didn’t return to the Guild, but boarded a carriage that had been prepared prior, saying to the groom, “Go to Cara’s place, be careful!”

Han Shuo had heard from Phoebe last time that Grover’s mistress was called Cara, this was why he’d notified Phoebe and Candice.

The three original demons would become harder to control if they were too far from Han Shuo’s side. When Grover had left, Duke and the members of “Shadow Ghost” on this side had just made contact. Han Shuo’s control over the original demon became more and more difficult as Grover’s carriage rushed away. When Phoebe and Candice agreed, they immediately traveled at full speed towards Grover’s location.

The sky was starting to grow hazily bright when Han Shuo appeared on the streets in the west of the city with Phoebe and Candice. Compared to the northern and southern sides of the city, it was dirty and messy here, with trash everywhere on the streets. A few beggars were wearing thin clothes in this frigid weather. They had curled themselves up and lay next to the piles of trash, seeming to want to obtain some warmth from the trash bags.

“To think that Grover, with his status, would come to the slums . He’d hidden his mistress away here, no wonder we couldn’t find her. Grover is a difficult person to move against alright!” Phoebe frowned as she looked around and said lowly to Han Shuo.

“Alright, this is the place. Follow me, I don’t think Grover will be able to escape this time!” Han Shuo had seen through the eyes of the original demon that Grover had entered a dirty and broken house. He immediately circled past the piles of trash in front after speaking to Phoebe, darting into an alleyway in which flies and bugs danced in flight.

Although they were disgusted by this place, Phoebe and Candice still grit their teeth and darted in after Han Shuo. The two continuously flapped their hands, trying to shoo away the flies around them.

Chapter 86: New pursuits

Han Shuo, Phoebe, and Candice walked into the dirty and run down house. It was actually very clean and neat inside, with a few decorations that could even be called luxurious. To think that it was only dirty and broken down on the outside, but quite fancy on the inside.

After entering the house, Candice abruptly closed the door tightly, emitting a thumping sound that she was unable to conceal. Her broadsword in her hand, she barred the way out.

“Candice, you don’t need to be that careful. My dear uncle doesn’t know any martial arts or magic, he won’t be able to escape this time.” Phoebe’s mask had been taken off and she displayed her stunning features. She sat down leisurely at random, coldly looking at a room with its door open.

Han Shuo inspected his surroundings and observed by using the original demons. When he ascertained that no suspicious characters were around, he then poured a cup of warm water and took two greedy sips.

Grover walked out of the room, through the open door, with a face full of dejection. He released a ghastly laugh and looked at Phoebe, “Good niece, dear niece. To think that you’d been hiding your strength all along. Was Cara already taken by you?”

Phoebe started and looked in surprise at Grover. She shook her head, “No, I’ve only just discovered this place.”

“Let Cara live, I’ll give you everything you want, including my life.” Grover knew it would be difficult for him to escape death with the way things were now, and had let everything go.

“I’m sorry, Cara isn’t in my hands. If my guess is correct, Grandpa Andrew sent men here already and she’s been taken by them. I don’t have the authority to decide whether she lives or dies.” Phoebe shook her head and stared at Grover with a cold look. She asked again, “Did you kill my father?”

“Yes, I poisoned him. Since you already know everything, I have nothing further to hide. What else do you want to know?" Grover's face was wooden as he nodded stiffly.

Inhaling deeply, Han Shuo could clearly feel the suppressed anger surging from Phoebe. Phoebe slowly stood up and looked at Han Shuo and Candice, "I want to speak privately with my good uncle. Bryan, will you guys go outside and wait for me?"

Nodding, Han Shuo put the teacup in his hand down and left with Candice, walking towards the alleyway entrance far away.

"Hey, can I ask you something?" Candice kept sizing up Han Shuo when they had left the house and finally couldn't help but ask after a while.

Han Shuo had been contemplating Duke's background with a lowered head when he heard Candice's question. He raised his head and looked at her in confusion.

As a girl, Candice's height was a bit taller than ordinary girls. Her skin wasn't pale, but rather the coppertone of one having spent many years in the sun. Her body was quite fit and muscular, and her breasts looked like they would explode out of her top. Her thighs were supple and full of explosive power. She looked as difficult to handle as a feisty mare.

"What's would you like to know?" Han Shuo wasn't kindly disposed towards Candice, but he didn't hate her either.

"How were you able to locate the assassins' movement so clearly, like you saw them all with your own eyes?" A heavy sense of curiosity permeated across her face as she looked at Han Shuo with every expression of interest.

"There's a magic called 'Eye of the Sky', you must've heard of it? My method is similar to that one. Of course there are some differences, but I can't tell you the exact details!" Han Shuo flicked a glance at her and said faintly.

"Two archmages were unable to detect the disturbances from your method. It's wondrous indeed. Can you pass this method onto us? If our mercenary band knew of this method, it would greatly increase the success rate of our missions. We are willing to offer a hefty reward for this.”

“I’ve heard that you’re a merchant, you can name your price. We can negotiate no matter how high it is. Other forms of payment will work as well as long as our mercenary band can do it.” Candice looked at Han Shuo with sparkling eyes and discussed very earnestly with him.

Shaking his head firmly, Han Shuo rejected her resolutely. “My apologies, there are some thing I won’t sell. My apologies Miss Candice.”

“Then will you join our Battlefire mercenary band? As the vice captain of the band, I can directly approve your application. With your strength, you will surely accomplish great deeds if you join us.” Candice seemed to know that Han Shuo would reject her and wasn’t discouraged at all. Rather, she invited him to join them and become a member.

“I’m sorry, I don’t plan to for the time being.” Han Shuo rejected politely again.

“Alright, when you plan to, please remember to come find us, the Battlefire mercenary band, when you want to. I will greatly welcome you with open arms.” Candice promised solemnly.

Phoebe walked out of the house with a cold and remote expression at this moment. Her face only softened when she saw Candice and Han Shuo. She asked, “What are you guys discussing?”

“Nothing much. Oh right Phoebe, what about Grover?” Candice pouted a bit awkwardly as she asked Phoebe.

“He killed himself just now. I’ve already gotten what I wanted from him, we can leave now.” Phoebe’s expression was strange as she looked at Candice.

“Then there shouldn’t be anything to do with me after this. May I leave now?” Han Shuo suddenly spoke up when he saw the two conversing.

Phoebe once again focused her beautiful eyes on Han Shuo and looked dumbly at him, then said to Candice, “Candice, two of your people from the mercenary band made it out. Go contact them first and see if anyone else survived in the wrecked yard.”

Candice looked at Phoebe and Han Shuo with an ambiguous expression and displayed a smile of understanding. She nodded at Phoebe and walked off with large strides.

“Bryan, will you take a walk with me?” Phoebe blushed after seeing Candice’s meaningful gaze and slowly returned to normal only after she’d left. She looked at Han Shuo with a face of expectation.

“Sure, where would you like to go?” Han Shuo thought and he asked.

“Let’s walk around the southern district. I think the Boozt Merchant Guild no longer poses a threat to me anymore.”

Han Shuo didn’t say much else as he accompanied the beautiful Phoebe on a slow walk down the dirty streets. There were people who had obviously fallen on hard times on the streets and they shot admiring glances at the richly dressed Han Shuo and Phoebe.

“In this world, our Guild actually doesn’t have much status. Although merchants earn some gold, our status is basically the same as ordinary citizens.” Phoebe’s voice was far away as she said introspectively to Han Shuo by her side.

“Miss Phoebe, you don’t see the gazes of the other people on you. They’re actually full of admiration and envy. To them, your current life is what they dream to have, what else are you unsatisfied with?”

“Heh heh, we almost died yesterday. They can’t even imagine a life filled with unknown dangers. Perhaps they worry over living out their daily lives, but we worry about our lives. I wonder who admires who!” Phoebe sighed self deprecatingly.

She suddenly stopped walking and concentrated her gaze on Han Shuo. “Bryan, with your abilities, you are certain to climb quite high as long as you are willing to work hard. I had thought to ask you to manage the Guild with me, but I’ve thought through this clearly. I think the small Boozt Merchant Guild would be insufficient to hold you. You should have more expansive skies. Bryan, have you thought about how you should live in the future?”

Han Shuo started as he remembered his status. Although he had left behind the label of errand slave, he was still a student of the Academy. With his status, even if he swiftly graduated from the Academy, there was still nothing to his name. Of course, this wasn't the life he wanted, but just that Han Shuo didn't have any other plans for the time being.

"Power and a lofty position is what you should be reaching for. As much money as a merchant has, he is still a small character at the mercy of others. Only those with an illustrious reputation and an extraordinary position have the right to control over and determine the lives of others. You should become one of those types of people!" A mesmerizing light shone in Phoebe's beautiful eyes as she stared directly at Han Shuo, her voice full of persuasion.

His mind had never been so agitated before. Han Shuo had thought of these things before, but never as clearly as in this moment. Since he had been lucky enough to be reborn, he should enjoy everything there was to life without reservations. Why didn't he use the strength that was available to him? Under Phoebe's persuasion, Han Shuo's mindset of not wanting to remain ordinary slowly started to catch on fire and he became full of resolution.

After a while, Han Shuo took in a deep breath and nodded, saying lowly, "I understand your meaning, but my opportunity hasn't seemed to arrive yet."

A brilliant smile spreading over her face, Phoebe seemed to have been waiting for these words. When she heard Han Shuo's words, she immediately stared at Han Shuo and said, "You're wrong, the chance has always been there. The fastest way to obtain power and status is to achieve meritorious acts in war. The Empire has never been at peace, and our battles with neighboring countries has never stopped. I think a large war will break out in the near future. I think you should get involved. As your good friend, I'm willing to help you and do all that I can to help you."

"I appreciate your good intentions, but I would like to obtain all that I deserve through my own hands." Han Shuo said resolutely to Phoebe, paused and then said again, "Miss Phoebe, please prepare the rations I need. I'll come by the Guild in a few days to pick them up. I think we'll have many opportunities to cooperate in the future."

"Then alright, I've said all that needs to be said and won't need you to accompany me further on this random stroll. I trust that with your abilities, you will soon rise to prominence within the kingdom. Don't forget that I'm your friend then!" Phoebe winked at Han Shuo and said cutely.

"Heh heh, your words today have greatly inspired me, I will remember them! Farewell Miss Phoebe, don't forget my rations!" Han Shuo smiled and suddenly changed direction, heading for the northern part of the city.

Phoebe pouted angrily after quite a while had passed since Han Shuo had left, she said huffily in a voice that only she could hear. "Damn it, you only care about your rations!"

Chapter 87: Joining the Dark Mantle organization

After parting ways with Phoebe, Han Shuo went returned directly to the Academy. However, he once again avoided entering through the front gate and decided to enter through a secluded corner from the mountain in the back.

Han Shuo suddenly became wary in the woods that he had spent time with Phoebe last time, an unexplainable feeling of unease rising in his heart. This shock made Han Shuo immediately release his three original demons. They flew out from the back of his neck and patrolled the entire woods, but didn't find anything.

The feeling of unease didn't vanish after the original demons failed to find anything. That exceedingly uncomfortable feeling grew stronger and stronger, making Han Shuo incredibly wary.

The Demonslayer Edge appearing in his hand, Han Shuo took a deep breath and readjusted his facial expression to be at his best. He tried using his own senses to detect the abnormalities around him and called out, "Who is it? Come on out!"

Han Shuo had only randomly called with this line and hadn't actually thought that anything would happen, because if it was an enemy, an enemy at this level definitely wouldn't appear just because Han Shuo had called out.

But unexpectedly, a low, eerie laugh rang out from the thick woods as soon as he'd finished speaking. A human shape slowly took form in front of Han Shuo within the shadows of the large trees.

"Kid, you have a good level of awareness. How did you discover my existence?" When the figure within the shadows of the tree had materialized, a ruthless-looking old man, who was exceedingly tall, skinny, and wearing grey clothing, walked out. The old man's beard was grey and his eyes were the color of ash. They looked completely lifeless.

“Due to my instincts, who are you?” Han Shuo gripped the Demonslayer Edge firmly and watched the approaching old man with a hostile gaze, ready to make a move at any moment.

“I can give you the opportunity of a lifetime. I’m acquaintances with Phoebe’s master and mean you no harm, you don’t need to be so nervous!” Han Shuo could feel a strong sense of danger exuding from this person. This was probably the strongest person he’d met since coming to this world. Han Shuo even felt that if the old man were to make a move, he’d be hard pressed to escape.

“Phoebe? So Phoebe sent you, what do you mean by all this?” Han Shuo reined in his impulse to flee from this person and asked with a darkened face.

The old man suddenly halted in his tracks and didn’t continue forward. He just stood there, sizing up Han Shuo, like he was observing an item he expected to sell at a high price. He kept nodding his head and a smile blossomed on his face after a while, but when this smile floated out from his ruthless features, it only made one feel that his face became even more sinister.

“Phoebe doesn’t know of my existence, but I know everything about your recent actions. I heard the conversation between you and Phoebe just now and have an offer to make you, but if you choose this path, you can obtain all that you want, but you may also die very quickly.” The old man said slowly as he looked at Han Shuo.

“Who are you?” Han Shuo was a bit lost and had no idea what the old man wanted. He immediately asked again.

“Bryan... parents died when he was young and was then sold off to the necromancy major of the Babylon Academy of Magic and Force by his uncle to become a slave. Six years as an errand slave. Started displaying extraordinary abilities during an outing to the Dark Forest and seems to possess another wondrous way of training in addition to training necromancy magic...”

Han Shuo’s heart sank slowly as the old man started listing details from his life. Apart from a few secrets having to do with the little skeleton and the Cemetery of Death, most of the doings that he'd experienced in this period of time were all ferreted out. This made Han Shuo feel that a pair of eyes had been fixed on him in the darkness, and a sense of fear rose in his heart.

"Who are you?" This was the third time that he asked about the old man's origins.

"I'm called Candide and I belong to the Empire's 'Dark Mantle' organization that directly answers to His Majesty. Heh heh, there's a covert organization behind every nation. I think you understand the need for such an organization's existence. The people of 'Shadow Ghost' have appeared in the Boozt Merchant Guild several times now. You guys have caused such a great disturbance. Did you really think that we wouldn't know anything?" Old man Candide looked at Han Shuo with a vague smirk as he said slowly.

Han Shuo was greatly startled after he heard these words and heaved a silent sigh as he finally realized that he really was still too naive. He'd never heard of "Dark Mantle", but immediately understood after Candide's explanation that this organization must be similar to the Western Depot and the Eastern Depot of the Ming Dynasty, government agencies that directly answered to His Majesty, the Emperor.

"Alright, what do you want from me?"

"I'd like to absorb you into our Dark Mantle. I've carefully investigated your birth and think there shouldn't be a problem. I've also kept my eye on you lately and feel that your working style and special abilities will enable you to handle the jobs of 'Dark Mantle' with competence. If you join the 'Dark Mantle' and achieve exemplary accomplishments for the Empire, you can obtain everything you want." Candide looked at Han Shuo and gave this invitation.

Han Shuo's brows knit together and considered it carefully. Candide's invitation wasn't as simple as it appeared on the surface, but with Han Shuo's status and strength, if an enormous organization like "Dark Mantle” wanted to make a move against him, only death would be in his future.

There was a path in front of him now, and although it was dangerous, the destination remote, and full of uncertain factors, it was indeed an opportunity. This presented quite a bit of strong temptation to the now hotly ambitious Han Shuo. After weighing his gains and losses, Han Shuo felt that he didn’t seem to have much choice.

Han Shuo nodded firmly after a while and said lowly, “I accept.”

“Wonderful! Although you might be placed in more dangerous situations in the future, as long as you can climb high enough, you’ll have the chance to see beautiful sights that many will be unable to ever see in their lives.” Candide laughed lightly and took out an iron badge, handing it to Han Shuo. “This is the badge that symbolizes our status as members of the ‘Dark Mantle’. Put it away carefully, you’re under my command from today onwards. Your first mission is to keep an eye out for Duke’s movements. Oh, he’s the wind archmage that came flying out of the house that you guys brought the members of ‘Shadow Ghost’ to last night.”

There was a certain heft to the black iron badge, with the words “Dark Mantle” carved on the back. There was also an image of the crown carved in back. The crown was floating above a patch of black clouds and was also black colored.

“Who is Duke, where is he now, and how should I keep an eye on his movements?” Han Shuo was greatly startled and wondered how astonished Duke would be if he discovered that Han Shuo was keeping surveillance on him. He might even guess that the “Eye of Darkness” was with Han Shuo. If Han Shuo were to keep tabs on Duke, then he himself would also bear greater risk.

Hesitating, Candide explained, “Duke isn’t a person from our Lancelot Empire. He’s from the Kasi Empire and is here as a representative of the Maya School of Magic from the Kasi Empire. He’s here to conduct an exchange of magical knowledge with your Babylon Academy of Magic and Force. Of course, these are all excuses that they’ve come up with. Their true goal must not be this, but they've hidden it well. We don't know what they're up to at the moment. That's why we need someone to keep an eye on them."

"Therefore, he'll visit your Academy often during this time. As a student within, you're the most convenient person to keep a watch over him. Oh, right. Since you've joined 'Dark Mantle', no more killers from 'Shadow Ghost' will bother you. I will tell them to behave themselves."

Nodding, Han Shuo said, "I see. Alright then, I'll keep an eye on Duke's movements. How should I find you if I discover something abnormal?"

"These are our three strongholds within the Empire. Destroy this after you look at it. This badge represents your identity and you can use it to exchange information with others in the strongholds. However, your level is too low thus far and you won't have the right to ask about many things. If you can advance to a higher status, you'll be able to use the resources of 'Dark Mantle' and can even deploy the Empire's army. Heh heh, you must work hard." Candide said to Han Shuo.

A thin piece of paper landed in Han Shuo's palm. He looked it over once and ripped it to pieces in front of Candide after he'd memorized the contents. He then said, "Alright, my mind's a mess right now and I need some time to think. I'll report to you if Duke does anything out of the ordinary."

"Mm. I'm going to leave now as well. The members of 'Dark Mantle' have a lot of freedom. We won't intervene in your private affairs, and will only come for you when there's a mission that needs to be conducted. We won't affect your life under normal circumstances." Candide was surrounded by a cloud of black mist and his figure became fainter and fainter. A thin pulse of magic traveled out of the mist, and he then vanished from Han Shuo's sight as the breeze blew past, like he'd never appeared.

Han Shuo had clearly identified what he needed under Phoebe's persuasion not too long ago. Who would've thought that an olive branch would be extended as soon as he'd left Phoebe. He'd joined this "Dark Mantle” organization after a round of discussion with Candide. This made Han Shuo subtly feel that something was wrong, and he started to suspect whether or not Phoebe knew of Candide’s existence. This would simply be too much of a coincidence otherwise.

However, even if Phoebe and Candide were acquainted with each other, then Grover wouldn’t have been anything in the face of Candide’s enormous power. Phoebe wouldn’t have so many troubles either. This made Han Shuo quite confused as well.

Han Shuo carefully sorted out his thoughts within the woods and went over everything that had happened recently in his mind. He then set off towards the Academy grounds again with a look of resolution.

Chapter 88: But I have a guilty conscience!

Han Shuo had been worried that he would be found out by Duke, but had thoroughly dispelled these worries a few minutes after arriving at the necromancy major

The reason was because when Han Shuo arrived, he naturally greeted Borg and Carey when he saw them cleaning off the stone sculptures along the path. However, the two didn't recognize Han Shuo and were at a loss of what to do with their profound respect and humility.

When Han Shuo identified himself and Borg and Carey cautiously recognized him, they spoke to him with an even more fearful attitude.

Han Shuo was no longer an errand slave of the necromancy major now. He'd turned into a student and his status was naturally higher than these two errand boys. Add to that the fact that the necromancy students had purposefully exaggerated Han Shuo's aid when they returned from the Dark Forest, this made the two previous enemies, Carey and Borg, even more afraid that Han Shuo would come looking for them.

However, Han Shuo didn't pay attention to the two and rather took out a bronze mirror and admired himself in it, full of bliss. He'd suddenly discovered that his features had indeed gone through tumultuous changes compared to a few months ago. His originally frail and thin frame had become much stronger and taller. His weak facial features had become much more resolute after a series of life threatening experiences. His features had become much more pronounced, and had changed from those of an old child half a year ago to that of a dashing and charming young man.

If even Borg and Carey, two errand boys, who were well acquainted with Han Shuo, couldn't recognize him easily, then Han Shuo wouldn't need to worry about Duke and Erick, particularly after Candide had promised to take care of the overhanging cloud known as "Shadow Ghost". Han Shuo suddenly felt completely relaxed and didn't continue to conceal his traces. He returned to the Academy openly in public.

“Eh, it’s Bryan! You haven’t come back to the Academy in so long, I thought something happened to you!” Amy, from the necromancy major, had been on her way to the classroom building when she suddenly exclaimed upon seeing Han Shuo.

“Hello Amy.” Han Shuo smiled as he greeted her and walked towards the dark major’s classroom building with her.

When Han Shuo arrived at the necromancy major’s classroom, he lost himself in thought for a little while. Just two short months ago, he could only hold his broom and make use of the time that he had while cleaning to stand outside and listen to Gene’s lectures. Who would’ve thought that in just a short period of time, he’d turn into a necromancy major student and had the right to enter the classroom to sit down and listen to lessons with the other students.

“Don’t just stand there, the second class is about to begin, come on in!” Amy suddenly spoke up to rush him when she walked up to the door and saw that Han Shuo was standing dumbly outside the window.

Han Shuo immediately came to his senses and smiled kindly at Amy, nodding as he walked into the classroom. As soon as Han Shuo walked in, the gazes of several students inside suddenly all focused on Han Shuo, particularly Lisa in the back row. She had been lazily shutting her eyes when her eyes suddenly gleamed as she stood up and waved at Han Shuo, “Here, over here!”

Bach and Bella’s gazes landed upon Han Shuo, as well as those from some other majors, were exceedingly odd as they murmured something lowly.

“Bryan’s back, heh heh. Amy, do you believe the rumors?” Athena suddenly asked Amy in a low voice after she greeted Amy.

“I don’t really believe it. It doesn’t look like anything would ever happen between Master Fanny and Bryan. Camilla, that old witch, loves to carry tall tales, you believe stuff that she says?” Amy pouted and shook her head.

It wasn’t just Amy and Athena, when Han Shuo walked towards Lisa, he heard all the students talk about him and Fanny. They talked vividly about Camilla finding Han Shuo on Fanny's bed, as if they'd personally been there. In their mouths, he and Fanny became a couple caught in the act.

Han Shuo felt quite speechless, he hadn't thought that Camilla would be such a busybody and make it so that all the necromancy students knew of this matter. This probably meant the other teachers, including Fanny herself, had gotten the news even earlier.

Lisa's originally excited expression turned into one of interrogation after Han Shuo sat down with a wry smile. Her gaze first made a surprised circuit over Han Shuo, as if marveling over his changes. She then said coldly, "Huh, the things they're talking about, are they true or not? Is there really something between you and Master Fanny?"

"Lisa, how could even you not believe me when they don't believe me?! If I were someone like that, Master Fanny would never be someone like that! I can't believe someone would actually believe such ridiculous things, this is too outrageous!" Han Shuo explained softly to Lisa with a wry expression.

Lisa breathed a small sigh of relief after Han Shuo's words and her expression also eased off, but she still asked suspiciously, "Rumors don't come from nothing, it should be true that you went to Master Fanny's room in the middle of the night right? Although that old witch Camilla has a fat mouth, she wouldn't implicate you with no evidence at all?"

Shrugging, Han Shuo said, "I only went over to ask Master Fanny a few questions. The old witch made a mountain out of a molehill and I can't stop her from speaking. She can say whatever she likes, it doesn't affect me at all."

"But, this has a large effect on Master Fanny's reputation. Everyone will surely think that Master Fanny's life is a bit unclean, particularly since you're her student. Perhaps the school authorities will keep an eye on her or something like that." Lisa frowned as she reminded Han Shuo.

Han Shuo was suddenly enlightened after Lisa's words. He suddenly felt that he really was very selfish in only thinking of himself and never considering Fanny's position.

Just as Han Shuo was inwardly berating himself, Gene walked into the classroom with a thick stack of magic books. He swept his gaze around the room when he entered and saw Han Shuo sitting in the back row. His face suddenly chilled.

The class had just begun when Gene suddenly stopped and looked at Han Shuo in the back with an evil smile. “Bryan, you’ve never attended class since you became a necromancy major student. Is the knowledge I’m going over too advanced for you? Do you understand what I’m talking about?”

After the trials of the Dark Forest, Han Shuo understood that Gene wasn’t a bad person. He just made things a bit difficult for Han Shuo because of Fanny, but Gene was still a refined, cultured person. He didn’t make life too obviously difficult for Han Shuo, and thus Han Shuo didn’t bear a grudge difficult to resolve against Gene.

This time, because of those ugly rumors about him and Fanny, Gene must have been eaten alive by the green-eyed monster. This was why he was seizing upon this pretext to embarrass him.

“Master Gene, I’ve learned the knowledge that you’re going over when I read books, and have mostly grasped a proper understanding. Therefore, I think I can understand the class lessons, please don’t worry about me.” Han Shuo leaned back and said with a slight smile to Gene.

“Oh, if you could grasp magic through self study of books, then why would our Babylon Academy of Magic and Force still exist. Heh heh, since this is the case, I’ll ask you this: how many ways can magic be cast?”

“They can be divided into the four ways...incantations, magical items, hand seals, and magical matrixes. Incantations use words to communicate with the magical elements in order to reach the purpose of release magic. Magical items include scrolls...”

Han Shuo retained his lazy posture and smoothly reeled off a bunch of definitions, including some of his own reflections. Gene was noticeably surprised by his words. He started slightly at first and then nodded. “Very good, it looks like you already know all the basic knowledge within the books. Then I'll ask you some more questions."

Gene frowned and then asked Han Shuo a series of questions. He started with the most foundational magical knowledge, and then started asking points that only novice mages would be able to grasp. Han Shuo spoke fluidly, explaining the answers to all of these questions.

Gene and the other students within the classroom all looked at Han Shuo with faces full of surprise throughout this process. It seemed that they hadn't thought that Han Shuo could fully grasp so much knowledge this deeply in such a short amount of time. Traces of sweat shone on Gene's forehead as he appeared a bit agitated. He then snorted lightly and asked another question.

"I don't know how to answer this!" Han Shuo blanked and answered honestly. This question had surpassed the knowledge that a journeyman mage would know, and he truly didn't know understand it.

Gene finally smiled and was about to say a few words to regain face when Lisa said impatiently, "Master Gene, if he knew the answers to everything, then what would be the point of coming to your lectures?"

Lisa's words stopped him in his tracks when he heard them. Gene obviously felt a bit awkward and slapped the table with a dry laugh. "Alright then, I won't keep asking. Let's continue with class."

"How come you suddenly know so much?" Lisa retracted her head as she asked Han Shuo in a low voice.

"Didn't I tell you earlier? I asked Master Fanny about all this. Otherwise, how would that old witch Camilla have material to spread rumors with?" Han Shuo responded and started listening to class seriously. Some of the material that Gene was currently going over included some of the journeyman mage knowledge, which was something that Han Shuo still needed to grasp. This was why Han Shuo didn't harbor ill feelings towards Gene's jealousy.

Lisa seemed to still want to chat with Han Shuo after class, but Han Shuo didn't give her the chance to as he immediately headed over to Fanny's lab after class.

“Fitch, I’ve already explained this magic many times. I think with your powers of comprehension you should’ve understood this long ago. Why can you still not successfully cast it?” Han Shuo’s sensitive ears allowed him to clearly hear the conversation inside as he stood outside the laboratory doors.

“Master Fanny, I think you’re well aware of my feelings, but why don’t you give me any chances and would rather be with that lowly errand slave? Why?” Fitch’s strong complaints traveled out from inside. Han Shuo pulled the door open slightly and could clearly see Fitch’s furious face.

Master Fanny wore black rimmed glasses and a demure, regulation style magic robe. A look of resignation appeared on her face as she sighed, “Fitch, I’ve become more and more disappointed in you. First of all, Bryan is the same as you now, one of my students. You shouldn’t treat him as an errand slave anymore. In addition, I’ve noticed that you’ve never focused your concentration whenever you come to me with a question. You’re always distracted and I have no idea what you’re thinking of. Bryan is much better than you when it comes to stuff like this.”

“Bryan again, in what way is that damned errand slave better than me? Why are you willing to be with him, but unwilling to give me any chances? Is the witch Camilla really speaking the truth, and you really did sleep with him with no sense of shame?” The fury on Fitch’s face grew as he suppressed his voice, almost roaring as he spoke.

Pa.

Fanny flung a slap at Fitch, she was truly incensed, an uncommon occurrence. She looked at Fitch with cold eyes and said, “I think I have nothing further to say to you. I told you before that we could only talk about matters of the heart once you’d advanced to the level of adept mage in order to encourage you, but now I see that not everything is alright with you. I can tell you clearly that there is no possibility of anything developing between us. I hope you can let go of all illusions. If you still have questions regarding magic in the future, please come find me within the training fields or the classroom. You are no longer welcome in my laboratory. Please leave immediately!”

“So you’ve been lying to me all along. Haha. Good. Very good. You wanted me to reach the level of adept mage first before discussing matters of the heart, but that errand slave Bryan has already become an exception for you. Hypocritical shameless woman, I’ll never believe you again.” Fitch held his face as he laughed ghastly, walking outside of the laboratory.

Han Shuo backed up a few steps and hid himself in the corner until Fitch had left. He looked coldly at Fitch’s passing figure, paused for a moment, and then walked into Fanny’s laboratory with a natural expression.

Han Shuo saw that Fanny was a bit lost in thought as he walked towards her. She propped herself up listlessly on the round table with her two hands, sighing lightly with a lowered head. She murmured to herself with an exceedingly weak voice. “Perhaps Fitch is right, I really am a hypocritical, shameless woman. I seem to have truly violated some principles...”

Han Shuo clearly heard all of Fanny’s low murmurs, but he didn’t understand the meaning behind her words and didn’t know who her words were intended for. After thinking for a while, Han Shuo cocked a finger and rapped on the surface of the round table.

“Get out of here!” Fanny suddenly lifted her hand and glared at Han Shuo. When she saw that the person in front of her had turned into Han Shuo, her expression became very odd. She first blanked and then started in shock, her eyes seemed like they wanted to hide something. Her expression finally went back to normal and she rolled her eyes, obviously in a bad temper, at Han Shuo. “What are you doing here?”

“Nothing much, I just have a few questions to ask you.” Han Shuo looked oddly at Fanny and responded.

“What did you hear? Did you see everything just now?” Fanny’s charming features changed as she suddenly glared at Han Shuo. “Your ears are so perverse that you must’ve heard everything! Don’t you know that eavesdropping is very rude?”

“Eh... I didn’t want to listen in, but they all landed in my ears. I didn’t have any choice either?” Han Shuo spread out his hands like a rascal, indicating that he really hadn’t meant to. His expression then turned grave as he turned to Fanny and said seriously, “That Camilla really is very evil. I don’t mind, but she’s slandered you and negatively impacted your reputation. Do you intend to let her off the hook like this?”

“Forgot it, the old witch is just like that. There’s nothing between us anyways, what other people say have nothing to do with us. The more we explain, the more they’ll think we have a guilty conscience. Let’s just ignore them since people of moral integrity do not fear slanderous attacks.” Fanny sighed lowly as she too seemed a bit worried, but spoke peace making words.

“But I have a guilty conscience!” Han Shuo said with a wry expression.

“Damn it, what do you feel guilty about?” Fanny’s charming face blushed hotly all of a sudden, but her expression was infuriated as she lowered her head and cursed lowly at Han Shuo.

“It’s because of my mistake that’s caused other people to misunderstand you so. I feel that I have wronged you and so, of course I feel guilty.” Han Shuo explained with a poker face.

Fanny started slightly and then reacted afterwards, saying huffily, “So this is what you meant by guilty conscience. I thought you meant something else!”

“What other meaning is there?” Han Shuo asked.

“No, nothing.” Fanny hastily responded like she wanted to cover something up, and then immediately changed the topic and asked Han Shuo. “What questions do you have for me this time?”

Han Shuo had been about to open his mouth to answer when he suddenly felt someone approaching. He didn’t respond and looked to the door instead. After a while, Han Shuo saw the wind archmage Duke walk into Fanny’s room with a benevolent smile.

“Master Fanny, are you free today? I’d like to ask you a few more questions?” Duke smiled and greeted Fanny after entering the room.

His brow then furrowed as he turned to look at Han Shuo. Han Shuo was startled, but kept a very normal expression on his face, looking at Duke with an expression of surprise and confusion, like it was the first time he’d seen Duke and wanted to know about his origins and background.

Chapter 89: An odd phenomenon in the molded spirit realm

“Mister Duke, you’re too polite. Go ahead and ask whatever you’d like to know.” Fanny passed a chair to Duke and smiled faintly.

Duke glanced over Han Shuo’s body and then naturally looked back at Fanny, as if not minding Han Shuo at all. He didn’t take the chair that Fanny passed over and only said politely, “I won’t be sitting, I’m just here to ask you a small question. I’ll leave after I’ve asked it. Master Fanny, you’ve studied necromancy magic all this time. have you ever heard of the ‘Eye of Darkness’?”

On the side, Han Shuo silently observed Duke and noticed that after he said these words, his gaze was tightly fixed on Fanny, as if was trying to glean some clues from Fanny’s facial expression.

Shaking her head, Fanny’s expression was perplexed as she asked Duke instead, “What is this ‘Eye of Darkness’? Does it have something to do with the necromancy major?”

“Heh heh, it’s just a small tool. I’m not too certain of the specifics either, that’s why I wanted to ask you. Since you don’t know as well, forget about it. My apologies for disturbing you.” Duke wore a gentle smile having delivered this line after entering through the door. He nodded towards Fanny and walked towards the door again. When he reached the door, he seemed to suddenly thought of something again and asked carelessly, “Oh right... Master Fanny, I’ve heard that the library of your necromancy major is shared with the dark major’s? The necromancy major was once greater than the dark major many years ago. Do you not have your own standalone library?”

“Heh heh, Mister Duke you’ve said so yourself that it was many years ago when the necromancy major was at its peak. The magics that necromancers can now grasp are limited and there aren’t that many books on display.” Fanny laughed lightly and then paused. She said indifferently, “Oh, right, I’ve heard that there’s a secret library within our school. There are forbidden texts from all the various majors within that library, preserved secretly with authorization from the Empire. I've only heard about it from one of the other teachers and have never known where this secret library was hidden."

"I see, then I'll be taking my leave. I'll be taking up residence within your Academy for the immediate future. May I inconvenience you with any other questions I may have?"

"I'll be happy to be of service!"

It looked like Duke hadn't recognized Han Shuo. The former hadn't paid any attention to Han Shuo after his initial glance when he walked into room. Han Shuo rejoiced inwardly after Duke left.

"Alright, what questions do you have?" Fanny flicked a glance at Han Shuo after Duke left and asked with ill temper.

His space ring lit up faintly, Han Shuo brought out the questions that he'd previously organized. He sat down naturally in the chair that Duke hadn't occupied just now, and started with his first question.

As an adept necromancer, Fanny had a very complete grasp of theoretical knowledge. Questions that had troubled Han Shuo for quite some time were all easily resolved through Fanny's explanations.

"Summoning zombies is a bit more troublesome than skeletons because the volume and weight of zombies are greater. You'll need to expend more mental strength when summoning them. In addition to this, controlling zombies is also more complicated than skeletons. The bodies of zombies are much more durable than skeletons. If you wish to agilely control them, you must practice repeatedly..." Fanny's voice was gentle as she concentrated on pointing out a few things to take note of when summoning zombies.

When Fanny finished explaining, Han Shuo's brow knit fiercely together as he sank into a state of contemplation. Fanny didn't make a sound as to not disturb Han Shuo when she saw that he was deep in thought.

After a while, Han Shuo exhaled easily and smiled, "So it was an issue of insufficient coordination between the deployment and retrieval of mental strength. I've grown accustomed to summoning skeletons and am used to using the same amount of strength to communicate across the other dimension. It looks like this was the core of the problem. I think I understand now."

After those words, Han Shuo started reciting the incantation to summon zombies again within Fanny's vision. When the first incantation finished, the figure of a zombie flashed through the air and then immediately disappeared. Han Shuo wasn't in a hurry as he tried to control the amount of his mental strength, but still hadn't succeeded after four or five tries.

Fanny's face wore a gratified smile as she watched Han Shuo. She understood that Han Shuo had already understood the meaning of her words and was searching for the appropriate amount of mental strength through practice. Once he felt the proper amount of mental strength, he would be able to completely summon a zombie.

"Never mind it, you don't need to practice for now. Your direction is definitely correct, and you just lack a bit of repeated practice. I think you'll be able to fully grasp the magic of summoning zombies when you are able to fully control your mental strength. Bryan, it's only been two or three months, yet you've already reached the level of novice mage. I've never heard of such speed in all my years of teaching in the necromancy major."

"Then how do I compare to Fitch?" Han Shuo temporarily gave up further practice beneath Fanny's encouragement and chuckled honestly as he looked at her.

"It feels so unnatural to see your honestly smiling face. Don't act dumb in front of me anymore. Oh, I'd forgotten about Fitch until you mentioned him. He seems very off right now, I'm worried that he'll hold a grudge and purposely create trouble for you. Be careful." Fanny first rebuked Han Shuo, and then spoke to him with a tone of concern.

"Don't worry, if Fitch is really that gullible, I think the person who would end up worse off will surely be him." Han Shuo shrugged his shoulders and paid Fitch's grudge no mind. To be honest, he really didn't think much of the journeyman mage Fitch now.

“Bryan, I knew that you’d be here, come here. Master Fanny, I have a few matters to discuss with him, hehe.” Lisa’s voice traveled in from outside at this moment as she walked towards Han Shuo as soon as she came in. She grabbed Han Shuo’s wrist and dragged him outside.

As Fanny watched Han Shuo get pulled away by Lisa, a bit of anger seemed to grow out of nowhere in her heart. It was as if someone had seized something precious to her, and she didn’t feel quite happy about it.

“How do you know my cousin?” Lisa asked as she dragged Han Shuo to a little courtyard behind the school library.

Han Shuo liberated his shoulder from Lisa’s hand and looked at her in confusion. “Your cousin? Who is he?”

“Lawrence! He’s learning martial arts in our martial arts school. He came looking for you previously, but you weren’t here. Who would’ve thought that he’d immediately come looking for you as soon as you’d returned this time. How do you know him?”

So it was him. This Lawrence was a bit odd. He had the same master as Phoebe, but attended class at the Academy. Also, he currently possessed the strength of a journeyman swordsman. Han Shuo weighed all of this privately.

As he lowered his head, Han Shuo happened to see Lisa’s chest next to him. Her chest had originally been quite flat, but now blossomed into shapely curves. The well-rounded look noticeably illustrated that she had quite a figure.

“Eh... Lisa, are you wearing more clothes than usual today? Why do I get the feeling that you’ve filled out quite nicely?” Han Shuo snuck a glance at Lisa’s chest and unknowingly let these words slip.

“What, what do you mean by that?” Lisa had been walking when she heard Han Shuo’s words. She was so startled that she almost fell over. Her little face then reddened as she stared at Han Shuo with her question.

“Your chest was flat before, with nothing there, but now it looks bumpy.

Did you pad it with something?" Han Shuo thought internally, but his words were directly reflected in his speech. He opened his mouth and responded with this incredibly honest internal dialogue.

Extraordinary rage! Lisa glared vehemently at Han Shuo and reached out her small hand and gave Han Shuo a firm pinch. She gritted her teeth and said, "You said such a thing and now suspect that I've padded my chest. Do you want to die?"

Han Shuo was horrified as he suddenly realized what he said. He thought those words had only stayed in his heart just now, and according to his modus operandi, he would've only kept them in his heart. He would never have caused so much trouble for himself by voicing thoughts that would only anger the other person.

But who could have known that reality would be so strange. It was his inner thoughts, but Han Shuo hadn't given any thought to the consequences and just let it all out. This made Han Shuo feel exceedingly odd.

At the same time, a strand of cool sensation suddenly suffused with his mind. Han Shuo's body shuddered slightly, and he then understood why such words slipped out from him before. It must be because the magical yuan had started creating some strange phenomenon after entering the "molded spirit" stage.

He smiled wryly at Lisa with her teeth gritted as he calmed himself down inside. He privately admonished himself to be careful and to not say anything random again. He finally laughed dryly at Lisa, "I'm sorry Lisa, I was just joking with you. I hadn't thought that you really started developing. I'm truly happy for you."

"You're such a bad person to say such things to someone!" Lisa immediately blushed and explained in a low voice, "I should be the one thanking you instead. I followed the methods that you prescribed. Umm... this is so embarrassing. Anyways, that's what happened!"

Shaking his head in silent laughter, Han Shuo had completely forgotten the ways he'd imparted onto Lisa before for developing her breasts. Who would've thought that they would actually have an effect? This made Han Shuo feel rather awkward and put on the spot.

"Hi Bryan, how are you?" At this moment, Lawrence happened to see Han Shuo and Lisa from across the courtyard and greeted them from afar.

Lisa's hastily took in a few breaths to calm her reddened face and snuck a glance at Han Shuo, saying softly, "Lawrence's father is a great finance minister of the Empire. He is on very friendly terms with His Majesty. It will benefit you greatly if you have increased contact with him, I won't be disturbing you then."

Lisa seemed to be greatly afraid of Lawrence seeing her reddened face, and after saying these words she fled towards the training fields with small running steps.

The son of one of the Empire's finance ministers! Han Shuo gave a slight start as he thought privately that the Academy was indeed full of hidden dragons and crouching tigers. It would seem that many future nobles would be training in the various majors of the Academy.

"I'm quite good. I've heard that you came looking for me twice? Heh heh, were you planning on spending five gold coins for me to get beaten by you all day?" There wasn't only Han Shuo and Lawrence in the courtyard, there was also a few students from other majors in the distance, reading books in groups of two or three or leisurely tanning themselves in the sunlight.

"If you're willing to, I don't mind spending another five gold coins, heh heh, but I think you would definitely not be willing now!" Lawrence leaned against a stone railing and was quite at ease as he spoke to Han Shou.

"Who says I'm not willing? The only thing is I don't need five gold coins. As long as you're willing to let me fight back, I'll agree to practicing with you. I was beaten up quite severely by you last time and really want to save face!" Han Shuo smiled faintly and also leaned leisurely against the railing as he spoke to Lawrence with an interested expression.

"Oh, that's not a problem. I can practice with you after we've concluded our business here and see if you're really as strong as Phoebe says."

Lawrence also looked quite interested as he stood up straight and smiled.

“ Alright then, I’d like to hear what business you have with me? The two of us shouldn’t have any interaction at all, so what have you come to discuss with me?”

Looking around, Lawrence kept his voice down when he discovered that no one was paying them any attention. He looked at Han Shuo with bright eyes, “My little junior sister said that you seem to be able to get your hands on black iron ore. If this is truly the case, I’d like to purchase some from you. It doesn’t have to be much, just an amount at the size of a fist will do. I was going to ask little junior sister to buy some for me, but I felt that since we got to know each other last time and I’m truly curious about you, I’d like to be friends, so I’ve come to find you myself!”

Han Shuo looked at the very sincere Lawrence and thought that since he was the son of a great finance minister for the Empire, he must have a lot of money.

Chapter 90: Three pairs of eyes in the darkness

“I can get the black iron ore for you, yes, but you also know that it’s not that easy to obtain. How many gold coins do you intend on spending to buy it?” Han Shuo weighed things up internally as he spoke slowly with a calm expression.

His mental state sharpening, Lawrence drew himself upright and said with some excitement, “So you can get it. Heh heh, I only need the size of a fist to forge weapons. The black market currently has a shortage, so name your price!”

Rubbing his chin, Han Shuo remembered a conversation he had with Phoebe last time and hesitated, saying faintly, “How about this? Give me five thousand gold coins and I’ll try to get a piece for you.”

“No problem, although black gold ore is even more rare, a black iron ore the size of a fist is indeed worth five thousand gold coins. If you can get a piece of black iron ore, you can come find me at the knight school. We’ll do an exchange of goods and money.” Lawrence said joyfully.

Nodding, Han Shuo remembered how he’d been beaten up by Lawrence a few months ago at the knights school. His eyebrow flicked upwards as he chuckled. “I’ll get you a piece of black iron ore within ten days. Why don’t you practice with me again right now? I’ll be very happy to be a human target for you again.”

“Alright, then let’s begin. I can check out just how wonderful you are. Even someone as proud and aloof as Phoebe continuously complimented you in front of me. I’m quite curious about your strength.” Lawrence struck a pose excitedly and was prepared to immediately fight with Han Shuo.

It was noon, and most of the students in the courtyard had just put their things away and were getting ready to go to lunch. Only two or three students sunbathing in the far distance seemingly hadn’t left because they'd fallen asleep. Han Shuo swept a glance around the perimeter and smiled, "Let's go to the left. There aren't that many people there and we won't affect anyone."

Han Shuo lifted his head provocatively at Lawrence after he spoke and walked to an empty clearing behind the railing to the left. Lawrence tightened his fists and chuckled lightly, following behind Han Shuo and also making for the empty lot on the left.

When he arrived, Han Shuo circulated the magical yuan throughout his body and started adjusting his bodily condition. Lawrence was a few steps behind Han Shuo and had just walked down the stone steps when Han Shuo had already doubled back like lightning, bringing a fist crashing down on Lawrence without giving him time to react.

Lawrence hadn't anticipated that Han Shuo would make a move so quickly. The punch with frightening momentum had already arrived in front of Lawrence before he'd had time to react. His facial expression changing slightly, Lawrence suddenly backed up a step after putting his feet down, returning to the stone steps again and shunted his body to the side, avoiding the punch that Han Shuo had suddenly flung his way.

The punch whistled past Lawrence's face and frigid air emanated from Han Shuo's left fist, giving Lawrence a bit of a fright.

Han Shuo retracted his left arm before Lawrence had time to react, then suddenly curved it and slammed his elbow into Lawrence's chest.

Lawrence grunted lowly as his body was forced into the railing by Han Shuo's elbow, his face reddening slightly.

"Heh heh, Lawrence your sense of alertness isn't good enough!" Han Shuo didn't follow up his elbow blow to Lawrence's chest with another attack. He backed away with an odd smile instead, teasing Lawrence in a sing-song tone.

The two of them were only practicing and not fighting to the death, so Han Shuo hadn't used his full strength in that strike. He'd only released the barest hint of frigid air from the "Glacial Mystical Spellfire". As a sergeant knight, Lawrence had fighting aura protecting him internally and hadn't suffered any injuries.

"You were the one who suddenly ambushed me. This punch doesn't count, I'll make you pay later." Lawrence wasn't mad as he elaborated on the truth with a wry expression. He then walked down the stone steps again and suddenly faced Han Shuo with no hints of levity.

Pale-green fighting aura suddenly blossomed from Lawrence's hands as his footsteps sped up. He approached Han Shuo like lightning, the fighting aura from his left hand suddenly formed into the shape of a sword of light and hurtled down towards Han Shuo.

Lawrence had just experienced Han Shuo's speed and strength and understood that the current Han Shuo couldn't be compared with who he had been before. This was why he was using his fighting aura, but his movements were quite cautious as he obviously pulled his punches.

A trace of a slight smile curved at Han Shuo's lips as he watched Lawrence's movements. He measured up the strength of Lawrence's fighting aura and completely failed to dodge. He circulated the "Glacial Mystical Spellfire" in his right hand as a thin beam of faint, red light materialized in the path of Han Shuo's waving right fist. It crashed down into the sword of light coalesced from Lawrence's fighting aura along with Han Shuo's right fist.

Bam sounded out dully as Lawrence's sword of light, made from fighting aura, dispersed in a mass of light spots. Lawrence's strong forward momentum was halted in its tracks. Han Shuo also felt a wave of soreness and numbness overcome his right hand as his body backed up two steps involuntarily.

"Lawrence, how much of your fighting aura did you use in coalescing your sword of light just now?" Han Shuo looked at Lawrence with burning eyes as he asked

"Sixty percent!" Lawrence responded and then looked askance at Han Shuo. "Your speed and aura is noticeably different compared to a few months ago. It looks like you were definitely acting on purpose last time – except, why would you be willing to be beaten up for five gold coins?"

Han Shuo had been a rookie who hadn't been tried in combat a few months ago, and his magical yuan had only been at the first level of the "solid realm". He had done so to earn gold coins, but most importantly to train his body and thus hadn't held himself back. It looked like Lawrence was misunderstanding Han Shuo.

Sixty percent of his fighting aura. Han Shuo thought briefly and went over the amount of magical yuan he had infused just now. He finally concluded that his own strength should be slightly stronger than Lawrence's because he had only infused his punch with about forty percent of his magical yuan. This already had the effect of being at equal strengths with his opponent.

After testing his strength through the direct collision of one fist, Han Shuo didn't continue colliding head on with Lawrence. He used the agility and nimbleness of his body instead to battle Lawrence in much more efficient ways.

The two of them traded blows back and forth for a while on the empty lot and both of them suffered from a few attacks. Han Shuo's body was obvious much stronger than Lawrence's, and he emitted low grunts when punches of equal strength landed on his body.

Han Shuo's body was stronger than Lawrence's to begin with, not to mention that the initial stage of training magical yuan had been self inflicted torture, so he had endured all sorts of pain. He was already used to this kind of pain, so these blows didn't even register on his body when they landed.

Spots were dancing in Lawrence's eyes when he voluntarily stopped after a while. He smiled wryly, "No more, enough. You're quite a strange person. I can't feel any fighting aura from you at all, but why is it that your strength is much greater than mine. Is your body made out of steel? Why does it feel like I'm punching a stone wall when I hit you? Don't you feel pain at all?"

Chuckling evilly, Han Shuo said, "Don't you worry about this. My body is naturally odd. Can't my body be strong?"

“Eh, do you have the blood of barbarians running through you, or can you go berserk like the berserk warriors? Phoebe was right, you are a marvelous person!” Lawrence first asked in astonishment and then murmured to himself.

Han Shuo also understood his deficiencies after the two had sparred. His body and magical yuan was indeed wondrous, but Lawrence had obviously been trained in martial arts and there was quite a rhythm in his punches and evasive maneuvers.

Han Shuo had never learned martial arts, and his attacks were always the simplest methods. Compared to Lawrence, he lacked effective attacking methods. He made a mental note of this deficiency. Han Shuo planned on thoroughly pondering this when he had time and see if there were any other attacking styles left behind in Chu Cang Lan’s memories.

“I don’t know. Alright, let’s stop here for today. I’ve finally redeemed myself for last time. I’ll come to the knight school when I obtain the black iron ore.” Han Shuo mentally weighed a few things and made his careless farewells to Lawrence as he returned to the necromancy major with furrowed brows.

Lawrence didn’t get mad after coming off a bit worse for the wear this time. After he bid farewell to Han Shuo with a smile, he walked towards his knight school and muttered, “A strange person indeed. The durability of his body can probably be compared with orc warriors!”

Han Shuo mused privately as his footsteps continued to take him towards the necromancy major. Phoebe needed some time to prepare the rations and he didn’t intend on returning to the cemetery of death in the short terms. Duke was currently residing within the school and Han Shuo still didn’t know his exact plans. Therefore, he decided to remain within the necromancy major after some thought.

Han Shuo’s dorms had long since been arranged by Fanny, but he’d never lived in them. Now that he’d decided on temporarily staying within the academy, the dorms were finally proving to be of some use to him.

The Babylon Academy of Magic and Force was the largest institution of learning within the Empire. Its facilities were very comprehensive, and it was no wonder that a high tuition was enacted from every student.

Han Shuo's quarters were in the corner of the second floor and were roughly fifty to sixty meters squared. It included a bedroom and a bathroom, with tables, chairs, and mirrors. It was the difference between heaven and earth compared to the warehouse Han Shuo had stayed in before.

It was already past noon after he'd arrived at his dorms. Han Shuo had missed meal time and could only take out a few chunks of meat jerky from his space ring to pad his stomach.

Han Shuo didn't leave the dorms after he finished eating. He closed the room door tightly and sat on the bed, taking advantage of a quiet lull to practice his magical yuan. The magical yuan started circulating and slowly began to coalesce in his mind from all parts of his body. A sort of clear, slightly-cool feeling permeated through his brain, making Han Shuo feel that his brain was immersed in a refreshing pool of water.

However, this feeling only lasted for a short while. The comfort of his mind was replaced by a soul wrenching pain. The training of the "molded spirit" level caused Han Shuo's brain to continuously switch between comfort and pain. He would feel lazily at ease one second, and so much pain that it felt like someone was digging through his brain with a sharp knife the next.

What was most agonizing about this for Han Shuo was that every time the pain surged, his mind would become immensely clear headed. This would cause the pain to be suddenly magnified ten times. The clarity of his mind was specifically for him to suffer through even greater pain. This made Han Shuo wish to curse whoever created this magical yuan technique was seriously a perverse masochist.

After a long, long time, Han Shuo breathed out lightly and halted his magical yuan training. Hot air rose from his body like he'd just taken a hot shower and a strong sense of manliness rolled off his body.

Training his magical yuan had taken Han Shuo from afternoon directly to night. The night scenery outside his window was captivating as the cool night breeze blew in. It was desolate and silent all around.

Sitting up from his cross legged position, Han Shuo turned on the hot water in the bathroom and laid back leisurely in the tub, enjoying this rare moment of carefree ease. He even hummed a small tune.

The dead of the night was the perfect timing for those with ulterior motives to come skulk around. Two small sounds suddenly sounded in Han Shuo's ears, just as he was lazily showering. One of them came from within the dormitory building, the other outside the window.

Three original demons flew out, without a sound, from the back of Han Shuo's neck. Two of them went out the window to check what was going on outside. One of them floated towards the origin of the sound, while the other stayed near the window, silently observing any abnormalities. The last original demon floated out the crack in the door and arrived in the hallway of the dormitory building, moving forward along the hallway and floating to where the sound had come from.

The one that had gone outside finally discovered Duke surreptitiously floating around the sides of the buildings after traveling for a while. Duke hadn't used nightwalker clothes this time. He appeared like a ghost in the darkness, floating to the dark major's classroom buildings without any weight at all.

The original demon within the hallway had discovered one of the dormitory room doors had been lightly opened, with Fitch tiptoeing out quietly with a sinister face. He was walking towards Han Shuo and judging from his facial expressions, seemed to bear ill will.

Han Shuo immediately jumped out from the bath tub and quickly towelled himself off. He put his pants back on and lay down on the bed with his back facing the door, even breathing sounds emitting from his mouth.

Chapter 91: A game of hot potato with lingerie

Fitch fancied himself clever as he tiptoed like a thief up to Han Shuo's door. He looked around shiftily and then used an exceedingly low voice to summon a wraith, bidding it to enter Han Shuo's room through the crack beneath the door.

Han Shuo's original demons had been refined from wraiths to begin with, so wraiths could also be another set of eyes for the summoners. However, as summoned creatures from necromancers, they carried a faint hint of death about them and had a greyish-white outline. Anyone with a slightly higher level of alertness would easily discover traces of them.

Han Shuo's original demons had undergone specialized magical yuan refinement and thus didn't have any magical ripples emanating from them. Their form was also indistinct. As long as they didn't come into contact with a magical boundary, it would be very difficult to discover them. Add to that the fact that original demons were one of the demon generals and had a mental connection to the mage, they could be deployed to far distances and had uncommon attacking capabilities. Therefore, no matter how one viewed it, an original demon was much more practical than a wraith.

After Fitch's wraith entered Han Shuo's room, it circled around inside and then stopped in front of Han Shuo's window. It seemed to be silently observing Han Shuo's movements.

Breathing evenly, Han Shuo was on his side and appeared to be in a deep sleep. He seemed to be completely oblivious to everything happening around him. Fitch used the wraith to probe around from the outside before placing his hand on the door handle, exerting a small amount of force. Han Shuo's room door creaked open with a small squeak.

A bag of powder suddenly appearing in his hand, Fitch opened the paper wrappings and blew on it in front of the door. The powder dispersed into the air and emitted a light fragrance.

Soul Temptation Powder!

Han Shuo had some understanding of poison powder now and had already recognized the fragrance when it dispersed just now. He laughed coldly inside and didn't hold his breath. He continued to naturally inhale and exhale. With the strength his body acquired after entering the third demonic realm, low level powders that would cause him to sink into a drugged state had absolutely no effect on him at all.

A sinister and venomous smile on his face, Fitch had a bit of a gleeful expression on his face right now as he walked lightly towards Han Shuo, glaring at him fiercely. What he was thinking, no one knew.

Leveraging the line of vision from the original demons, Han Shuo still fully viewed Fitch's expression even with his eyes closed. Although he maintained a sleeping posture with his body, Han Shuo had long since readied himself. He was prepared to make a move as soon as things went south. Han Shuo was prepared to kill as soon as Fitch laid a hand on him.

However, Fitch didn't seem as bold as Han Shuo thought. He stared at Han Shuo and then murmured to himself, "You lowly slave, you're completely unworthy of Master Fanny. I should've run you out of the necromancy major a long time ago, but you weren't around for a long time. However, let's see where you'll run this time. After tomorrow, everyone will be sure that you're a pervert. Even if Master Fanny helps you, the school authorities will expel you from the necromancy major. I've spent quite a lot of effort and time in wanting to make a move against you, heh heh!"

Fitch murmured as he fished out a large package from his being. He bent down and shoved the package under Han Shuo's bed, then slowly backed out of Han Shuo's room with a proud air, cackling in a low tone as he did so. He then carefully closed the door to Han Shuo's room and walked easily to his own room with a face full of satisfaction.

Han Shuo immediately sat up in his bed after Fitch had left and bent down to look around. He discovered that Fitch had hung this package from the wooden slats beneath the bed. He would've been hard pressed to discover it if he hadn't looked carefully.

When Han Shuo took down the bundle and opened it, he was flabbergasted by what he saw.

A collection of flimsy, thin female lingerie greeted his eyes. These colorful articles of clothing were lace trimmed and all had very small amounts of cloth on them. They were either cute or sexy. Some had just been washed, with two looking like they'd just been taken off and hadn't had time to be washed. There were still a few traces of the female body on them.

Han Shuo stared at the female lingerie items within the bundle and looked them all over twice, sighing that Fitch really did possess amazing methods of revenge. He started to grow a healthy appreciation for Fitch. However, what he admired wasn't Fitch's schemes, but his methods. Who would've thought that he would be able to silently and unwittingly obtain so many articles of female lingerie? He wondered if there were any in this pile that belonged to Master Fanny!

Shaking his head with involuntary laughter, Han Shuo knew that once the girls of the school realized that their lingerie had gone missing, they were bound to raise a huge furor tomorrow. Fitch was certain to have other tricks up his sleeve. Perhaps there would be a room by room search of all male students tomorrow. If this bundle were to be discovered beneath his bed, Han Shuo was sure to gain the title of "Great Perverted Demon". He wouldn't have to wait for the school to expel him then, since he himself wouldn't have the face to face anyone and would never appear within the Academy again.

"I won't do anything to you if you don't do anything to me. Fitch, ah Fitch. You can't blame me for being vicious this time." Han Shuo picked up the package and snickered softly as he got out of the bed and walked towards Fitch's room with the original demon leading the way.

He used almost the same exact methods of leveraging the original demon's vision to copy Fitch's methods. He travelled soundlessly to Fitch's room, shoved the bundle beneath Fitch's bed and then left, with none the wiser.

Once this matter had been completed satisfactorily, Han Shuo returned to his room and didn't go back to sleep, but rather used the other original demon to observe Duke's movements.

Duke had flown directly to a classroom on the fourth floor of the building after arriving at the dark major building. There was not a soul within the classroom building at night. Duke didn't move after setting foot in this room, becoming one with the night.

Han Shuo gazed upon Duke in the darkness, through the eyes of the original demon parked in the shadows of a great tree. Except, he didn't make another move after arriving and had no further movement. This made Han Shuo feel quite confused. He wasn't sure what Duke was doing in the classroom building in the middle of the night.

After a while, just when Han Shuo started to feel a bit impatient, a fat cloud of black light suddenly appeared in the distance and slowly moved towards the classroom building.

It would've been difficult to discover the cloud's existence if he hadn't been paying attention in the darkness. Han Shuo gave himself a mental shake and immediately increased his attention. He carefully observed the movements within this ball of light. The dark light was thickly concentrated like a dense patch of clouds, making it difficult for Han Shuo to see what was going on inside.

The motionless Duke only detected this cloud of light after it entered the dark major classroom building, and he suddenly coughed lightly.

The cloud of black light halted briefly upon hearing Duke's light cough, then quickly traveled up the steps and made for the room that Duke was in.

Duke and the cloud of dark light finally met with the room between them. Duke flicked a glance at the cloud of dark light that had halted in front of the door and displayed a trace of a smile, saying softly, "The Empire's 'Black Underworld' organization is everywhere alright. There are even people from 'Black Underworld' within this organization. It's very nice to make your acquaintance. I think you can reveal your true appearance now?"

"I've been in this Academy for many years, and expended a lot of the organization's resources just to gain entrance to this place from the beginning. My identity must not be revealed at any costs. There are many archmages like you within the Babylon Academy, and the head of the school is even a grand magus. It would be no trifling matter if we alarmed her."

A familiar voice traveled out from the the cloud of black light. It was then peeled back like layers of clothing being cast off, revealing the figure of the dark major's old witch Camilla.

It was her! Han Shuo was startled as he observed everything inside with greater caution, deathly afraid that he would miss any bit of their conversation.

There was a "Dark Mantle" organization within the Lancelot Empire, and hence there would certainly be a similar organization within the Kasi Empire. It seemed that Camilla was from the Kasi Empire and was a member of the Kasi Empire's "Black Underworld". This was quite interesting.

"So it's you. Heh heh. I even saw you today... who would've thought that you're one of us. The 'Black Underworld' of the Empire is indeed infinitely resourceful. It looks like my mission this time will be a lot easier than expected." Duke was also quite surprised when Camilla revealed herself.

"It's very dangerous for the two of us to meet here. The 'Dark Mantle' organization of the Lancelot Empire isn't that easy to handle either. I've had a few run ins with them here. They're like flies that buzz around you. If my identity is revealed, not only will I immediately die a gruesome death, but I'll also fail to live up to the Empire's cultivation of me. Cut the blather. What business did you have in contacting me?" Camilla rushed Duke impatiently to get down to business.

Nodding, Duke said gravely, "I have many responsibilities about me on this trip to the Lancelot Empire. If it wasn't for the inability to resolve them myself, I wouldn't dare to call upon your 'Black Underworld's' agents. I've asked Master Fanny of the necromancy major today and heard that apart from each major's library, there's also a secret library? We need to look up a few materials and would like to ask you where the library is located, and how we get in?"

"There is indeed a secret library with many rare books stored inside. I've not only heard of this library, but I've been so privileged as to make it inside before. However, there's a magical boundary personally cast by the headmaster. No one can go inside without the headmaster's approval."

"I was going to research curses of the dark major last time, that was how I made it in, accompanied by the headmaster. If you want to break into the secret library, I'm sure you'll be discovered by the headmaster. You'd best think of another plan!" Camilla gravely warned Duke with a face full of resignation.

Duke thought with a darkened face for a while after hearing Camilla's words and said to her, "If this is the case, then I'll have to impose upon you and think of a way inside. The Empire would like to know everything regarding the 'Eye of Darkness'. Go inside and see if there's anything with regards to this. Before I made this trip, those on top in the 'Black Underworld' said that I could make use of you in critical moments. I hope you understand."

"If the Empire wanted to investigate this matter, they could have directly given me orders through the 'Black Underworld'. Why would they trouble you with a personal trip?" Camilla looked at Duke in confusion and didn't immediately agree, opening her mouth and asking Duke.

"You don't need to know that much about this matter. The Empire has its own arrangements in sending us. You just need to go to the secret library and help me understand everything there is to know about the 'Eye of Darkness'." Duke's forehead creased as he said a bit unhappily.

"What item is that? It sounds like something from our dark major. Tell me what it looks like and its basic information."

“It’s not something from your dark major. It was created by the necromancers in an era when necromancers were strong. The secrets of opening the cemetery of death are hidden inside. It’s said that the cemetery of death is sacred ground for necromancers. Many years ago, when necromancers rampaged over the lands, the cemetery of death was a place of evil that no one dared to mention on the Continent. The tomes of frightening necromancy secrets may be kept inside. The Empire needs the secrets inside, so you need to comprehend the secrets of the ‘Eye of Darkness’ to the best of your abilities!”

Camilla’s face changed slightly as she thought briefly and then said, “Since this is the case, then I’ll think of a way to get inside. However, the headmaster is always present whenever we go inside, so I can only do my best.”

“Alright then, let me know as soon as you go inside, whether or not you make any discoveries. I’ll be staying at the wind major for the foreseeable future, exchanging some knowledge of wind magic. You can make use of other excuses to openly come find me.” Duke nodded and said to Camilla.

The two had reached an agreement by this point and didn’t continue further discussions afterwards. The two of them left the classroom building one by one after dispersing.

After Han Shuo retrieved his original demons, he went through their conversation in his mind and contemplated a bit with a furrowed brow, finally slowly drifting off to sleep.

Chapter 92: Are you really a mage?

Early the next day, Han Shuo could already hear the topic of the stolen lingerie outside the window before he'd even gotten out of bed. Under the efforts of a conscientious person, this person was quickly found out and the topic immediately spread to every corner of the necromancy major.

Gene and Fanny were utterly exhausted from overworking early in the morning and were worrying over this matter. The students had quickly gathered within the training fields. Expressions of anger and fright were apparent on the female students' faces, whereas the male students were also full of astonishment. Some were also delighting in the misfortunes of others.

Han Shuo had also been gathered in the training fields. He listening to the noisy chatter of the crowd as his eyes constantly flitted towards Fitch. Fitch looked normal, but his eyes kept dancing and also swept towards Han Shuo every now and then.

"The fallout from this matter is exceedingly devious. Nothing like this has ever happened in our necromancy major before, but now that this matter has cropped up, it must be thoroughly investigated." Gene also had a face full of fury as he expressed his opinion.

"Lisa, you girls truly lack alertness. How could you have let the thief so easily succeed, and not pick up any disturbances whatsoever?" Fanny lectured Lisa with a furrowed brow.

"This is the Babylon Academy of Magic and Force, we didn't think that the thieves would be so bold either. Nothing happened in the necromancy major for such a long period of time, add to that the fact that dirty clothes are nothing valuable. Who would've thought that such a perverted lecher would appear?!" Lisa said with a pained expression.

Amy, Athena, Bella, and the other girls all wore expressions of rage as they chattered and complained ceaselessly. They called out loudly that when they found the thief, they would surely exact a harsh punishment upon him.

“Such a thing happening in our necromancy major has already caused an extremely negative impact. The school authorities have already taken over the investigation. I wonder who has been so shameless and bold as to commit such an infuriating act.” Fanny was a bit irritated, but much more enraged as she said angrily.

Many animated discussions took place within the training fields, and those who'd had their lingerie stolen were incredibly angry and couldn't be calmed. Han Shuo calmly observed everything and waited for further developments.

“Who do you think did it?” Lisa had drifted next to Han Shuo after some time and opened her mouth to ask him.

Shrugging, Han Shuo smiled. “How would I know? But the person who's done this should be quite familiar with our territory. Otherwise, how could he have succeeded so easily? Although you're a bit weak, but I think you girls would've noticed something if someone ordinary and unfamiliar with the surroundings tried to do something like this. None of you girls noticed a thing, so I quite admire this person's methods.”

“How can you still be cracking such jokes at a time like this? My, my bra was stolen too! This person is a shameless lecher. If I know who did it, I'm not going to let him off the hook!” Lisa clenched her fists and bit off her words.

“You'll have to catch him first.” Han Shuo conversed carelessly with Lisa, but his eyes roved continuously over Fitch's face.

Just as there was a hubbub on the training fields, a middle-aged swordsman walked in. His name was Vida, and he was in charge of all trivial matters within the Academy. Han Shuo had seen him once before. This person was famous for having great strength. If there were any fights that broke out between the students, or any strange circumstances that appeared, it was always him who appeared to handle things.

“I have already grasped the general gist of the situation. I looked around the girls' dormitory building just now. Huh. I can already hazard a guess as to who committed this act.” Vida's eyes immediately swept towards where Han Shuo and the others had gathered when he arrived and spoke coolly.

“Uncle Vida, who did it!? Hurry and tell us!” Amy stood next to Vida and asked anxiously.

Vida’s expression was stiff as he looked towards Han Shuo, “The person who did this would be most aware of this in his heart. I hope that he will voluntarily admit his mistakes. As long as he steps forward voluntarily, I can at least promise that I won’t send him to the Empire’s Judiciary, but if he stubbornly refuses to plead guilty, then I won’t be kind to him.”

“Mister Vida, what do you mean by that? You’ve been yelling at our students all along, do you think that one of them has committed this act? That’s too ridiculous!” Fanny said unhappily when she saw Vida’s glance patrol continuously over a few male students’ faces with a cold and stern look on his face.

“Master Fanny, this isn’t ridiculous at all. It has to be one of your dear students. I looked around the girls’ dormitory and found a pair of exceedingly faint footprints that went from the female student’s dorm windows, avoiding the trees and shrubbery, and making for the boys’ dormitory. Heh heh, I’ve handled many cases like this before and don’t even think of concealing the truth from me. I think Master Fanny should well understand what problem this lays out?” Vida thought himself clever as he chuckled and made a judgment on this matter.

It looked like Fitch had paid quite a bit of attention to detail. He’d even purposefully left footprints behind for Vida to point the way. However, this Vida didn’t seem too intelligent. This caused Han Shuo to somewhat dismiss him and lowered his view of this person in his heart.

When these words were spoken, they immediately caused an uproar. All the boys immediately called out and denied that they’d been the ones to commit such a dastardly act. The group of girls with Bella at their head looked angrily in their direction. Their gaze at all the boys was quite unfriendly, as if every was under suspicion for doing the deed.

“Lisa, you don’t need to look at me that way. I feel quite uncomfortable.”

Lisa also swept an odd gaze over Han Shuo's face. Although Han Shuo hadn't done anything, he still felt all the hair on his body stand on end when she stared at him with that look, as if he'd really become that shameless perverted demon.

"Hehe, I'm just having fun with you. I believe that you would never do something like this." Lisa smiled sweetly at Han Shuo when she saw that his scalp was a bit numb.

Vida was already a bit impatient at this point and spoke with a cold expression on his face, "I think one amongst you can admit your guilt at this time. We can resolve this matter privately within the Academy if you're willing to voluntarily admit your wrongdoings. However, if you hold the mentality of getting by on a fluke and have no intention of repenting and mending your ways, then don't blame me for being harsh."

As the thief, Fitch had already safely stowed the items in Han Shuo's room. He was quite proud right now and naturally wished ardently for Vida to investigate. All the other students had done nothing and naturally weren't afraid of anything. Each of their expressions were more serious and with a clear conscience than each other. Fitch even spoke with a noble spirit, "This should be thoroughly investigated. Such a matter should definitely not be treated with leniency."

Bach and the others murmured noises of assent, expressing the attitude that this thief should be harshly punished. It was as if the firmness of their attitude would be enough to prove their innocence.

"Bryan, why don't you say anything?" Amy couldn't help but ask curiously when she saw Han Shuo standing there with a faint smile on his face, saying nothing and presenting a sharp contrast to the other students full of noble wrath.

"Is he feeling guilty? Heh heh, but it's rather odd. Nothing happened in the days when he wasn't in the necromancy major. Something immediately took place when he happened to be in the dorms last night. This seems like quite a coincidence!" Bella had some old grudges with Han Shuo. It was as if she'd discovered a new frontier when she suddenly exclaimed softly.

Her exclamation and her words seemed to make a bit of sense. The gazes of all assembled fell onto Han Shuo. All of them were filled with suspicion, and disdain could be even found on a few people's faces, as if Han Shuo was that pervert.

"There's no point in proclaiming my stance. I think Mister Vida will be able to successfully investigate who did it. I await his discovery with great anticipation." Han Shuo shrugged his shoulders and said faintly.

Seeing that no one was stepping forward, Vida snorted coldly, "Alright, since this is the case, don't blame me for taking drastic measures. Not too much time has passed since the matter occurred till now. I think the thief would've only hid the items on him or in his room. Master Fanny and Gene, we'll search their bodies first. Once we've concluded the body search, we'll move onto searching their dorms. I think he wouldn't have buried the items."

Under Vida's requests, the male students all stripped off their clothes until they were standing in their shorts. It was up to Vida and Gene to search through the clothes on their bodies.

When Han Shuo also took off his clothes, Vida displayed a surprised expression as he looked hotly at Han Shuo's naked body. He suddenly asked, "Are you really a mage?"

Everyone present couldn't help but pay attention to Han Shuo when Vida spoke these words. They were greeted with the sight of even and perfect muscles on Han Shuo's naked body, a body full of masculine energy and strength. His figure looked even stronger and more perfect than ordinary warriors. This was a stark comparison to the short, skinny, or fat students. No wonder Vida was so surprised.

"When did you become so fit? I remember you were skinny and small before?" Lisa's eyes gleamed as she stared intently at Han Shuo's revealed naked body and sighed in the best of spirits.

All the other female students were incredibly surprised when they saw Han Shuo's greatly alluring masculine body. When they compared it to the room full of fat and bones, they immediately felt that Han Shuo's extraordinary body was absolutely perfect. The shy Amy blushed faintly and lowered her head to whisper something to Athena. This also made Athena's face redden as her gaze towards Han Shuo became a bit odd.

Fanny's face was also flushed and she didn't seem to dare to look at Han Shuo's body directly. She first looked away and then snuck intense glances at Han Shuo's body when no one else was paying attention.

"I was malnourished before and wasn't well developed. Of course I develop well now that I'm eating well." Han Shuo looked ambiguously at Lisa's chest and said meaningfully.

"You suck!" Lisa became panicked upon seeing Han Shuo stare at her chest and admonished Han Shuo embarrassingly.

When this interlude had passed and everyone's clothes had been turned over by Vida, he opened his mouth after failing to discover anything, "It looks like it's been hidden within the dorms. Let's begin our investigation of the dorms."

"Bryan seems to also have a space ring." Bella suddenly spoke up just as everyone was about to leave.

Vida's departing form halted upon hearing Bella's words. He then looked with astonishment at the space ring on Han Shuo's hand and exclaimed, "So that's a space ring, I almost missed it, but space rings aren't easily searched. This will be a bit difficult. How about this, give me the space ring first and I'll go find the headmaster. As a space archmage, she'll have the ways to open your space ring. I hope you cooperate with the course of my duties."

Han Shuo first looked coldly at Bella in the distance, saying directly to her, "Ugly woman, you are seriously unlikeable."

Bella first displayed an expression of extreme fury, but then remembered Han Shuo's berserk rage in the Dark Forest when she saw the ruthless chill in his eyes. She involuntarily took one step back in fright and opened her mouth, but couldn't bring herself to say another word.

Han Shuo's heart had sank at this moment as he suddenly felt put on the spot. There were some sensitive items within his space ring. It would create a lot of trouble for him if the headmaster discovered them.

"What's wrong, is there something that shouldn't see the light of day in your space ring?" Vida asked as he saw Han Shuo hesitate to cooperate.

"I trust that he wouldn't do anything like this. I think we should investigate the dorms first and then discuss his space ring if nothing is found." Fanny thought for a moment and spoke up when she saw Han Shuo display a conflicted expression.

Vida looked in surprise at Fanny and then woodenly nodded his head. "Then you look after him during this time. Don't let him out of your sight and get up to any tricks. You're responsible if anything goes wrong."

"Let's go, let's go search the dorms." Gene smoothed over the situation with his suggestion and took the crowd of people towards the male student dorms.

All the students stayed below Fanny's watchful eye. Gene and Vida entered the dorm and sounds of things being rifled through and upended rang out. Fitch watched Han Shuo and Fanny stand together with a look of cruel joy. He gleefully went over the punishment that Han Shuo was about to face and he felt a contentment that he'd never felt before.

"Thank you Master Fanny." Han Shuo thanked her sincerely as he looked at Fanny by his side.

Rolling her eyes at him, Fanny whispered with her sweet voice, "What awkward items are within your space ring? Even if the headmaster saw them, she wouldn't have you detained for having them. What are you afraid of?"

"I kept a bit of the weapons and medicines from the town of Drol last time. If the headmaster searched my space ring, she'll surely discover this bundle of stolen goods. Our major has divvied up the items and the gold coins. If the headmaster saw it, our entire major will be strung up for it. Don't you think something's wrong with Bella's brain?" Han Shuo said.

Fanny suddenly felt like a fool after hearing these words. Her brow then knit together as she contemplated this matter with a face full of anxiety.

Suddenly, Gene and Vida walked out from the building towards the arrogantly smirking Fitch. Vida asked coldly, "Did you think I wouldn't discover them simply because you hung them on a hook beneath the bed?"

All the looks full of disdain and disgust suddenly landed on Fitch's proud face. Just as Fitch was dumbfounded, he was utterly drowned by a shrill, angry tide of curses from the female students.

Chapter 93: Great Formation of the Divine Zombies and Five Elements

Fitch was utterly destroyed this time. He was mercilessly hauled away under everyone's curses and contemptuous gazes as he continuously called out, "This is an evil plot! I was framed!" Vida said to Fanny before he left, "This filthy piece of scum will never appear in the Academy ever again!"

Everyone kept discussing Fitch's despicable acts for a long time after he'd been dragged away. Several of the female students' fury still hadn't abated as they chattered busily, cursing Fitch. No one sympathized for him.

Fanny was a bit flabbergasted. She hadn't expected that Fitch would be that kind of person. She even suspected the truth of the matter a bit, but the truth was right in front of her and she had nothing to say. She could only continuously shake her head and sigh.

Having caught the thief, Han Shuo naturally didn't have to worry about the issue of his space ring being searched. He laughed coldly inside as he watched Fitch caught in his own trap. He'd been asking for it and couldn't fault Han Shuo for being ruthless. If Han Shuo hadn't discovered this beforehand, he would most likely be the one facing the crowd's jeers and taunts now.

This matter made the students buzz with excitement and discussion all day, but Han Shuo didn't get involved. He didn't attend class in the morning, but rather headed to the training grounds alone, practicing how to summon zombie warriors over and over again.

Since his direction was correct, he only needed time. After a morning of repeated practice, he finally successfully summoned a zombie warrior. This meant that Han Shuo had added another powerful spell to his arsenal. The manipulation of zombies was much more difficult than skeletal warriors. In order to fully deploy the exceptional offensive capabilities of the buff and clumsy zombies, the technique and familiarity of the manipulator was even more critical.

Han Shuo stayed within the training grounds for the next three days and practiced controlling the zombies with more familiarity. As he stood in the midst of the various obstacles within the training field, Han Shuo summoned a zombie that wielded a heavy iron club. Under the control of Han Shuo's mental strength, the zombie twisted its body and evaded a few of the obstacles. The iron club in its hand crashed solidly down on a target under Han Shuo's guidance.

Han Shuo kept careful surveillance on the dark major's old witch, Camilla. During these two days, the old witch visited the headmaster's office once, but strong magical pulses were present in the headmaster's office. Han Shuo was certain that a magical boundary existed within the headmaster's office.

As a grand magus of space magic, the headmaster possessed extraordinary magic. Han Shuo didn't dare brashly insert his original demons into her office to eavesdrop. Therefore, he had no way of knowing what Camilla discussed with the Headmaster, and he didn't know whether or not Camilla had already visited the secret library.

However, judging from the amount of time that Camilla had spent in the Headmaster's office, Han Shuo felt that Camilla hadn't paid a visit yet because she walked out a few minutes after entering the office.

"You're in the training grounds alright, I knew I'd find you here." Han Shuo had remained within the training grounds this morning while the others were listening to the lecture within the classroom. Fanny suddenly walked in and spoke to him.

"What are you doing here? Don't you only have classes in the afternoon?" Han Shuo didn't stop practicing after Fanny had walked in and only responded carelessly, continuing to manipulate the zombie to agilely circle past another obstacle.

"I came looking for you. Eh, you've grasped it quite quickly. Heh heh, according to the speed of your improvement, I think you'll be able to make it into the next stage before too long." Fanny smiled faintly and complimented him when she saw that Han Shuo could already adeptly control zombies.

She halted, crinkled her slender brows, and then asked in confusion, “Bryan, although your potential is quite good, the speed in which you’re concentrating mental strength shouldn’t be this quick. The meditation of mental strength doesn’t have much to do with the quality of potential, particularly when one is just starting out. Mental strength is slowly increased through accumulation over many months and years. Why are you able to possess the mental strength of a novice mage after just a few months? This is quite queer, just how are you doing it?”

It was natural for Fanny to be perplexed. Han Shuo’s mental strength had increased quickly largely due to the effects of the “Eye of Darkness”. Han Shuo improved with rapid speed without rhyme or reason whenever his mind was about ready to split open from pain. Now that his magical yuan had entered the “molded spirit” stage, the potential of his brain had been unlocked and the speed in which he gathered mental strength increased yet again when he meditated. With the overlapping effects of his training, it would’ve been difficult for his mental strength to not increase in speed of concentration.

Shrugging, Han Shuo said, “How would I know? My body’s quite strange to begin with. Not only am I much stronger than ordinary mages, but the speed at which I gather mental strength when meditating is also quite fast.”

“Can it be that you possess the legendary body of divine favor?” Fanny first blanked, with a look of extreme joy appearing on her face as she spoke with excitement.

Han Shuo was also dumbfounded by her words. He asked blankly, “What’s a body of divine favor?”

“There are an exceedingly few amount of people in this world who are born with bodies different from others. It’s rare for even one of these people to appear out of ten thousand people. Their bodies are different from ordinary people. Some of them have natural aptitudes for training fighting aura, and some are naturally born to become mages.”

“If these people can find the correct realm for them, their accomplishments are often incredibly brilliant. Because these people’s bodies are different from ordinary peoples’, the legends say that they’ve attracted the favor of the gods. Some of the preeminent characters on the Continent now possess these bodies of divine favor. Can it be that you’re one of them too?” An inexplicable light of excitement danced in Fanny’s eyes as she stared at Han Shuo and exclaimed in surprise.

“Perhaps!” Han Shuo knew that the peculiarities of his body were completely attributed to the training of magical yuan. That likely had nothing to do with a body of divine favor. However, Han Shuo naturally couldn’t find any reasonable explanation. If he was tagged with such a label as a body of divine favor, it would be a reasonable excuse.

After Fanny had finished being excited, her face suddenly became solemn and she said, “If this matter is true, then you can’t tell anyone before you become strong enough. This body of divine favor may bring to you untold riches and glory, but it can also lead to your murder by those who harbor evil designs before you’ve fully matured.”

Han Shuo fully understood Fanny’s words. If it was as she’d said, these kinds of people were a priceless treasure to every country, and would be the targets of seizure between countries. Some would also seek to destroy this kind of potential at all costs. Therefore, people with these kinds of bodies were actually quite dangerous.

Nodding to indicate his understanding, Han Shuo evaded the subject and asked Fanny, “You said you were looking for me earlier, is something the matter?”

“I mentioned a test to you last time. It’s conducted to understand the true strength of all the students and to record the students’ current level from magic apprentice to adept mage. Our Academy has the authority to confirm the levels and these levels will be recorded within the files of Magic Association and will follow you for the rest of your life. It’s also the symbol of your strength and identity.”

“You’ll be viewed as having graduated from the Academy after surpassing the level of adept mage. When you wish your strength to be confirmed after raising it in the future, you must pass the specialized exams of the Magic Association. To a mage, a verified and defined level is the certificate for your future development, and thus it’s quite useful.” Fanny explained with a smile when she saw Han Shuo inquire about it.

“So this is the case, when will the test start?”

“Tomorrow morning. If students feel that their strength has increased, they will voluntarily participate in this test. You’ve never participated in the test, so I think it won’t be too hard for you to pass the test for novice mage. I’ve already signed you up. The test will be conducted on the dark major training grounds early tomorrow morning. I’ll be there as well, so don’t forget.” Fanny reminded Han Shuo.

“No problem.”

“Oh right Bryan, the magics of ‘Corpse Reanimation’ and ‘Canopy of Necromancy’ that you mentioned to me last time, never, ever tell anyone about them no matter how you obtained them, and don’t use them in front of anyone. These magics may bring a large amount of trouble to you before your strength is strong enough, do you understand?” Fanny suddenly gravely reminded Han Shuo before she was about to leave.

Han Shuo understood this even without Fanny’s reminder. He nodded and said, “Master Fanny, be at ease. I haven’t mentioned them to anyone aside from you. I know you’re quite good to me and that’s why I told you without reservation. No one else can even think of obtaining any trust from me!”

“Who’s good to you, you only know how to speak nonsense!” Fanny’s face blushed as she looked a bit happy. She walked outside with a small smile after rolling her eyes at Han Shuo.

“Our beautiful and kind Master Fanny with a perfect body of course!” Han Shuo said flirtingly as he watched Fanny’s departing figure, chuckling as he spoke.

However, Fanny paid no more attention to Han Shuo, finally speaking lowly just before vanishing through the door, “You brat! You’re becoming more and more unbridled.”

Han Shuo didn’t continue practicing how to manipulate zombies after Fanny left. He thought for a moment and left the training grounds, using the original demons to scout out the four corners and then moved to the concealed corner in the tomb of the mountains at the back of the Academy grounds, returning to the cemetery of death.

Since he’d promised Lawrence to get a piece of black iron ore for him, Han Shuo wouldn’t go back on his word, even if he was doing it only for the five thousand gold coins. He brought the little skeleton with him into the mine and busied himself with roars and thuds all afternoon before mining a small piece of black iron ore. It looked like it would satisfy Lawrence’s request.

The supply of black iron ore within the mining cave wasn’t inexhaustible. As mining went on, Han Shuo discovered that he had to penetrate even further into the depths of the mine and needed to excavate for quite some time before digging up a few black iron ores. Black iron ore was an exceedingly rare metal and this seemed to prove that point. They’d only started digging for a short while and were already exhausting the supply.

He trained his magical yuan for a bit beneath the raging waterfall, and suddenly recalled something on his way back to the cemetery of death. There was something about zombies left behind in Chu Cang Lan’s memories, and Han Shuo had also heard of the previous existence of zombies in his original world.

When he carefully went through Chu Cang Lan’s memories, Han Shuo suddenly felt a bit agitated. According to Chu Cang Lan’s memories, zombies were only a lower form of existence. They were normally created when someone died in a place with a heavier concentration of yin qi, and formed after absorbing some of the yin qi of the heavens and earth.

Low level zombies were also a special herd creature. If they happened to be buried in a place with a thick concentration of yin qi, and that place also happened to be an extreme place of the five elements, there was a very small possibility that it would turn into a very strong zombie after absorbing the yin qi and rare resources of the extreme place of five elements over many months and years.

According to the elements of metal, wood, water, fire, and earth, the five extreme places were divided into – extreme place of metal, extreme place of wood, extreme place of water, extreme place of fire, and extreme place of earth. Once sufficient yin qi and power of the five elements were absorbed, there was a small chance that it would become a metal elite zombie, wood elite zombie, water elite zombie, fire elite zombie, and earth elite zombie.

When the five types of zombies were formed, their bodies were much stronger than ordinary zombies. The most wondrous thing was that these zombies, that had formed after absorbing enough yin qi and five elements, could use the powers of the five elements of metal, wood, water, fire, and earth. If the five types of zombies congregated together, they would form the “Great Formation of the Divine Zombies and Five Elements”, and their strength would be incredibly frightening.

However, these zombies were rare to begin with and they historically couldn't be controlled by anyone. They even viewed each other with enmity and were hunted down by practitioners. Therefore, it was exceedingly hard for a scene of all five elemental zombies gathering together to appear.

Detailed descriptions of the five elemental zombies were present in Chu Cang Lan's memories, including his secret methods to encourage the birth of these zombies. He seemed to have researched this topic. When Han Shuo received all this, he felt that he'd received a priceless treasure and immediately wished to refine these five types of elemental zombies.

With the constraints of necromancy, these zombies would unequivocally obey Han Shuo after creation. Han Shuo had long since discovered that the location of the cemetery of death was an extreme place of earth. The other four extremes could be searched for slowly, he only lacked a few of the materials needed in Chu Cang Lan's secret methods to quicken the development of these zombies before he'd be able to refine earth elite zombies.

Han Shuo immediately made up his mind after this thought appeared, and he planned on trying to see if he could refine these five unique zombies to create the “Great Formation of the Divine Zombies and Five Elements”.

Chapter 94: Wondrous speed in meditation

The next day, within the training grounds of the dark major.

The dark major was a large major within the Academy and its training ground facilities were more comprehensive than the necromancy major's. Its surface area was also more vast. When Han Shuo arrived at the dark major training grounds, he discovered that some people had already gathered inside. There were those who were ready to undertake the test and others who were just here for the show. A loud din of noises prevailed inside.

As the teacher of the necromancy major, Fanny sat with a few other teachers from the dark major and was busily registering the information of students who were going to take the test. The old witch Camilla of the dark major was still within the dark major, under the observation of Han Shuo's original demons and hadn't made a showing.

Han Shuo looked around after entering and discovered that Amy and Athena from the necromancy major were the only familiar people there. He began to walk towards the two girls.

"Eh, are you also here for the test?" Amy waved her hand in greeting when she saw Han Shuo approach from afar.

Nodding, Han Shuo said, "Yes, I've yet to pass the test. What areas should I be looking out for?"

"There's nothing much to be concerned about with these tests, it's just a matter of testing your mental strength and then releasing a few magics for them to see. Oh, right. Us necromancy majors also need to demonstrate manipulating summoned creatures. There's nothing terribly complicated about it, only the more advanced tests, like the one for adept mage, are more complex. Apart from these basic tests, you'll need to know all sorts of techniques and grasp certain magical concepts. Finally, you'll have to complete a mission. Only after you meet all these requirements will it count as you having officially graduated.” Athena flicked a glance at Han Shuo as she explained in detail for him.

Standing with the two girls on the outside, Han Shuo observed for a bit and discovered that some of the dark major students all demonstrated their magic one by one according to the rules. Some teachers then quizzed them on their comprehension of certain magical concepts at their current level, finally giving them a grade based on their performance.

“Bryan, you prepared for the magic apprentice level right?” Athena asked when she saw Han Shuo didn’t respond and was only silently monitoring the performance of all the other students within the training grounds.

“No, I’m here to see if I can make it to novice mage.” Han Shuo looked towards Fanny sitting primly in the distance and replied.

“What? Are you joking? If I recall correctly, you were still an errand slave for the necromancy major a few months ago. How is it possible that you’re advancing to novice mage so quickly?” Athena raised her voice and looked at Han Shuo in disbelief.

“No way?” Amy also exclaimed softly.

Smiling faintly, Han Shuo nodded his head firmly, explaining, “I’m only giving it a shot and may not pass.”

Even though Han Shuo had spoken so, Amy and Athena still couldn’t believe that Han Shuo was here to attempt the novice mage tests. The two girls chattered ceaselessly with their questions, finally stopping only when it was Amy’s turn to be tested.

“Good luck Amy! I think you’ll be able to successfully advance to novice mage this time.” Athena encouraged Amy when she heard Amy’s name being called. Han Shuo also good naturedly wished her luck.

Amy walked out and then test her mental strength in front of those assembled. She then released the three magics that a novice mage should have grasped: Agony of the Soul, Bone Spears, and summoning zombies. She then manipulated the zombies to attack a target within the training grounds. Finally, Fanny and some of the other dark major teachers asked a few questions regarding comprehension of magical theory.

After a while, Fanny opened her mouth and said, "Congratulations Amy, you will be a novice mage from today onwards. All of your information within the Magic Association will be changed today."

Athena also walked out for her test as Amy was still celebrating excitedly. She underwent the same tests, but maybe she was nervous during the process as her bone spear magic suddenly exploded halfway through. She also tripped over herself when facing the magical knowledge questions.

It wasn't a surprise when Athena was notified that she had failed this test. She walked back to Amy's side with a depressed look. Han Shuo didn't have time to speak words of comfort before his name was called out by Fanny.

He walked unhurriedly towards the inside of the training grounds and caused a bit of a disturbance. Some of the dark major students standing around were quite surprised to see Han Shuo, originally an errand slave, appear within the great hall. All of them started discussing with each other in low whispers and a great many of them held a mocking attitude as they observed this happening.

"Heh heh, don't be nervous. Just follow the previous procedures and go through the tests one by one. I believe in your strength and that you can successfully advance to the rank of novice mage." Fanny spoke a word of encouragement and had Han Shuo follow the same procedures that had taken place before him.

The test of mental strength came first. Han Shuo gathered his mental strength as he faced a testing stone made of special magical material. A dark major teacher then held up the testing stone to measure Han Shuo's mental strength.

His mental strength coalesced at an extremely fast pace due to the potential of his brain having been unearthed. The testing stone had slowly brightened when the other students had their mental strength tested by the stone, until it finally stopped at a certain level of brightness.

However, Han Shuo's case was a bit different. The darkened testing stone didn't slowly brighten continuously, but immediately lit up in the two breaths it took for Han Shuo to concentrate his mental strength, and then stopped at a certain level of brightness and didn't change any further.

"This, what's going on?" Several of the dark major teachers displayed surprised expressions as they sat on the viewing table, as if they hadn't anticipated the testing stone to have such an odd reaction.

Han Shuo dispersed his mental strength and suddenly became a bit nervous inside upon seeing the astonishment of those around him. He'd been worried originally that he didn't have enough mental strength. This is why he's used his entire strength. In addition, Han Shuo also didn't know that his speed in gathering mental strength was truly that speedy. He'd planned on keeping a low profile after listening to Fanny last night. He could only smile wryly and say, "Perhaps there's something wrong with the testing stone, why don't you try another?"

"Don't voice nonsense, how could something be wrong with the testing stone?!" The dark major teacher holding the stone glared at Han Shuo and spoke firmly.

"His mind was hit by the necromancy magic of the Agony of the Soul before, and sank into a period of mental confusion for a while. This may have caused some oddities in his brain. I think we don't need to pay this much attention to it." Fanny glared at Han Shuo ferociously on the stage, seeming to blame him for wanting to show off, and then said with a faint smile to those assembled.

"So this is the case. I think I've also heard of this before. To think that the Agony of the Soul magic of your necromancy major has such marvelous effects, it seems a bit interesting!" The teacher holding the testing stone said with a frown and an odd tone.

"Master Alex, if you're interested, I can cast it on you too. Heh heh, but I can't guarantee that you won't lose your mind!" Fanny chuckled lightly and teased him.

“No o, never mind. I don’t have that kind of guts. Alright, this test is over. We can commence to the next stage of this test.” The dark major’s Master Alex didn’t tarry much more and nodded at Han Shuo.

Athena had made mistakes because she was nervous. Han Shuo now had weathered some hardships and the training of his mental state was even more extraordinary. He naturally wouldn’t get cold feet.

The three magics that a novice mage should have mastered were deployed very smoothly by Han Shuo, with not the slightest bit of unfamiliarity. After the zombies had been summoned, Han Shuo’s manipulations were even more adept than Amy’s. The movement of the zombie in everyone’s eyes wasn’t clumsy, but rather gave people a feeling of nimbleness.

Han Shuo handled the last section of magical theory questioning even more easily. The main questioner was Fanny. Fanny knew of Han Shuo’s level in grasping magical knowledge and didn’t ask much at all. She carelessly asked a couple of the questions that Han Shuo had asked her two days and ago and let him easily pass.

Han Shuo smoothly obtained the qualifications for the rank of novice mage without any mishaps. Fanny smiled, “Congratulations Bryan, from this day forth your information will be recorded in the Magic Association. Heh heh, although there are many novice mages, you’ll be able to garner a good occupation for yourself in the future. However, I think with your potential, this won’t be the limit of your ability!”

Han Shuo left the training grounds dashingly with Fanny’s blessings, walking directly towards the knight school, intending on exchanging the black iron ore with Lawrence’s gold coins.

Chu Cang Lan had left instructions for a combination of special ingredients for forming the five elemental zombies. Han Shuo had heard of some of these materials and knew that they were quite expensive in this world. This made Han Shuo realize that he would have to pour in large amounts of gold coins if he wanted to refine an earth elite zombie. Gold coins became an issue that he had to consider.

However, when Han Shuo was halfway there, the original demon that had been monitoring Duke, who had stayed put in the wind major area all this time, suddenly notified Han Shuo when he left around noon and also made for the knight school. Having originally intended to find Lawrence, Han Shuo had to temporarily put aside his idea and used the original demon to keep an eye on Duke's movements.

After Han Shuo followed Duke to the knight school, Duke met up with Erick, who'd gone missing for a few days. Apart from Duke and Erick, there was another person with them. It was the earth rider knight Clark, whom they'd met in the Dark Forest. This greatly surprised Han Shuo.

Chapter 95: The Dark Mantle stronghold

Clark had expressed his obvious love for Fanny during the trials within the Dark Forest, but had been forced away by Han Shuo's evil scheme. Who would've thought that Han Shuo would soon see him again within Academy grounds a few months later?

Duke and Clark spoke within a house in the knight school, with the senior swordsman standing guard in front of the door as if deathly afraid of someone coming over and bothering the two.

Duke personally set up a wall of wind within the house. When Han Shuo's original demon approached, it could only keep an eye on senior swordsman Erick standing guard outside, because they felt a faint pulse of magic. The original demon didn't dare to brashly enter, and thus was unable to overhear what the two were talking about.

When Duke and Camilla had met last time in the classrooms of the dark major, they had chosen to meet in the middle of the night. They must've surely thought that no one would discover them, and so hadn't taken these extra preventative measures, but it was daytime now, not to mention that they were in the middle of the knight school. No wonder Duke took such precautions.

Duke and Clark walked out from the house after a while. Duke retraced his steps and left the knight school alone. The original demon followed behind Duke and Erick and discovered that Duke returned to the wind major buildings, whereas Clark remained within a training ground of the knight school to practice his techniques.

This was precisely the time of day when knight students would practice their techniques, and Han Shuo didn't stay in the same place to continue observing. He headed directly towards one of the training grounds to find Lawrence, according to the directions he had previously left.

Apart from a variety of weapons in the training grounds, there were also several battlesteeds, fully clad in heavy armor, that looked quite fierce. The biggest difference between knights and swordsmen was that knights relied heavily on horses during battles. Ability in controlling horses was an important skill that knights had to master. They could make use of a battlesteed's force and speed to deploy an even greater amount of strength.

Lawrence was dressed in bright silver armor and wielded a long spear, dashing to and fro within the training ground. The battlesteed beneath his leads leapt over several high obstacles. As they charged forward, the spear within his hand was like a flash of lightning as glorious fighting aura blossomed from it in midair.

"Hi Lawrence!" Han Shuo stood in front of the door, observed for a while, and suddenly opened his mouth in greeting.

Lawrence turned his battlesteed around after a shrill whinny, using the long spear in his hand to start a fierce attack towards Han Shuo. Lawrence's spear stabbed directly towards Han Shuo's chest, accompanied by the clapping sounds of the horse's iron hooves.

Although the attack was unparalleled in ferociousness, Han Shuo was unmoved until Lawrence had dashed in front of Han Shuo on his battlesteed. It was only then that he suddenly whipped out the Demonslayer Edge, infused it with raging, violent demonic qi and stabbed it towards the long spear.

Under the impact from the Demonslayer Edge, the long spear was broken into two, starting from its point. It was a good thing that Lawrence let go of it in time, otherwise the Demonslayer Edge might have injured his hand after decimating the long spear.

However, the combined force and speed of the battlesteed also made it a bit difficult for Han Shuo to withstand this attack. The irresistible force of the charge also made his arm, that grasped the Demonslayer Edge, tremble uncontrollably.

Hauling back on the reins and stopping the horse, Lawrence leapt off and arrived excitedly in front of Han Shuo after taking off his heavy armor. His two eyes were focused on the Demonslayer Edge in Han Shuo's hand as he exclaimed in astonishment. "What kind of strange weapon is that, it's so sharp!"

"Heh heh, black iron ore, black gold ore, and many rare metals were mixed in to birth this weapon. It was personally forged by dwarves, it'd be strange if it wasn't sharp." Han Shuo explained to Lawrence only after putting the Demonslayer Edge away.

Lawrence picked up a towel and wiped away the traces of sweat on his forehead, "So that's the case, your weapon is indeed quite uncommon. Oh right, have you come to find me this time because you've already acquired some black iron ore? Heh!"

Nodding, Han Shuo brought out the black iron ore that he had excavated yesterday from his space ring, "That's right, this piece of black iron ore should satisfy your wishes. Let's wrap up our business!"

"No problem, give me your crystal card, I'll transfer five thousand gold to you." Lawrence looked joyfully at the black iron ore in Han Shuo's hand as he said, too impatient to wait.

After Han Shuo and Lawrence had concluded their transaction, Han Shuo discovered that another five thousand gold had appeared in his crystal card and a trace of a smile broke out across his face.

Just as both were basking in their comfortable feelings, the earth rider knight Clark walked in from outside. Clark has just walked in and was about to speak when he suddenly saw Han Shuo. His face immediately changed as he shouted lowly, "You!"

Turning his head to see that Clark had come in, Han Shuo also gave a slight start of surprise internally. He nodded towards Clark and smiled, "Hello Clark, long time no see. Why did you leave without a word last time in the Dark Forest?"

"Huh. I was framed by a sordid person and had no choice but to leave." So much time had passed that Clark must have certainly understood the truth of what had happened. He immediately made innuendos as soon as he saw Han Shuo, cursing a certain someone.

Pausing for a bit, Clark looked at Han Shuo, "How is Master Fanny? I was planning on paying her a visit and also expressing my apologies.”

“Master Fanny is very well and doesn’t need your concern!” Han Shuo immediately said with a cold look on his face when he heard that Clark had yet to forget Fanny.

“Hey hey, what’s up with the two of you? Eh, senior Clark, didn’t you graduate already? What are you doing here? How do you know Bryan?” Lawrence saw that the two were practically spitting fire at each and hastened to speak up.

“I’ve come back to the knight school this time to investigate the matter of my younger brother Claude’s disappearance. My brother seems to have had dealings with Bryan in the town of Drol. If I discover that he had anything to do with my brother’s disappearance, I’ll make him pay.” Clark’s face darkened as he responded to Lawrence and Han Shuo.

Jumping in horror inside, Han Shuo also looked at Clark with some shock. He’d never thought that Clark would be Claude’s brother. This meant that he was the eldest son of the chief of the Gryphon Legion. Although he’d done away with Claude in a clean fashion that time in Drol, Claude had indeed met him in a bar. If Clark really wanted to investigate this, this matter would be a bit difficult to handle.

“What does that have to do with me, I don’t know Claude that well. Besides, his martial arts techniques are so advanced, what could have happened to him?” Han Shuo’s face was calm as he said indifferently. He then spoke to Lawrence after thinking for a while, “Alright, I have no further business, so let’s end here today.”

Han Shuo didn’t wait for Lawrence to respond after he’d finished and directly left the training grounds. He left the knight school at an even faster pace, hastening off towards the Academy grounds.

The three original demons had to be recalled back into Han Shuo’s body due to the issue of distance. When he found out Clark’s identity, Han Shuo felt that something was amiss with this matter.

As the eldest son of the chief of the Empire’s Gryphon Legion, why would he meet with an emissary of the Kasi Empire and stay in that room so surreptitiously? Although he didn't know what the two had talked about, Han Shuo felt that the earlier he reported something he couldn't control to the senior executives of the "Dark Mantle" for them to fret over, the better.

There was large manor to the northern part of the city that was only three hundred meters away from Phoebe's collapsed residence. Han Shuo took out the "Dark Mantle" medallion that was his identity and knocked on the metal door after being unable to detect any abnormalities from the outside. A thin, short youth opened the door after a long while.

He first looked at Han Shuo up and down, sizing him up, then asked brusquely, "Who are you looking for?"

Han Shuo didn't say much and only handed the medallion over to the youth. The youth looked at the medallion and turned his body to the side to let Han Shuo pass by. The youth returned the medallion to Han Shuo after the latter had entered. The youth had relaxed his facial expression and said faintly, "You've just joined us haven't you? I've never seen you before. Your medallion is also one that a newcomer would carry. Who's in charge of you?"

As he followed the youth inside, Han Shuo discovered that there wasn't any particular magical boundaries or mechanisms within the entire manor. This made Han Shuo feel quite astonished and he observed his surroundings even more closely. He responded carelessly, "I just joined a few days ago, an old man called Candide is in charge of me!"

"Wh-what? Are you certain? Sir Candide is in charge of you just after you've joined?" The youth was noticeably surprised as he asked Han Shuo with a soft exclamation.

Nodding, Han Shuo asked, perplexed, "Yes, is there a problem?"

"Eh, not a problem per se, but Sir Candide is one of the three heavyweights who grasps true power within our 'Dark Mantle' organization. Sir Candide can directly deploy the troops of every city through the Empire without obtaining approval from His Majesty first. He can directly kill ordinary nobles and military officials. You're a newcomer, yet you're directly reporting to Sir Candide?"

Shrugging, Han Shuo said, "How would I know? He's the one who brought me in anyhow. I've come looking for him this time. Right, I've looked around and discovered that this secret stronghold doesn't seem to have any defensive capabilities. What's going on here?"

"Heh heh, you're a newbie alright. Come with me, I'll show you around!" The skinny person adopted a tone of an elder as he led Han Shou in with a smile.

Chapter 96: The Three Heavyweights of the Dark Mantle organization

After traversing a short distance through the manor, Han Shuo learned that the lanky man's name was Chester, and that he was a bandit. Han Shuo also learned about some of Dark Mantle's current situation from Chester.

Dark Mantle members were separated into the three divisions, Dark Star, Dark Moon, and Dark Sun, according to the amount of contributions they had made to the organization. The scattering of stars over the curtain of night represented that the Dark Star members could be found everywhere, in all corners of the Empire. The Dark Moon level was only higher by one step, but they still couldn't see the light of day and could only live in the darkened corners. However, the higher level Dark Sun members could appear in the public's eye like the sun, making a brilliant appearance in the day.

The three divisions of Sun, Moon, and Star were further divided into five levels according to their contributions to the Empire. Han Shuo currently held the rank of Dark Star, and the minute star on the back of his iron medallion represented that Han Shuo was the lowest one star member of the Dark Stars.

As a member's contributions to the Empire rose, the medallion would slowly accumulate two stars, three stars, four stars, and eventually five stars. One would be promoted to a Dark Moon member when they surpassed five stars, and then would advance to a Fifth Star Moon member from a One Star Moon member similar to the way he advanced from Dark Star, and so on and so forth until being a Dark Star member at the top levels.

Once one advanced to a higher level, not only would their monthly stipend greatly increase, but he would also enjoy more of the Dark Mantle organization's special authority. When one made it to the highest levels, like Candide, he would directly answer to the king. He would be below one person and above tens of thousands. All wealth and prosperity would be within reach.

“We’ve arrived!” Chester finally brought Han Shuo to a house in the center and stopped in front of it after covering a long distance.

Han Shuo had released the three original demons along the way and discovered that there was no one here in the manor apart from Chester and himself. There were no defensive measures set up around the expansive manor at all. This made Han Shuo quite confused.

This room wasn’t large, and Han Shuo still didn’t discover anything out of the ordinary after looking around. He asked Chester with a surprised expression, “Is there anything out of the ordinary here?”

“Heh heh, of course there’s something different here. The entire manor is just as you saw, with no defensive measures whatsoever. This manor is just a cover. The real ‘Dark Mantle’ isn’t here at all.” Chester explained with a faint smile, and then fumbled with something. Somehow, a crack suddenly appeared on the smooth floor and revealed a bright passageway.

“So there was another hidden mechanism. Heh heh, where does this lead to?” Han Shuo couldn’t help but ask when he saw the passageway appear in front of him.

“Come, I’ll take you to the true ‘Dark Mantle’ stronghold!” Chester smiled and jumped down into the bright passageway, calling for Han Shuo to come down as well.

Han Shuo felt that his landing spot was quite soft after he’d also jumped down. There were solid walls around him, with strong pulses of magic suddenly coming from the passageway interior.

The solid walls around them broke apart into a large door, accompanied with a soft sound. A very bright passageway revealed itself in front of the two like a maze. There were several passageways intersecting with each other up ahead, and strong magical pulses emanating from the walls on the sides. There were also many namelessly strong crossbows locked and loaded, their cold, sharp gleams pointing at all corners within the passageway.

“Why do I feel like this place is similar a cave?” Han Shuo asked involuntarily after he looked around.

Chester walked out from inside and indicated for Han Shuo to follow him, explaining as he did so, “Your feeling is correct. This is Mt. Ordas behind the Empire’s palace. This towering mountain is strictly off limits to trespassers. The stronghold of our ‘Dark Mantle’ is located within the heart of the mountain, that is where security is truly the heaviest. The Empire’s army is also stationed around it. As the king’s secret hand in the shadows, all sorts of the Empire’s talents are gathered inside and many confidential documents are also stored as well. There hasn’t been an incident for many years, and its security level is on par with the Empire’s own palace.”

Han Shuo felt that the security here was extremely high, and some of the surrounding magical pulses noticeably encompassed strong danger. He didn’t dare release the lowest level demon general, the original demon, in a place like this. He could only make use of his perceptive senses to detect the various dangers concealed in his surroundings.

He followed behind Chester and traversed a few passages. He met a few other Dark Mantle members along the way, and a few stone chambers also appeared along the way. Han Shuo could sense the breathing and heartbeats inside, and knew that there were people within this stone chambers.

“Master Candide is one of the three heavyweights of our Dark Mantle, so I don’t have the qualifications to personally lead you to see him. However, I can make a report for you. If you were really inducted by Master Candide, I think he’d be willing to see you!” Chester’s look at Han Shuo held a bit of envy, as if Han Shuo was truly lucky to be under the care of Candide.

“I’ve heard you mention the three heavyweights of the Dark Mantle a few times. Who are the other two apart from Candide?” Han Shuo asked as he walked along.

“There’s also Lord Amyes and Lady Cecilia. Lady Cecilia is in charge of all Dark Mantle affairs outside of the Empire. It's also said that she's a charming lady. Heh heh, it's a pity that a small character like me will never see her in my life. Lord Amyes and Lord Candide deal with all the matters within the Empire, but Lord Amyes is primarily in charge of surveillance and investigation of all the nobles and high ranked officials within the Empire, and is a man who absolutely lives in the public eye from our organization."

"If the results of his investigation show that these officials have done something contrary to the Empire's gains, he can arrest them directly and report to the king after. He can even directly execute some of the lower ranking nobles without asking His Majesty for approval. Therefore, to most of the Empire's nobles, Lord Amyes is their nightmare. Lord Candide is in charge of the Empire's internal affairs, including smoking out all the various hostile kingdom's spies and putting them to death, obtaining intelligence that is useful to the Empire, and exterminating all hidden threats to the Empire." Chester explained in detail the specifics of the three Dark Mantle heavyweights as they walked.

The two stopped in front of a metal door as Chester continuously explained. After arriving, Chester indicated for Han Shuo to halt and spoke into a small hole in the metal door. "There's a Dark Star ranked member who identified himself as Bryan here to see Lord Candide. He says that he's under Lord Candide's direct supervision!"

"Wait a moment, I'll go seek Lord Candide's opinion." A completely emotionless, cold voice sounded from the small hole. The metal door opened abruptly after roughly two minutes to reveal several round dials. One of the round dials had magic pulsing from it. The voice sounded again, "Bryan can come in. Stand on the round dial. Chester, you wait outside. When Bryan comes back out later, you lead him out along the original path."

"Yes." Chester responded and explained in a low voice, "When we came in just now, we took a short distance magic transportation matrix. There's a similar transportation matrix within the heart of the mountain, he will take you to where you should go."

Nodding, Han Shuo indicated that he understood and rose to walk towards the dial carved with wondrous magical images. A short distance transportation matrix wasn't difficult to set up, any space mage above the adept class would be able to set one up as long as they had sufficient materials.

But a long distance transportation matrix, like the one that Han Shuo had taken to the cemetery of death in the Dark Forest, one that spanned thousands of miles, wasn't one that ordinary mages could set up. This not only needed someone of archmage level or above, it also needed a large quantity of magical ingredients. Without the support of a great power, this level of transportation matrix would be impossible to materialize.

Once more internally sighing in appreciation of the wonders of the cemetery of death, Han Shuo stood directly on the magical dial and then reappeared in a spacious stone chamber under the operation of the matrix. This stone chamber was furnished in a very bright and comfortable manner, and was even more luxurious than the Boozt Merchant Guild. Exquisite magical drawings were carved on the surrounding walls, with a few landscape paintings hanging on them as well. The chandelier above his head sparkled with a soft and brilliant light, radiantly illuminating the entire stone chamber.

Candide was sitting at the table near the front of stone chamber, flipping through a scroll with a furrowed brow. As Han Shuo took in his surroundings and once again rested his gaze on Candide, the latter finally put the scroll in his hand down. His hooked face turned towards Han Shuo and opened his mouth to ask darkly, "What's the matter, have you discovered something?"

Nodding, Han Shuo summarized the events of the past couple of days for Candide, including Duke meeting with Camilla, the conversations about the "Eye of Darkness", and the son of the chief of the Gryphon Legion, Clark's meeting with Duke. He relayed all these matters in their entirety.

As Han Shuo's explanation went on, Candide's originally grim-looking face became even uglier and twisted. Candide remained silent without a word after Han Shuo had finished speaking, his brow tightly knit together as if considering something.

After a while, just when Han Shuo was growing impatient from waiting, Candide broke out into a smile and said to Han Shuo, “Bryan, you’ve done very well, well to the point where I am astonished. It looks like you were born for this type of profession. With your strength, I’m truly surprised that you’ve managed to obtain so much valuable intelligence in such a short amount of time. Duke is a wind archmage, and even Camilla is a dark adept mage. Clark is a great earth rider. You’ve obtained so much valuable information under unsuspecting circumstances, I can only use magical as the only qualifier to describe your performance.”

“You praise me too highly.” Han Shuo said humbly.

“You don’t need to be humble. You’ve handled this matter perfectly. Although I’m very curious how you did it, you’re one of mine and I wouldn’t interfere and question you. Heh heh, you don’t have to think about what comes after this, I’ll send someone to handle this matter.” Candide used the eyes of one looking at a monster as he looked at Han Shuo and complimented him.

Han Shuo breathed a sigh of relief. The thing he’d been most worried about previously was that Candide would suspect the veracity of his words. After all, to conceal himself from so many people yet obtain so much intelligence with the level of his strength, it should’ve been impossible, logically speaking. What made Han Shuo feel gratified was that Candide didn’t doubt the truthfulness of this matter at all. He didn’t even ask how Han Shuo had obtained this information, this made Han Shuo feel very surprised.

“You don’t need to find it odd, for our Dark Mantle organization, we only need to know the final results of the mission. We won’t ask about the process. Every member has their own way, and we don’t care what methods members use when we set a mission, just that it’s completed properly. Therefore, you don’t need to worry about anything. We won’t affect your life when there’s no mission, you can go about your daily routine and enjoy yourself.” Candide seemed to see through Han Shuo’s thoughts and explained patiently to him.

“Alright, then there’s nothing to do with me for the time being?” Han Shuo quite approved of the Dark Mantle’s principles and responded with a smile.

“Give me the medallion that represents your identity. I’ll record this very important intelligence in your medallion and the organization’s files. I have the obligation to add two stars for you. Some members are unable to obtain even one star with ten pieces of information, but the worth of your information is enough to qualify you to gain two stars.” Candide looked at Han Shuo and smiled at him.

Candide then took Han Shuo’s medallion and did something to it so that when it landed in Han Shuo’s hand again, two little stars had magically appeared on its back. This meant that Han Shuo had directly skipped two levels and entered the ranks of Third Dark Star.

“I’ll be taking my leave now if there’s nothing else.” Han Shuo was also a bit delighted to see that one mission was enough to make him a Third Dark Star like Chester and smiled as he spoke.

Nodding, Candide said, “Alright, you may go now, but you need to report to the organization every month. If you learn of any new intelligence that benefits or harms the Empire during this time, you can come directly and make a report. Your contributions will be calculated according to the accuracy of the intelligence and recorded in your organization files.”

“Heh heh, many Dark Star members advance through the ranks in this fashion. You need to report in every month, even if you have no intelligence. This allows the organization to know your status for one, and the organization will also see if there are any missions suitable for you for another. Of course, you have the right to choose some missions and the right to reject some.” Candide added.

Han Shuo nodded, indicating his understanding without saying much more and prepared to leave. But when he reached the door, Candide seemed to have an awkward subject to disclose and called out, “Wait one moment, Bryan.”

Halting, Han Shuo turned back to look at Candide and asked in bafflement, “Is there anything else, Lord Candide?”

“You must appropriately handle your relationship with Lawrence, this may have a great impact on you in the future. Lawrence’s identity is much more complex than you can imagine, and I can only tell you this much. You should keep your wits about you.” Candide also seemed to be in a difficult position and stopped after saying these words.

“I’ve heard that he’s the son of a finance minister, is this what you wanted to tell me?” Han Shuo had heard Lisa mention a few things about Lawrence before and thus opened his mouth to ask Candide again.

Nodding first but then shaking his head after, Candide opened his mouth once again under Han Shuo’s perplexed gaze, “Lawrence is the son of a preeminent finance minister, many are aware of this, but apart from this, Lawrence has another identity. The implications of his identity are too great, and your current level doesn’t have the right to know this information. I’m not at liberty to disclose too much and only wanted to remind you to take care so that you’re not embroiled in something you shouldn’t be in.”

Candide waved his hand and indicated for Han Shuo to leave. Han Shuo felt uncertain, but now that he knew a few of the Dark Mantle rules, he didn’t ask much. He nodded to indicate that he’d pay attention and left Candide’s room.

“Well, did you gain anything?” Chester asked Han Shuo excitedly as the two retraced their steps after the latter had met up with Chester again.

“Nothing much, just that Candide added two stars for me. I’m a Third Dark Star like you now, heh heh!” Han Shuo didn’t feel like there was anything that needed to be concealed from Chester’s interest, and smiled as he spoke to Chester.

Chester was astonished and incredibly envious to hear Han Shuo’s words. He sighed and shook his head at Han Shuo after his surprise, saying, “Your speed of advancement is indeed incredible with Lord Candide. I joined the Dark Mantle three years ago and reported twenty some pieces of information before becoming a Third Dark star. You’ve been in the organization for not even a week and have already risen to the rank of a Third Dark Star as well. Ai, comparisons are odious, treatment is indeed different when someone is taking care of you from above.”

Han Shuo shrugged and didn't say much with regards to Chester's reflection. Although he'd gotten the intelligence by virtue of his own strength, these types of matters were unexplainable and he simply decided not to say anything.

“If there's any mission that needs to be completed by two people in the future, can you bring me along? Just treat it as giving me a hand as well?” Chester first sighed with emotion and then scratched his head, broaching this awkward subject with a bit of embarrassment.

“Sure.” Han Shuo agreed readily.

“Thanks so much! I'll remember you and do my best to follow your instructions.” Chester was overjoyed and his attitude became even more enthusiastic than before. He kept describing all sorts of Dark Mantle matters to Han Shuo and sent him back to the quiet manor in the northern district again.

Chapter 97: Curious and exotic materials

On the day he returned to the Academy, Han Shuo discovered that Camilla had suddenly left one night with a hurried look on her face. He still hadn't caught sight of her after a day or two, and learned that something had happened at Camilla's home after asking around, and that it was likely that she wouldn't return to the Academy in the short term.

This was the explanation on the surface, but according to Han Shuo's instincts, they'd probably never see her again. Since she was a spy from an enemy kingdom, she wouldn't be left to flourish within the Empire, according to the Dark Mantle's way of dealing with things.

When Camilla disappeared, Duke and Erick held a secret discussion and didn't dare continue reside within the Academy. They used the conclusion of the exchange as an excuse to immediately leave the Academy and return to the Kasi Empire. Clark, who'd been about to head to the necromancy major to pay his respects to Fanny, left the knight school at almost the same time as them.

As a member of the Dark Mantle, although Han Shuo didn't know exactly what had been going on, he could be assured that it must've been Dark Mantle making a move and assuming control. Otherwise, the three of them wouldn't have had such strange reactions and disappear without a trace in such a short period of time.

Over the next couple of days, Han Shuo lived a leisurely and content lifestyle. He continuously studied magical knowledge and would immediately ask Fanny if he ran into something he didn't understand. He could always obtain the right answer from Fanny, but maybe because he had trained his magical yuan to the "molded spirit" stage, he would often blurt out the outrageous comments he'd always hidden within his heart whenever he was with Fanny.

Whenever this happened, Fanny would pout and berate Han Shuo, and whenever he recollected himself, he'd tried to find a way to salvage the situation. If he couldn't, he'd just continue playing dumb and try to gloss over the situation.

When Han Shuo woke up this morning, he discovered that the weather had suddenly turned chilly. Han Shuo thought for a bit and felt that Phoebe should've had enough time to prepare enough rations for the dwarves to make it through the winter. Thus, he left the Academy and set out for the Boozt Merchant Guild. He also wanted to purchase from Phoebe the various materials needed to refine an earth elite zombie.

When he arrived at the Boozt Merchant Guild, Han Shuo discovered that the guards had once again been swapped out. When Han Shuo offered his name this time, the guards immediately let Han Shuo in quite respectfully. Fabian dashed over from a distance after a short while, the very image of health and radiance. He called out from a long ways away, "Hi Bryan! Long time no see, how have you been doing?"

"Oh, Fabian, it's great to see that you're alright. I thought you'd be... well. since the house collapsed on you last time." Han Shuo was also quite surprised by Fabian's appearance. He'd thought that Fabian had already died from the collapsed building, thanks to the earthquake spell that had been cast when the experts of "Shadow Ghost" had visited last time.

"I hid beneath the bed last time when the house collapsed. Candice came by afterwards and found me, saving me from the wreckage of the demolished house. That's how I managed to escape." Fabian's face bore traces of jubilation from having escaped near death as he explained joyfully to Han Shuo.

Nodding, Han Shuo looked over Fabian. "You look very well now. It looks like your good luck has already arrived!"

"Haha, that isn't the case, but since Grover died, the men of 'Shadow Ghost' haven't appeared again. Now that Miss Phoebe has officially taken over the Guild, my life with her is much better." Although Fabian protested against the idea of good luck, the happiness on his face depicted the joy and pride within his heart.

Many of the decorations and settings within the Guild hadn't changed, but the guards within had all been replaced. Han Shuo suddenly stopped halfway on his way further into the Guild and looked at the artificial mountain on his left. He remembered that Phoebe and him had had no choice last time but to hide within one of the cracks of the artificial mountain in order to evade Ellis' pursuit.

When he cast his eyes upon this place again, it had obviously been spruced up. Many potted plants and flowers had sprung up in the surroundings next to it. A rocking chair and a table had even been placed by the crack in the artificial mountain, as if used to admire the views around the area.

"Eh, how come changes have been made here? I recall that this area wasn't like this before?" Han Shuo looked around in surprise and turned his head back to ask Fabian.

"Heh heh, you truly are observant. This place has been redecorated according to Miss Phoebe's wishes. Miss Phoebe has forbidden others to enter this area. She comes here alone to bask in the sun, sip tea, and admire the flowers when she has free time. However, I don't think the view here is that beautiful, but for some reason Miss Phoebe just likes it here." Fabian explained with a look of confusion on his face.

Glancing at the crack that the two had taken shelter in together last time, Han Shuo recalled the two's embarrassingly ambiguous position. His heart leapt, could it be that Phoebe was keeping this place as a souvenir of their awkward encounter?

Han Shuo thought this was unimaginably queer when his thoughts traveled to this point and he repeated that this was, "impossible!". Phoebe was a very proud and high spirited person, and her looks were exquisite, not to mention that she held the Boozt Merchant Guild in her hand at the moment. Rationally speaking, she wouldn't give heed to a minor student from the Babylon Academy of Magic and Force.

Fabian had already brought Han Shuo to the lobby when he was thinking this. The former then called over a maid to serve tea and snacks, then left to ask Phoebe to come see Han Shuo.

Phoebe walked in wearing a simple, white, and practical training outfit.

There were faint traces of sweat on her forehead. She seemed to be rather thirsty as she walked in front of Han Shuo, poured an empty cup full of tea, and only focused her beautiful eyes on Han Shuo after taking a few sips. "You're here for the rations, right?"

Nodding, Han Shuo smiled, "Of course, why else would I come to the Guild if not for the rations?"

Phoebe curled her lip in a pretty fashion and rolled her eyes at Han Shuo, saying unhappily, "Can't you just come to see me, your friend?"

Laughing out involuntarily, Han Shuo teased, "It's only been a few days since we last saw each other, and you've just taken over the Guild. You must be very busy. I'd like to come see you, but was worried that you didn't have the time!"

"Humph. Not having thought of me is not having thought of me. Don't make excuses." Phoebe's graceful and long neck lifted. She seemed to be a bit put out at Han Shuo. She thought for a bit and then said, "The amount of rations you need fills two rooms. Your space ring should be of the lowest quality and surely has other items within it. You won't be able to fill it with that much stuff."

"Indeed, but I can make several trips. Heh heh, don't worry, I won't think badly of you." Han Shuo had long since prepared to make several trips and smiled faintly at Phoebe. Pausing, Han Shuo then took out a piece of paper covered with various ingredients and handed it over to Phoebe, "I also need these materials as well. Take a look, will you be able to collect them for me?"

Looking at Han Shuo with some surprise, Phoebe seemed to be unable to understand why Han Shuo needed to buy all sorts of special items lately. Phoebe took Han Shuo's paper and started murmuring, "Ice earth, hot earth, wet earth, blood earth. And something snow, something leaves, something something fruit. What are all these things you've written? I don't understand a lot of them!"

Knowing early on that Phoebe would be suspicious, Han Shuo smiled faintly and explained, "Ice earth can be found in places of extreme cold, hot earth can be found in burning hot areas. It can usually be found in places with lava. Wet earth is usually found in places that are wet all year round and never see the light of day. Blood earth is found where the earth has been dyed red from the blood of fallen soldiers after two armies have fought. There's also the Ice Snow Flower, found in places that produces ice earth, lava from hot earth, a weird black, green grass from wet earth, and fruit that looks like tumors produced from within blood earth..."

Phoebe's expression grew more and more confused with Han Shuo's explanations as he described the items on the list. Although the names of these items would be different from the names in Chu Cang Lan's memories, they should be the same shape and have the same characteristics with names that Phoebe knew. There were also a few items that even Phoebe had never heard of before, and she said that she'd have to inquire with other people after Han Shuo's detailed explanations.

When Han Shuo had reeled off the thirteen ingredients needed to form an earth elite zombie, Phoebe felt completely woozy from Han Shuo's assorted collection of ingredients. If it wasn't for the fact that this person was Han Shuo, Phoebe likely would've not been able to hold herself in until now. She said with a bit of temper, "What do you need all these random ingredients for? If you aren't willing to tell me, I won't help you!"

Looking at Phoebe in resignation, Han Shuo saw that she was rather huffy and seemed to be in a bad mood. He spoke an incantation and the bone wielding little skeleton materialized in front of Han Shuo. Under his command, the little skeleton dashed back and forth the great hall with an extremely nimble body, finally sending the bone dagger in his hand towards Phoebe.

Phoebe gave a great start of fright as fighting aura flared from her long sword, clashing with the little skeleton's bone dagger. The bone dagger spun and returned to the little skeleton's hand. Han Shuo opened his mouth to ask, "What do you think are the differences between this little skeleton and the skeletons summoned by ordinary necromancers?"

"No difference, but that this one is incredible. I've long since seen skeletal warriors summoned by necromancers, there is a difference of heaven and earth between them and your little skeleton. I can feel that your skeletal warrior has only the outward appearance of a skeleton, but that there's a demon hidden within its body. Even I'm a bit afraid." Phoebe's expression was grave as she looked at the bone dagger wielding little skeleton with some trepidation.

"He used to be an ordinary skeletal warrior, even weaker than ordinary ones. He only knew how to throw away trash for me, but you can see that he's different now. After my secret methods of refinement, he's still a skeletal warrior, but he's slowly growing. You've tested his strength just now as well. I can only tell you that the materials I need are for refining a zombie, a zombie that will be as amazing as him." Han Shuo looked intently at Phoebe and slowly opened his mouth.

Apart from him, no one in this world would be able to grasp the way of training magical yuan. Han Shuo wasn't afraid of letting Phoebe know, not to mention that Phoebe had long since witnessed the miraculousness of the little skeleton's might. In addition, Han Shuo truly did trust Phoebe, this is why he gave her a simple reminder.

"Incredible, this is incredible. Your method will surely lead the necromancers in a magical revolution. How did you do it Bryan? You're amazing!" There was a light that could be identified as admiration in Phoebe's eyes as she softly cried out in excitement.

Shrugging, Han Shuo said, "I achieved this using my exclusive method. We're friends Phoebe, so I can tell you this. However, you probably know that if anyone else learned of this matter, it will bring me trouble. Therefore, I hope you can keep this secret for me."

"You've never told anyone apart from me?" Phoebe first started in astonishment, and then looked at Han Shuo with a bizarre look.

Nodding, Han Shuo said firmly, "Absolutely not!"

A streak of faint red magically appeared on her stunning cheeks, Phoebe promised joyfully to Han Shuo, "Alright, I won't speak of our secret, even if someone threatens my life. You can be certain of that!"

"Thank you Phoebe, I'll remember this favor. I hope you can purchase these special items for me. I know that only large Guilds like yours can traverse cities and obtain these sort of items from all over the Empire.” Han Shuo was a bit touched as he said sincerely to Phoebe.

“No problem, I’ll try my best. I’m thinking that these items will cost plenty of gold. You’ll need to prepare enough gold coins! Heh heh, I’m not doing this for you for free!” Phoebe winked a bit playfully at Han Shuo and teased him with a faint smile.

In the beginning, Han Shuo had felt that Phoebe was a coldly arrogant person who was difficult to get along with. However, as time went on and the two went through several experiences together, he discovered that this cold haughtiness was just the face that Phoebe put on for outsiders. Once she made a true friend, she was easy to talk to and would no longer display any hoity toitness. This also made Han Shuo truly approve of Phoebe from within his heart, no longer viewing her as a simple business partner.

He spent another hour to explain in detail the formation and location of these particular materials to Phoebe, until Phoebe has used pen and paper to take down all of them. Han Shuo took his leave and returned to the cemetery of death after he had filled a space ring with the amount of rations he needed from the warehouse that Phoebe had set aside for him.

Chapter 98: The arrogant elf

Han Shuo didn't linger long after arriving at the cemetery of death and headed directly for the dwarves' village. He finally reached their village when it was almost dusk.

Bennet and the dwarves were still as friendly as ever. They took out their limited fine food for Han Shuo to taste as soon as he arrived, and filled Han Shuo's cup full with their specially brewed fruit wine.

"You haven't come for a few days Han, how have you been?" Bennett looked at Han Shuo and asked.

"Thank you for your concern, I've been quite well. I've come to bring you the rations that I promised." Han Shuo took out bags of rations as he spoke. There was some wheat and plenty of milk and bread. There was also some cured meat.

"Oh, my magical friend. Everyone in our entire village will thank you for your grace and bounty." Bennett cried out softly when saw so much food appear on the ground as Han Shuo's space ring sparkled. This moved him beyond belief as he'd already felt that the past few days had been quite a struggle to get through.

The female dwarves and children in the distance also put down whatever they were working on and converged on this area with shouts of joy. They hugged each other with warm tears in their eyes as they celebrated.

Seeing the dwarves become this agitated over the rations in front of them, Han Shuo understood that their lives must not have been easy. Every winter must be a type of suffering for them, but because of Han Shuo's appearance, they wouldn't have to worry about their day to day living this year.

Chief Calvin was bringing the other youths and strong dwarves of the village over from the forges, and was a bit surprised to see the excited cheering coming from this direction. When he drew nearer and saw the piles of rations on the ground, he very gravely expressed his thanks to Han Shuo.

“Elder, this is only the first delivery. My space ring can only hold so much. I think I’ll be able to bring all the food you need with a few more trips. Don’t worry elder, I’ll bring over the next batch of food as soon as possible. I think all of you won’t have to worry about rations this winter.” Han Shuo responded humbly and smiled as he explained to Calvin.

Some noises sounded from outside the village at this moment as the dwarves standing guard outside the village brought a few elves in. These elves were wearing clothes with intricate detailing and had flowers and grass woven into a circlet decorating their heads. They held bows or magic staves in their hands, and all the males and females were equally beautiful and handsome.

“Dearest dwarf friends, we’ve brought beautiful jewels with us that are enough to trade for the weapons you’ve forged. We’ll use those weapons to scare off all the man-eating monsters away from here. Are you willing to sell the weapons to us?” The foremost young elf opened his mouth and spoke gracefully. He wore a green bow on his back and faint magical pulses came from the bow. It seemed that this bow was a magical weapon. This made Han Shuo quite curious.

“Sorry Benedict, I think I’ve been clear enough. The weapons that we’ve forged will absolutely not be sold to you, no matter how much you offer to pay. We’re not interested.” Calvin shook his head and rejected the young elf Benedict quite decisively.

Benedict was visibly upset with these words and he said anxiously, “Why? I know there’s only a hundred or so dwarves in your village, but the weapons you’ve forged recently number more than a hundred. You won’t be able to use them all yourselves. If black iron ore weapons forged by you are imbued with our elven magic, then they’ll become even more powerful magical weapons. Why is it that you’re not willing to trade with us even when you have no use for them? Is it that our price isn’t high enough?”

“Because these weapons have been forged for our best friend Han. These fruit wines are also for Han. So I’m very sorry Benedict, I think that we can’t trade these weapons to you just because of some jewels.” Calvin resolutely expressed his apologies to Benedict, and then turned his head to call out to Bennett. “Bennett, take the others to bring the weapons we’ve forged. We’re going to give them all to Han today.”

“Understood, chief!” Bennett responded brightly and clearly, and then took a few young dwarves on a high spirited trip to the forges. All of the dwarves ignored the temptation of the jewels from these elves.

“Pardon, is he the Han that you speak of? Humans are the most despicable and evil of all races within the Dark Forest. You actually chose to trust a human instead of the envoys of nature? Elder Calvin, you can’t do this!”

When the elves saw Calvin point at Han Shuo and direct Bennett and the others to give the forged weapons to Han Shuo, they immediately started complaining with an infinite amount of suffering.

“Han is different from other humans. We trust him and help each other. So I’m truly sorry Benedict, I don’t think we’ll be able to trade these weapons to you.” Calvin was unmoved by Benedict’s complaints and said stubbornly.

The last time he’d left the dwarf village, Han Shuo hadn’t thought of using rations to trade for the dwarves’ weapons at all. Except, the dwarves would only accept Han Shuo’s rations if they undertook such a transaction. Who would’ve thought that the elves would eye this batch of dwarf-forged weapons interspersed with black iron ore not too long afterwards. What made Han Shuo surprised was that the dwarves had already repeatedly rejected Benedict’s sincere trading request and had solidly kept the weapons for Han Shuo.

“Elder, you can absolutely make your own decisions with these weapons. I wasn’t lusting after your weapons in gifting you these rations.” Han Shuo thought and explained sincerely to Calvin.

Nodding, Calvin smiled faintly, “You don’t need to explain Han. We know your good intentions. However, we can’t accept your items without any cause or reason. The teachings from our ancestors have taught us that everything needs to be gained through your own hard work. If we directly accept your gift, that will be a violation of the teachings our ancestors left behind, and will bring a bad atmosphere to the village, so I think you know what I mean.”

As Han Shuo and Calvin were speaking, Bennett and another crowd of dwarves had already brought over more than ten weapons. There were blades, swords, long spears, heavy mallets, double-edged axes, and all sorts of weapons. The weapons all gleamed with a shiny sparkle. The heavy mallets and double-edged axes gave one a thick and solid feeling, whereas the sharp edges of some of the blades, swords, and long spears appeared quite coldly sharp.

When Benedict and his entourage saw these weapons, their eyes all glinted with excitement. However, just as they were overcome with emotion, Han Shuo sighed with resignation and said, “Since the elder has spoken, then I’ll have to hesitantly accept these.”

Under the greedy gaze of Benedict and the other elves, these ten or so black iron ore infused, dwarf-forged weapons all made their way into Han Shuo’s space ring after he’d spoken.

“This human friend, I wonder if you’re willing to trade the dwarf-forged weapons to us? We’ve been preparing for a great battle recently and are going to suppress the presence of the forest trolls. If we have these weapons and our elven elders imbue it with magic, they will become astonishingly powerful magical weapons. The strength of experts like us will be greatly increased. We’re willing to use jewels to trade with you, what do you think?” A flash of disappointment streaked through Benedict’s eyes when he saw the weapons make their way into Han Shuo’s hands. He thought for a bit, and then seemed to suddenly think that it’d be easier to trade with Han Shuo, and so immediately spoke with some excitement to Han Shuo.

“Humans are the most despicable and evil of all races within the Dark Forest. How do you noble elves deign to transact with us base and lowly races?” Han Shuo smiled oddly as he looked at Benedict and flung the latter’s words back at him.

“In order to make the even more greedy and shameless forest trolls pay the price, us noble elves are willing to make a compromise and allow you, human, to trade with us.” What shocked Han Shuo was that Benedict didn’t seem to hear Han Shuo’s strong sarcasm at all, and rather self righteously displayed his magnanimity.

“Sorry, I have no interest in conducting any sort of transaction with you noble elves!” Han Shuo felt between tears and laughter, and had finally experienced the arrogance of the elves. He couldn’t help but shake his head as he turned them down.

Han Shuo suddenly heard all sorts of branches and twigs being broken off after he’d spoken, as if many people were approaching this location. Before Benedict had a chance to respond, Han Shuo frowned and asked, “Is there another entourage of elves coming from your side?”

“No, just us. What’s wrong?” Benedict asked, askance.

His thoughts moving, the three original demons suddenly swarmed out and vanished in three different directions outside the village. After a short while, Han Shuo made use of the original demons’ vision to see a dense crowd of five hundred to six hundred forest trolls, making their way over towards them, in massive columns.

The forest troll head that Han Shuo had met last time was fawning over another more bulky looking forest troll and describing something. It looked like the status of this forest troll was even higher. This made Han Shuo understand that there would be great trouble this time.

Chapter 99: A worshipped little skeleton

“Elder Calvin, has the village been discovered by forest trolls?” Han Shuo’s face turned grave as he turned towards Calvin, asking him in a solemn tone.

“Han, why are you suddenly asking such questions? There have been quite a few encounters with the forest trolls recently in the past couple of days, but even we don’t know if they’ve discovered something.” Calvin first started and then explained.

According to the field of vision coverage from the original demons, Han Shuo discovered that the current amount of forest trolls present numbered around five or six hundred this time. There were forest trolls, warriors, hunters, and priests. They all advanced in an orderly fashion, and coordinated with each other in exceedingly reasonable ways. This indicated that this batch of forest trolls must surely come from a strong faction. Five to six hundred forest trolls grouped with the right amount of troll hunters and priests would make for a sizeable force.

There were only 50 or 60 dwarves who were strong enough to participate in this battle within the village. Add to that Han Shuo and a few elves, their strength was completely subpar to that of the forest trolls’. This made Han Shuo understand that it would truly be tough to tide over this time’s danger.

“Five to six hundred forest trolls are headed in this direction. It looks like your village has truly been exposed.” Han Shuo sighed lowly and slowly revealed the truth.

Benedict had listened to Han Shuo’s words with some disbelief, but the group of dwarves that Calvin was leading immediately panicked upon hearing that five to six hundred forest trolls were headed their way. They were at a loss of what to do and proposed wild plans.

“What to do, what should we do?” An iron mallet waved in Bennett’s hands as he gave a glance at the female and children behind him, appearing very worried and resigned.

The dwarves weren't a race that was cowardly and afraid of danger, but they couldn't be irresponsible towards their females and children. When danger arrived, their first thought would be how to protect the women and children.

"Chief Calvin, I know that your village is hidden within a mountain valley. Are there any other ways of leaving the valley? No matter how suitable the valley is as a place to reside, I think we need to evacuate as quickly as possible. We'll be hard pressed to fight against five to six hundred forest trolls." Han Shuo tried persuading.

Calvin's brow was knit tightly as he appeared quite anxious. After thinking for a while, he spoke to Bennett first. "Go assemble all the villagers and have them pack their belongings and prepare to leave from the rear side of the mountain valley. We'll stay back and see if we can bring some retribution to these villains."

Bennett immediately left with Calvin's orders, calling out continuously towards the small houses in the back of the village, exhorting all the villagers to pick up rations and weapons, and to temporarily leave everything else behind.

At this moment, the two dwarves, who had been standing guard outside, finally rushed in with looks of panic, they started yelling out loudly before arriving where the chief stood, "Bad news! Terrible news! A lot of forest trolls are headed our way. They're everywhere within the shrubbery!"

Benedict had been a bit hesitant, but no longer doubted Han Shuo's words now. The group of elves, with Benedict as their leader, all unsheathed their weapons and wiped them down with calm expressions. Benedict held the bow behind his back in his hand, appearing ready for combat at any time.

"The forest trolls are the natural rival of us elves. I'd like them to taste of our power this time." Benedict didn't display any signs of fright and rather spoke with eagerness.

By this time, Bennett had already finished giving the dwarves behind him their orders. Utilizing his original demons. Han Shuo discovered that the forest trolls were indeed headed towards the mouth of the village. He looked back involuntarily at the dwarves around him and said to them, "I think we should block off the narrow passageway that leads to the village at this time, and endeavor to buy time for the women and children to leave first."

Han Shuo nodded at Calvin when he said these words and took a few steps forward to the mouth of the village. Benedict hesitated and indicated his intentions to the elves, and followed behind Han Shuo, heading for the entrance to the village.

Up until now, Han Shuo could basically be certain that these forest trolls were aiming for the dwarves. Otherwise, they wouldn't have all appeared here by such coincidence. The five hundred or so forest trolls had already started searching through the nearby shrubbery beneath the yells of the particularly stocky forest troll, searching for the entrance to the dwarves' village.

According to how the situation was developing, the shrubs and leaves covering the village entrance wouldn't be able to conceal it for much longer. Han Shuo didn't become panicked after arriving here and recited a portion of magical incantation. Several skeletal warriors and two bulky zombie warriors appeared in front of him.

"We should take this time to set up some simple traps. The entrance to the village will surely be discovered, but it's not spacious enough here, so we can take advantage of this to create some trouble for them," Han Shuo said calmly when these dark creatures appeared.

The skeletal warriors and zombies immediately started digging traps under Han Shuo's command. The zombie warriors possessed strong bodies and were in charge of moving rocks over long the distances to block the path. The dwarves had set up some traps here to begin with, Han Shuo merely added a few more measures. The dwarves also all mobilized themselves to help Han Shuo set up.

"Necromancy magic is the most disgusting magic, to think that you, human, are an evil necromancer!" Benedict seemed to abhor the appearance of the skeletal and zombie warriors as he complained.

Han Shuo was completely unmoved by Benedict's complaints and only concerned himself with setting up the traps. When Han Shuo felt that all was pretty much in readiness, he took out a few crossbows from his space ring and distributed them to the dwarves around him. He then directed them to retreat to the rear and disperse themselves within the strong growth of trees and shrubs.

The dwarves were masters of forging weapons, but the complex bows didn't need superb crafting skills, rather required precise designs and thought instead. The firing range and power of a crossbow was exceedingly high, and was one of the most outstanding inventions created by humans in recent years. Their drawbacks were that they were too heavy and that the frequency of firing wasn't that quick. Every crossbow needed a small amount of time to reload after firing, unlike how a bow and arrow, which could be quickly reloaded.

Han Shuo's body was strong, thus he could easily lift such heavy crossbows. Although the dwarves were diminutive in stature, their strength was also equal to Han Shuo's, and so they too lifted the crossbows easily.

As Han Shuo and the dwarves stood ready to defend, a loud forest troll shout traveled in from the distance. The forest trolls then immediately cheered and rapidly approached with loud yells. Through the eyes of the original demons, Han Shuo knew that one of the forest trolls had already discovered the concealed entrance.

Indeed, the new forest troll leader gave orders in the forest troll language as more than a hundred forest trolls came charging over with weapons in hand. The troll warriors were in the vanguard, with hunters and priests following close behind, as they carefully and slowly attempted to brush away at the coverings.

Han Shuo roared lowly and didn't wait for the forest trolls to walk through the entrance. The crossbow in his hand had already been fired, and the dwarves beside him also sent crossbow bolts whistling through the air.

Some of the forest trolls, that had just entered this area and hadn't had the time to peel back the coverings, were sent flying by the enormous momentum behind the crossbow bolts. One of the forest trolls, that Han Shuo had hit, was pierced through by his crossbow bolt and nailed to a tree that was the width of two people.

"Look at the power of my magical arrow." Benedict glanced disdainfully at Han Shuo and suddenly pulled back on his bowstring. Faint magical pulses came from the bow in his hand and the arrow suddenly began burning fiercely in mid air after it was shot out. When it landed amidst the forest trolls, it suddenly exploded ferociously with sparks. Ten or so forest trolls were struck by splash damage from the sparks and started burning. Three of them didn't put the flames out in time and were swallowed by the spreading tongues of fire.

Han Shuo was truly surprised, he hadn't expected the arrow to have such power and involuntarily looked askance at Benedict.

"Benedict, you shouldn't waste such precious magical arrows on these cursed forest trolls. You know that these magical arrows are all very precious!" A female elf was a bit angry at seeing Benedict show off and lectured him.

Benedict stuck out his tongue and made a face when the female elf lectured him and then spoke self righteously to Han Shuo, "Did you see that just now? The magical arrows that have been imbued with magic from our elders have such strong power after being shot out with a magical bow. If those dwarf-forged weapons are modified by us, they will immediately turn into powerful magical weapons and bring lots of trouble to the forest trolls. You should give those weapons to us."

It looked like the elf still hadn't forgotten his duty, even now, and was still attempting to use his naive and laughable words to persuade Han Shuo. It was a pity that apart from flicking him a glance in the beginning, Han Shuo paid no more attention to him and only calmly gave a few orders to the dwarves around him.

After the first batch of forest trolls paid a heavy price in casualties, they were much more cautious the second time around. They first had the troll warriors approach, and then the priests added blessings on them, making their bodies more nimble and strong. The enhanced forest trolls immediately shoveled away the weeds at the entrance with great enthusiasm.

At this moment, the crossbows in Han Shuo's and the dwarves' hands continuously shot out across the tall grass, but whenever their crossbolts appeared, the long spears of the troll hunters would rake through the air, also falling on Han Shuo and the dwarves' hiding place.

But because the crossbows had a longer firing range, this caused the forest trolls' judgement of distance to be off the mark. The long spears fell in rows in front of the group, without causing any damage to them.

After paying the price of the lives of a few more troll warriors, the forest trolls finally cleared away the obstacles to the village entrance. With another loud yell, the forest trolls raised their weapons and charged in with large steps.

The traps set at the entrance to the village started displaying their lethality. The forest trolls out in front all fell into deep holes with sharp sticks in the bottom, and they lay there moaning in pain. The entrance to the village was finally overcome, but not without the mounting forest troll death toll and casualties.

"There are simply too many forest trolls, I think we should retreat." Han Shuo looked at the village entrance thronging with forest trolls and understood that the difference between the two was simply too great. He shook his head and sighed.

Benedict also displayed his fright at this time and nodded in agreement with Han Shuo's words. "Yes, I think we should retreat first and wait for me to go back to the tribe to alert our people. When our people arrive, these cursed villains will pay a painful price."

When Han Shuo and Benedict said so, the ten or so dwarves around them seemed to be a bit dejected as they all laid down their weapons. One of them said, “The chief said that we should listen to Han. If Han wants us to retreat then we’ll retreat.”

Han Shuo smiled faintly upon hearing his words, “Since this is the case, then all of you should come back, otherwise we’ll be in big trouble.”

The dwarves, who had been bent on fighting to their deaths, all retreated to the back of the village in accordance with Han Shuo’s orders. The crossbows within their hands continued to fire. In the face of a densely packed forest troll advance, the crossbow bolts would all hit their targets, without needing to be aimed.

Upon seeing that the dwarves had already retreated, some of the dwarves also stood tactfully in the back. Han Shuo thought for a moment and summoned the little skeleton. He wanted to use the seven bone spurs on the little skeleton’s back to shed a last wave of blood and create some trouble for the forest trolls.

However, out of Han Shuo’s expectations, when the bone dagger wielding little skeleton appeared at the village entrance, he hadn’t even had the time to shoot out his bone spurs when the forest trolls in the very front all displayed very excited expressions. They laid down their weapons with a thud and bowed down to the little skeleton with highly raised hands, calling out continuously, “Datara, Datara, Datara...”

Han Shuo was flabbergasted and stunned where he stood. He didn’t know why the forest trolls were worshipping the little skeleton so faithfully.

Chapter 100: The demon's representation?

“Datara, Datara.”

The forest trolls on the outskirts also bowed down reverently in the din of the forest trolls' shouts and began shouting loudly as well.

“What, what's going on?” Not only Han Shuo, but the dwarves and elves around them were also astonished by the sudden change. One of the dwarves asked in sudden stupefaction.

“The skeletal warrior with wings seems to be similar to the demon that the forest trolls worship. This demon is innately evil and loves to seize everything. I've heard elders within the tribe mention that the demon the forest trolls worship is called Datara!” Benedict seemed to recall something at this point and suddenly cried out.

Not too far in the distance, a forest troll priest, so old that it seemed like it would close its eyes in final slumber at any moment, crawled swiftly towards the little skeleton on its knees. Han Shuo was rather taken aback that he crawled pretty fast, and had reached the little skeleton in a short while. The old forest troll priest murmured some things in the forest troll language at the little skeleton.

The little skeleton stood there in a stupor with his bone dagger, scratching his bright and clean skullcap, as if not knowing what was going on. He turned back to look at Han Shuo with an empty gaze, as if waiting for Han Shuo to give him orders.

Upon hearing Benedict's words, Han Shuo had a pretty good idea that something marvelous had happened. These forest trolls must have thought that the little skeleton was the demon that they worshipped. The old priest seemed to want to take the little skeleton somewhere, judging from its interactions. All the forest trolls in the back were frozen in worship on the ground, and no one mentioned the matter of invading the dwarf village again.

“Han, what's going on, what should we do?” A dwarf looked at Han Shuo and asked blankly.

Han Shuo was thinking furiously when he heard the dwarf's question. His head also ached with the difficulty of the situation. He waffled for a second, unsure what would happen afterwards and said to them, "I'll think of a way to delay the forest trolls. You guys leave the valley immediately and find a safe place with the chief and Bennett. I think I will be able to find you guys again."

"Will it be dangerous for you?" The dwarf was a bit uneasy at leaving Han Shuo's side and spoke a bit reluctantly.

"No worries, I have my ways to handle them. Benedict I think your party should leave as well. My skeletal warrior is a bit odd, but I don't think he's the demon that the forest trolls worship. I can't predict how well the situation will develop afterwards either, I think you'll be safer if you left with them." Han Shuo tried to slowly persuade the dwarves and elves that he was looking at.

"We'll be leaving, it's very dangerous here. I think we should notify the elders first." Benedict thought briefly, nodded and retreated with the other elves after speaking.

Under Han Shuo's urgings, the dwarves also left slowly, unwillingly to the mountain valley. One of the original demons, that had continuously been observing the forest trolls, suddenly split off and followed the dwarves as they retreated. This allowed Han Shuo to clearly view the path that the dwarves were taking to escape.

After a short while, there was no one else in the entrance to the village apart from Han Shuo and the little skeleton. Han Shuo's original demon had been observing the dwarves' movements and discovered that they were traversing a cold river and leaving from a diagonal crack in the mountain valley.

"Does anyone here speak the common tongue of the Continent?" Han Shuo walked out from the back and stood beside the little skeleton, asking in the language of the humans.

The old priest, that had been kneeling in front of the little skeleton and talking to him in the forest troll language, suddenly looked up at Han

Shuo, using the language of the humans in a slightly unpracticed manner, “You are with the mighty Datara, why are you a tricky human?”

“Are you sure that he’s the same as your Datara?” Han Shuo didn’t know whether to laugh or cry as he shook his head and asked oddly.

The face of the forest troll was a ghastly green and the dry skin that hung all over his body was like old tree bark that had been weathered by the wind and rains for many years. He displayed a look of extreme contempt and said, “Of course I wouldn’t be wrong, this is the representation of the divine Datara on this earth.”

As the old priest spoke, he solemnly took out a treasured ancient scroll from a leather bag. The scroll was slowly unfurled as his wizened hands opened it. Apart from a few squiggly lines in the forest troll language that were hard to make out, it was a picture of an enormous skeleton with wings on its back. The skeleton’s bones were a pure white and the wings on its back were bare of feathers. Based on the photo, the wings truly did bear a great deal of resemblance to the bone spurs on the little skeleton’s back.

There was a barren mountain peak beneath this large, white skeleton’s foot with all sorts of gold, silver, and jewelry piled up on the mountain peak, including some jewels that looked quite precious. The white skeleton had an empty socket for one eye and a black eyepatch covering the other, the outfit of a single eyed pirate who would burn, raid, and loot.

“This is the appearance of our mighty Datara, we wouldn’t be wrong. He is the representative of Datara in this world and will lead us to even more gold, silver, and jewelry. We’ll have so many jewels and food that we will never starve. The mighty Datara will lead our tribe to seize the lands of the tricky humans!” The tone of the old forest troll priest had become strangely fervent and he shouted loudly.

Apart from being slightly smaller and not pure white, the little skeleton was indeed quite similar to the Datara depicted on the scroll. No wonder the greedy forest trolls had thought the little skeleton was the representative of the looting demon Datara.

Although the unimaginably queer situation made Han Shuo feel quite surprised, a sudden thought struck him as he mused carefully. A trace of a wicked smile appeared on his lips as he gave a command to the little skeleton.

The little skeleton that had originally been dumbly standing there with bone dagger in hand suddenly waved the bone dagger at this moment, as his empty left hand made a gesture indicating for everyone to rise.

“Oh! Datara has heard our prayers!” The old forest troll priest immediately capered in great excitement as his chicken-like feet, withered hands also waved, speaking very ceremoniously in the low forest troll language.

The forest trolls that had knelt in homage all shouted loudly and stood up from the ground, taking off the pockets tied to themselves and shaking them strongly.

The little skeleton waited until all the forest trolls had stood up to use its empty left hand to point at Han Shuo, according to his orders. Under the puzzled gaze of the forest trolls, he used his empty hand to point to himself.

“He means for me to become his liaison and interact with you.” Han Shuo drew himself up proudly and spoke cockily to the old priest. The little skeleton nodded in a very timely fashion after Han Shuo gave the order, as if verifying what Han Shuo had just said.

“Why, why should this tricky human be your liaison?” The old forest troll priest obviously couldn’t accept this and immediately asked in confusion.

The little skeleton had extended the bone dagger and was already resting it on the old priest’s neck as soon as the old forest troll priest had finished speaking. The little skeleton stood on its tiptoes, trying to appear taller than he was. His two empty eye sockets stared directly at the old priest as bone chilling clattering teeth sounds came from his mouth.

The old forest troll priest was immediately frightened to the point of losing all strength in his body, crashing to the ground and genuflecting again. He raised his hands high above his head and cried out, "I will never dare question your decisions again, please don't take all we have!"

None of the forest trolls standing around dared to make a move when they saw the most venerated old priest within their tribe being publicly threatened. The only stood there with their heads hung and spoke something in the forest troll language.

"Get up, get up, your noble Datara has forgiven you. I think you'll acknowledge my status as liaison now?" Han Shuo was cackling inside as he spoke with every appearance of seriousness to the old priest.

Clutching his head, the old priest spoke with visible reluctance on his face and nodded, "Will great Datara and the liaison come with us to grace our tribe with their presence? We have some things to offer to the great Datara!"

"Didn't you come to rob the dwarves?" Han Shuo started slightly and opened his mouth to ask.

"No, after I heard members of the tribe describe the great one last time, I immediately told the tribe to search for traces of the great one. Those annoying dwarves are only a small village of a hundred people and isn't worth sending out so many elites from our tribes. We've heard that the great one had appeared nearby, which is why we sent out so many tribesmen this time, so we could welcome the great one back to its sacred ground." The old forest troll priest shook his head and explained to Han Shuo.

"Sacred ground, what sacred ground?" Han Shuo asked in surprise.

"A palace that our tribe has built especially for the great one. There are even antiques passed down from generation to generation. It's said that this was the great Datara's place to begin with, and so we will offer it all to the great one this time." The old priest looked at Han Shuo with some distaste, but didn't dare violate the little skeleton's orders as he explained impatiently.

"Very good, very good! Let's set out then!" Han Shuo was overjoyed when he heard these words and immediately urged the forest trolls to be on their way.

The old priest didn't say much and waved his hand. The most burly looking forest troll in the distance walked humbly towards the old priest. After giving a round of orders in gobbledegook, the leader immediately gave the order for the five, six hundred forest trolls to ignore the matter of the dwarves and set out for the deeper parts of the Dark Forest with great fanfare.

Four tall and burly troll warriors carried a luxurious carriage made of black jade with several brightly shining jewels embedded in it. There were soft feathers spread on within it as the little skeleton rode in it on their way into the depths of the Dark Forest. It looked like the forest trolls had come prepared.

The little skeleton lay leisurely within, looking to and fro. As a liaison, Han Shuo couldn't enjoy such comfort and could only proceed on foot with them. They met many magical creatures along the way, but ordinary magical creatures didn't dare approach such a large group of five to six hundred forest trolls. Even several level three or two wild and ferocious beasts decided not to continue the hunt when they saw the large group proceeding with great fanfare. Instead, they chose to stay far, far away from this large group made of a villainous tribe.

In the outskirts of the Dark Forest, the innately greedy forest trolls, with a love for robbery were renowned and greatly feared. Whether it was some of the more uncommon tribes living in the outskirts of the Dark Forest or the adventurers and merchants who'd ventured into the Dark Forest, they would always be robbed to a certain degree whenever they were met with forest trolls.

Apart from a few stronger lifeforms within the depths of the Dark Forest, these infamous villains on the outskirts of the Dark Forest were universally hated and feared. As hated rivals, the elves had fought numerous times with the forest trolls and hadn't been able to obtain victory. Nobody could stop their innate impulse for robbery.

As they neared the depths of the Dark Forest, even the formerly blustering forest trolls began to proceed with caution the deeper they entered into the Dark Forest, as if deathly afraid of creating any disturbances.

“Why is it that you become more timid the farther in you go?” Han Shuo had detected the abnormalities of the forest trolls and couldn’t help but ask the old priest beside him.

Flicking a glance around, the old priest explained, “We’ve now entered the middle area of the Dark Forest. There are many high level beasts here and several special tribes. The humans that appear here are also difficult to deal with. We hope that we won’t run into them, or there’ll be trouble.”

A thundering crash came from not too far away as a six to seven meter tall, frighteningly large white stone giant slowly moved away with a large tree thrown over his shoulder. A low caw sounded from the sky as an enormous black shadow flew over them. When the shadow was cast over the ground, two long, slender necks could easily be made out.

“The one covered in white stone dust is a mountain ridge giant. Their nature is fairly peaceful and they don’t like to fight. However, if you make him angry, it’ll be a disaster. What just flew overhead was the lowest level twin headed dragon. They’re actually not dragons, just a level two magical creature, but they can spit out venom and are tough to deal with.” The old priest spoke up in explanation upon seeing Han Shuo’s astonishment.

Nodding, Han Shuo sighed with great appreciation. “I finally understand why you dare act wildly only in the outskirts of the Dark Forest!”

Chapter 101: A place of extreme wood

The group followed carefully behind the old forest troll priest towards recessed terrain, finally stopping beside a river after a half day's time and passing through a broken section of mountain rock.

There was a river in the back and primitive houses made of wood all around there. There were also a few simple traps set up and several weird, towering trees. When they arrived, the original demon, that had been keeping an eye on the dwarves had to come back due to the distance between Han Shuo and the dwarves becoming too large. It circled this area and started surveying the various corners.

Leveraging the increased field of vision with the three original demons, Han Shuo discovered that this was an extremely large area. He made a rough calculation that there were several hundred huts here. It looked like this was the hideout of the forest trolls. Many green-skinned forest trolls clutched weapons in their hands, whether they were children or females, and were being trained by a strong forest troll warrior.

From the elves' description earlier, Han Shuo understood that the forest trolls were born with a natural inclination for raiding and looting. There was no such thing as self providing and self sufficiency in their lives. Whether food, drink, or items of use, they all naturally thought that these items should be earned through stealing. They, who worshipped the demon of raiding Datara, also treated children and women as a training target as this would increase their strength during raids.

When the old priest arrived, he used the language of the forest trolls to call something out loudly. All the forest trolls in the tribe, whether children, the elderly, or females, excitedly ripped off the pockets on their body and waved them in the air, calling out, "Datara, Datara!"

After continuing in this fashion for a while, the old priest finally continued conversing with Han Shuo in the language of the humans, "Come, I will take the great Datara and his liaison to the sacred grounds."

"Mm, hurry up. The great Datara is impatient." Han Shuo said with a darkened face.

The forest trolls continued carrying the little skeleton and Han Shuo continued on foot. Several troll warriors pushed in several wooden rafts from afar. Han Shuo and the little skeleton walked towards the wooden rafts when indicated by the old priest. Afterwards, some of the forest trolls paddled their wooden oars and set out for the river current.

The wooden rafts advanced slowly, docking at a patch of swampy earth after roughly half an hour. Han Shuo followed the old priest up the shore and discovered that all the trees here were towering and extremely large. The vibrant growth of the grass and shrubbery was enough to drown a person, and even the weeds here grew with great vigor.

The plants and trees on all sides seemed to be growing quite well, and a bizarre presence seemed to permeate the air. Pushing past the thick shrubbery, several troll warriors led the way. The old priest pointed out the road and Han Shuo followed behind him, heading for an even deeper part of the area.

As he made his way deeper, a feeling grew within Han Shuo that something was amiss, as if he'd heard of this place somewhere. He finally stopped in front of a tall house that looked like it was being hauled upwards by a towering, huge tree with this bemused mindset.

The thickly leafed branches of five to six very tall trees were intertwined, with the entwined branches supporting a large house in midair. The plants were growing exceptionally well around it, and there were also some bizarre flowers bearing some strange and exotic fruit.

Looking around the surroundings and blanking for quite a bit, Han Shuo's heart shook and he suddenly cried out in astonishment, "A place of extreme wood. Haha, this is actually a place of extreme wood! No wonder all the plants have developed so perfectly. So this is the case!"

A naturally formed place of extreme wood. The presence of the element of wood within it was much more dense than in other places. All the plants and trees that grew in a place of extreme wood were naturally much more luxuriant than in other places. Although the forest trolls worshipped the demon of raiding, Datara, it was said in legends that they were a race evolved from trees, and so they had a natural affinity for wood.

“The air here is clearer than anywhere else. Our ancestors searched for many years before discovering this place, and so built the palace of the sacred ground here. The stone statue of Datara was erected for worship inside. There are tributes offered to the great Datara every year in hopes that the great one will ensure our successful raids.” The old priest genuflected piously towards the house hovering in mid air and said all this softly.

After thinking for a while, the old priest seemed to think that this was inappropriate and immediately started bowing down to the little skeleton. He spoke some gobbledegook to the troll warriors lifting the little skeleton’s carriage. The troll warriors lowered the carriage and indicated for the little skeleton to depart from the carriage.

At this moment, Han Shuo was thinking of how his wood elite zombie was already at hand and was incredibly excited. He’d actually forgotten to continue giving orders to the little skeleton. The old priest made a number of sincere requests and discovered that the little skeleton was still sitting motionless within the carriage. His brow tightly knit together, he sank to his knees in front of Han Shuo. “Liaison, why doesn’t the great Datara descend from the carriage? Have we done something wrong?”

The old priest’s words immediately startled Han Shuo from his daydream. He turned his head and discovered that the little skeleton was lying there lazily, as if he’d fallen asleep. Han Shuo gave an order and the little skeleton’s legs straightened, standing up abruptly and looked around with his shiny skull, the bone dagger in his hand.

“Datara was contemplating just now and didn’t hear your calls. Come, we go up now!” Han Shuo snickered inwardly but spoke seriously to the old priest.

Timidly nodding his head, the old priest didn’t dare to ask anything else. He walked to the back of one of the towering trees and started climbing up after pulling down a soft ladder, woven from tree branches. Han Shuo followed behind the old priest and climbed up, also making use of the soft ladder.

The little skeleton walked out from within the carriage and moved to somewhere in the distance before Han Shuo had a chance to give orders to the little skeleton. What happened next was something out of everyone's expectation as it made use of the momentum from charging forward, extended both leg bones, and flew into the sky when the seven bone spurs on its back flapped around randomly. It landed in front of the door to the big house in the sky before Han Shuo and the old priest reached it.

His body wavering in front of the big house, the little skeleton slowly regained his footing and shook his head. He then pulled open the door and entered the house, with pilipala sounds of items being rifled through sounding out.

"Datara, Datara!" The old priest wore an expression of excitement as he started calling out in gobbledegook.

Finally, the old priest and Han Shuo had climbed up to the steps in front of the big house. Some other forest trolls were standing guard outside and no one else had been allowed up.

Han Shuo followed the excited old priest into the house and immediately saw an enormous sculpture of a skeleton in the middle of the room. It was exactly the same as the one that Han Shuo had seen on the old priest's ancient scroll earlier, with the only difference being that the enormous skeleton wearing an eyepatch wielded a weapon that looked similar to the scythe that the Grim Reaper carried in its right hand. It grasped a large satchel in its left hand, and it bulged as if holding many spoils from raids.

It was brightly lit inside, with all sorts of colored jewels embedded in the wooden walls. Gold and jewelry could be seen everywhere on the ground. The Han Shuo of now wasn't someone who didn't recognize wealth, and he noticed that all the various jewels in the wooden walls were absolutely priceless as they exuded radiant and sparkling glimmers. The cups and cutlery were placed on a jade table and were all made of beautiful jade and gold, dazzling Han Shuo's eyes.

The little skeleton hefted its bone dagger as it ran a hand over its gleaming skullcap, circling continuously around the enormous stone sculpture erected in the center of the house. He would occasionally touch the featherless wings behind the giant stone skeleton sculpture, and would run its hand along its back to touch the seven bone spurs, seeming to be quite puzzled as to why the great stone sculpture looked so much like him.

Except, compared to the stone sculpture, the little skeleton was almost half its size. The scene looked quite odd with a little skeleton standing next to a big skeleton.

When Han Shuo and the old priest entered, they noticed in confusion that the little skeleton was circling around the statue of Datara. As Han Shuo observed the little skeleton, he suddenly discovered that the little skeleton's movements were quite human like. This prevented Han Shuo from giving any orders to the little skeleton, causing him to be astonished. He looked intently at the little skeleton with a heated gaze instead, intending to see what he was up to.

Just as Han Shuo was astonished, he saw the little skeleton suddenly stop right in front of the statue of the demon Datara. His empty sockets stared at the eyepatch over Datara's left eye, and then extended a hand to feel his own left eye socket, as if wondering why he didn't have an eye patch.

The little skeleton suddenly jumped up and extended a hand to rip off Datara's eye patch. When the little skeleton landed, it was with an eye patch in hand. There was a purple gem concealed in the left eye socket of the now eye patch-less Datara, as if it was an eyeball. The originally lifeless stone sculpture of the demon Datara now appeared to have a few traces of life to it with the addition of a purple eye. It gave Han Shuo the misguided feeling that the sculpture was looking at him.

At this moment, the purple eyeball seemed to rotate once and glow weakly with soft, purple light, as if the demon Datara had revived suddenly.

“Oh, the great Datara has opened the ‘Purple Demon Eye’, the great Datara has manifested!” The old priest displayed jubilation as he went crazy with excitement and buried his head in the ground, hollering loudly.

The little skeleton, previously standing there dumbly, suddenly moved a small table in front of the statue of the demon Datara and leapt onto it. He stood on his tiptoes and reached a hand towards the left eye of the statue of the demon Datara. As Han Shuo’s scalp grew numb, the little skeleton firmly gouged the purple demon eye out and lifted it high for a glance before stuffing it into his own left eye socket.

Han Shuo didn’t know what to do here either, but before he’d thought through what should be done, he suddenly felt a spitting pain in his head. He looked at the little skeleton and realized that the little skeleton had somehow firmly stuffed the purple demon eye into his own eye socket.

However, when the purple demon eye entered his left eye socket, the little skeleton also appeared to be in pain. His body shuddered and he then clutched his head to roll on the ground in pain. As the host, Han Shuo shared a mental connection with the little skeleton and also felt the same wracking pain. An enormous, foreign energy was emanating from the little skeleton’s purple demon eye. Han Shuo could clearly feel that the purple demon eye was trying to intrude into his and the little demon’s body, as if trying to take control of the two bodies.

“Great Datara, liaison, what’s happening to you two?” The old forest troll priest lifted his head to see that something was amiss with Han Shuo and the little skeleton, and immediately cried out in inquiry.

“Get out, leave first! The great Datara has some things to do.” Han Shuo roared as he held up beneath the searing pain.

The old forest troll priest was startled as he frantically walked out of the house in confusion. He stayed outside to observe what was happening within the sacred ground.

Han Shuo immediately clutched his head when the old priest left and curled into a ball with the small skeleton. Han Shuo’s heart was filled with baffled fear. If this purple demon eye really did belong to the demon Datara, then this strange, energy invading his body would naturally come from Datara. A demon was a type of deity and their power wasn't something that humans could withstand. This made Han Shuo at a loss for what he should do at the moment.

This enormous power was spreading out from the purple demon eye within the little skeleton's left eye socket. Han Shuo first gave the order to remove the purple demon eye, but the little skeleton had shoved it into his eye in a way that no matter how the little skeleton grappled with the purple demon eye, he was unable to remove it again.

As one human and one skeleton rolled around continuously inside and convulsed with pain, another wondrous power emanated from the eye patch that the little skeleton had held onto during all this time. Because his brain was hurting to the extreme, Han Shuo's perception grew tremendously and he suddenly detected the abnormality. He grasped at every possible solution in his panic and gave the little skeleton the order to put on the eye patch.

It was magical that the mysterious power attempting to take over their bodies suddenly vanished without a trace after the little skeleton frantically put the eye patch on. The profusely sweating Han Shuo slowly returned to normal.

The eye patch looked quite appropriate on the statue of the demon Datara, but it was noticeably bigger on the little skeleton. The eye patch almost covered the entire left side of his face, and he looked a bit comical and funny.

"Never remove the eye patch no matter when or what." Han Shuo recovered himself and ignored all these bizarre happenings, giving the little skeleton this order first.

Chapter 102: Looting the tribute to the demon

There seemed to be an evil power of Datara's contained within the purple demon eye. The eye patch also seemed to have the ability to seal that power, making Han Shuo feel that it was very strange. His eyes kept looking over at the comical eye patch on the little skeletons' head, attempting to discover something, anything.

However, Han Shuo quickly realized that his efforts were futile. He could no longer detect anything out of the ordinary from the purple demon eye after it'd been covered by the eye patch. Apart from the jewels and beautiful jade scattered throughout the entire house, there was nothing else worth noticing. When Han Shuo no longer felt endangered, he rose to summon the old forest troll priest.

When the old priest entered, his gaze instantly converged on the statue of Datara, now missing the purple demon eye. He was incredibly astonished and asked, "What, what's happened? Why is the purple demon eye that the great Datara left behind gone?"

Pointing at the little skeleton, Han Shuo smiled faintly and explained, "The eye has already been reclaimed by the great Datara of this world. Do you not see the eye patch on his left eye?"

The old priest finally reacted when Han Shuo gave this reminder and looked at the little skeleton in astonishment. The old priest immediately fell to his knees and cried out, "Congratulations to the great Datara! My tribe has always protected the purple demon eye according to your final wishes, and now that the purple demon eye has returned into your grasp, my tribe has fulfilled what you have entrusted us with."

"Apart from the purple demon eye, was there anything else you offered as tribute to the great Datara?" Han Shuo thought and stared at the old priest in question.

The old priest was startled and mused thoughtfully with his brow furrowed. He shook his head and said, “We watched over the purple demon eye in accordance with the great one’s last wishes. Apart from this, all the treasure has also been offered to the great Datara.”

“Very good, very good.” Han Shuo nodded his head and said to the old priest. “Leave for now, the great Datara will emerge to guide you in a moment.”

The old priest reverently backed out of the great house, and Han Shuo started unstintingly looting everything within the house. The gold, jewels, and jade scattered across the ground vanished one by one into Han Shuo’s space ring. Han Shuo slightly estimated the wealth within and felt that it was likely worth tens of thousands of gold coins. They were all items that the forest trolls had offered to the demon Datara after stealing from others.

Han Shuo temporarily ignored the heavier items, and also didn’t immediately attempt to pry the jewels embedded into the wooden walls out. He first put away the jewels, gold, and jade scattered on the floor, and then took inventory of his haul. He felt that it was a good place to stop for now.

Apart from a few larger antiques and the jewels embedded into the house, many of the valuable jewels, gold, and jade had made their way into Han Shuo’s space ring.

However, the capacity within Han Shuo’s space ring was limited and there were some other items stored within as well. He’d only taken one third of the items within the house, but the value of this one third was likely tens of thousands of gold coins as well. It looked like the forest trolls had reaped rich rewards after many years of raiding.

Since the little skeleton had become the forest trolls’ great Datara, Han Shuo once again started thinking furiously. He would be able to compel the forest trolls to do certain things by taking advantage of the little skeleton’s identity. He wasn’t worried that the items within the house would magically disappear – they should be quite safe in here. He’d have to come back sooner or later to refine the wood elite zombie, so Han Shuo wasn't in a hurry.

The forest trolls were a race that was universally hated and disdained within the Dark Forest. With the presence of the little skeleton now, Han Shuo could swagger about in borrowed influence and compel them to action. The only thing he was hesitant about was – what could he do with these forest trolls?

Han Shuo suddenly felt a huge headache as he thought. These forest trolls were naturally greedy and loved looting from others. This wouldn't be changed no matter what. This made Han Shuo not know how to control them. If it wasn't for the fact that they had mistaken the little skeleton for the demon Datara and was worshipping him, Han Shuo didn't mind killing them all and taking all their belongings.

However, with the little skeleton now, Han Shuo could make use of them. It seemed too much of a waste to kill them then. He wracked his brains painfully for a bit. Han Shuo felt that their innate raiding nature would be unable to be changed, the only thing he could change was who they raided. If the target they raided could shift to the equally infamous goblins or man-eating monsters, or the troops of some enemy empires, then a bad thing would become something good.

When he thought this point through, Han Shuo left the house with the little skeleton. He made use of the surveillance of the three original demons to obtain a full grasp of the place that the forest trolls were guarding. When he descended from the house, Han Shuo opened his mouth to give orders, "The great Datara has just descended here and is unfamiliar with the current state of this world. The great Datara needs to familiarize himself with the Dark Forest and then point out the way for your future. Do not continue to raid the dwarves during this process, the great Datara needs them alive and well."

Although many questions existed within the heart of the old forest troll priest, he didn't dare question Han Shuo's words. He only drooped his head and asked respectfully, "Do you need us to send out warriors to help the great Datara get to know these surroundings?"

“No need, The great Datara and I will remain within your tribe over the next couple of days. You can just stay here and wait.” Han Shuo didn’t take the forest trolls’ wooden raft after these words and left with the little skeleton after giving a few more commands.

Han Shuo didn’t immediately return to the cemetery of death after leaving the area, but took the little skeleton with him on a trip to case the area.

Since he wanted to collect the five divine zombies, Han Shuo would naturally not let go of a naturally formed place of extreme wood. Apart from the forest trolls guarding the wooden house and some amazingly exuberant growth of trees and grass nearby, there was nothing else.

Han Shuo finally felt at ease after releasing the three originals demons and having them scout out the area. He planned on returning to the outskirts of the cemetery of death.

Han Shuo had closely observed the surroundings through the original demons on his way here and the way back had long since been imprinted in his heart. He didn’t directly head towards the river to return, but walked unhurriedly along the river current. He felt a bit hungry halfway through his trip and looked at the strange fish joyously swimming around in the clear waters. A thought struck him, and the Demonslayer Edge flew out with a whoosh. It sank into the water according to Han Shuo’s intentions and returned to Han Shuo’s hands after piercing through two large fish.

The little skeleton left with bone dagger in hand under Han Shuo’s orders and came back with a bunch of wooden materials after a while. He agilely constructed a rack, whereas Han Shuo lit the fire and set the two big fish on the rack. He then took out spices from his space ring and sprinkled it over the baking fish. A tempting smell slowly began to spread out.

A black shadow dashed in from the far skies. When a great gust of wind flapped Han Shuo’s clothes, a pungent and disgusting stink attacked his nose, making disgust well up within Han Shuo. When he raised his head and looked up angrily, the black shadow had risen from low to high and returned high up in the sky, forming a black dot.

“Damned ugly bird, so disgusting!” Han Shuo cursed and turned the almost ready fish onto the other side.

Just at this moment, the black shadow swept down from the distance with a whistling sound, rising back up into the air when it was not too far from the top of Han Shuo’s head, but Han Shuo had been prepared and saw the black shadow clearly this time – it had the body of an eagle, but the face of an exceedingly ugly woman, a harpy.

Harpies and Deepwater Venom Pythons were all level three magical creatures. She had the face of a human, but couldn’t make human sounds. A disgusting scent could always be found on her since she liked to scavenge the corpses of humans. When one caught the eye of a harpy, she would continuously test them until she found the right opportunity to suddenly dive at your scalp and use the disgusting scent on her body to disorient you, then use her sharp claws to rip your head apart and start eating.

Within the Dark Forest, it would be very tricky when one caught the eye of a harpy because of her agile flight speed. When Han Shuo discovered that he had caught the attention of this harpy, he used piercingly cold eyes to look at the harpy circling overhead and snorted lightly, “Looking for death?”

Maintaining his position of baking fish, Han Shuo ignored the continuous feints from the harpy overhead. The little skeleton wielding the bone dagger was a bit restless at his side, seemingly to want to bring this annoying harpy down, but temporarily took no action beneath Han Shuo’s soothing.

At this moment, several people slowly emerged in the distance. They looked like they belonged to a young adventurer’s crew. They had mages, archers, and warriors, numbering six in total. They looked at the circling harpy and cursed lowly at the irritating harpy.

Han Shuo had been staring intently at the harpy and planning on taking care of her, when he finally realized that the harpy’s original target seemed to have been them when he heard their curses. She'd suddenly switched targets when she saw him here alone, and attempted to eat him first.

One of the swordsmen had discovered Han Shuo via the delicious smell of the baking fish. He pointed out Han Shuo to his companions and the band of six young adventurers with males and females started heading his way.

Chapter 103: The Fruit of Dagmar

“Hello friend, are you adventuring alone in the Dark Forest?” The swordsman called out softly when he was quite a distance away from Han Shuo.

Han Shuo had long since discovered these six and had desummoned the little skeleton again since he didn’t want to reveal his status as a necromancer. He lifted his head when he heard the other’s voice and nodded at the swordsman. “That’s right.”

The cross legged harpy whooshed past overhead, but didn’t dare to continue testing Han Shuo’s patience when she saw the six adventurers meet up with him. She flew to a higher vantage point to observe the happenings from the sky.

The six adventurers were a team of three warriors, two mages, and one archer. The archer was a female elf, and the three male warriors consisted of one senior swordswoman and two journeyman swordsmen. In addition to them, there was one male journeyman mage and one female adept mage.

After Han Shuo had participated in the test given by the Academy, he now knew of some of the level differentiations and symbols used by the Magic Association and the Knight Association.

Mages would have an exquisite, small magic staff embroidered on the shoulder of their mage robes according to strength. Novice mages would possess the image of a magic staff, and each successive level would add another magic staff. Swordsmen and Knights had similar ways of differentiation, with swordsmen using swords as their emblems and knights using battlesteeds.

The robes of the mages and swordsmen looked like they’d been verified by the Magic Association and the Knight Association, and thus emblems representing their strengths were attached to the clothes they were wearing. Han Shuo could easily determine their strength with just a glance.

The six of them weren't weak, but a bit too weak if they were to venture into the depths of the Dark Forest. This was why the harpy dared to follow them when she discovered these six. If any of them were an archmage that could fly, then the harpy would've run as far as possible and wouldn't dare to look for chances to attack them.

"I'm called Odysseus. These are my companions. I think you've noticed the harpy's disturbance earlier. I'm very sorry to say that the harpy has been targeting us and shifted her attentions to you when she discovered that you were walking alone."

"As a level three magical creature, it was truly difficult to fight a harpy since she can fly in the air. If you don't mind, you can walk with us. The harpy shouldn't dare come down and cause trouble if the seven of us are together." The senior swordsman, Odysseus, spoke sincerely to Han Shuo.

Shaking his head, Han Shuo declined with a smile, "That's alright. I think you want to head further into the Dark Forest, but I'd like to go back to the outskirts. We're not taking the same path, so I won't trouble you."

"How can this be? If you continue to walk alone, the harpy will never give up on you. I think you should stay with us, or you'll be in greater trouble or even die!" One of the female adept mages Aphrodite said softly.

The others also protested when they heard Aphrodite's words, but Han Shuo didn't agree to leave with them. Although the six weren't that weak, only the archer's arrows had any ability to cause trouble for the harpy. Once the flight capable harpy dashed up in the air, the swordsmen would pose no threat to her whatsoever and magic may not be effective because of the distance.

However, Han Shuo was armed with the Demonslayer Edge and the crossbow, add to that the fact that the little skeleton could also fly up into the air using his bone spurs, if the harpy was so oblivious as to dare attack him, then painful wallops from Han Shuo and the little skeleton would be awaiting her. Therefore, Han Shuo wasn't that afraid of the harpy. This was why he'd turned down the invitation from the six adventurers and chosen to set off alone.

“Heh heh, thank you for your concern, but I don’t think it’d be that easy for the harpy to catch me.” Han Shuo responded with a smile and grabbed his two baked fish. He didn’t respond to the six young adventurers again and walked back in the direction they’d come from alone.

The six young adventurers were startled when they saw Han Shuo leave leisurely. The senior swordsman Odysseus opened his mouth to say, “Let’s observe in the distance. If he truly has a method to deal with the harpy, then we’ll decide to leave. Otherwise we’ll help him, to prevent him from being eaten.”

“Captain, that person’s already turned us down, do we have to do this?” Journeyman swordsman Gordon was rather unwilling as he spoke sullenly.

“The harpy’s original target was us and only troubled others because we started heading in this direction. I think we should own up to this responsibility.” Odysseus lectured Gordon and directed the others to follow him, trailing far behind Han Shuo.

After walking roughly five minutes, the harpy circling over Han Shuo finally made another move. She dived down from high up in the sky and once again soared back up into the clouds with a screeching whistle when she’d almost landed on his head, baiting Han Shuo with extreme patience.

However, Han Shuo was even more patient than her. Although his two hands looked empty, the Demonslayer Edge was ready to erupt into the air at any time, and his crossbow was already prepared to fire within his space ring. As soon as the harpy dared enter within range, Han Shuo wouldn’t mind killing this level three magical creature with one shot.

As for the six adventurers following at a distance, Han Shuo could see everything clearly. He didn’t pay much attention to their kindheartedness and continued walking towards the cemetery of death at a leisurely pace.

The harpy finally couldn’t contain herself after repeatedly testing him and once again swooped in directly towards Han Shuo with her sharp claws curved, quickly approaching Han Shuo’s skullcap.

A disgusting stench assaulted his nostrils and immediately wafted around Han Shuo's being. Most people would be temporarily dizzy and disoriented after catching a whiff of this stench, but Han Shuo's body had been trained to an unknown level of indomitability and wasn't affected by this at all. He still fakely swayed in accordance with the harpy's intentions, as if he would crash to the ground at any given moment.

"Oh no! He's been disoriented by the stench of the harpy's body, he's in danger! We should go save him!" The adept mage Aphrodite suddenly called out as the six adventurers no longer concerned themselves with concealment and walked out from the shrubbery behind him. The archer frantically shot arrows towards the harpy.

At this moment, the harpy, who'd been afraid to commit herself to a full descent, finally seemed to think that the timing was finally right. She'd maintained a distance of seven or eight meters from the ground when she suddenly shot like lightning down towards Han Shuo, a pair of iron claws locked onto Han Shuo's head, seeming to want to rip Han Shuo's bones apart.

A cold smile blossoming from the corners of his mouth, Han Shuo's body swayed even more and stiffened right before the harpy's iron claws landed on his head. He quickly fell straight backwards so that the claws, that had been reaching for Han Shuo's head, landed on empty air.

Just as the harpy called out strangely and was going to try to make another move, the Demonslayer Edge, interspersed with red light, suddenly slashed through the air and brought with it a fierce, flaming surge of strength that flooded into the harpy's body.

A desolate, low call sounded as the harpy flapped her wings, wobbling in a hurried attempt to leave the ground. The crossbow was already grasped in Han Shuo's hand at this moment and shot out ruthlessly after locking onto the harpy's thin neck.

Red light flaring out from her body, the harpy cried out in continuous pain. She was absolutely unable to stabilize her body at this time and naturally didn't notice an even more lethal attack nearing. The crossbow bolt strongly pierced her neck and sent her body flying backwards. Her neck maintained the position of looking back up at the sky as she suddenly fell onto the ground.

“Oh, my gosh, he shot down the harpy!” Swordsman Andrew arrived swiftly after closing the distance and suddenly discovered that the harpy’s body had fallen to the ground. He exclaimed in surprise and found it hard to believe the sight.

The other adventurers, who had planned on reciting incantations or shooting down the harpy, also stilled the movements of their hands and looked at the harpy fluttering weakly in the distance, their faces also filled with astonishment.

Under Han Shuo’s thoughts, the Demonslayer Edge had used the magical flames of the “Mystical Glacial Spellfire” after plunging into the harpy’s body to incinerate her internal organs. No smoke appeared, but the harpy’s body quickly turned into a charred mess and the thick scent traveled even further.

Standing up and patting off the dust on his body, Han Shuo walked over to the thoroughly fried harpy, held his breath, and took out the Demonslayer Edge. Excavating the core of a level three magical creature from her body, he then chopped off her two iron claws and stored them within his space ring.

A level three magical creature wasn’t actually that easy to deal with, otherwise the six adventurers wouldn’t have had such a headache. The harpy has always relied on the overwhelming stench within her body and her position from high up in the air to be successful in every endeavor.

It was a pity that her two advantages were completely ineffective against Han Shuo, and she finally became a target for Han Shuo to take advantage of. Add to that the unparalleled sharpness of the Demonslayer Edge and the fact that it could strike at will in accordance with Han Shuo’s wishes, that was what caused her to die so quickly and terribly.

“Hi friend, you’re quite strong indeed. It looks like our concerns were indeed extraneous.” Odysseus had finally made it to Han Shuo from the distance and faced the latter merrily.

Although these people hadn't been of any help, Han Shuo had gained an understanding of their conversation and methods through the originals demons. He felt that these people were quite decent, and now that their captain Odysseus spoke thus, Han Shuo nodded with a faint smile, "I was only lucky, my real strength isn't even close to your level."

"Heh heh, you're too humble." Odysseus obviously didn't believe Han Shuo's words as he responded politely.

"Captain, since he's not in danger, I think we should continue deeper into the southern parts of the Dark Forest to continue searching for the 'Fruit of Dagmar'." Gordon walked over from the distance and rushed towards Odysseus.

"Ai, I wonder if the 'Fruit of Dagmar' that we're searching for really exists. A fruit that looks like a human brain, I've never heard of something like this!" Adept mage Aphrodite sighed.

Han Shuo had been about to take his leave when he heard Aphrodite's words and didn't leave immediately. He rather looked at Aphrodite in confusion and asked, "What kind of item is this 'Fruit of Dagmar'? Why is it shaped like a human's brain? This is really a bit incredible, can you tell me about it?"

"I've heard everything about the 'Fruit of Dagmar' from our captain Odysseus. He knows more about it." Aphrodite smiled in a friendly fashion at Han Shuo and pointed at Odysseus.

Odysseus smiled faintly, "Are you also interested in the 'Fruit of Dagmar'? Heh heh, the legends say that Dagmar was a demon who enjoyed eating human brains. It's possible for a very strange fruit to be produced in the place where he's buried. The fruit is the size of a fist and has dark brown veins running over it. It looks very similar to a human brain."

"It's said that the 'Fruit of Dagmar' has magical properties. Ordinary people will become confused and turn insane if they eat it, but it's said that if the 'Fruit of Dagmar' is crushed by a pharmacist, it can be made into very precious medicine. I've recently received a request from someone and have decided to try my luck within the Dark Forest to see if I could find the ‘Fruit of Dagmar.’”

Han Shuo was suddenly bizarrely gleeful after he heard Odysseus’ words. In Chu Cang Lan’s memories, there was a fruit called “Divine Brain Fruit”. It had the effect of forcefully expanding the human brain. It could turn an ordinary person into a madman, but if a demon practitioner in the “molded spirit” stage like Han Shuo partook of this “Divine Brain Fruit”, then he could leverage the effects to greatly increase his level of training.

Han Shuo hadn’t contemplated in this direction to begin with because he’d thought that it was impossible for the “Divine Brain Fruit” to exist within this world, but Odysseus’ description of the “Fruit of Dagmar” were the exact same shape of the “Divine Brain Fruit.”

He was unable to resist the temptation of gaining a fruit that could greatly improve his current level of training. Han Shuo thought no more of it as he asked directly after Odysseus finished explaining, “If you don’t mind, I’d like to go search for this ‘Fruit of Dagmar’ with you?”

Odysseus and the six adventurers suddenly looked at each other after Han Shuo spoke. They all felt extremely surprised as they wouldn’t have thought Han Shuo would have such a proposal.

Chapter 104: Forming a team for an adventure

“We’re actually not holding out too much hope on finding the ‘Fruit of Dagmar’, and are just trying our luck in the depths of the southern parts of the Dark Forest. We only know that someone has once seen this fruit somewhere, but we’re uncertain if that was the ‘Fruit of Dagmar’, or if it’s been taken by others already. Have you really decided to join us on this expedition to search for the unknown?” Odysseus looked at Han Shuo and explained seriously before asking him.

Han Shuo knew that this group of people didn’t have much surety after hearing Odysseus’ words, but he thought about it, and felt that he didn’t seem to have much to do temporarily, and would just be returning to the cemetery of death to engage in endless rounds of training to improve himself. If he was lucky enough to obtain the “Divine Brain Fruit”, then Han Shuo’s “molded spirit” realm would be greatly enhanced.

Increasing his realm meant that this would also benefit Han Shuo’s mental strength. Therefore, Han Shuo gravely considered and felt that the risk was worth taking with them.

Nodding, Han Shuo looked at Odysseus and said firmly, “Yes, I would like to go with you into the depths of the southern part of the Dark Forest, but if we are truly able to discover the ‘Fruit of Dagmar’, I wish to receive one as well.”

“Since you insist, we’re very happy to have you join us. I’m just trying my luck for the ‘Fruit of Dagmar’, so don’t have high hopes. Our main goal is to venture into the Dark Forest because it’s said that there’s even more tempting items hidden in its depths. Heh heh, if we do discover the ‘Fruit of Dagmar’, we only need one to fulfill our mission, you can take the rest, no problem.” Odysseus smiled.

The further one delved into the Dark Forest, the greater the danger became. The real danger would only be slowly revealed. There were even stronger magical creatures within, some mystical races, and all sorts of lethal plant species.

But various alluring riches and fortune could also be found amidst the danger. Some exotic plants would grow only in the deeper parts, and many would fetch high prices. There were also many things that could be sold from the bodies of level one, two, and three magical creatures, but the caveat was that you had to kill them first.

The two sides reached an agreement and didn't continue tarrying. Odysseus introduced Han Shuo to his other companions and the group of seven set off deeper into the area.

The sacred ground that the forest trolls were protecting was not too far up ahead. The forest troll warriors were standing guard over the area. Although there was still some riches within the sacred grounds, Han Shuo already viewed it as his personal property. So under Han Shuo's purposeful guidance, the band of people avoided the area and continued forward after making a small detour.

They didn't run into much danger after walking for a day, and everyone made camp on the banks of a river when it was nightfall. They shoveled out some of the luxuriant growth of shrubbery in the surroundings and Aphrodite took out some tents from the space ring that she wore on her hand, similar to Han Shuo's. Everyone set up their tents, made a bonfire, and started cooking food.

There were fat fish swimming about in the clear river waters on the side. As a water adept mage, Aphrodite cast a minor water magic and caught roughly ten fish. Everyone used their self made wooden forks to spear the fat fish and start baking them.

After everyone had eaten the fully cooked fish and talked for a short while around the bonfire, everyone headed into their own tents to sleep. The female elven archer and the water adept mage Aphrodite slept in one tent, while the four males slept two to a tent. Han Shuo eagerly volunteered to take the watch, and found an isolated place to train his magical yuan when everyone had entered the tents and settled down.

With three originals demons by his side, Han Shuo didn't need to pay much attention at all, but training his magical yuan was the foundation for Han Shuo's future development, therefore he couldn't slack off for a single second. He held up beneath the onslaught of sudden pain and pleasure in his mind and silently sank into his training.

It wasn't until the second half of the night when a sudden strange sound startled Han Shuo out of his training. He raised his hand to wipe the sweat away from his brow as everything his three original demons was observing fell into his vision. One of the original demons left its post and flew out towards the source of the sound, quickly approaching the origin in the night.

A twin headed dragon was staggering in from the distance. Fresh, green blood was flowing from one of its necks and it seemed to have suffered from heavy injuries. It flew swiftly, heedless of direction, towards their location. Although a twin headed dragon wasn't really a true dragon, it was still a strong level two magical beast. Han Shuo didn't know why it was so bedraggled and had fallen to the straits of fleeing for its life.

One of the original demons kept an eye on the twin headed dragon's movement, another split off and sped back in the direction that the twin headed dragon had come from, attempting to see what was out there that'd made the twin headed dragon run off, injured. It was a pity that Han Shuo didn't discover anything after the original demon had flown a certain distance.

Upon seeing the disoriented twin headed dragon was headed in their direction, Han Shuo immediately stood up and swiftly sped towards the people's tents, shaking their tent poles and calling out loudly, "Wake up, something's happening!"

Deeply asleep, the adventurers all groggily heard Han Shuo's shouts and swiftly put on their clothes, walking out of the tents within ten seconds. It was about to enter wintertime and the temperature at night was exceedingly cold. The six adventurers were solidly wrapped up with only their faces peeking out.

Because Han Shuo's surveillance had been conducted through the original demons, the six people still couldn't detect anything out of the ordinary, even though the twin headed dragon was speedily approaching. Odysseus looked in confusion at the surroundings and then back at Han Shuo, "Everything seems very orderly, where's the situation?"

"A twin headed dragon is five hundred meters north of our position and is quickly approaching. I believe he'll be of danger to us and we need to prepare immediately." Han Shuo didn't have time to explain much to them and immediately voiced the truth.

Gordon didn't seem to believe Han Shuo's words and was about to open his mouth in doubt when Odysseus suddenly said in a low voice, "If this is the case, we'll make preparations immediately. A twin headed dragon's temper is violent and is not kindly disposed towards humans. I think it will bring trouble to us if it discovers our presence."

The female archer took out two arrows and said with some concern, "A twin headed dragon is a level two magical creature. Not only can it spray poison, but the two heads can attack directly with sharp teeth. It will be a difficult fight for us!"

Han Shuo took out his crossbow and climbed onto a nearby big tree, saying rapidly, "Don't worry, this twin headed dragon has already been injured. It can't even fly now. If we prepare accordingly, it won't be able to escape at all."

The band of people looked at each other in the eye after Han Shuo had spoken and all displayed expressions of surprise. If the twin headed dragon hadn't been injured, it would've been difficult for the team of adventurers to fight against, but if it couldn't even fly after being injured, this meant that the twin headed dragon was injured quite heavily. This was a heaven sent opportunity that they wouldn't let slip away.

Full of overjoyed surprise, some of them climbed up into tall trees like Han Shuo while some others hid in the shadows of the trees. They all took out their weapons or concentrated their mental strength to ready themselves to handle the twin headed dragon with a horrible sense of direction.

A rustling sound came from the shrubs that it swept past, and the injured twin headed dragon finally appeared in everyone's vision amidst great expectation.

Gordon, who had been doubtful of Han Shuo's judgment earlier, flashed him an admiring glance in the distance and gripped his longsword with excitement, intending on hitting the twin headed dragon with a swift attack.

The twin headed dragon with a bad sense of direction finally slammed headfirst into the wall of water that Aphrodite had set up. The enormous impact caused Aphrodite's wall of water to turn into numerous droplets in the air.

At the same time, Han Shuo and Nia (the female elven archer) attacked at almost the same time. Han Shuo couldn't fire the crossbow in quick succession, so the bolt he shot out landed on the back of the twin headed dragon's neck. Nia sent out three arrows, and apart from it dodging the first arrow, the other two were all nailed to its forehead.

The thunder journeyman mage within the group shot out a ring of lightning to attack the twin headed dragon's back. The three warriors who'd lain in wait for a while took advantage of this opportunity to rush out and dash towards the twin headed dragon, releasing their fighting aura to attack ferociously.

Up in front, Aphrodite created another two beings of water to attract the twin headed dragon's attention and create more opportunities for Han Shuo and the archer Nia to attack.

In this way, the level two magical creature, the twin headed dragon, didn't even have time to spray out poison under the heavy barrage. He'd already been injured and finally fell down listlessly in its blood.

The adventurers were incredibly excited when they saw that they'd killed the twin headed dragon and walked out cheering from their places of concealment, preparing to strip the trophies from twin headed dragon's body.

Han Shuo's face suddenly twisted drastically at this moment and he suddenly yelled fiercely, “Hurry up and leave this place! The person who had been pursuing the twin headed dragon is heading this way and we have no chance of winning a fight against them!”

Chapter 105: Not listening to advice

The six people had been ready to enjoy the fruits of victory when they were immediately startled by Han Shuo's violent yell. They all immediately reacted and sensibly gave up looting the trophies from the twin headed dragon's body. Their questioning gazes all swiftly locked onto Han Shuo.

After Han Shuo had repeatedly demonstrated his superb perception and corresponding strength, all of them now treated Han Shuo as the new leader at some unbeknownst time. Even Odysseus didn't possess any dissatisfaction and seemed to acknowledge that all this was a matter of course.

There could only be one leader within a team. Apart from possessing strength that compelled others to place their trust in him, he would need to maintain a calm mind and sensitive decision making abilities.

"Follow me!" When Han Shuo discovered that he had become the target of their acceptance, he didn't waste any time with empty blather or humility and opened his mouth to make this statement.

Han Shuo swiftly passed through the area with a turn of his body and shot to the left. None of the six young adventurers called his decision into question and immediately dropped everything they were holding, ignored the exposed tents and the body of the twin headed dragon on the ground, which was still warm, and darted out after Han Shuo.

A patch of enormous, towering trees suddenly appeared within everyone's vision. The towering trees here had thick foliage, covering the bright moonlight. The branches of these enormous trees were like the tentacles of a strange creature in the dark of the night and were a bit frightening.

When they reached this place, Han Shuo stared at one of the large trees and used the entangled branches to climb up. His body suddenly disappeared halfway up the tree. Of the six, the three swordsmen were quite agile and were only ten seconds behind Han Shuo. The two mages and the archer also climbed onto the branches with the assistance of the others.

The group suddenly discovered that there was an opening halfway up the large tree. This big tree, that looked beyond solid and strong, was actually hollowed out. The seven entered through the opening, with four of them shifting to the bottom. Han Shuo, Odysseus, and Aphrodite in the back stuck half their heads out and looked into the distance.

“What is it?” Everyone finally caught their breaths at this time and Odysseus immediately looked at him in confusion.

“It’s a super level magical creature, the unicorn. This unicorn seems to have been chasing the twin headed dragon from the beginning. No wonder it fled desperately.” Han Shuo frowned as he explained to Odysseus.

The unicorn was as swift as lightning and its body had the marvelous property of being resistant to magic. The horn on its forehead encompassed an even more wondrous power. It was the antidote to a hundred poisons, the cure that could bring others back from the dead, as well as purify dirty places. According to the legends, the unicorns would only come near pure young girls and hated human males. Normally, unicorns wouldn’t do anything inappropriate if they weren’t infuriated.

However, Han Shuo could feel the wrath of this unicorn through his original demons, as if the twin headed dragon had done something to make it lose all reason. The super level magical creature had an extremely durable body and was resistant to magic. Magical and physical attacks wouldn’t have much effect on it, particularly because the strength of Han Shuo’s group wasn’t advanced enough, which makes it extremely difficult for them to harm the unicorn.

It was said that the unicorns had received the blessings of the gods. If anyone ever harmed or killed a unicorn, then this person would be cursed and have repeated bad luck. Therefore, despite a unicorn possessing a body full of treasures, very few people would throw caution to the wind and pursue a unicorn.

Odysseus and Aphrodite both inhaled sharply when they realized the creature that had been pursuing the twin headed dragon was a furious, super level unicorn. They all counted themselves lucky to have escaped in time, otherwise they might've suffered painful consequences from the unicorn's anger.

As Odysseus and Aphrodite were rejoicing, a snow white unicorn with a horn on its head and a pair of beautiful blue eyes trotted out with elegant hoofsteps to the side of the twin headed dragon's body. Han Shuo and the others, a distance away within the hole in the tree, immediately concealed their presence. Add to that the fact that they were a bit of a distance away, they weren't afraid that they'd be immediately discovered by the unicorn.

The unicorn had been a bit agitated to begin with, but suddenly stilled upon seeing the dead body of the twin headed dragon when it arrived. It circled the body with light, graceful steps, and even extended a snow white hoof to kick the body. When it discovered that the twin headed dragon really didn't exhibit any movement, it stood stockstill and craned its pure white neck around, a very human-like confusion was displayed in its blue eyes.

The unicorn hadn't discovered anything after looking around like this. It then shook its head and shook itself all over, returning back to where it came from. The unicorn wasn't a carnivore, so the body of the twin headed dragon held no attraction for it. No matter what the twin headed dragon had done to infuriate it, it was now dead and thus the unicorn was satisfied.

One of the original demons closely followed the unicorn until it picked up speed and vanished without a trace. Han Shuo then had the original demon withdraw and said to the others, "The unicorn has left. We can dig out the magical core of the twin headed dragon now."

The others were full of confidence and acceptance towards Han Shuo's decisions and leadership abilities by now. Even Gordon, who hadn't fully trusted Han Shuo in the beginning, now looked at Han Shuo with a gaze full of sincere admiration. Everyone cheered happily after Han Shuo spoke these words and slowly crawled out from the hole within the tree, planning to collect the spoils of war from the twin headed dragon.

A strange sound suddenly arrived in their ears as a manticore bearing a silver haired youth with an inflexible will suddenly appeared next to the twin headed dragon.

There was a paralyzing venom within every manticore's tail and its claws were ferocious when tearing into flesh. Add to that its agile movements and powerful jumps, it was a level one beast trickier than the twin headed dragon to handle. The manticore was a very headache inducing existence within the Dark Forest. Who would've thought that such a magical beast would be tamed by others?

The owner of manticore was a twenty seven or eight year old youth. He was dressed carelessly, wore a space ring on his left hand, and carried a broadsword in his right hand. The lines of his face were resolute and angular. Although he wasn't a stunning man, he had his own allure.

"Oh. Looks like I'm quite lucky today to meet a twin headed dragon that'd just died." The youth murmured lowly to himself and urged the manticore to stop in front of the twin headed dragon, it seemed like he intended to reap the spoils of Han Shuo and the others.

At this moment, Han Shuo was a few steps ahead of Odysseus and the others and had jumped down from the hole within the tree. When he saw the youth was matter-of-factly viewing the twin headed dragon as his prey, he was immediately ticked off. Han Shuo chuckled coldly in the distance and said, "Friend, we killed this twin headed dragon with great effort. It's not the right thing to do, collecting the spoils without asking for the owner's permission right?"

The youth lifted his head to look at Han Shuo and say contemptuously, "All magical creatures have no owner within the Dark Forest whether they are alive or dead. Since I was the one who had discovered the twin headed dragon, it's mine."

The youth ignored Han Shuo after saying this and pulled out a dagger from his calf, tending to his own business and attempting to yank out the poisonous fangs from within the twin headed dragon's head.

Han Shuo wasn't someone who possessed a good temper and pulled out his crossbow to lock onto the other when he saw that the latter was completely ignoring his words. Han Shuo smiled coldly, "I'll shoot and kill you where you are if you dare move!"

"Oh, then I'll move for you to see!" The youth looked amusedly at Han Shuo and said this remotely. He immediately flicked the dagger and plucked out one of the twin headed dragon's fangs.

Han Shuo nodded and didn't say anything else. He planned on immediately shooting out this bolt and kill this stubborn fellow. Just at this moment, Odysseus suddenly called out, "No!"

Odysseus quickly rushed to Han Shuo and explained anxiously, "He should be the legendary Trunks. This is a demon riding a manticore. Anyone who irritates him will face enormous trouble. If he wants the twin headed dragon, then he can have it."

Han Shuo's expression changed as he looked in surprise at the youth, finally remembering that this person was the magical creature hunter Trunks within the Dark Forest.

The person's origin was mysterious. As a swordsman within the Dark Forest, this person's temper was eccentric and his personality aloof. It was said that not only did he hunt magical creatures, but he also hunted some of the adventurers within the Dark Forest as well. He was very adept at doing battle within the Dark Forest, and apparently even a great swordsmaster had met their death at his hands. He was a universally feared cold-blooded killer within the Dark Forest.

"Your friend's suggestion is good, you should listen to him!" The youth reached out a hand towards the twin headed dragon's other poisonous fang and looked at Han Shuo from afar, seeming to have concluded that Han Shuo wouldn't dare make a move.

Except, the whistling sound of a crossbow bolt tearing through the air greeted him. Han Shuo's expression was cold as he didn't listen to any of Odysseus' words at all. The aimed crossbow in his hand directly fired at Trunks.

Trunks was just about to remove the other fang and was quite dumbfounded to see that Han Shuo had actually shot his crossbow. His body was already moving when he revealed his surprised expression, and he'd already taken a step backwards like a ghost.

Pfft. The force behind a crossbow bolt stuck the bolt deeply into the ground where he'd been standing, leaving behind only half a bolt that continued quivering in the ground.

If Trunks hadn't dodged in time, his body would've been pierced through when this bolt landed!

Chapter 106: A terrifying enemy

When they heard that this person was Trunks, the other five adventurers, who'd rushed over, didn't dare act rashly or blindly. They only looked cautiously at Han Shuo. Who would've that what they feared would happen as Han Shuo had really made a move?

Trunks evaded the crossbolt and his face abruptly chilled. His sharp eyes gathered instantly on Han Shuo's body as he nodded his head and said, "You've got guts!"

He didn't make a move to take the other poisonous fang as Trunks grasped his broadsword in his right hand, walking towards Han Shuo with an even pace and looking at him with an obviously unfriendly expression.

"Misunderstanding, this must be a misunderstanding! My friend must've been too nervous and shot out that bolt!" Odysseus suddenly cried out loudly and explained to Trunks with a rueful smile.

At this moment, the crossbow that had paused was suddenly reloaded with another bolt, and as Odysseus was explaining frantically, Han Shuo took aim at the slowly approaching Trunks and shot another bolt out.

It was as if a slap had been flung directly at his face. Odysseus' expression was gobsmacked as the explanation in his mouth withered to ashes, halting him in his tracks.

Trunks' slowly approaching footsteps wavered as he once again wondrously avoided the crossbow ambush. He still walked slowly towards Han Shuo, his eyes staring firmly at him without a hint of relaxation.

Taking a deep breath in, Han Shuo put the crossbow away because it was useless at close range. He then took out the Demonslayer Edge and was ready to withstand Trunk's attack at any time.

"All of you will pay for this!" Trunks' approaching body suddenly stopped as he said coldly.

"Eh, all of us... us?!" Water adept mage Aphrodite's face grew frosty as she murmured.

“It looks like we’ve run into trouble, then we don’t need to be polite then.” Odysseus had been avoiding a headlong conflict with Trunks during this time and sighed softly as he saw that they would be hard pressed to extract themselves from the situation.

When the captain, Odysseus, had spoken, the other five adventurers stopped hesitating and quickly took their positions, readying their weapons and prepared themselves to handle this thorny fellow, who had suddenly emerged from the Dark Forest.

Just when Trunks was about to reach Han Shuo, he suddenly unsheathed the broadsword in his hand and milky-white aura enclosed the broadsword. A beam of white light drilled through the air, making for Han Shuo.

The shrubs on the ground suddenly exploded and filled the air with powder wherever the white fighting aura passed over. The ground cracked open as well. There was a heart stopping frightening power encompassed within the fighting aura. Having fought with Phoebe, another swordmaster, Han Shuo could clearly feel that the destructive power Trunks’ fighting aura was even more domineering.

He activated the “Glacial Mystical Spellfire” and the surge of magical yuan flowed entirely into the Demonslayer Edge. After taking in abundant magical yuan, the Demonslayer Edge glowed with a fiery red light. When the white fighting aura drilled fiercely onto it, Han Shuo tightly grasped the Demonslayer Edge and abruptly slashed it downwards.

An explosion rang out as the milky-white fighting aura and the emanation of red light from the Demonslayer Edge collided into each other. A round hole, about a meter deep, suddenly appeared out of nowhere and charred smoke rose from the shreds of shrubbery within it.

Trunks stood where he was without moving, his sharp eyes still looking forward. Han Shuo, wielding the Demonslayer Edge, abruptly backed up five or six steps and sat down with a thud. The right arm that was holding the Demonslayer Edge was a bloody mess and it looked quite frightening.

“You’re actually not dead. You do have some basis to be arrogant.”

Trunks looked at Han Shuo and opened his mouth with some confusion

Han Shuo shook his right arm, shaking off the droplets of blood that had oozed out. He moved his body numbly, magical yuan circulating at a speed throughout his entire body that it never had before. He finally stood up again after pushing off forcefully with both feet.

Last time he'd faced Lawrence, Han Shuo had tested himself and found his strength to be higher than a journeyman swordsman. He'd brought his full force to bear when facing off against Trunks, who rumors had placed him at having already reached the realm of swordsmaster. He'd imbued ten percent of his magical yuan into the Demonslayer Edge and taken one of Trunks' hits.

The truth had proven that the strength of a swordsmaster did indeed far exceed Han Shuo's expectations. Perhaps Trunks hadn't used his full force in that blow, but he'd already caused significant injury to Han Shuo. If it wasn't for his wondrous magical yuan and durable body, an ordinary person's right arm would've likely exploded from this blow and would've been unable to recover from it for the rest of his life.

"Protect our companion." Odysseus called out calmly as the group of six adventurers immediately surrounded Han Shuo.

The archer Nia and two mages had already shot out their attacks before Trunks made another move, the latter still staring curiously at Han Shuo. The three warriors didn't take a step away from Han Shuo as they surrounded him on three sides, protecting him solidly.

Trunks swiftly evaded the attacks from Nia and the two mages. He didn't continue fighting as the manticore suddenly popped out for Trunks to mount.

"Friends, I'm going to get something to eat. You make your preparations, I'll keep playing with you later." Contrary to everyone's expectations, Trunks didn't continue attacking and rather spoke coldly from the back of the manticore. He then patted the manticore and it obediently brought him swiftly away.

One man and one beast crossed leisurely over the patch of luxuriant shrubs under the wary gaze of Odysseus and the others. Those assembled heaved a sigh of relief when they discovered that Trunks truly had vanished. They sat a bit wearily on the ground after having their nerves stretched taut for a while.

“What’s the matter, why were you so impulsive?” Odysseus finally looked oddly at Han Shuo as he inquired.

Laughing ruefully, Han Shuo shook his head and said, “I’m truly sorry, I’m a bit of an odd person. Sometimes even I can’t control the things that I do.”

According to Han Shuo’s previous personality, he absolutely wouldn’t have chosen to become enemies with such a strong character, but for some reason, Han Shuo could accept being threatened by others less and less now. Even if the threats were backed up with a strong destructive power, Han Shuo would still throw caution to the winds and defy them.

To be honest, when Odysseus had offered Trunks’ name, Han Shuo immediately hesitated internally when he understood the strength represented by this name. He’d even planned on putting down the crossbow in his hand and let him take the twin headed dragon away. He was unwilling to make such a strong enemy.

But he’d still made a move in the end, and he’d made a very resolute move. He hadn’t considered the consequences in the form of a devastating revenge at all. Even Han Shuo found his personality changes a bit baffling, and could only attribute it to the effects of the magical yuan.

“Perhaps we were too weak. To be honest your methods were quite admirable, but I think we’ll meet great trouble in the future.” Odysseus said as he nodded, looking at Han Shuo with a fervent light as sincere admiration surfaced in his eyes.

“The fact that you could exchange a blow with him and not die already explains that you’re quite powerful. Are your injuries any better?” The elven archer Nia walked to Han Shuo side and seemed to inquire after him with some semblance of concern.

Taking out gauze from his space ring and dressing the wounds of his right arm simply, Han Shuo withdrew his weapon and finally spoke to the others, “I’m sorry for bringing so much trouble to everyone, and am very thankful for all your actions just now. Trunks won’t give up easily, I think we should discuss how to handle him after we remove the rest of the items from the twin headed dragon.”

Although the appearance of a new enemy made everyone a bit depressed, they’d still kept the twin headed dragon in the end. Now that Han Shuo mentioned the trophies from it, everyone’s morale lifted slightly and they happily took out daggers and walked towards the twin headed dragon, removing its remaining poisonous fangs and its magical core.

The poisonous fangs of the twin headed dragon were an important ingredient that could be used to refine some poison powders. If an alchemist transmuted it, it could even be used in magical arrows and explode with poison halfway through flight, causing lethal injuries to enemies within a short range. As a level two magical creature, the core of the twin headed dragon was also very precious and could be sold for at least one thousand gold coins.

Under Han Shuo’s insistence, the magical core was given to Odysseus as a sort of compensation for the aid that Odysseus and the others had given just now. Han Shuo placed the poisonous fangs of the twin headed dragons in his storage ring, planning to use them amply in the future if there was the chance.

After finishing these tasks, the sky was already beginning to brighten. The group packed their luggage and continued south, deeper into the Dark Forest.

The band discussed as they walked, attempting to find a way to fight against Trunks.

“Trunks has been viewed as a terrifying existence ever since he appeared in the Dark Forest. The beasts and people that appear within the deeper reaches of the Dark Forest are very strong. The adventurers that win a few battle trophies there would often sink into struggles of life and death. Even the companions that accompany you here are very likely to betray you at crucial moments. Chaotic slaughter exists there, and those who can grow accustomed to that environment need a cold heart apart from extraordinary strength.”

“Trunks is amongst the elite of these kinds of people. In addition he is very familiar with the environment inside and is quite adept at leveraging the environment within the Dark Forest to brutally attack his enemies. Since we’ve run afoul with him this time, I think we’ll be attacked for sure later on in the Dark Forest. Therefore, we need to be on our guard and prevent sudden ambushes from him.” Odysseus described the chaotic conditions of the deeper reaches of the Dark Forest and the frightening parts of Trunks to ensure that everyone would be cautious.

“Be at ease, he won’t have a chance to ambush us!” Han Shuo smiled confidently after Odysseus had finished.

Everyone’s expressions were quite flabbergasted with these words. However, they didn’t immediately suspect Han Shuo’s words as they’d seen his miraculousness before. Gordon looked at Han Shuo with great interest and asked, “Why?”

Smiling mysteriously and meaningfully, Han Shuo swept a gaze at those assembled, “The twin headed dragon was five hundred meters away from us, but I still discovered its movements. It’s impossible for Trunks to ambush us. Be at ease, there’s absolutely no chance that Trunks can ambush us based on his great familiarity with the Dark Forest.”

With the existence of the three original demons, Han Shuo would be able to clearly discover any man or beast that approached. As familiar as Trunks was with the environment, he’d be unable to successfully ambush them as long as the original demons were there. Han Shuo wasn’t boasting emptily when he spoke of this.

“I think he chose to leave earlier because he didn’t have absolute certainty in capturing all of us, and decided to slowly handle us with the methods that he was most familiar with. If he’s unable to ambush us, then with the combined might of our seven people, Trunks may not have an upper hand, even with his manticore. We really don’t need to be afraid of them.” Odysseus spoke happily upon seeing Han Shuo speak so firmly.

“I promise!” Han Shuo spoke affirmatively.

The group continued further south into the Dark Forest over the next two days. Beneath the astonished gazes of Odysseus and the others, when Han Shuo took off the gauze, his open wound had already completely healed and bore no traces of having been injured.

“This is amazing, it’s already all healed!” Gordon’s mouth was open with shock as he stared dumbfoundedly at Han Shuo’s right arm, observing it for a while and attempting to discover the secret behind Han Shuo’s insanely fast recovery speed.

The other five adventurers also looked at Han Shuo with eyes as if gazing at a monster. They hadn’t seemed to think that Han Shuo would fully heal within two short days. They were incredibly astonished when such a baffling matter was laid out in front of them.

After repeated reforging from the magical yuan, the durability and miraculousness of his body was something that they couldn’t even begin to understand. Han Shuo didn’t open his mouth to explain this as he found an excuse of a medicinal powder to gloss things over.

When night fell and everyone headed back into their tents, Han Shuo suddenly said, “Trunks wants to make a move. I think he’ll attack us tonight. We need to make some simple preparations and then you should attack on my orders. I’ll let Trunks understand how laughable his ambush is this time!”

Chapter 107: A hysterical ambush down to the most minute details

One had to say, Trunks was truly familiar with the terrain of this area. He was like another magical creature when he was on the back of his manticore. He had extraordinary abilities to begin with, add to that the help from the manticore, and his overall knowledge of the entire terrain, he was a top notch expert in every sense of the word.

If it hadn't been for surveillance from Han Shuo's original demons, the group would've been at a loss on how to deal with Trunks' attacks. They would've surely suffered serious casualties in the dark of the night. After all, none of the seven adventurers present, including Han Shuo, would be able to take many of Trunks' attacks if they fought him alone.

However, with complete end to end surveillance from the original demons, all this had changed. Originally the hunter, Trunks would possibly become someone else's prey for the first time.

"He's coming." Han Shuo, sharing the same tent with Odysseus, suddenly opened his mouth.

Odysseus didn't express too much curiosity with regards to Han Shuo's remarkable perception. He only grasped the longsword in his hand tightly after hearing Han Shuo's words and stared at him, "How should we handle this?"

"Don't worry, Trunks is currently observing us. Let's go into action when he makes his move." Han Shuo closed his eyes and crossed his legs, opening his mouth in explanation.

Trunks was as agile as a monkey on several trees surrounding the area. He leveraged the pliable branches to pile up boulders between several trees and didn't make any noise. No one could've noticed him within the darkness.

There was still a bit of distance between the manticore and the camp. It was now slowly circling the tents. As an animal exceedingly adept at hunting down prey, he was a hunter with quite a lot of patience, just like Trunks.

Trunks slowly landed on a tree above the tents of Han Shuo and the others. He looked down coldly at the tents below him, as if debating how to proceed.

He held a few small stones in his hands, sending two of them flying towards the tents, landing softly into the nearby bushes with a light sound. Several startled shouts rang out from the tents as Han Shuo and Odysseus abruptly walked out of the tents, investigating the area that Trunks had created a disturbance in with the little stones.

The manticore purposefully made a sound at the same time from the other side. Gordon and another swordsman looked at each other and headed in the direction of the manticore when they exited their tents. The two mages and archer remained where they were, observing the surroundings with alert eyes and guarding the area to provide backup for the others.

Just as Han Shuo and Odysseus had arrived at where the stones had created the noise and Gordon had also left with the other swordsman, Trunks suddenly made use of a pliable branch to swing over towards Gordon and the two others. It looked like he planned on taking care of Gordon and the two others first.

“Let’s go.” Han Shuo said lowly and circled around with Odysseus, approaching Trunks from another direction.

Gordon and the two others proceeded with slow footsteps, their gazes full of caution as they continuously patrolled and searched the bushes around them. The manticore was lying in wait in the shrubs ten meters away from them, and would immediately attack without warning as soon as the two drew closer.

Making use of the branches to swing back and forth, Trunks magically didn’t emit any sound and didn’t reveal any part of himself. He slowly drew closer to Gordon and the other, appearing swiftly above the two people’s heads.

A crossbow suddenly rang out at this moment. It appeared all the more ear piercing in the dead of the night. As he was swinging between the branches, Trunks suddenly discovered that this crossbolt was aimed at him and was incredibly astonished and shocked.

He didn't have any purchase for his feet as he was swinging back and forth, and could only twist his body to land on the ground in resignation. At the same time, the two mages and the archer, who should've been standing guard near the tents, abruptly miraculously appeared, with a water dragon, a bolt of lightning, and three arrows suddenly flying in his direction.

Halfway through the air, Trunks had no way to stop his body from falling. He defended himself with great difficulty as snow white fighting aura flared out from his broadsword, but in his haste, it was apparent that Trunks had taken some hits. Although he could chop Nia's three arrows in half, he was hit by the lightning blow and took the water dragon to the chest. He fell into the thick growth of shrubs after emitting a low grunt.

"Third tree on the left and five paces in front of you, attack!" Han Shuo suddenly called out calmly.

Several rounds of attacks were fired, their target was the newly landed Trunks. Several rounds of attacks abruptly landed after Han Shuo's soft exclamation. This time, Trunks evaded the attacks from the two mages, but a random shot from the completely invisible Nia just so happened to stab right into Trunks' butt.

A painful wail suddenly sounded as Trunks obviously hadn't found his bearings yet. He changed directions after crying out and attempted to attack them from another side, but Han Shuo continued to call out his location and the others sent their attacks crashing down, miraculously always where Trunks was.

"What's going on?" Suffering from the barrage of attacks, Trunks had never been more depressed in his life than he was today and finally could help but start cursing.

Trunks had always been supremely confident in his ability to conceal his movements and ambush others. He'd never felt that anyone could see through his movement within the Dark Forest. However, he was coming off worse for the wear for the first time in facing an adventurer group with mediocre ability. He was always drowned by attacks no matter how he shifted and dodged, and he'd suffered from not so light injuries after a while.

The manticore, that'd been lying in ambush, finally couldn't restrain its impatience when it saw that its master's method didn't seem to be working. The manticore sent shrubbery and grass flying as it ran, and a tree as thick as a man's waist fell with a thud when its sharp claws slashed downwards. Its presence and momentum was astonishing to the extreme.

"The manticore is coming, attack!" Odysseus called out loudly as the three swordsmen suddenly spread out and blocked the manticore's path forward.

A portion of the attacks that had been targeting Trunks all along now split up and changed their target to the manticore charging over with utmost speed. Except, the manticore was tough and its speed was as fast as lightning. All of the group's attacks actually landed on thin air, with only the arrows shot out from Nia connecting with the manticore, but not causing much damage.

At this moment, a cold-faced Han Shuo started manipulating the Demonslayer Edge according to the Law of Refining Magical Treasure. A beam of purple light suddenly shot out, drawing a beautiful arc through the empty air of the night sky. It suddenly stabbed towards the manticore's back. As a level one magical creature, the manticore noticeably felt the approach of danger and then very agilely evaded the Demonslayer Edge's first attack.

At the same time, Trunks revealed himself as he limped and staggered out from the distance. He raised his broadsword with fury and approached the two mages and Nia, attempting to combine efforts with the manticore's strength and kill everyone present with no reservations whatsoever.

“Ignore the manticore, concentrate your attacks on Trunks.” Han Shuo suddenly called out, causing the two mages and Nia to abruptly change direction and continue attacking the swiftly approaching Trunks.

Of Odysseus and the two swordsmen, Gordon was sent to Nia’s side as the remaining two rushed towards the manticore and started using fighting aura to attack it. When Odysseus approached the manticore, the fighting aura that he’d gathered to its peak was destroyed with a slash of its claws. Odysseus himself was sent flying far into the distance. The other swordsman took advantage of the opportunity to stab the manticore, but he only left a small cut on the manticore and rather further enraged it instead.

The furious manticore raised his claws and attempted to smash the swordsman near him to death. At this moment, the purple light that’d disappeared briefly abruptly reappeared to suddenly stabbed at the tail of the manticore.

The manticore sensed the danger and dashed forward with a leap. The swordsman closest to it barely managed to hold onto his life, but although the manticore had dodged in time, the Demonslayer Edge had already sliced down its back and the frigid Mystical Spellfire surged into the manticore’s body.

Madly furious roars suddenly emitted from the manticore’s mouth. Since Han Shuo was manipulating the Demonslayer Edge, he could feel its wrath. He immediately focused all his attentions on manipulating the Demonslayer Edge, attempting to kill it where it stood.

“Damn it, you dare hurt my companion!” The limping Trunks had an arrow sticking out his butt. He was dripping wet due to the water dragon attack on his chest. Because he’d also been electrocuted, part of his hair was burnt and his original bearings had completely vanished. Blood also trickled unendingly out his mouth. He appeared completely bedraggled.

“I’m even going to harm you, much less than your pet.” Han Shuo said after snickering coldly, the Demonslayer Edge still doggedly hanging out the back of the manticore.

A shrill whistle suddenly sounded from Trunks' mouth. When the extremely maddened manticore heard the whistle, it immediately retreated and ran off into the distance. Trunks looked hatefully at those assembled after his sharp whistle and also fled swiftly in a direction opposite to the manticore.

"You stay where you are, I'll go after him." One had to take someone's life when they were down. Trunks was obviously heavily injured and Han Shuo naturally knew how to take advantage of an opportunity. When he saw Odysseus, who had been sent flying by the manticore, crawl up from the ground spitting blood with no danger to his life, he immediately chased in the direction that Trunks had fled.

Chapter 108: Constraining a strong foe

Despite being injured, Trunks still fled at a quick pace. Some old, broken tree roots and thick overgrowth of shrubbery seemed to have no effect on him.

Except, the injured Trunks was unable to deploy his maximum speed, whereas Han Shuo was in peak condition and was leveraging the surveillance of the original demons, following Trunks like a tight burr on his back. The distance between the two grew continuously closer.

The arrow in his butt had long since been yanked out as Trunks started running. He'd planned on dressing his wounds first, but when he discovered Han Shuo's pursuit, he had to give up cleaning his wounds first out of resignation and flee heedlessly, whether or not his injury was still bleeding.

And so they continued this chase for more than ten minutes. Trunks' endurance was astonishing as he grit his teeth and continued to run. Every time Han Shuo appeared in his vision, he would tap deep into his potential and bring forth another burst of speed, attempting to shake off Han Shuo.

It was a pity that having trained his magical yuan, Han Shuo's originally weak personality had long since been trained to the peak of fortitude after repeated baptism via pain. Apart from the stubbornness of Han Shuo's will exceeding Trunk's imagination, his speed never decreased throughout the entire pursuit and in fact he seemed to be growing addicted to the chase and relished the chase more and more.

Although Trunks was exceedingly familiar with the surrounding terrain, with one of Han Shuo's original demons hanging around him, it was as if a pair of hawk eyes were circling him, observing everything. No matter what Trunks did, he was still unable to shake off Han Shuo by virtue of him being familiar with the terrain alone.

Finally, after half a day of pursuing and running, Trunks gradually realized that this couldn't continue in the face of his continued blood loss. He was unable to shake off Han Shuo, and with the increasing speed of circulation of his blood combined with the inability of being able to treat his body's injuries in time, Trunks had a short spell of dizziness.

He leaned against a tree trunk and stopped, wiping away blood from the corner of his mouth and panted as he watched Han Shuo approach with decreased speed. He huffed as he said, "So it's only been you who's been following me. I think you're looking for death."

Panting twice, Han Shuo's fiercely beating heart, due to sprinting during the pursuit, slowly recovered its calm. He was already grasping the Demonslayer Edge in his hand and the expression on his face was neither joyful or tragic. He stared coldly at Trunks and was in no hurry to approach Trunks. He slowed down the rate of his footsteps considerably.

Although Han Shuo knew that Trunks was heavily injured, but as injured as a swordmaster was, he was still an exceedingly dangerous existence. A lethal attack could come if he let his guard slip. It was precisely because Han Shuo couldn't be certain how severe Trunks' injuries were. Therefore, he didn't actually dare make a move now that his prey had stopped.

"If you weren't injured, I'd have no chance of facing you alone, but with the current situation, we'll have to see if you still have any ability to do anything to me." Han Shuo suddenly stopped roughly fifteen meters from Trunks and roved his eyes over Trunks' body, opening his mouth to speak faintly.

Han Shuo once again took out the crossbow after speaking, loaded it with a crossbow bolt, and then took accurate aim at Trunks, using this to test Trunks' current body condition.

"Do you dare only test me from far away? If you have the same amount of guts that you displayed last time, you would be rushing at me with no hesitation whatsoever." Trunks planted his back against the tree and watch Han Shuo's movements with cold eyes, speaking disdainfully.

"Do you take me for a fool or are you the fool? You should know that our identities have been reversed. You're now the prey and I'm the hunter. I control how the game is played." Han Shuo was completely unconcerned by Trunks' mockery as he decisively shot out the bolt after taking aim with the crossbow.

The tip of the bolt gleamed with a bit of a cold light in the duskiness of the evening sky. A sharp sound abruptly whistled through the air as the bolt shot towards Trunk's chest like electricity.

Trunks' expression didn't show anything out of the ordinary as his body flew out at almost the same time that sound whistled through the air. The crossbow bolt nailed firmly onto the big tree that Trunks had been leaning against just now. Having dodged the blow, Trunks' body soared through the air for a few meters as he adroitly crossed a distance of fifteen meters and landed in front of Han Shuo, his speed greatly outside of Han Shuo's imagination.

Milky-white fighting aura filled Han Shuo's vision in the span of an instant, like he was residing in the center of a tornado. Han Shuo's body was enclosed in milky-white fighting aura as his muscles instantly became taut. It seemed incredibly difficult to even make the slightest move and he could only watch as he drowned in fighting aura.

His body was unable to move, but the magical yuan within his body was flowing freely without obstruction. Han Shuo's mind and heart were of one thought as the Demonslayer Edge flew out of his palm, suddenly dancing in the air around Han Shuo's body. The air around Han Shuo's body was suffused with the light blossoming from the Demonslayer Edge in the blink of an eye.

A violent sound of metal clashing rang out around Han Shuo, accompanied with Trunks' furious yells of incredulity. Just as Han Shuo's ear drums were about to go deaf, all the ear grating metallic sounds vanished utterly and the previously immobile Han Shuo finally returned to normal.

"Impossible, this is impossible! How can your weapon still defend against my Restrained Dragon Slash? Just who are you?" Han Shuo immediately heard Trunks' shocked yells as soon as his body had returned to normal.

Concentrating his gaze, Han Shuo suddenly discovered that the broadsword Trunks had been wielding all along had suddenly shattered with many cracks. Trunks' gaze kept darting back and forth between the broadsword and Han Shuo, a look of disbelief and incredulity on his face as he kept repeating, "This is impossible!"

Han Shuo's shirt had been ripped to shreds all over and now hung on him like a rag. Many long superficial cuts had appeared on his muscles, revealing the red blood and flesh inside. The Demonslayer Edge seemed to have been flung away as it laid motionless in the distance, but there weren't any dings or marks on it.

"Nothing is impossible!" Han Shuo suddenly bellowed and rushed forward with a sudden punch, taking advantage of Trunks' abnormal mental state.

It wasn't until this punch had made its way to Trunks' face before he was able to react, lifting the now rigid broadsword to block Han Shuo's punch.

Dong rang out crisply as Han Shuo's right hand went numb, but Trunks' body staggered backwards. Joy flashed through Han Shuo inwardly as he knew that Restrained Dragon Slash just now had taken most of Trunks' fighting aura. Therefore, he immediately drew close to Trunks and started raining down a crazy barrage of kicks and punches.

Renowned in the Dark Forest for being a character not to get on the bad side of, Trunks had now become the weaker side after being heavily injured. He retreated continuously under Han Shuo's string of attacks, until he finally fell backwards, as stiff as a board.

"Wait!" Just as Han Shuo had grasped the Demonslayer Edge again and was about to end Trunks' life, he suddenly opened his mouth to stop Han Shuo and looked at him, "No matter what you've come to the Dark Forest for, I can help you! We don't actually have any irreconcilable differences between us, just the matter of the twin headed dragon. That actually wasn't that valuable."

Han Shuo thought carefully after Trunks had spoken and discerned that this was the case. Han Shuo had made his moves earlier because he didn't want to be threatened by others. Now that he wanted to kill Trunks, that was because he wanted to head off Trunks' possible revenge. To be honest, he didn't really have a deep hatred for Trunks.

He walked in front of Trunks and suddenly stabbed swiftly downwards with the Demonslayer Edge four times. He then coolly put the Demonslayer Edge away after a round of Trunks screaming like a pig being slaughtered.

The Demonslayer Edge stabbed downwards four times, piercing through the vitals in Trunks' two hands and feet. Although it wasn't enough to cause fatal damage, it also wouldn't affect Trunks' future training and strength, but he would absolutely not pose a threat to Han Shuo in the short run.

"My apologies, I feel that this is better insurance because you're a more than dangerous person." Han Shuo shrugged and said naturally, then smiled slightly at the grimacing Trunks after a pause, "I think we can have a good discussion now, will you be able to help me if I don't kill you?"

"Oh... it seems like another cruel hunter has appeared within the Dark Forest. Haha!" He first moaned in pain and then burst out loudly in nervous laughter, with absolutely no strength in his body. Except, his current bedraggled condition was offset by his burnt hair, and his expression was an indescribable sort of ugly.

"Behave if you want to live. Tell me what you can help me with." Han Shuo asked with a slight smile as he looked at Trunks.

"Then the first thing I need to ask is your purpose in coming to the Dark Forest. Why have you come?" Trunks' expression didn't have any traces of panic. Although he still emitted cries of pain, his expression was quite calm.

Starting, Han Shuo felt that there was no need to conceal anything and spoke directly, "I'm here for the Fruit of Dagmar. Can you help me obtain it?"

"I've been in the Dark Forest for many years and have heard of all sorts of legends. I know a bit about where the Fruit of Dagmar is and can bring you there, but I'm not certain if I can obtain the Fruit of Dagmar either. If you let me go this time, I can promise to help you with all my strength and won't pursue this matter in the future. If you've heard of my reputation, then you should know that I never go back on my promises!" Trunks looked at Han Shuo as he promised solemnly.

"Deal!" Han Shuo nodded and responded quite decisively.

Chapter 109: Reaching an agreement

Although Trunks was renowned for being a difficult character to shake off, his reputation was indeed quite good. After receiving his promise and having him swear a blood oath, Han Shuo didn't make further trouble for him.

Having been seriously injured, Trunks didn't pay further attention to Han Shuo as he struggled to take out some gauze and medicinal water from his space ring. He shook and trembled as he smeared the medicine over his injuries, and then grimaced with pain as he finished dressing his wounds.

"Your injuries look quite severe, how long will you need before you can fully recover?" Han Shuo frowned and asked when he saw Trunks like this.

Snorting bad temperedly, Trunks said, "Weren't you the one who caused my injuries? And you still dare to ask, but don't you worry, my injuries look severe, but they'll be easy to recover from as long as my tendons and bones haven't been hurt. Not to mention that the medicinal water I treated it with just now was developed from magical herbs that I picked in the Dark Forest. It's especially useful for scabbing over wounds. As long as we wait for my fighting aura to recover, I won't become a burden to you."

Nodding, Han Shuo said, "Alright then, let's return now then."

"Wait!" Trunks called out, and then concentrated he looked at Han Shuo's face, finally asking in confusion, "Can you tell me how you discovered me as soon as I entered your tent area, and why I was located no matter where I hid? Why is it that although I can first use fighting aura to lock onto an enemy before deploying Restrained Dragon Slash, so that they'll be at my mercy as long as their strength isn't greater than mine, your weapon still automatically flies up to protect you?"

"Sorry, I can't answer your two questions. The only thing I can say is never try to ambush me in the future. That will only be creating trouble for yourself." Han Shuo shrugged as he said to Trunks.

Nodding his head in understanding, Trunks said, "If no one can ambush you, then your strength is several times higher within the Dark Forest. It looks like we may actually have a chance of succeeding on our trip to search for the Fruit of Dagmar this time.”

The way back expended more than five times the amount of time it'd taken for them to get here. Trunks' speed was greatly decreased because of his injuries, but he resolutely turned down Han Shuo's offer to support him, stubbornly insisting on walking by himself.

In this manner, Han Shuo understood many things about the Dark Forest as the two proceeded, finally making it back to camp late in the afternoon.

The tents of Odysseus and the others were all still here as they hadn't left. When Han Shuo and Trunks appeared, it was as if the entire group was faced with a great enemy as they all grasped their weapons tightly and leveled them at Trunks.

“Everyone put down your weapons, he will pose no further threat to us.” Han Shuo walked over and tried to convince the others with a grave face that there was no need to brandish their weapons.

When everyone heard Han Shuo's words and saw Trunks' bedraggled condition, they hesitated for a moment and then withdrew the weapons in their hands. Water adept mage Aphrodite asked askance, “Han, what's going on?”

“I'll tell you later, how's Odysseus' wounds?” Han Shuo asked Aphrodite with a creased brow.

Casting an unfriendly glance at Trunks, Aphrodite opened her mouth to say, “There's no threat to his life, but there's a bloody imprint on his chest after the manticore struck him. His entire body is very stiff now and very odd. I feel that even if he recovers in the future, I'm afraid that the injury to his chest will affect his strength. He's just gone to lay down and rest.”

Everyone's eyes were filled with hate and bitterness when Aphrodite spoke her piece and swept gazes over Trunks' body, seeming to want to draw their weapons at any time to give Trunks a thorough, painful beating.

“Han, can you tell us why you’ve brought this person? Oh, I know, you captured him alive in order to execute him in front of Odysseus?” Gordon stared tightly at Han Shuo as he asked with a darkened face.

Because of captain Odysseus’ injuries, these people now had a hard time to conceal hatred towards Trunks. Han Shuo could feel the anger within their hearts from their tones and expressions. If it hadn’t been for Han Shuo restraining them just now, it was likely that Trunks would’ve suffered an immediate, furious revenge as soon as he’d appeared.

But Han Shuo now needed Trunks to lead him to search for the Fruit of Dagmar, therefore Han Shuo couldn’t let these people hurt Trunks yet. Han Shuo hesitated upon seeing Gordon’s vicious expression, and then explained what had happened.

When Han Shuo finished, Gordon laughed coldly and said loudly, “Screw that Fruit of Dagmar! Odysseus was heavily injured. What we need is no longer the Fruit of Dagmar, but this damned killer’s life!”

“Han, do you want the Fruit of Dagmar, or revenge for Odysseus?” Elven archer Nia suddenly looked coldly at Han Shuo at this moment and asked him faintly.

The other adventurers all focused their gazes on Han Shuo in a moment, as if waiting for his answer. At this moment, Han Shuo suddenly felt a huge headache. He hadn’t anticipated that Odysseus’ injuries would be so severe, and definitely hadn’t reckoned on these people’s concern for Odysseus being far in excess of their care of the Fruit of Dagmar.

Han Shuo hadn’t originally viewed these people as trustworthy companions originally. He’d come with them purely for the Fruit of Dagmar. He was a bit surprised by what was happening now, and was a bit touched by these people’s friendship with Odysseus, but because he had already promised Trunks his safety, he was at a loss for how to handle the situation in the span of a moment.

As the person in question, Trunks hadn’t said anything since arriving here. There was no trace of panic in his eyes, but he rather calmly took his measure of everyone’s expressions. He suddenly opened his mouth now and said, "It looks like no one welcomes me, but I have a way to deal with Odysseus' injury. Are any of you willing to trust me?"

Han Shuo didn't wait for the others to speak after Trunks said these words and immediately asked, "You can help Odysseus?"

Nodding, Trunks said affirmatively, "Odysseus' injuries were a result of being clawed by the manticore. The manticore is my companion, I naturally know how to cure an injury at its hands."

"Follow me!" Having long since sensed Odysseus' breathing, Han Shuo didn't waste time in further chitchat and brought Trunks to one of the tents. He lifted open the flap to reveal a pale-faced, somewhat weak Odysseus.

A large hole had opened in the chest of the soft armor that Odysseus wore. It was now wrapped up in gauze, making it impossible to see the status of the wound inside. When Trunks and Han Shuo entered, so did Aphrodite and Gordon. The others surrounded the tent on the outside, on their guard against Trunks' lightest moves.

"Undo the gauze on the wound." Trunks instructed after walking in.

Ever since Trunks said he had a way to help Odysseus, the group of people hadn't said anything, as if waiting to see how Trunks would act before deciding their next action.

Gordon remained silent without a word, but walked towards Odysseus. He first woke Odysseus up, then undid the gauze on his wound beneath Odysseus' astonished gaze. A frightening injury to the point of seeing bone in his chest was revealed.

"Han, what's going on? Odysseus looked at Han Shou weakly and asked in confusion.

"Don't move and don't say a word. I'll explain to you when your injury stabilizes!" Han Shuo said softly as he drew nearer to Odysseus.

At this moment, Trunks took a flask of medicine from his space ring and poured out some red powder from it, slowly applying it to Odysseus' wound on his chest. He explained faintly, "The tail of the manticore has an extreme poison that paralyzes the entire body. The claws have it too, but it's not as strong as the amount on the tail. The powder I'm applying can remove the poisonous effects of the manticore's claws and increase the rate in which his injuries scab over."

"If you still want to obtain the Fruit of Dagmar, you'll meet the Medusa monster within that swamp. The fresh blood of a Medusa monster has miraculous properties for wounds. As long as we can kill the Medusa monster and obtain its blood, I promise that he'll have no aftereffects once we wipe it down on him. The speed in which the injuries of his chest will heal at will be even faster in the future." Trunks explained faintly as he flicked a glance at Grodon.

Looking at Gordon and then at Aphrodite, Han Shuo said calmly. "I think we need him to help us find the Medusa monster for us. What do you think?"

Aphrodite and Gordon looked at each other, nodding at the same time.

Chapter 110: The mysterious druid

One of the swordsmen made a simplified stretcher to carry Odysseus, who tried to defuse everyone's hostility towards Trunks upon understanding the situation. It was a shame that although people didn't continue to call for Trunks' death, they kept throwing dark looks at him.

Trunks himself was rather light hearted about everyone's enmity. Han Shuo even felt that he didn't care in the slightest. To his surprise, when Han Shuo asked him, Trunks merely responded coolly, "If it hadn't been for you miraculously discovering my movement, none of them would've left alive. I never pay attention to those who are of no threat to me."

In the days he spent with Trunks, Han Shuo learned a few things about the Dark Forest through him. Within the depths of the Dark Forest, everything was dependent on personal strength. Everything else was of secondary importance, of that, being indecisive or kind signified the weak. It would often cause one to lose their lives.

Everyone followed Trunks' instructions as they continued to venture further into the Dark Forest over the next three days. Odysseus' injuries came under control over the three days and they slowly started to scab over, but his movement was still restricted.

Trunks' injuries also recovered swiftly after having been taken care of, but because of the spikes at the tip of Han Shuo's Demonslayer Edge, Trunks' hands and feet still weren't quite that agile. However, traces of color slowly began to once again blossom on his originally pale face.

When it was noon, everyone arrived at the edge of a pond. They found a big tree to place Odysseus down first, then decided to haul some water from the pond to drink.

Before the others had moved however, Trunks had been standing with Han Shuo and suddenly frowned, opening his mouth to tell Han Shuo, "Tell them to be careful. Do you see the seaweed within the pond? These seaweeds have sharp thorns in their roots and will pull you into the water as soon as they sense humans or beasts come close. They'll easily lose their lives this way.”

Han Shuo hurriedly cried out when he heard these words. “Gordon, you guys stand there and don’t move.”

“If you hold torches, the heat from the flames will scare off the seaweed so that they won’t easily making a move.” Trunks said faintly when he saw Han Shuo stare at him.

“Thanks!” Han Shuo said lightly and walked towards Gordon and the others. He explained the dangers of the seaweed to them and reminded them to light the torches.

When they started moving according to Han Shuo’s instructions, one of the original demons standing guard in the distance suddenly discovered traces of the manticore’s movement. Han Shuo was startled and swiftly walked up to Trunks, “Your manticore is nearby.”

Nodding, Trunks looked askance at Han Shuo, saying, “You really can discover the movement in your surroundings. That’s right, I chose to walk down this path because this is where I instructed the manticore to wait. There’s a scent on me that only it can sense. I think it will find me very quickly.”

“So that’s the case, I hope you can tell the manticore to behave.” Han Shuo understood that Trunks kept his word as his reputation had always been good. He wasn’t actually afraid of Trunks doing anything, just that the manticore was a level one magical creature with boundless strength and could tell enemy from foe. If it started attacking him, Odysseus, and the others as soon as it appeared, then things would be a bit dicey.

“I know what to do, I don’t need your reminder.” Trunks stretched out lazily against a big tree and suddenly whistled violently.

The manticore, that had been circling in the distance, immediately closed the distance swiftly when it heard Trunks’ whistle. It was standing docilely in front of Trunks after ten seconds. When Gordon and the others, fetching water from the pond in the distance, saw the manticore, it was as if they’d all seen a great enemy. However, Han Shuo was able to calm them down with his voice.

It was at this moment that the original demon, who had caught sight of the manticore, suddenly saw a strange phenomenon. The branches of a lush, green tree suddenly twisted bizarrely, with the twisty branches turning in a circle a few times and suddenly strangely transforming into human hands and feet.

Han Shuo had also detected the disturbance there through the original demon, and he immediately focused his concentration on observing it. The twisting branches continued to twine around themselves and finally formed into a strange person covered with tree bark clothing. This strange person had dark green hair and looked slightly similar to the forest trolls, but had sharp ears and thus looked a bit like an elf.

Just as Han Shuo was perplexed, the strange person got his bearings and walked towards where the manticore had passed through. He muttered, "If the manticore is here, then Trunks must also be nearby."

Han Shuo was startled as he suddenly stared at Trunks, "A strange person is trailing the manticore. He just transformed from a tree and is now approaching this direction along the path that the manticore took. He seems to know you."

Trunks' lazy expression immediately vanished when Han Shuo's words sounded and he suddenly stood up, leaping directly onto the manticore's back afterwards, saying, "If I'm guessing correctly, that person should be the druid Caspian. As a druid, Caspian has the ability to turn his body into a tree and a large bear. He can also communicate with trees. I can't meet him with my current level of strength, we need to leave here immediately."

"Too late, he's already here." Han Shuo creased his brow and said suddenly.

Han Shuo had originally intended on deciding whether to leave or stay after asking Trunks, but who would've thought the movement speed of the druid Caspian would be so fast. Caspian had leapt towards a tree when Trunks was talking, and the supple tree branch was as if it had a psychic connection to Caspian, abruptly swinging back and forth and throwing Caspian in this direction.

Caspian had already landed with a thud in front of Trunks when Han Shuo had finished speaking. He looked at Trunks and smiled faintly. "Long time no see good friend. Shouldn't you return what is mine now?"

Trunks didn't respond to Caspian from the back of the manticore. The manticore leapt up and attempted to get far away from here.

The smile on his face remained unchanged, Caspian suddenly recited an old and ancient incantation. All the shrubs, trees, and flowers suddenly seemed to come alive in the direction that the manticore had taken and seemed to turn into countless numbers of large and small hands, surging towards the manticore and Trunks to entangle them.

The branches of a large tree in front of the fleeing Trunks wove into a net, blocking off his escape. The shrubs roiled like the waves and surrounded the manticore and Trunks. The manticore tried to destroy everything around it, but Trunks restrained it.

"Old friend, I can sense that you're hurt. The fact that you haven't fought back this time means you don't have complete surety of leaving me behind. It looks like your injuries are not light. Give me the divine wood scepter and I can heal your injuries. Isn't that good?" Caspian smiled at Trunks who had stopped in the distance.

Han Shuo and the others watched the conflict between Trunks and Caspian from afar and didn't interfere. It looked like Trunks had taken something of Caspian's and Caspian was merely asking for it back. From the current situation, Trunks was in the wrong and thus Han Shuo didn't intervene, and merely watched coldly from the sidelines.

"I'm injured, you wouldn't take it from me at a time like this, would you?" Trunks spread out his hands and spoke to Caspian after he'd been surrounded.

Caspian went silent for a moment and then stared at Trunks, "If I remember correctly, you stole the divine wood scepter from me when I was injured. I wouldn't mind learning from you if there's a need to!"

"Alright, this is your divine wood scepter. I've studied it for three months and didn't discover anything special about it. You can have it back."

Thinning his lips and smiling ruefully, Trunks took out an exquisitely crafted scepter that looked like it'd been made from old tree roots from a space ring, throwing it to Caspian from afar.

The branch from a large tree suddenly extended and magically wrapped itself around the divine wood scepter, bringing it to the hands of the druid Caspian. When Caspian grasped the divine wood scepter, a lively and strong presence of life immediately emanated from the scepter. The shrubs around him rustled, as if celebrating softly.

Caspian tossed over a small bottle the size of a thumb. When Trunks caught it, Caspian said faintly, "The Hundred Flowers Essence within it will be greatly beneficial to your injuries. Don't think of doing anything against me in the future."

Trunks accepted the Hundred Flowers Essence and shrugged his shoulders, not promising Caspian anything. Judging from his appearance, he seemed to be greatly interested in something that was on Caspian.

"Honorable noble druid, may I trouble you to heal my friend?" At this moment, the elven archer Nia suddenly walked in front of Caspian and asked very sincerely.

Caspian smiled faintly as he looked at Nia and nodded, saying benevolently, "Cute child, I am unable to deny your request."

Druids and elves were both followers of great Mother Nature, with only the most pious of her followers gaining the right to become a druid. This druid's ears are pointy, making it obvious that he had been an elf that had become a druid. No wonder he'd immediately agreed to Nia's request without further protest.

The druid Caspian walked to Odysseus on his stretcher, frowning after he cast a glance at Odysseus' injuries. Caspian then recited an incantation and dropped three drops of green liquid onto the wounds on Odysseus' chest, saying apologetically to Nia afterwards, "Your friend is heavily injured. My blessing of nature and three drops of lifewater will help him heal rapidly with no worry of infection. But when his injuries are healed, he'll be unable to engage in fierce activity. Otherwise, he might experience vertigo or even faint directly. I'm unable to do anything about this, I'm truly sorry!"

"Many thanks to you, kind Caspian." Nia thanked and then said, "Trunks said that the blood of Medusa can help Odysseus recover fully. We'll find Medusa."

Throwing a surprised look at Trunks, Caspian said to Nia, "He's right. There is a magical blue blood in the brain of Medusa where the magical core is held. This blood can indeed help him fully recover. But my old friend isn't someone who likes helping others, why would he tell you this?"

"You've taken the divine wood scepter and healed the person. Isn't it time for you to return to the Druidic Order after chasing me for several months!" Trunks glared at Caspian from his side and said a bit irritably.

Nodding his head and smiling, Caspian explained to Nia, "It looks like my old friend is angry. Heh heh. He's actually not as bad as you think. If he's willing to help you, then you have an extremely high chance of obtaining Medusa's blood. My apologies, I still have things to attend to and can't keep you company."

"You're too kind." Nia was a bit startled and flattered as she hastily responded sincerely.

Caspian looked at Trunks and left with a slight smile, disappearing from everyone's view after a while.

"Let's go, we'll continue to be on our way and can reach that place after two days." Trunks snorted slightly with a cold expression after Caspian had left and urged the others to continue on their way.

Under Trunks' guidance, the group didn't run into any danger and arrived at a marsh that had a heavy stench after two days. Several enormous man-eater flowers repeatedly attacked Han Shuo and the others around the marsh. It was a good thing that Trunks had warned them before and the group was able to defend against the man-eater flowers together.

“The Fruit of Dagmar grows on a patch of sludge in the middle of this enormous marsh, along with a Medusa lying in wait. We’ve reached our destination.” Trunks pointed at the vast expanse of marsh in front of him and spoke.

Chapter 111: The voice of temptation

The swamp's surface was extensive, with bones from humans and creatures subtly poking out of the grey sludge. It looked like quite a number of humans and beasts had died within. There were also various ugly and bizarre plants growing within the sludge. Sharp spikes grew on the plants' branches as they swayed aimlessly through the air. It all appeared quite eerie and horrifying.

The large trees around the perimeter were located on the edges of the sludge. When some leaves landed within the sludge, they would disappear without a trace in the blink of an eye, as if there was a demon hidden at the bottom of the sludge that swallowed everything. Waves of disgusting stench were emitted from the sludge and attacked the senses, causing the water mage Aphrodite and female elf Nia to crease their brows and cover their mouths, appearing quite ill at ease.

When everyone's gazes landed into the swamp, Trunks continued explaining, "The plants that live within are all exceedingly dangerous. The swamp will swallow all humans and beasts that venture in, and the stench in the deep regions also contain a slow toxin that drains one's energy. The Medusa that hides within this swamp appears according to its will and is very difficult to handle."

Han Shuo's gaze focused gravely on the large patch of swamp. His forehead creased after hearing Trunks' explanation as he privately weighed his options on how to proceed.

"We don't have the ability to fly and will sink into the ground as soon as we set foot into the swamp. According to what you've told us, the Medusa lives within the swamp and can completely conceal itself beneath the swamp. It can attack or retreat and holds all the advantages. The level of difficulty for us to fight it within the swamp is simply too great." Han Shuo said lowly after he'd put some thought into it for a moment.

Flicking a glance at Han Shuo, Trunks said, "The Medusa's strength greatly increases within the swamp. Even the manticore, a magical creature also of the first rank would be helpless. We don't have the ability to fly and won't be able to injure it much at all, but if the Medusa walks out of the swamp, I think all of us combined will be able to solidly triumph over the Medusa. but according to my knowledge of the Medusa, it won't leave the swamp easily."

"Is there anything that has an increased chance of attracting the Medusa?" Han Shuo asked.

Shaking his head, Trunks said, "I don't know. The Medusa can emit a marvelous sound, and this sound has the power of attracting humans and beasts. It will suddenly attack as soon as humans or beasts get close to the swamp and pull its prey in. Thus, the Medusa has no fear of not having enough food. I don't know what else it needs apart from this."

After remaining silent for a moment, Han Shuo suddenly smiled, "Since this is the case, we can only use the dumbest method. We'll stand guard here and kill its prey as soon as the Medusa makes sound to lure in its prey. I think it'll be unable to resist its hunger after a few discoveries that no prey has approached it and will exit the swamp then. We'll make our move together and kill it then."

"Yes, although this method is dumb, there's no other way. My manticore and I aren't afraid of the Medusa as long as it leaves the swamp. If we add all of you into the mix, I think it'll be impossible for it to escape death."

"Alright, then let's make our preparations."

Several traps and simple fences were set up around the swamp, with everyone finally realizing how all encompassing this task was when they started to undertake it. The swamp was quite vast and it was quite difficult and exhaustive to completely defend it on all sides. The group spent quite a large amount of time before wearily finishing their preparations.

After resting for a night, everyone's ears were plugged the next morning as they took up watch around the perimeter in previously discussed positions. The territory of the swamp was too vast. Even with eight people and one manticore split up, they were still spread a bit thin. Han Shuo also released his three original demons and used them to patrol the surroundings of the swamp, continuously paying attention to the situation.

The group waited with full attention for quite a while on the first day, but didn't discover the Medusa hunting prey. Just as Trunks had mentioned, the Medusa hunting was enough for it to be fed for more than ten days. The group had no way of estimating when it'd last hunted and so could only continue waiting with this brute force method.

The Medusa didn't hunt again on the second day, with Han Shuo's original demons discovering that a portion of the sludge within the swamp had suddenly surged upwards on dusk of the third day, revealing the Medusa's form within.

Just as its name stated, the Medusa's numerous strands of hair were made of live snakes. These snakes were incomparably elongated and extended in all directions of the swamp like tentacles. The Medusa's features were actually that of a beautiful woman. Her slender eyebrows and cherry lips were quite beautiful, but her mouth opened to reveal rows of sinister fangs. Its slightly revealed lower body was the body of a serpent. An ugly brown suffused its durable and thick skin, forming an indefinable, bizarre contrast with its striking face.

Although it displayed rows of sinister fangs from its open mouth, the Medusa was emitting an elegant and desolate sound of temptation. Han Shuo and the others had long since plugged their ears, but could still faintly hear the sounds. They all felt their hearts tremble, as if they'd experienced a baffling sense of attraction and had the desire to investigate the source.

It was a good thing that they could only hear a little and had the benefit of Trunks' repeated reminders earlier that morning. This was how they kept their heads and didn't walk towards the swamp, firmly standing guard where they were, their gazes continuously roving around in all directions and always paying attention to movements around them.

Slowly, the sounds of small magical creatures being attracted to the previously quiet swamp traveled to them. They were trotting along happily as they involuntarily traveled in the direction of the swamp. A few larger magical creatures were also approaching from a distance.

Han Shuo and Trunks looked at each other, temporarily not activating the traps they had prepared earlier. The magical creatures that were appearing didn't possess much destructive power, so there was no need to use the traps. Everyone split up and carefully avoided the obstacles of the traps, making their moves mercilessly and started hunting down the smaller magical creatures that were slowly approaching.

It would appear that Trunks' injuries had recovered well. His efficiency was the highest amongst them all, and it was as if his body was another dangerous magical creature as he treaded through the trees and shrubbery, bringing with him waves of blood. He'd thoroughly cleaned up the magical creatures, that had been first to approach, in short order.

With the aid of the Demonslayer Edge, although Han Shuo's speed was slower than Trunks, he was still much faster than the others. The Demonslayer Edge was like a magical machine reaping lives as it twirled and easily slaughtered level five and six magical creatures.

After taking care of the low level magical creatures in their areas, Han Shuo and Trunks walked to another area and helped the others handle the swiftly approaching magical creatures. After a short while, the twenty or so small magical creatures that had approached had all been wiped out by the group. The value of these small, low level magical creatures was too low and thus Han Shuo didn't even make a move to collect the spoils of battle.

In this short lull, Han Shuo yanked out of the soft cloth plugging his ears and stood where he was with a grave expression. This greatly startled Trunks, who was beside him, as the latter made several hand gestures to Han Shuo.

The elegant and desolate cries seemed to be a lover murmuring lowly by his ears, giving one the uncontrollable urge to want to go to her gentle embrace and entwine themselves with her, voicing the agonies of yearning. This strange temptation instantly permeated Han Shuo's mind, creating illusions for him immediately, as if it was Fanny who was calling out to him again and again in the swamp behind him. This caused him to uncontrollably lift up his feet and stride towards the swamp behind him.

However, he'd only taken a few steps after raising his feet when the thoughts in Han Shuo's mind churned slightly. Following that, indomitable will immediately halted Han Shuo where he stood. His body remained unmoving where he was as he defended against the onslaught of temptation with stubborn will.

After training his magical yuan for such a long period of time, Han Shuo had full confidence in his willpower. Magic and fighting aura were of no use in fighting the temptation emitted by the Medusa's voice, the only thing that could counter it was stubborn and tenacious willpower. It was precisely that Han Shuo felt his current self would be able to withstand her that he'd decisively given up the cover of the soft cloth. He was attempting to see if the Medusa's allure could shake his indomitable will.

The final result demonstrated that after training his magical yuan for such a long period of time, he had indeed developed an inhumane strong will. The cries filled with temptation proved to be full of temptation at first, but slowly started losing their effect, until Han Shuo was no longer affected.

The footsteps he'd started taking backwards once again moved forward with determination, the expression on his face carefree and natural. He was obviously not suffering under the temptation of the mesmerizing voice anymore. Trunks had been watching in astonishment from afar as he saw Han Shuo struggle with some difficulty in the beginning and then easily handle things in the end. He raised his thumb from afar, acknowledging Han Shuo's stubborn willpower.

Five to six level three and four magical creatures once again appeared in everyone's line of sight. There were also two frost eagles circling overhead. Han Shuo, Trunks, and the others cast looks of surprise and wariness at each other, focusing all their concentration on the lowly circling frost eagles.

The frost eagles were obviously affected by the Medusa and looked like they intended on roosting in the swamp. They wouldn't be flying so low otherwise. Grasping the crossbow in his hands, Han Shuo took aim at the outstretched throat of one of the frost eagles and an accurate bolt broke through the air.

At the same time, Nia and the other two mages made their moves, aiming for the other frost eagle. The frost eagles were quite large, and the Medusa wouldn't need to come out for at least five or six days if they fell into the swamp. This would waste all their previous efforts, and thus the group could absolutely not let the frost eagle land in the swamp.

The alertness of the entranced frost eagle was obviously not as it usually was. Han Shuo's bolt pierced through its neck and shot it down from the sky. On the other side, Nia and the other two mages' attacks were a bit feeble due to the distance. Several of Nia's arrows were stuck on the frost eagle's body, but didn't seem to do much damage.

Upon seeing the injured frost eagle fly over their heads and head for the swamp, Han Shuo became a bit anxious. The already fired crossbow needed a bit of time before a bolt could be loaded and the crossbow become operational again. He would never make it in time. Just as he was planning on taking out the Demonslayer Edge, Trunks suddenly flung out a short sword that was imbued with Trunks' fighting aura, sinking into the lower spine of the frost eagle.

Suffering from the severe damage from the short sword, the speed of the frost eagle's flapping wings decreased noticeably. It started to slowly descend as the manticore flashed out like lightning from a distance, suddenly appearing in front of the frost eagle and slashed with its incomparably strong claws, tearing the frost eagle's neck apart.

The magical creatures on the ground were all cleaned out with the efforts of the traps and three swordsmen. Just as everyone had heaved a sigh of relief, an elven maiden suddenly appeared in the distance. The elven maid's beauty was pure and unadorned. She was dressed in luxurious clothes as she swiftly approached Han Shuo's direction with a blank look on her face.

Horror gripping him, Han Shuo immediately shot out and blocked the female elf's advancing footsteps. He opened his mouth to say, "Stop, hurry up and stop!"

It was a pity that the mesmerized maid let had obviously temporarily lost her senses and completely ignored Han Shuo's words as she continued to walk towards the swamp.

"Not everyone has the same willpower as you. Stop trying to persuade her and just grab her!" Trunks couldn't help but roar out when he saw that the female elf approaching the swamp step by step and Han Shuo was still trying to persuade her.

Han Shuo blanked and finally reached out with the speed of lightning upon seeing the female elf make her way closer to the swamp, wrapping her in his arms and hauling her away from the perimeter, ignoring her struggles.

"Brother... brother!" The female elf cried out continuously and struggled continuously in Han Shuo's arms. When she discovered that she couldn't break free, her small fists beat fiercely on Han Shuo's chest as she desolately wailed, "Brother."

This level of attack was neither painful nor ticklish on Han Shuo's chest. He held the female elf tightly as he walked further away from the swamp. The Medusa's elegant voice became more and more hurried, but no more humans or beasts appeared in the surroundings.

After a short while, the Medusa finally listlessly stopped its calls of temptation and its body, concealed within the swamp, slowly revealed itself.

Chapter 112: Slaying the snake together

When the Medusa slowly emerged from the swamp, Han Shuo discovered that it was even bigger than he'd imagined. Its hair full of small snakes was waving wildly as they extended in dance. Its serpentine lower body was as thick as a bucket, and its body was five or six meters long.

"Everyone be careful, I think the Medusa is ready to leave the swamp to hunt." Han Shuo could clearly see the Medusa's movements through the observations of his original demons and he immediately warned everyone.

"Bad guy, bad guy, big bad guy!" A scream rang out from his arms after Han Shuo's alarmed words and the beautiful and pure elven maiden in his arms started erupting in violent action, railing her small fists into Han Shuo's chest, accompanied by a look of panic.

Seeing that the female elf had regained her senses, Han Shuo immediately stopped holding her as the Demonslayer Edge abruptly appeared in his hand. His eyes calmly patrolled the four corners as he planned on finding an appropriate location to fight the Medusa.

"What, what do you want to do?" The elven maiden was greatly startled as she thought Han Shuo wanted to kill her. She took two steps back in a panic, a magic staff suddenly appearing in her hand and sent a sharp blade of wind hurtling towards Han Shuo's head with a magical incantation.

"Damn it, what are you attacking me for?" Han Shuo immediately roared furiously at this elf after he dodged it.

However, it looked like the elven maiden was even more irate than Han Shuo. She was staring at Han Shuo with extreme enmity and also said huffily, "What did you do to me just now?"

The hungry Medusa had obviously lost its patience when it saw that no prey had entered the swamp. Its colossal body moved swiftly within the swamp and drew close to Han Shuo's group.

Han Shuo didn't have the time to waste with the female elf at this moment and beckoned quickly with his hand when he saw the female elven archer Nia walk over from the distance. He pointed at the clueless elven maiden and said, "Explain everything to her."

Han Shuo immediately left quickly after saying these words and arrived where Trunks, Aphrodite, and the others were. He spoke urgently, "It looks like the Medusa couldn't hold out against its anger and is attempting to leave the swamp to find prey. It's heading in this direction, everyone be on guard."

"The two mages hurry and leave, take up positions in the big tree behind the traps. The two swordsmen should split up and don't let the Medusa discover your tracks. Han, you and I leave temporarily. When the Medusa appears in a moment, we'll block off its path of retreat. It's extremely difficult to handle a Medusa creature within the swamp, but it may not even be up to the task of fighting my mantichore when it leaves the swamps. Therefore, we have a high probability of killing it, but the only thing is to not let it discover our tracks. We'll find it dreadfully hard to fight it if it returns to the swamp." Trunks suddenly spoke up loudly at this time and quickly instructed everyone to return to their posts.

At such a pivotal moment, even the other adventurers, who previously bore enmity towards Trunks, didn't say anything else. They all nodded and started moving according to their positions in accordance with Trunks' instructions.

Han Shuo nodded at Trunks and suddenly left, avoiding the path that the Medusa would definitely take. Han Shuo's grasp of the greater picture far exceeded everyone else's, due to the information he received from the original demons. The Medusa looked quite cautious as it warily crawled onto the shore, and wasn't in a hurry to immediately leave the marsh. It dithered by the side of the marsh, as if contemplating something.

The magical creatures that had appeared just now had been stripped of all their valuables and their corpses abandoned in the enormous trap that'd been previously prepared. The Medusa's beautiful head turned around a few times, her watery eyes appearing a bit confused as to why not a single human or beast had approached after hearing her alluring voice.

After a while, the Medusa still hadn't seemed to think it through and finally left the marsh, walking towards the place where Aphrodite and the others lay in wait. Through the observations of the original demon, Han Shuo discovered that the previously angry elf had finally calmed down after Nia's persuading and was looking with interest in his direction. She finally backed up unwillingly towards the back under Nia's repeated encouragement, but she wasn't willing to move too far.

After leaving the marsh, the Medusa cautiously proceeded forward. Han Shuo and Trunks circled around and appeared from another direction the marsh, completely blocking off the Medusa's path of retreat. Han Shuo and Trunks traded a meaningful glance and approached the Medusa from behind at the same time, soundlessly, prepared to make a move against it at any time.

Finally, when the Medusa was ten or so meters away from the marsh, its undulating body suddenly drew near to the trap. Its bizarre body was elongated, when its upper body perceived the existence of the trap, it leveraged the strength of its lower body and slowly eased its slanted body out of the trap and moved away with the undulations of its body.

At this moment, a water dragon and lightning suddenly flashed through the sky, crashing down onto the Medusa with a thunderous roar. Up ahead, not too far away, Nia also pulled back her bow and fired. Several sharp arrows broke through the air and headed straight for the Medusa.

On the side, Gordon and the two other swordsmen swung out together and chopped down a branch that had been hoisted up high. A tremendous crack rang out as the sharp end of the thick tree branch came shooting straight down to the Medusa.

The Medusa immediately realized that it had fallen into an ambush, and its lower body magically curled around a big tree next to it. Its body had been about to fall into the trap, but flew high through the air and crashed back down onto the ground with a thud.

The branch that had been shooting towards the Medusa shot past where its neck had been before the Medusa dodged, thudding into the bottom of the trap and ringing out loudly.

Aphrodite's water dragon crashed into the Medusa's body, but obviously didn't reach the amount of destructive power it should have. When the Medusa shook its head, the water dragon dispersed into countless water droplets. It was rather the bolt of thunder and lightning that caused the Medusa to cry out in pain.

Only one of the Nia's arrows pierced into the soft, tender nape of the Medusa's neck, but it didn't sink in that far and didn't cause a fatal injury. The Medusa's frantic, violent writhing proved that it hadn't suffered grievous wounds.

After the first wave of attacks had landed, the Medusa swiftly turned around and retreated. It didn't attempt to seek revenge on the people who had attacked it and crawled directly towards the marsh. It seemed that it wanted to retreat and fight back after entering the marsh.

It was a pity at this time that Han Shuo and Trunks had long since been ready. Brutal, milky-white fighting aura and the ear rattling whistle from the Demonslayer Edge rang out as they both made for the Medusa, suddenly appearing on the Medusa's neck and cheek.

The Medusa had been able to easily handle the previous attacks, but Han Shuo and Trunks' combined attacks finally let it sense the threat of death. These two waves of attacks were swift and fierce. The domineering killing intent encompassed within caused the highly ranked Medusa to deploy all of its energy.

Its enormous body suddenly became incredibly agile as its numerous snakes for hair suddenly danced. The hundreds and thousands of small snakes danced wildly in the air, transforming into a sky of tentacles to obstruct Trunks and Han Shuo's attacks.

Trunks' milky-white fighting aura and Han Shuo's Demonslayer Edge attacks hurtled into the midst of the numerous dancing snakes and instantly filled the air with a bloody mist. The small snakes were pulverized into bloody chunks that were sent flying and plopped onto the ground.

Both of their attacks were greatly weakened at the same time and couldn't approach the Medusa's vital parts at all. The small snakes that had been chopped off wriggled on the ground and struggled in Han Shuo's and Trunks' direction, attempting to swallow the two.

"Huh. Go to hell." Trunks snorted coldly as a longsword once again appeared in his hand. However, it wasn't the broadsword that had been chipped by the Demonslayer Edge.

Trunks' body was surrounded by milky-white aura and a gust of flying sand and small rocks exploded towards the small snakes approaching him, swiftly making for the Medusa. On the other side, a figure dashed out like lightning. It was the manticore who had long been lying in wait. It maintained the same speed as Trunks and shot towards the Medusa.

Han Shuo remained unmoving where he stood, closing his eyes instead and manipulating the Demonslayer Edge with all his concentration. The small snakes that covered the Medusa's head all screamed as they one by one, turned into a bloody rain that filled the sky. The indestructible Demonslayer Edge reaped the life of one small snake after another and chopped off half of the Medusa's small snakes in the span of an instant.

The other adventurers in the distance all surged out from the back when they saw that the Medusa had no avenue of retreat and was heavily injured. Even more attacks appeared with their combined efforts. Trunks and the manticore were even more fierce as they directly challenged the Medusa. Trunks had turned into a cloud of milky-white aura and his every move caused the Medusa's blood and flesh to fly everywhere.

Ranked on the same level as the Medusa, the manticore circled the Medusa on the ground and dashed to and fro. Its claws, that were as sharp as blades, left injuries on the Medusa so deep that bone could be seen. When all of the small snakes on the Medusa's head had been executed by Han Shuo's Demonslayer Edge, the Medusa's struggles suddenly became quite listless and its writhing body suddenly became quiet.

Chapter 113: This is called a hang glider

By the time that everyone had surrounded the Medusa, it had already fallen and lay without moving. Trunks leapt onto the body with sword in hand, slicing open its head and taking out the most valuable item from the Medusa with a look of joy.

Trunks dug out the core of the level one magic beast and the blue blood near its core. When Han Shuo had dashed over from the distance, the matters on this side had been completed, and even the corpse of the Medusa had been pushed into the depths of the trap.

The, elf off in the distance, followed closely behind Nia, poking her head out to gaze at the Medusa within the trap, saying softly, “How does this ugly fellow have such a lovely voice?”

“Angelica, you should hurry and go back. We have other things to do!” Nia frowned involuntarily when she saw the young female elf look on with a face full of curiosity.

“No, sister Nia let me stay with you. This is much more fun than being at grandpa’s.” Angelica smiled sweetly at Nia and shook her head, speaking shyly.

After Han Shuo made his way over, Trunks took out the magical core and the precious blood that he’d retrieved and handed it over to Han Shuo. “I’ll keep ten drops of the Medusa’s blue blood. You can split the rest with the others.”

A small bottle filled with the Medusa’s blue blood was stored within a crystalline, white vase. That and the Medusa’s magical core were all shoved into Han Shuo’s hands. Grasping the items that Trunks had handed over, Han Shuo asked, “How much blood does Odysseus need to fully recover?”

“I think five drops of the Medusa’s essence blood should be enough to help Odysseus fully recover. The essence blood has a miraculous effect. Not only can it increase the recovery speed of injuries, but it can reconnect separated limbs. If one’s arms or legs are broken, the essence blood of the Medusa will allow the limbs to reconnect and grow without affecting movement in the future. Therefore, the Medusa's essence blood is very precious." Trunks looked at Han Shuo and solemnly explained the preciousness of the Medusa's essence blood.

Nodding, Han Shuo also took out a medicine flask and poured out half of the Medusa's essence blood and gave the rest of the bottle along with the level one magical creature core to Aphrodite. He said, "These items belong to you guys. Split it up with them after this is all over."

Aphrodite looked askance at Han Shuo and opened her mouth to say, "Isn't it a bit too much to give us all this? I think we should only receive either the Medusa's essence blood or the magical core. After all, the two of you put forth the most effort in this plan to kill the Medusa, we only served as a sort of distraction and hindrance."

"Take it for now, we have other things to do. If you've further considerations, why not wait until you've taken care of Odysseus? Odysseus told you before to temporarily listen to my words, I think you remember that."

The magical core of the Medusa could be used to create some mysterious instruments that would also have the same mesmerizing effect. If sold, it would absolutely be sold for a premium price. However, the Medusa wasn't Han Shuo's goal this time, but rather the Fruit of Dagmar that would be incredibly useful to Han Shuo's cultivation.

As useful as the things on the Medusa were, they had no direct usefulness for Han Shuo. Therefore, he was extremely generous in portioning out the spoils of battle from the Medusa. Han Shuo did so also because he hoped that when he obtained the Fruit of Dagmar later, he would have a higher chance of taking more of the Fruits. This was what he needed the most at the moment.

"Now that the Medusa had been cleared from the swamp, the only things left within the swamp are the man-eating plants and permeating toxins. It was said that the Fruit of Dagmar grew within the man-eating plants. We can come up with a plan to find the Fruit." Trunks looked at Han Shuo and opened his mouth to make the suggestion.

Nodding, Han Shuo didn't say much and walked towards the swamp, deep in thought. When he came to the edge of the swamp, he randomly picked up one of the small stones on the shore and threw it into the distance. When the stone landed, it sank into the swamp within the blink of an eye and vanished without a trace.

Of those present, no one could fly through the air and only Han Shuo's three original demons could patrol around the swamp. When he arrived, Han Shuo sat down cross legged with a darkened face and focused his complete attention on manipulating the three original demons. They danced through the vast swamp and attempted to locate the Fruit of Dagmar.

When Trunks and the others arrived, they saw Han Shuo sitting cross legged without a sound, with even his eyes closed. Everyone was rather baffled.

"Sister Nia, what's wrong with that bad man?" The pure elven maiden Angelica looked at Han Shuo in surprise and asked Nia in a sweet voice.

Nia also didn't know what Han Shuo was doing and shook her head when she heard Angelica ask. She said oddly, "I don't know either, but Han Shuo is a marvelous person. I think he's doing some magical things again."

Trunks understood that some obscure secrets were concealed within Han Shuo's body. These secrets could cause even him, a fierce and domineering swordsmaster to have extreme misgivings towards Han Shuo. When he saw Han Shuo's bizarre appearance this time, he immediately thought that Han Shuo was doing something mysterious again. He immediately focused his attentions on observing Han Shuo's body and any abnormalities around him, attempting to find out the mysteries that shrouded Han Shuo.

Unfortunately, even with Trunks' extraordinary abilities and uncanny eye for fighting aura and magical power, the original demons had no fighting aura within them and weren't supported by magic. This made Trunks' observation come up empty handed as he had absolutely no idea why Han Shuo did what he did.

One of the original demons made its way into the midst of the thickest patch of man-eating plants and suddenly discovered plants that looked humanesque within a claret red mound of sludge.

This plant looked like an ordinary person, replete with hands, feet, waist, and cheeks. It was hidden in the sludge beneath the waist with a thick stalk that was similar to a root, and there were three brains that looked like they had lost their fleshy coverings on the neck that were exposed to the air. The appearance of these three brains were the same as the Fruit of Dagmar that everyone had described.

Taking a deep breath in, Han Shuo opened his eyes as an excited light sparkled and danced within his eyes. He said, "The Fruit of Dagmar is within that patch of man-eating plants. It has a humanesque stalk, but three fruit shaped like a human brain have blossomed on it."

"The Fruit of Dagmar is indeed within the swamp, but how should we reach it?" Aphrodite was first overjoyed at hearing this news, but then immediately reacted with a woebegone expression.

"Yes, none amongst us are at the archmage level and have no way of flying above the swamp." Gordon frowned and said equally weakly.

Trunks looked at Han Shuo who was deep in thought, thought for a moment himself, and said, "Han, all sorts of poisonous insects fill the swamp and there are slow acting toxins within the air. If you fall into the swamp accidentally, it would be very unrealistic to want to leave alive. I've thought for a moment and the only way is to make use of a few of the towering trees on the side of the swamp. If we make use of the trees' slender branches and swing out fiercely, we'll be able to briefly fly over the center of the swamp."

"However, I can't promise that the oscillation force of the branches will be able to send someone directly to the other side. In addition, you'd only swing through the center of the swamp for a brief moment. I think it's impossible to just so happen to swing by the Fruit of Dagmar and obtain it whilst under attack from the man-eating plants in such a short amount of time.”

Han Shuo's brow remained creased in thought after Trunks said his piece, with a smile breaking out on his face all of a sudden. He stared at the female elf Angelica, all smiles, and spoke to her as gently as a big grey wolf talking to a white rabbit, “Beautiful, cute elf, did you cast wind blades on me just now, a magic that belongs to the wind family of magic?”

Pulling the slightly panicked Angelica behind her, Nia looked a bit oddly at Han Shuo, like she was a mother hen protecting a small chick. “Han, are you still begrudging what's just happened and planning on taking revenge against Angelica? Angelica has a noble status amongst us elves so I suggest that you don't make trouble for her. In addition, I won't allow you to do anything to her.”

“Anyone with smiles on his face is no one good, that's what grandpa told me. I feel very perturbed by his smile, he must not be anything good.” Angelica, behind Nia, glared at Han Shuo and proclaimed.

Shaking his head with a rueful smile, Han Shuo said to Nia, “Just what are you thinking about? I need Angelica to help me with a small favor, if she's a wind mage.”

Nia let out a sigh of relief after hearing Han Shuo's words, turned around to look at Angelica peacefully and said with a smile, “He's not a bad guy. You were casting wind magic just now, what level wind mage are you?”

“I'm only a journeyman mage, so I can't fly. Don't tell me to get that fruit, I'll fall!” Angelica squealed as her slender calves wobbled, her body floating into the air.

She was holding her breath and her tender, small face turned red from effort. She seemed to gather all her strength and took two ferocious steps upwards into the air, then fell down to the ground with a clatter. She spread her hands at those assembled and displayed a powerless expression. Her performance just now had been to tell everyone that she truly couldn't, and that she would fall down like this.

“Eh, I just need you to cast the journeyman magic ‘Grim Wind’ in a moment. Was there really a need for you to prove your ineptness?” Han Shuo didn’t know whether to laugh or cry as he looked at this bizarre little elf.

Sitting up abruptly from the ground, Angelica dusted off herself and stuck out her small chest, saying proudly, “So it’s just the Grim Wind spell? I, Angelica, promise to help you. What do you need me to do?”

Trunks and everyone else gathered around Han Shuo at this moment with looks of curiosity, waiting for Han Shuo to respond.

Han Shuo’s face was solemn as he stared deeply at Angelica, saying lowly, “In a moment, as soon as I leap off from a branch, you must cast the Grim Wind spell at me immediately. Remember that you must cast it when I push off, and be sure to grasp the best timing.”

“Han, are you really planning on doing this? The force from the branch’s velocity won’t be enough to support you to the other side of the swamp. Even with the aid of the Grim Wind spell, it’s still quite unrealistic. In addition, the Grim Wind Spell will only increase your speed in flying away, further decreasing your chances of grabbing the Fruit of Dagmar. I highly recommend finding another way!” Trunks frowned as he looked at Han Shuo, attempting to convince him.

Shaking his head, Han Shuo’s expression was resolute as he said to Trunks, “No need, I wouldn’t do so if I wasn’t fully assured of success. All of you be at ease, I have other methods as well.”

After saying these words, Han Shuo took out a tent amidst everyone’s surprise and slashed several times with the Demonslayer Edge in his hand. The tent ripped apart, Han Shuo then moved steadily and took out some durable rope to wrap around the tent.

After a while, Han Shuo stopped his movements and said with a smile, “I’ve created a simple tool. With the aid of this tool and the help of the Grim Wind spell, I am confident that I can pass through this patch of swamp, and under the conditions of slow speed!”

“Han, what kind of strange device is this? You say it can help you cross through the swamp? I really don't believe it!" Aphrodite looked in confusion at the item within Han Shuo's hand and said in disbelief.

"This is called a hang glider and it can do it." Han Shuo picked up the simplistic hang glider that he'd modified from a tent and slowly crawled up to the tallest and most thickly grown tree on the side of the swamp beneath everyone's disbelieving eyes

"Have you really decided?" Although Trunks still didn't quite believe it, he was unable to penetrate all of the miraculousness of Han Shuo, and thus he didn't continue to try to convince him. He only asked for one last time after seeing Han Shuo crawl up the highest part of the tree and grasp the tensile, pliable branch.

"I'm ready, are you ready Angelica?" Han Shuo nodded and asked the beautiful elven maiden, Angelica, in the distance.

Angelica nodded proudly and said with great confidence, "No problem, you can start!"

Chapter 114: Changes in the swamp

Han Shuo pushed off with all his strength and flew out using the pliable branch, his body drawing an arc through the air. When he returned to his starting point, he stomped down on the branch fiercely with both feet and his body once again flew out like lightning.

After swinging back and forth like this a few times, the degree to which Han Shuo's body was swinging out became larger and larger, and his speed increased further and further as well. The group watched him with astonishment as their hearts fluttered up and down in accordance with Han Shuo's swinging.

Just as Han Shuo felt that the speed of his swinging had reached its maximum, he called out loudly, "Angelica, prepare the Grim Wind spell!"

Han Shuo suddenly let go and flew out towards the other side of the swamp under the enormous momentum behind his motions. At the same time that he left the branch, the simple hang glider that he'd stored back in his space ring reappeared. It was as if a pair of wings had suddenly appeared beneath Han Shuo as he held them beneath his body.

At the same time, Angelica confidently chanted the Grim Wind spell, and a violent gust started blowing where Han Shuo was, propelling him forward as he hovered over the swamp.

If it hadn't been for the hang glider, Han Shuo would've surely flown out like lightning, and possibly fallen into the swamp like lightning as well, but with the aid of the hang glider and the movement afforded by the Grim Wind spell, it allowed Han Shuo to magically, but slowly float towards the center of the swamp with an unhurried, unrushed pace.

"Oh, my gosh, he's really doing it!" Nia exclaimed in surprise with a look of incredulity on her face.

The other observers were equally astonished, with only Trunks maintaining his calm as he said lowly with a look of gravity, "The toxic gas within the center of the swamp is the heaviest, and the man-eating plants there are equally difficult to manage. It won't be that easy to grab the Fruit within a short period of time. I hope he succeeds as he wishes.”

Everyone finally remembered Han Shuo’s goal when they heard Trunks’ words. He wasn’t simply traveling across the swamp, but the most important thing was that he needed to gain the Fruit of Dagmar. After Trunks’ splash of cold water, everyone’s expression grew heavy once again.

As he slowly approached the center of the swamp, Han Shuo focused his concentration and tightly gripped the Demonslayer Edge within his hand. His eyes however, were tightly closed as he observed all abnormalities within the center through the original demons.

Finally, the Demonslayer flew out Han Shuo’s hand with an ear piercing whistle. The man-eating plants all extended their life reaping branches and twigs as soon as the Demonslayer Edge entered the swamp, attempting to entangle it within the swamp. However, the Demonslayer Edge’s keenness didn’t let Han Shuo down. Large patches of the branches and leaves were sent falling into the swamp under the Demonslayer Edge’s dance.

A patch of man-eating plants had already been cleared away in the span of an instant. As Han Shuo approached with his hang glider, the Demonslayer Edge hewed through everything according to Han Shuo’s will as expressed through the Demonslayer Edge. In this moment, Han Shuo, with his eyes closed, seemed to have reached some accord with the Demonslayer Edge, as if he had suddenly become that indestructible blade.

The three original demons appeared in that area at the same time, observing all changes around the Fruit of Dagmar from three different directions. As Han Shuo slowly approached, the patch of man-eating plants broke apart beneath the Demonslayer Edge’s slashing.

When Han Shuo was a few meters away from the center, Han Shuo suddenly opened his previously firmly closed eyes. His body slanted at the same time as his hand grabbed one of the ropes, fully focusing his eyes on the Fruit of Dagmar. He paid no heed to the man-eating plants around him, including the slowly spreading but faint, poisonous gas, as if none of these dangers existed.

The people observing around the outside were also quite nervous right now. Angelica's breathing was increasingly heavy and her face was red with excitement, as if thinking that this situation was quite thrilling.

Whoosh the rope suddenly flew out, with the Demonslayer Edge that had been ripping through the man-eating plants suddenly flying upside down towards Han Shuo. Under Han Shuo's will, the end of the Demonslayer Edge brought the rope with it as it flew to loop around the Fruit of Dagmar.

A disgusting stench suddenly permeated Han Shuo's surroundings, making his chest suddenly feel tight in that moment. His mind was briefly disoriented, and the Demonslayer Edge, that had been making for the Fruit of Dagmar, suddenly descended, directionless, as Han Shuo lost his bearings.

"Be careful, hang on!" Aphrodite suddenly called out loudly from the shore as she reminded Han Shuo to keep his concentration focused.

His magical yuan automatically flowing to his chest, slowly removing the heaviness in his chest wherever the miraculous magical yuan passed through. His slightly dizzy mind finally stabilized. As his thoughts moved, the Demonslayer Edge, that had been about to sink into the swamp, suddenly emitted a shrill scream, its sharp edge trembled a few times as it flew like lightning towards the Fruit of Dagmar, bringing the rope with it and landing around the neck shaped part of the Fruit of Dagmar.

Han Shuo took a deep breath in and tugged sharply with his hand, the rope pulled tight on the man-eating plant. Having completed its mission, the Demonslayer Edge churned as branches and leaves were cut off, with multicolored liquid flowing out of some of the leaves.

Just as everyone's hearts were in their throats, the Fruit of Dagmar slowly left the swamp, little by little. Han Shuo increased his strength and then, with the aid of the Demonslayer Edge, cut off the Fruit of Dagmar from the waist. Han Shuo then abruptly lifted up and the Fruit of Dagmar came flying out of the swamp, along with the neck and arm-shaped portion of the plant.

Slowly exerting force and withdrawing the Fruit of Dagmar, the hang glider enabled Han Shuo to fly through the center of the swamp and slowly travel to the other side.

“Rob them!” A shrill yell suddenly rang out at this moment, following shortly thereafter by four arrows, blazing with fire, flying directly at Han Shuo’s body. At the same time, the sludge on the ground suddenly formed into an enormous hand and grabbed at Han Shuo’s legs.

“Oh, damnit, enemies!” On the shore, Trunks suddenly cursed and yelled loudly.

Up in the hang glider, Han Shuo was only ten or so meters from shore. The threat from the sludge formed hand proved to be of greatest threat, forcing Han Shuo to call back the Demonslayer Edge to handle the great hand.

The four burning arrows would obviously not be that easily handled. Han Shuo had no place to exert force from in the hang glider and thus appeared a bit bedraggled. He blocked two arrows with some difficulty, with one of them still connecting with Han Shuo’s calf, bringing him a fiery pain.

Han Shuo could only slightly divert the other arrow’s direction, but it still landed on the bottom part of the hand glider and caused it to start burning.

“Be careful, he’s making it to shore!” More than ten people stood on the other side of the swamp, all of them waiting in readiness for Han Shuo to make it over. Their outfits seemed to indicate that they were mercenaries or some sort of private troops. All sorts of professions were mixed in.

Boundless fury suffusing his heart, Han Shuo itched to kill every single person standing on the other shore at this moment. These people looked like they had arrived on the other side of shore by coincidence. Because Trunks and the others were separated by the entire swamp, and they’d been too focused on Han Shuo, their alertness had greatly decreased and thus hadn’t discovered this group which resulted in them successfully ambushing Han Shuo.

The Fruit of Dagmar was finally stored within Han Shuo's space ring during this entire process. He was in great pain now that a flaming arrow was stuck to his calf. The hang glider was also slowly burning and was crisping the sleeves of Han Shuo's shirt, forcing Han Shuo to endure the agony of being burned.

These people were ruthless alright. As the burning Han Shuo and hang glider drifted inexorably towards the ground, some of them fitted another round of crossbow bolts into their crossbows and attempted to shoot Han Shuo dead in mid air.

The manticore's roars suddenly rang out at this time. Han Shuo then saw a furious Trunks with killing intent shooting out of him dash towards this group of people with an upraised sword. Not too far away, Aphrodite and the others were also extremely enraged and quickly approached the other shore.

At this time, thanks to the efforts of the Demonslayer Edge, the sludge hand, that was likely to have been formed by an earth mage had returned to a peaceful state. When the whistling sounds from arrows rang out, the Demonslayer Edge had returned to Han Shuo's side and helped pulverize the crossbow bolts.

Bearing the agonizing pain, vast swathes of his arms being burned, and crisp hair, Han Shuo finally landed onto the other shore with the hotly flaming hang glider with soul searing hatred.

When Han Shuo yanked out the arrow stuck in his calf, he stood up resolutely with a scarily grimacing expression. A pair of proud, cold, and incredibly dangerous eyes shot towards these ambushers.

Chapter 115: Demon Han Shuo

“Who are you?” Trunks first heaved a sigh of relief when he saw that Han Shuo had arrived safely, then fixed these strangers with a cold eye.

“Don’t bother with who we are. Leave behind the Medusa’s core and blood as well as the Fruit of Dagmar. You can keep your lives and leave.” One of the adept mages held a magic staff in his hands and said with a sinister face.

“Leon, we can’t let them off that easily. Heh heh, look, three beautiful girls have come running. We haven’t had girls in so long. Those three girls have to stay behind for our enjoyment as well.” Another senior swordsman, ferociously built like a gorilla, shouldered a broadsword as large as his body on his shoulder, as he leered with a lascivious grin.

“Angelo, your words make some of sense. I didn’t see the three chits just now. Haha, leave the three beautiful ladies behind and all your belongings. Strength is above all within the Dark Forest, you can get the hell out now if you want to live.” The adept mage Leon also looked at Nia, Aphrodite, and Angelica running in from the distance with great interest and spoke with a merry twinkle.

There were more than ten people in this group, with not only mages and swordsmen, but also archers, priests, and thieves. They were all well experienced and possessed uncommon strength.

“What, to the likes of you?” Han Shuo had walked over from the distance by now. He was suffused with a dangerous presence that he wasn’t bothering to suppress. Having been burnt, Han Shuo appeared quite grim and horrifying. Everyone felt a bit shocked and fearful as he drew closer, step by step.

“Han, are you alright?” Trunks couldn’t help but immediately ask when he saw Han Shuo’s outrageous appearance.

“This ugly thing is an eyesore. He clings rather stubbornly to life and hasn’t died yet. Brothers, take him out first!” Angelo called out with a cold face and spoke directly.

Gordon, Aphrodite, and the others had finally made it over. Han Shuo didn't say another word as his body flew out quickly and made directly for Angelo.

A faint, black demonic mist slowly exuded from Han Shuo's body. His desire to kill and anger reaching unheralded heights, it caused abnormalities in Han Shuo's unstable molded spirit realm mentality. The black demonic qi leaked out due to the effects of the magical yuan as Han Shuo sank into a stupor. There were only the violent emotions of bloodlust and destruction left within his heart as his eyes turned a frightening ghastly white, with no black pupils left.

"This, this kid is a bit strange. Everyone be careful." Han Shuo's current demonic appearance gave Angelo a fright and the latter immediately called out.

Although Trunks and the others couldn't see Han Shuo's expression from where they stood, they could also feel that something wasn't quite right with Han Shuo at the moment. Tendrils of black demonic qi interspersed with frightening, evil presence arose from Han Shuo's body. This kind of presence made one feel terror arise from the depths of their hearts.

"Let's go and help Han kill these people who wanted to take advantage of him when he was in trouble!" Gordon roared out and took the lead in dashing out. When everyone behind him saw Gordon make his move, they also started mobilizing without a bit of doubt.

Only Angelica stood there, a bit at a loss of what to do with herself. She spoke to Nia, who was seeking a large tree for cover, "Hey, sister Nia, should I help?"

"Just protect yourself! It's too dangerous right now." Nia called back impatiently as she'd already notched an arrow into her bowstring and taken aim at a human archer in the distance.

A forlorn and desolate wail permeated the entire surroundings in the span of an instant, as if it was the desperate wail of a demon residing in the depths of hell. Everyone's hearts trembled and their skin was clammy, utterly shocked by this bizarre, soul-wrenching, shrill scream. They looked around frantically to try to identify the source of the sound.

“The sound’s coming from that kid!” Angelo was horrified as the veins on his forehead jumped, shouting as he looked at the swiftly approaching Han Shuo.

Everyone finally noticed that the source of the sound, as he shouted out this warning, was the Demonslayer Edge that was flying close to Han Shuo. A thick, demonic qi was bubbling up from the blade of the Demonslayer Edge and encircled Han Shuo’s body. The black demonic qi that circled around it danced like a demon that swallowed everything, causing others to feel an exceedingly evil visual impact.

“Kill him, kill him first!” Angelo was truly panicking internally now. An exceeding sense of discomfort rose in his heart as he suddenly started hollering.

Everyone could see Han Shuo’s peculiarities now, even Trunks, baptized by countless battles, felt an internal chill when he saw Han Shuo’s current condition. He couldn’t understand just what had happened to Han Shuo. The enemies were even more frightened and could only think of destroying this unknown danger.

Suddenly, several violent magical attacks and bolts from crossbows flew through the air, shooting towards Han Shuo. Even Trunks would’ve found it difficult to deal with such ferocious attacks.

However, the currently berserking Han Shuo emitted a low roar, like that of a wild beast, and pushed off with both feet, his body seeming to actually fly a few feet through the air and completely sidestepped the attacks, shooting directly towards Angelo. In the area where Han Shuo had just pushed off, several crossbow bolts and magical attacks from the enemy landed around a pair of sunken footprints.

“Damn it!” Angelo frowned and suddenly discovered that the frightfully grimacing Han Shuo was heading directly towards him. There was only the adept mage Leon next to him and the latter would be of no use at all. He could only raise his broadsword and strike a good stance, ready to give Han Shuo a painful blow.

The Demonslayer Edge, that had been orbiting Han Shuo, magically flew out with a soul entrancing whistle, making directly for Angelo, like a demon to its food. His heart chilling, Angelo suddenly exerted force as dark green fighting aura surged out of the broadsword in his hand, forming a cross and striking at the Demonslayer Edge that was descending through the air.

A metallic clashing sound abruptly spread from where the Demonslayer Edge and Angelo's weapon made contact. After a round of howling, a crack actually appeared in the Demonslayer Edge as it swung to the side. Whilst Angelo was stricken in shock, Han Shuo's body descended from the air and crashed into Angelo with a loud bang.

A biting scream emitted from Angelo's mouth as painful keens sounded from a person who had just been arrogantly domineering. Han Shuo descended like a demon had possessed him and straddled Angelo's body, the Demonslayer Edge ripping at Angelo's body.

Angelo fought back, his blows interspersed with fighting aura. However, Han Shuo had no reaction when the attacks struck his body, and only responded with even more ferocious attacks. His palms seemed to have become sharp weapons as he ripped off Angelo's ears and sank his nose into his cheeks. The flesh within Angelo's eyes became a blurry, bloody mess, his eyes having already exploded into plasma and were leaking out in a gooey mess. Large swathes of flesh and skin on Angelo's chest were being ripped out beneath Han Shuo's crazy tearing. The scene made everyone else's scalp go numb.

"Save me, save me!" At this moment, Angelo's features had been obliterated and he looked even more frightening than Han Shuo. Only his mouth was left and able to voice desperate cries for help.

Having sunk into a demonic stupor, only the urges of bloodlust and destruction remained within his heart. There was no more of the usual placidity and restraint that could be normally found. He was a bit irritated by Angelo's calls and swung a fist down at Angelo's mouth. The sound of teeth breaking rang out as Angelo moaned feebly and spat out bits of teeth.

“Oh, my gosh. How did we enrage such a madman?!” Leon, not too far in the distance, was getting an eyeful of Han Shuo’s brutal torture. A cold fear grew in his heart as his body trembled and he gave an involuntary scream.

Blow after blow from Han Shuo’s fists landed on Angelo’s cheeks and neck. He’d been moaning continuously before, but his chest now faced upwards and his cheek was against the ground. This posture noticeably indicated that his neck had already been broken and Angelo was long without breath.

“What’s happened to Han? Why is he being so brutal?” Aphrodite and the others had been about ready to attack the other side when they were all scared senseless, even forgetting to raise their hands against the enemies and could only stand there dumbly, watching Han Shuo continue his violence.

“Angelica, stay there and don’t come any nearer!” Nia saw that Angelica was curious and wanted to come over to check things out, and so suddenly yelled out loudly to prevent her from drawing close. She wasn’t willing to let Angelica see such a bloody scene.

“Don’t let them get away! Although Han is a bit out of sorts right now, we should still assist him.” Although Trunks had killed his share of people, Han Shuo’s current violence also made his scalp numb. However, Trunks was someone who’d weathered strong winds and big waves as well and understood what should be done at this point.

Trunks rushed over with his manticore, milky-white aura flaring out from his longsword and immediately killed a robber and an archer. His milky-white aura represented his identity as a swordmaster, and the appearance of the manticore indicated Trunks’ identity.

It was only now that these people finally realized that they had gotten entangled with Trunks of the Dark Forest, and that Leon cursed and said in pain, “Damn it, why were we so unlucky? It’s enough that we met one crazy madman, but now we've run into this notable harbinger of bad luck."

"Damn it, why is it Trunks?! Everyone run!" Another swordsman also cried out with some trepidation.

The group of more than ten, which contained senior swordsmen and adept mages, as well as all sorts of other professions, actually had more than enough strength to defeat them. Even with Trunks on the other side, Han Shuo's group may not have full confidence in defeating them, but the other side was overwhelmed by Trunks' reputation and Han Shuo's outrageous reactions, and thus made the decision to retreat.

"You stay here, I'll chase after them." Seeing that Aphrodite and the others were attempting to follow them, Trunks suddenly called out loudly.

His voice had just sounded and didn't even have the time to taper off when the berserk Han Shuo suddenly leapt up from Angelo's corpse and dashed out with the Demonslayer Edge, making for Leon, fleeing towards safety, at the speed of lightning.

"That demon's catching up to us. Leon, how did you decide on picking on them? You've doomed us all!" One swordsman turned his head back to see Han Shuo appear and complained bitterly to Leon.

"Everyone split up. Although I can't tell how strong that demon is, he absolutely wouldn't be much weaker than Trunks given that he could kill Angelo just like that. You better hope that you don't run into him, or you'll be tortured to death." Leon immediately changed direction after calling out these orders.

Everyone had also witnessed Han Shuo's brutality just now and didn't need to be reminded by Leon. All of them suddenly changed direction and formed groups of two or three, splitting off into several directions to escape from the premises. Although they'd heard of Trunks' might, they also knew that Trunks had never killed someone so brutally. Therefore, they'd rather bump into Trunks and didn't want to run into the equally unknown, but much more brutal demonic Han Shuo.

Whoosh sounded out as Han Shuo appeared and rushed ahead without stopping. He finally caught up with two journeyman swordsmen and one thunder adept mage in front of a river.

When the three of them saw that the person ahead of them was Han Shuo, they all displayed expressions of fear. Their bodies all trembled uncontrollably, and when they saw that Han Shuo was swiftly approaching, the adept mage finally roared, "Damn it, let's fight him head to head or we'll all be tortured to death."

After the thunder mage had spoken, he recited a string of incantations and five bolts of lightning, like traversing dragons, appeared out of thin air, snaking towards Han Shuo. The two journeyman swordsmen gripped their longswords and were a bit nervous due to fear.

It wasn't until Han Shuo had rushed in front of the two of them and evaded three lightning bolts, but was rendered greatly charred by two more, that the two swordsmen and mage were overjoyed. The swordsmen intended on killing Han Shuo after the mage had done his bit.

It was a pity that they had no way of knowing how strong and durable Han Shuo's body was. Although his body had injuries upon injuries after taking two bolts of lightning, he felt no pain in his enraged mental state. He crashed into the swordsmen and mage, immediately giving rise to a struggle between life and death.

After taking a few breaths in, he took two bolts of light from the swordsmen's swords based purely on an indomitable will. He killed the thunder adept mage, who had miscalculating Han Shuo's bodily strength and used the last bit of his magical yuan to severely injure another swordsman. His body finally thoroughly lost all strength and he sank down listlessly.

"He's done for, help me kill him, hurry!" The heavily injured journeyman swordsman lay in a puddle of blood and called out to the other fellow.

Chapter 116: I'm actually a necromancer!

"Hurry, kill that madman!" The fallen swordsman screamed out.

"Shut up!" The swordsman, who had been walking towards Han Shuo, suddenly turned his head and stared coldly at the man behind him, saying with a stilted voice, "I'll kill you too if you keep yelling nonsense."

The person on the ground suddenly froze and used a completely foreign look to look at his companion. He asked in confusion, "Fronze, what's wrong with you?"

Fronze, who'd pulled his sword out and was walking towards Han Shuo, had a look of excitement and greed on his face. His gaze was only focused on Han Shuo as he opened his mouth to say with excitement, "I'm going to be rich. You better not get in my way, or I'll let you die along with him."

The person on the ground finally understood what was going on now. Fronze had now been drowned by his greedy heart and had no thoughts for his companions in his mind now. What was left was just his desire to strike it rich.

His brain prickling with pain, Han Shuo was slowly awakening from his demonic state, after experiencing a short period of haziness, Han Shuo remembered everything that had happened just now and immediately understood the urgency of the situation.

"The trophies that were harvested from the Medusa and the Fruit of Dagmar will all belong to me very soon. Go to hell you evil, crazy madman!" Fronze's gaze locked tightly onto the space ring on Han Shuo's hand as he said with a dark look of excitement.

Fronze raised the longsword in his hand as soon as he'd said this and stabbed it towards the completely listless Han Shuo. It looked like Fronze planned on taking Han Shuo's life first, before taking the space ring to analyze the contents inside.

Han Shuo swiftly chanted an incantation, and a bone dagger abruptly blocked the sword in Fronze's hand when it stabbed towards Han Shuo's chest.

“Actually, I’m a necromancer!” Han Shuo looked bizarrely and muttered coldly at the shocked Fronze.

The bone dagger pushed forward as Fronze backed up involuntarily, startled. A little skeleton, wearing an enormous eye patch over one eye, swiftly approached Fronze with its bone dagger. The heroic little skeleton killed the previously injured combatant amidst a wave of metallic clangs.

The other heavily injured swordsman, who had been calling out for Han Shuo’s death earlier, naturally met the same fate. The little skeleton also killed him when the order was given.

Starting from the moment that this group of people had appeared, they’d used base and despicable actions to deal with Han Shuo. They hadn’t shown any kindness through it all. Han Shuo wasn’t a naive innocent child and naturally understood that an eye for an eye was the most appropriate downfall for them.

The appearance of the little skeleton saved Han Shuo from impending death, and completely upended the original situation. The bone dagger wielding little skeleton adeptly maneuvered the three bodies and collected all the valuables from their corpses, helping Han Shuo store them within his space ring.

Of the three, only the thunder adept mage had some valuable belongings, which included an expensive magic staff. There was also a few hundred gold coins as well as two or three level three and four magical creature cores. Apart from a subpar quality sword and some broken bits of gold coins, the two swordsmen had nothing else on them.

Sprawled listlessly on the ground, Han Shuo’s reasoning had immediately sunk into the midst of violent bloodlust when he entered the demonic trance. It was impossible for him to wake up before the magical yuan in his body and energy had been exhausted. This time, not only had Han Shuo fully expended his magical yuan after entering the trance, but his body had also suffered from various sorts of injuries. This was one of the times he’d been most heavily injured. He was even worse off than Odysseus, who'd suffered a blow from the manticore.

It was a good thing that Han Shuo's tenacity was something that Odysseus couldn't hope to measure up to. Therefore, although Han Shuo was as hideous as a ghoul right now, and his body was so weak that it couldn't support him standing, Han Shuo still understood the condition of his body within his heart and knew that even without the aid of any medicine, he would be able to recover within a short period of time.

Han Shuo hadn't revealed his identity as a necromancer all along because concealing some of his strengths would be able to save his life in critical moments. If it wasn't for the fact that he'd still had some mental strength he could use when facing his attackers this time, he'd be hard pressed to escape death. If these people had known that Han Shuo was also a necromancer beforehand, then the conclusion of the battle would likely not have reached this current level.

He chanted out another incantation as several zombies and skeletal warriors suddenly appeared around him. They raised their weapons and surrounded Han Shuo, planning on handling any possible changes that might happen.

After waking up, Han Shuo immediately connected with the original demons and confirmed through them that Trunks, Aphrodite, and the others had already regrouped and were searching for him in this area.

Now that Han Shuo was incredibly weak, he couldn't move and couldn't speak loudly, but had large amounts of dark creatures that he could make use of. After giving his order, the little skeleton created a large disturbance and sent shrubbery and grass flying everywhere.

"There's movement over there, let's go check it out!" Trunks' ears were quite sensitive and immediately detected the disturbance. After pointing out its direction to the others, he brought the group to rush towards where Han Shuo was.

Having just summoned those dark creatures, Han Shuo immediately sent them back to the other dimension with his mental strength again. Trunks and the others arrived in front of Han Shuo after a short while, with Trunks leading the group.

“What happened to you?” Trunks exclaimed and immediately ran towards Han Shuo.

Han Shuo looked incredibly bedraggled as he was scorched and charred all over. Many parts of his body had been burnt by huge flames, and his entire face was a blackened mess. It was impressive that Trunks could still recognize Han Shuo.

“I’m fine, just didn’t think I’d meet this group of people halfway through.” Han Shuo’s voice was a bit feeble as he said softly after laughing ruefully.

“It’s my oversight this time. I was surprised by your unconventional tactics and let down my guard for a moment. That’s why this situation developed, but it’s not a big deal, things like this happen everyday in the Dark Forest. I’ve long since grown used to it all.” Trunks breathed a sigh of relief upon seeing that Han Shuo was still alive and shrugged his shoulders.

Gordon and the others all asked after Han Shuo, with Aphrodite saying afterwards, “Looks like things are as Caspian said, Trunks is a good man. At least Trunks only wanted the spoils of battle from the twin headed dragon last time and didn’t attack us from the start. He also didn’t say he wanted to kill us or have ideas to dirty us. I finally understand Caspian’s words after comparing Trunks to these people, I thought he was joking at first.”

Everyone recalled their encounter with Trunks after Aphrodite’s words and then thought of what these people had done. They suddenly felt that Trunks was rather kind.

“I’m actually not as you think and I’ve been constantly changing. When I first arrived in the Dark Forest, I was once as simple as all of you and once trusted the companions by my side, but after continuous operations, I came to the realization that apart from myself, I can trust no one within the Dark Forest. The dangers that exists everywhere mean you must harden your heart to face everything around you. Otherwise, whenever you possess emotions of kindness or weakness, it may very well lead to your death.” Trunks shrugged and explained dashingly.

“What happened to you just now?” Nia asked Han Shuo with some trepidation after hesitating for a moment.

Everyone’s gazes flicked to focus on Han Shuo after Nia’s question, seemingly waiting for a reasonable explanation from Han Shuo. After all, his methods just now had been a tad ruthless. His expression had been greatly different from usual, giving rise to these questions from those assembled.

“The martial arts technique I’m training causes me to sometimes sink into a frightening stupor when I suffer from a strong shock because it’s not yet fully complete. I’m very sorry that I’ve caused concern for all of you because I was so enraged earlier. I don’t wish to be like this either, but this isn’t something that I can currently control.” Han Shuo was unable to explain anything to them with regards to sinking into a demonic stupor and could only explain it in this fashion.

“So that’s the case. You were very scary just now. If you can’t control this type of martial arts technique, then you should give it up while you still can. If you continue on this way, then that might give rise to unpredictable consequences.” Aphrodite looked sincerely at Han Shuo and spoke a few words of concern.

Han Shuo naturally paid no heed to her persuasion. If sinking into a demonic trance was something that could be controlled, then it wouldn’t be called a trance. A demonic trance like that wouldn’t happen so easily. It would only occur when a practitioner reached a certain realm, and would be triggered because of a particular mental state as well as other reasons. To Han Shuo, he could only remain vigilant against this occurrence, but wouldn’t give up training demonic magic just because of this.

“Alright, we should get Han away from here first and discuss other matters after reconvening with Odysseus.” Trunks first stared a bit strangely at Han Shuo and then spoke to Aphrodite.

Trunks’ suggestion was met with unanimous approval. Gordon and the other two swordsmen made a simple stretcher, raised Han Shuo up, and walked towards where Odysseus was.

Along the way, Han Shuo learned from Trunks that this group of people seemed to be the personal guards of the McGrady Guild. Trunks had kept chasing them and killed many until he saw that they'd joined up with more guards. He detected that the other side's strength wasn't something that he could withstand alone, and doubled back because he was concerned about Han Shuo's condition.

Han Shuo had once heard of the McGrady Guild as well. It was a merchant guild that had a similar level of power to the Boozt Merchant Guild. Phoebe had fretted a bit over this guild previously. It was said that this guild specialized in the business of smuggling and sold all sorts of contraband between various countries. It had tight relations with the nobles of all countries.

The McGrady Guild didn't belong to the Lancelot Empire, but rather belonged to the Brut Merchant Alliance that had been founded by mercenaries and merchants. The reputation of the Brut Merchant Alliance wasn't much and they had only recently started operations within the Lancelot Empire. They'd caused a slight bit of loss to Phoebe's Boozt Merchant Guild.

The injuries on Han Shuo's body were so severe that they could be deemed too ghastly to look at. If such heavy injuries were on any other person and they were subjected to the hardships of making fast time on the road, they would've surely cried out, but after half an hour of being jolted on the bumpy road, Han Shuo lay on the stretcher with simply dressed wounds and never made a sound. This made everyone greatly admire Han Shuo's astounding ability to endure pain.

Not only was this the case, Han Shuo actually had the strength to continuously talk to Trunks and ask him for more information regarding the McGrady Guild. It was as if the grave injuries on his body, which caused the others' scalp to tingle with numbness whenever they looked at him, weren't something that he was enduring at all.

When everyone jointly dug out a cave and moved aside the boulders blocking the entrance, Gordon walked out with a wide, lopsided grin. Gordon finally couldn't hold it in and looked at Han Shuo with a look of insatiable curiosity and asked the question that was on everyone's minds, "Han, what kind of monster are you?"

Laughing involuntarily, Han Shuo's tolerance of pain and agony had already reached monstrous levels. He truly didn't know how to respond to Gordon's question. He could only laugh ruefully and shake his head, saying, "I'm just a bit more thick-skulled than you guys."

When Odysseus came out and Nia recounted all that had happened, the greatly recovered Odysseus listened with a pounding heart and was incredibly astonished by everyone's encounters.

"Nia, I think I should go back now. My grandpa must be getting worried." Angelica realized that no one was paying attention to her here, tilted her head, and thought for a moment, then spoke up in her boredom.

Nia smacked her forehead in sudden realization when she heard Angelica's words, "I almost forgot about you. Let's go, I'll take you to your grandpa's. It's too dangerous in the Dark Forest, so don't randomly run around next time."

Nodding, Angelica smiled sweetly and bid everyone farewell. When she got to Han Shuo, she waved her hand and said, "Goodbye bad guy!"

"Nia, will you be alright just by yourself? Gordon, you accompany her." Odysseus frowned and said to Nia.

Shaking her head, Nia smiled, "No need, captain. Her grandpa is just nearby. I'll yell if there's a situation."

She left swiftly with Angelica after speaking and vanished out of sight within a blink of an eye.

"I think my promise to you has been fulfilled, and that it's time for me to leave." Trunks looked at Han Shuo and opened his mouth to speak to him.

After spending a certain amount of time together, Han Shuo had discovered that Trunks wasn't as bad as outside rumors made him out to be. At least, his actions during this struggle didn't make Han Shuo feel uncomfortable. Han Shuo had even unconsciously started viewing Trunks as one of his companions, and was a bit unused to the situation now that he heard that Trunks was going to leave immediately.

"Be a good Samaritan to the end. Look at how heavily injured I am now! You should stay and take care of me for a little bit at least. It won't be too late for you to leave once we're clear of this dangerous territory!" Han Shuo looked at Trunks as he joked.

"This wasn't what I promised you before. To be honest, our agreement should've terminated ever since you had the Fruit in hand. Helping you against enemies afterwards was already extra service. Don't be too greedy!"

"Look at me being injured now and Odysseus not being able to move. It'll be quite difficult for the rest of the group to walk safe and sound out of this dangerous area. I don't think you'd be so cruel hearted as to just leave us, right?"

Trunks was silent for a while after these words and finally opened his mouth to say, "How about this Han, promise me one thing and I'll protect you guys and help to get you to a relatively safer area."

"What thing?" Han Shuo was startled as he asked Trunks.

"I won't say what it is for now, but just remember that you promised me."

"Aren't you afraid that I'll renege on my word? Heh heh, I'm not a person of my word!"

"I believe you!" Trunks looks deeply into Han Shuo's eyes as he carefully pronounced each word.

Han Shuo suddenly quieted down and exchanged a look with Trunks. Although he was still grinning cheekily, he nodded and responded, "Alright, I promise you!"

Odysseus looked at the two with a look of gratification, suddenly feeling in this moment that these two people were similar in many ways. They both had mysterious origins and were both strong. Their personalities were similar in that they were calm and composed when the unexpected happened, and they showed no hesitation when they should make a move.

Just as Odysseus was staring at Han Shuo, Han Shuo too was looking at Odysseus. He thought for a moment and said to Odysseus, “You ventured into the Dark Forest this time for the Fruit of Dagmar. I know that you had no high hopes originally and didn’t seem to value the Fruit as much as I did. As friends, I’d like to ask you Odysseus, do you really need the Fruit of Dagmar?”

“Not really. Our main goal in entering the Dark Forest was to increase our strength. Of course, if we were lucky, we would also gain some items of value. I think by now, we’ve completely attained our wishes. The Fruit of Dagmar was just a vague goal, we didn’t think that we’d really be able to acquire it. Normal people go mad if they eat this fruit so we have no use for it. We’ve only lightly promised someone that we would come and try our luck.” Odysseus also explained seriously when he saw Han Shuo’s face full of gravity. He then looked at Han Shuo with befuddlement, “Han, what are you asking this for?”

Breathing out in relief, Han Shuo smiled and nodded his head, saying, “Because I want to claim the Fruit of Dagmar for myself. The martial arts technique I’m training in confuses the mind like I mentioned. I can improve this condition with the Fruit of Dagmar, so if you don’t really need them, I’d like to keep all three for myself, but I can compensate you with gold coins!”

“Then take it all for yourself, heh heh. We’ve already received too much. You’ve given us the twin headed dragon and Medusa core. These will be enough to trade for gold coins. If you need the Fruit of Dagmar, then take all of them. There will be less meaning in all of this if you talk any more about reimbursement.” Odysseus smiled dashingly and said sincerely to Han Shuo.

Aphrodite, Gordon, and the others all indicated for Han Shuo not to stand on ceremony and said that they didn’t really need the Fruit of Dagmar.

“Then alright, I won’t hold back then.” Han Shuo really did need the Fruit of Dagmar in the demonic realm of “molded spirit” and thus he didn’t make any more hypocritical protestations. He accepted decisively and happily.

In the next couple of days, the group traveled back on their original path, with Han Shuo’s original demons scouting the way and under Trunks’ protection. They planned on leaving the depths of the Dark Forest as soon as possible.

Han Shuo had originally been so weak, that he had to rely on others carrying him around. He could actually get down from the litter after a few days. A pair of slender arms and pristine as jade cheeks were revealed after the old skin had scabbed over and shed from his originally severely burned arms and cheeks. There wasn’t the slightest traces of burns to be found.

The burned parts of his body and charred bits of his hair also returned to normal after a few days. The miraculousness of this made Odysseus and the others once again wonder, “What kind of monster are you?”

His magical yuan also recovering swiftly, Han Shuo carefully put away the Fruit of Dagmar during this process. He planned on consuming them when he was quietly alone after returning to the cemetery of death. The injuries within his body also recovered speedily with the circulation of the magical yuan. Han Shuo’s injuries quickly healed with the passage of each day.

On this day, Han Shuo’s original demons detected the passage of a large group of people in the distance traveling with earth dragons. He discovered the adept mage Leon within this group and suddenly discovered that these people were part of the McGrady Guild.

Counting the days and the distance they’d traveled, Han Shuo discovered that they were nearing the area where the forest trolls resided. He suddenly remembered those renowned robbers and villains were still waiting for instructions from their great Datara. Connecting the dots to those McGrady Guild guards and the despicable acts they’d committed against him, a slightly chilly and cruel smile grew involuntarily on Han Shuo's lips.

Chapter 117: Rob them all

“Odysseus, we met here, so let’s part here!” Han Shuo smiled faintly as he looked at Odysseus in the spot where they’d first met.

This was close to where the forest trolls lived, and after the healing properties of the Medusa’s essence blood kicked in, Odysseus could be assured of a full recovery from his injuries. After a few days of recovering, Han Shuo’s injuries had also mostly healed. There was no danger to him leaving now, and thus Han Shuo has raised the suggestion of departing.

All good things must come to an end. Odysseus and the others also knew that this location was relatively safe. After Han Shuo voiced his proposal, Odysseus nodded with resignation and said, “Since this is the case, then let’s part here. I hope we will be able to meet again in the future.”

Everyone bade Han Shuo and Trunks farewell a bit reluctantly and slowly left the area, moving to the outskirts of the Dark Forest as Han Shuo and Trunks waved them onwards.

It wasn’t until Odysseus and the party of six had vanished from sight that Trunks finally said, “You no longer need my protection with your current body condition, it looks like it’s time for me to leave!”

Han Shuo looked at Trunks and shook his head, smiling, “You can’t leave yet.”

“Why?”

“I’m quite furious with the injuries that the McGrady Guild has gifted me. My anger won’t be assuaged before that earth adept mage Leon has died by my hands. Heh heh, I’ve discovered that you and the manticore have been disappearing for certain periods at a time recently. Have you already discovered traces of the McGrady Guild and are planning on slowly making a move against them?”

Trunks said with a dumbfounded look when he heard those words, “It looks like there is indeed something mysterious about you. It’s like there’s nothing I can hide from you. Indeed, I am planning on making a move against the McGrady Guild, but there's an archmage holding down the fort within it. They also have a lot of helpers, so I can only make moves in the darkness and wouldn't dare to be an openly declared enemy of theirs. You're currently injured, so if we were to start fighting, you won't have much of an effect. That's why I ruled you out."

Looking deeply at Trunks, Han Shuo mused silently for a bit and then opened his mouth to say, "I have a way to handle the McGrady Guild, and I also know that they'll pass through here. It will be tough for me to handle an archmage. As long as you help me handle the archmage, leave the rest to me."

"Are you crazy? The McGrady Guild is traveling on the back of earth dragons, and all their followers, guards, and others add up to a hundred or so in number. There are sixty to seventy guards of various professions within this powerful group, do you think you can handle so many with your power alone?" Trunks stared at Han Shuo and exclaimed in bafflement.

Smiling slightly with great meaning, Han Shuo said, "Don't worry about that. You'll understand why I can handle them after I appear. From now on, just follow the McGrady Guild. You'll see how heavy of a price they will pay after a while."

Han Shuo didn't stay for further questioning after saying his piece and left with a long laugh, walking in another direction and leaving behind Trunks with a face full of confusion.

After arriving at the forest trolls' sacred ground, Han Shuo summoned the little skeleton and took out the raft that the forest trolls had hidden here, taking him downstream to the forest trolls' residence.

When the little skeleton appeared, the silent forest troll tribe immediately sank into a panic. The forest troll warriors who led the way in immediately ran inside after arriving, and the excited old priest came scrambling out shortly thereafter, falling to his knees in front of the little skeleton and started genuflecting loudly.

“The great Datara commands you to fully equip and ready yourselves. The great Datara plans on leading you into battle to rob a large human merchant train passing by.” Han Shuo threw his head back and issued orders in a proud fashion.

All of the forest trolls, whether the elderly, women, or children, immediately became excited when they heard news of a robbery. They waved the weapons in their hands and shook the pockets that were always on their bodies, yelling loudly. It looked like this race’s innate nature to steal was something that no one could change.

“Many thanks to the great Datara, many thanks to the great Datara’s guidance!” The old priest was beside himself with excitement as he immediately turned to the strong forest troll chief running in from the distance and started giving instructions in a mumble.

The head of the forest trolls raised a spear and stood at a high vantage point, mobilizing everyone. All the various young and strong forest trolls within the tribe automatically lined up in long columns, with the combinations of hunters and priests automatically splitting up. Five to six hundred forest trolls were standing at the ready after not too long.

Seeing that they were all ready, Han Shuo nodded and didn’t say much else, giving an order to the little skeleton. The little skeleton was in vigorous spirits and stood from a high vantage point like the forest troll chief, waving the bone dagger in his hand high above his head.

The little skeleton, wearing the pirate’s eyepatch, did indeed have a few traces of a robber’s demeanor at the moment. Under the old priest’s calls, the carriage that had been used to carry the little skeleton was once again brought out, and the little skeleton took up residence within. Han Shuo took out a black magic robe and completely wrapped his body and head with it, walking towards the road that the McGrady Guild was sure to take.

Because the forest trolls truly did have such a horrid reputation, it would bring him some trouble if other people discovered that he’d gone raiding with them in the future. Therefore, after considering for a while, Han Shuo decided to conceal himself to the best of his abilities. He’d diverted Odysseus and the others away because he knew that they were too kind and simple. Not only would their existence not prove to be much use, but it might impact him and thus he had them leave halfway through.

From the observations of the original demons, Han Shuo was quite clear with regards to the McGrady Guild's location. He brought the five to six hundred forest trolls to a mountain valley. Under Han Shuo's orders, the forest trolls started adeptly setting traps and rocks that would impede forward movement. When all was ready, the forest trolls stood to the side amongst the trees and shrubbery, becoming one with the foliage with their oily green skin. It would be difficult to detect them without taking a close look.

Trunks rode on the manticore and followed this group of people behind from quite a distance away. Because there was an archmage within the company. Trunks didn't dare make any rash moves either. He only followed them according to Han Shuo's earlier instructions.

After half an hour, the group of people, with the earth dragons leading the way, slowly began to appear. The earth dragons plodded in front, the goods on their bodies swaying back and forth. Guards of all sorts of professions walked in front, patrolling the surroundings with wary eyes. Two of them were quite familiar with Han Shuo, they'd been amongst the group that had attacked him in the swamp.

Apart from the two earth dragons, this group of people from the McGrady Guild also had several enormous lizard pack animals. Several opulently dressed merchants were sitting on top of them, surrounded by highly experienced guards. No wonder Trunks didn't dare to make a move.

When they walked into the valley, some of the guards scouting ahead suddenly sank into the traps. Rocks rolled down the small slopes of the surrounding hills, completing blocking off their paths. Spears and javelins were hurled out from the sides, nailing the ground at these people's feet.

Enormous cheering sounds suddenly sounded from all directions. The excited forest trolls flung off the concealing props and charged over to encircle the caravan and surround the people from the McGrady Guild.

“Datara, Datara!”

At this moment, the forest trolls discovered that this group of prey was indeed very large. They all felt that that this was the gracious bestowment from the great Datara and started yelling out involuntarily. The old priest even knelt reverently in front of the little skeleton’s carriage and started offering thanks in an ancient language.

“Damn it, it’s the cursed forest trolls!” All sorts of complaints sounded from the McGrady Guild train. When they saw that the attackers were forest trolls and in such large numbers, the McGrady Guild people also felt that this was an extreme inconvenience. The way forward and backward for the train had been blocked off and a conflict seemed inevitable.

A beautiful woman with fey features and a fully rounded body slowly walked out from one of the carriages in the back, wearing a luxurious magic robe and holding a magic staff embedded with many gems in her hand. The emblems on her magic robe testified to her status as an archmage. She walked over merrily and used a soft voice to call out, “Hello, is there anyone I can talk to?”

“Liaison, do we talk to her?” The old priest, who was still genuflecting to the little skeleton, looked involuntarily at Han Shuo, hidden in the corner of the carriage and wrapped in a black magic robe, when he heard the woman’s call.

“Go see what she wants.” Han Shuo nodded and opened his mouth.

Under Han Shuo’s orders, the old priest stood quite a distance from the beautiful woman, under the protection of the forest trolls. The old priest opened his mouth to say, “Ugly human female, what do you have to say?”

The woman had been smiling merrily when her face immediately darkened as she heard the old priest’s words. It was only for an instant however, and her facial expressions quickly recovered and a smile made its way onto her face again. She opened her mouth to say, “We’re people of the McGrady Guild and know the strength of you forest trolls. So, we’d like to enter a transaction with you. We’re willing to pay ten thousand gold coins in exchange for our safety in leaving this place. We have many people on our side as well and you're sure to suffer injuries if we fight. What do you say?"

"Ugly human female, don't you know that the appetite of our race has always been big?" The old priest looked arrogantly down at the mature, alluring woman as he spoke with a stiff, cold voice.

To Han Shuo's eyes, the woman had a curvaceous body and strikingly beautiful features, and was full of a mature feeling. She did possess a high amount of allure for ordinary humans. However, the old priest was a forest troll and had completely different standards of beauty compared to humans. A beauty in Han Shuo's eyes had rather turned into another word for ugliness in his.

Beneath the repeated blows of "ugly human female", the beautiful woman took in another deep breath to control herself, but her gaze was no longer as friendly. She stared at the old priest and opened her mouth to say, "Then what do you want to do?"

The old priest puffed out his chest and was about to open his mouth to respond when he suddenly recalled Han Shuo's existence. He said, "We need to discuss this."

The old priest walked quickly towards Han Shuo after this and several forest troll warriors blocked Han Shuo from sight so that those around them didn't learn of Han Shuo's existence. The old priest came to Han Shuo's side and looked at him, "Liaison, what do we do now?"

His brow furrowed as he looked into the distance. Han Shuo saw Leon appear in the back. The McGrady Guild specialized in smuggling and had some conflicts with Phoebe's Boozt Merchant Guild, not to mention their crimes earlier had offended Han Shuo. He hesitated only for a slight moment before opening his mouth to say coldly, "There's nothing much to say. Rob them all according to the rules of our tribe. Kill anyone who resists!"

The old priest immediately exclaimed excitedly after he heard these words, "The liaison is wise and great! The liaison is wise and great!"

The old priest didn't say much else as several forest troll warriors walked out from the huddle and nodded to the forest troll chief in the distance.

The forest troll chief raised the spear in his hand and gave a charged, high cry as forest troll warriors rushed out from all sides, charging the Guild's guards with a death defying attitude after the priests had cast their magics on them from the back.

"Damn these greedy forest trolls! We'll fight them to the death!" Various furious mutterings came from the Guild's party.

The smiles on the fey, mature woman's face disappeared at this time as she chanted a magical incantation. A grey cloud of air flew out from her staff as she waved it around, transforming into the head of a demon in mid air and rushing forward to entangle the forest trolls that were rushing over.

More than ten grey clouds continuously changed shape within the air, sinking into the bodies of the forest troll warriors with no resistance. Their fast dash forward suddenly slowed down as mutations seemed to occur within their bodies. Tumors quickly appeared and looked quite frightening as they expanded and pulsed.

Pfft, the tumors on the first forest troll's body burst open and a dark black liquid oozed out. As the liquid remained on their bodies, it brought with it an incomparably strong corrosive effect, causing a round of wild shrieks and howls to sound from the forest trolls as their bodies slowly turned into liquid.

White smoke also arose from the other forest trolls that were sprayed by the liquid, and they appeared to be in great pain.

Standing behind the others, Han Shuo recalled some of Fanny's magic teachings when he saw the archmage attack. He recognized that this was the advanced dark magic, "Demon Entanglement", and finally understood that this fey, mature woman was a frightening dark archmage.

The gruesome death of the first ten or so forest trolls caused a certain amount of panic to the forest trolls, but it was a good thing that this race had also lived in the midst of cruel raiding. Although they panicked briefly, but they continued forward due to strength in numbers.

A shrill piercing sound suddenly sounded from Han Shuo's mouth. Trunks, hiding in the shadows and observing everything, didn't quite understand things because Han Shuo's whistle came from within the forest trolls. No matter how Trunks envisioned things, he hadn't thought that Han Shuo would be in the company of the forest trolls.

But due to his trust in Han Shuo, Trunks still abruptly dashed out of his hiding place according to their previous agreement and made for the dark archmage who was torturing the forest trolls.

Riding on his manticore and longsword in hand, Trunks set his sights on the female archmage. He made use of everyone being in a frantic mess to charge directly at the female archmage. He planned on taking her down first because the power of her dark magic was simply too strong. Any ordinary person simply couldn't defend against it.

"It's that Trunks! Everyone stop him and don't let him come near me!" The female dark archmage had actually discovered Trunks and immediately called out.

Five or six senior swordsmen, plus archers and other mages, immediately ran over from all directions to block the path to the female dark archmage when they heard her yells. Attacks poured out from from this group of people, making it so that Trunks couldn't approach easily.

The female archmage didn't pay any attention to Trunks as she stood with her back to him and sent out wave after wave of dark magic with enormous destructive power, sweeping across the more than ten forest troll warriors who were dashing over. They fell down one by one, with not a single one being able to approach the female archmage.

"Liaison liaison, what do we do now?" The old priest scrambled to Han Shuo when he saw the forest troll warriors die one by one and asked in extreme panic.

Staring at the frightening female archmage for quite some time, Han Shuo felt that he would still be hard pressed to escape death if he rushed in. The invasion of the dark magic was simply too horrifying. It looked like only the little skeleton, that made entirely of bone, would be unafraid of the dark magic's invasion.

“Look, the great Datara has already come out.” Han Shuo reassured the old priest as he pointed at the little skeleton that had stepped out of the carriage.

Chapter 118: The little skeleton immune to dark magic

Upon seeing that the little skeleton had walked out from the carriage, the old priest heaved a sigh of relief and called out excitedly, "Datara, Datara!"

Under the old priest's excited yells, the forest trolls, that had turned somewhat cowardly, all regained their fighting spirit and followed behind the little skeleton, once again charging towards the female dark archmage.

The bone dagger wielding little skeleton had a eye patch on its smooth and shiny skull plate as it dashed nimbly towards that fey, female archmage.

"Oh, heh heh. It's only a comical skeletal warrior!" The female archmage had thought some strong reinforcements were coming her way when she saw the forest trolls regain their courage. When she saw that what was dashing towards her was just a low level dark creature, the skeletal warrior, she immediately started chuckling in mockery.

When the little skeleton arrived in front of her, she spoke to a journeyman swordsman next to her, "Kill that ridiculous skeletal warrior!"

"Understood, Lady Emily!" The swordsman responded respectfully in a low voice and strode forward, grasping his broadsword, towards the little skeleton, smirking coldly.

It was a pity that before the journeyman swordsman had approached, the little skeleton, that'd been approaching with normal speed before, suddenly sprang off both calf bones and hugged the ground in magical flight. The increase in speed was more than ten times as the little bone dagger in his hand abruptly, aimed directly for the journeyman swordsman who was attempting to block his way.

The little bone dagger drew a round arc after leaving his hand, and had already made its way to the journeyman swordsman's neck in the midst of his shock and surprise. Frightened senseless, the journeyman swordsman's body abruptly came to a halt, drawing his sword in a no holds barred attempt to defend against the bone dagger attack.

Clang rang out softly as the bone dagger crashed into the broadsword held in the journeyman swordsman's hand, causing his stopped body to involuntarily take a step backwards. Although the journeyman swordsman was surprised that he'd had to take a step backwards in defending against the bone dagger, he still breathed out a sigh of relief as he felt that he'd already gotten past the danger.

However, a sudden change in fortune occurred, one that he would never understand, even in his moment of death. The bone dagger that had fallen to the ground once again shot towards his chest just as he was about to charge forward. It completely upended his knowledge of the world as it opened a bloody hole in his chest and caused him to lose his life where he stood.

The swiftly moving little skeleton didn't pause for a single moment here as the withered bones of his left hand extended, and the little bone dagger that had just pierced through the journeyman swordsman returned marvelously to its his hand. The remaining empty eye socket in the little skeleton's head once again fixed its gaze on the astonished female dark magus Emily.

"Oh my gosh, that little skeleton killed a journeyman swordsman." Although Trunks was busy fending off enemies in the distance, he still paid heed to the little skeleton's movements. When he noticed that the little skeleton had murdered one of the journeyman swordsman, he immediately gave an involuntary cry of shock.

"Stop him, stop him!" Emily had also witnessed the little skeleton's miraculous performance. The jeering smile that had been at the corners of her mouth had long since vanished as her heart was in frantic disarray.

She quickly recited several journeyman and adept dark magics, with them landing directly on the little skeleton's body. However, the little skeleton was made entirely from bone and had been repeatedly refined by Han Shuo's magical yuan, and had no reaction whatsoever. He stood there and rather looked at Emily in confusion, as if wondering why Emily's attacks were so feeble.

"The great Datara has demonstrated his courage and power, what are you standing there dumbly for?" Concealed in the distance, Han Shuo suddenly called out coldly at this moment and once again gave the little skeleton the order to attack archmage Emily.

Yells of gobbledegook suddenly roared out from the old priest and forest troll chief's mouths. When the forest troll warriors, who were following behind the little skeleton, saw that the previously frightening Emily couldn't do anything to the little skeleton, they cried out "Datara" with excitement and once again charged forward with no fear of death

The forest troll hunters in the distance shot out a dense wave of javelins and long spears as ranks of attacks shot towards the McGrady Guild's guards. Add to that the arrows from the archers as well as magic attacks from several priests, numerous guards were pierced full of bloody holes after this wave of javelins and spears had shot past. Bloody froth bubbled from their mouths as they lay on the ground, unmoving.

"Stop that damned skeletal warrior!" Emily saw that the little skeleton was chasing her in hot pursuit and became a bit frantic. When several dark magics had no effect on the little skeleton, Emily finally realized that this bizarre little skeleton had an extremely high defense against dark magics.

Emily gathered up the folds of her magic robe in one hand and bedraggledly fled towards the back as she hollered. Her well rounded buttocks swayed continuously as she had no further time to cast destructive and harrowing dark magics.

Because of Emily's retreat, the pressure on the forest troll warriors decreased greatly. Add to that the little skeleton's presence strongly boosted morale, this caused these faithful followers to completely ignore their injuries and casualties and charge towards the McGrady Guild guards like the tidewaters.

At this moment, the forest troll warriors that had been unable to draw near the McGrady Guild train finally crashed into the guards after paying the price of several dozen forest troll warriors.

The low roars of the earth dragons, the stomping sounds of the lizard beasts, the frantic calls of the merchants, and the sounds of combat between the forest troll warriors and the guards permeated the scene. The advantage in numbers quickly became apparent. Although their personal strength didn't measure up to the forest trolls, they were much more disciplined than the randomly scattered guards. They were not in the slightest bit disorganized after rushing over, and each was more unafraid of death than the other.

In only the span of a moment, the forest troll contingent, made of young warriors and boasting of numbers more than five times that of the McGrady Guards, had already taken the high ground. Han Shuo stayed in the back, commanding the little skeleton to pursue the archmage Emily and directing the forest troll hunters to attack as well.

The rows of javelins and spears landed on the earth dragons and lizard beasts afterwards, causing the deaths of all the merchants. When the two main pack animals were injured, they began to run wildly in their madness. When their enormous hooves trampling down, they caused the deaths of many guards.

Finally, the merchants of the McGrady Guild saw that they would be unable to obtain victory and they decisively decided to make a break for it in their timidity. Some personal guards protecting them, these merchants yelled and hollered, saying that they were giving up the goods and split into several directions to break through.

The situation was already under control and Han Shuo didn't continue to further conceal his movements. He walked out from the midst of the forest troll warriors and set his sights on the earth mage Leon who had personally attacked him.

The dark archmage Emily was completely frightened with fear beneath the little skeleton's pursuit. She'd tried to fly through the air, but became the target of many under Han Shuo's order as she immediately took the brunt of several dozen javelin and long spear attacks.

Even though she'd erected a dark magic shield in the nick of time, she didn't have an easy time of it as a walking human target. The magic shield blocked this round of attacks, but also greatly depleted her mental strength, even causing her to spit out a mouthful of blood.

With the warning of previous experience, Emily didn't dare fly through the air again in such a short distance. She could only hide amongst the McGrady Guild's Guards to the best of her abilities and continuously cry for help, asking for someone to help defend her from the little skeleton, but it was a pity that the scene was a chaotic mess at this moment. Under circumstances in which one's own personal safety was tough to guarantee, no one else would pay heed to someone else's survival. This caused her to flee haphazardly, in great panic.

"Eh, how did you know it was me?" Han Shuo looked askance at Trunks after he'd revealed himself and asked.

"I didn't fully recognize you, but it could!" Trunks smiled and shrugged his shoulders, pointing at the manticore beneath him.

Nodding, Han Shuo said, "So this was the case!"

"It's you guys! What do you want?" Leon immediately recognized the memorable Han Shuo when the latter revealed himself, and he asked timidly.

"Your life of course! An eye for an eye. Shouldn't you pay up for the injuries you've caused me?" Han Shuo looked coldly at Leon and dashed towards him after saying this noncommittally.

"Han, leave this person to me. You haven't fully recovered from your injuries yet, best not to make a move that easily." Trunks saw that Han Shuo was about to make a move and suddenly spoke up to stop him, then spurring the manticore forward to Leon before Han Shuo had responded.

The earth adept mage Leon immediately chanted an incantation when he saw that Trunks was spurring the manticore forward to him. The ground before Trunks suddenly roiled and an earth wall quickly formed, forming an obstacle in the direction that Trunks was charging from.

Having released the earth wall magic, Leon understood that Trunks wanted his life and that there was a Han Shuo of unknown strength hovering around the edges. He didn't dare linger at all and immediately fled without another thought as soon as the earth wall had appeared.

"Don't worry, I'll kill him!" Trunks smiled from the back of the manticore at Han Shuo and charged the wall together after these words. Beneath the manticore's impetus and the efforts of the longsword in his hand, the wall of earth that had just formed suddenly collapsed. Leaping across the wall, Trunks leisurely pursued the escaping Leon and he seemed quite at ease.

The original demons were spread out in three directions, and Han Shuo retained a complete picture of the entire situation through their observations. He discovered that the forest trolls, with their strength in numbers, had completely grasped the situation with the cowardly merchants leading the way in fleeing. The Guild's guards were retreating beneath their attacks. No one was laying down their lives to protect the goods and they did everything in their power to break through to the outside.

The little skeleton pursued the dark archmage relentlessly under Han Shuo's orders. A group of forest trolls were following tightly behind the great Datara and handling the female archmage along with the little skeleton. The female dark magus couldn't use her dark magus due to the little skeleton's continual harassment, and the forest was blocked off on all sides. They finally forced the archmage Emily into a trap, capturing her with a large net woven out of branches.

"I have what you need, you can't kill me, you can't!" Emily abruptly called out when javelins and spears were aimed at the archmage and about to descend.

A thought struck Han Shuo as he immediately gave the little skeleton an order. When the little skeleton received the order, he waved his empty left hand, giving the forest trolls next to him a gesture to halt. The little skeleton walked towards Emily with bone dagger in hand, her frightened gaze fixed upon him. The little skeleton tore the shirt off a random corpse of a guard next to him and shoved the rag into Emily's mouth, using ropes to tie up her arms and legs at the same time.

When the female dark archmage's gaudy red lips had been stoppered up, she continuously emitted sounds from her throat, but no one paid attention to her. The little skeleton wielded the bone dagger and took up the responsibility to looking over her. Han Shuo leveraged his observations through the original demons to continuously give commands to the forest trolls and point out where people were escaping, maximizing their spoils of battle to the greatest degree possible.

After half an hour, the scattered sounds of fighting from all sides had all stopped, and when Trunks approached from the distance on the back of his manticore, the forest trolls also tried to kill, but stayed their hands beneath Han Shuo's orders.

When Trunks spurred the manticore on to Han Shuo's side, he saw the forest trolls on the side look at Han Shuo with respectful and humble expressions. He seemed to understand something in that moment.

"I'll explain in detail to you later. Trunks, you must believe me." Han Shuo also noticed the oddities in Trunks' gaze and opened his mouth to express his apologies.

Trunks smiled and nodded, saying, "I have time to listen to your explanations."

Looking at Trunks with gratitude, Han Shuo walked to the side of the dark archmage and roughly tore the cloth out of her mouth. He lowered his body and stared at Emily, saying coldly and cruelly, "Give me a reason not to kill you!"

Chapter 119: Liaison, you can't be this cruel!

The trussed up Emily suddenly kissed Han Shuo's left cheek when he neared her, leaving behind a red mark.

"Oh heh heh, you've fallen to my curse. If I die, you'll be cursed until your body rots all over and dies." Emily immediately looked at Han Shuo in ease after kissing Han Shuo, delivering these lines merrily.

A strange pulse of energy flowed through Han Shuo from the place that Emily had kissed. Just as Han Shuo wanted to investigate the location of this energy, he suddenly discovered that the strange energy had already vanished without a trace.

This curse was one of the dark major's most bizarre and mysterious magics. Many legends and stories passed down through the ages all spoke of the frightening and mysterious power of this curse. Han Shuo could clearly feel it when that strange bit of energy had flowed through his body just now, and understood that the dark archmage Emily hadn't done this randomly.

Looking at the enormously proud Emily, Han Shuo's face was sinister as various fleeting expressions made their way across his face. He seemed to be wavering between whether or not to dispose of her. With the protection of the magical yuan, Han Shuo felt that this kind of curse wouldn't be able to cause any trouble for him, but he didn't dare to take the risk either.

"Han, you'd better not leap into the dark. The curses of the dark major are a most mysterious magic. It can often achieve quite frightening things. We can temporarily allow this b*tch to live, and then kill her when we find a way to break the curse." Trunks offered this suggestion when he saw Han Shuo frown in contemplation.

Nodding, Han Shuo chuckled oddly, his unfriendly gaze patrolled over Emily's well-rounded and charming, mature body. Emily's body was quite curvaceous, particularly her pair of heavy, well rounded breasts. They looked like they would explode out of her clothes at any moment. Her sexy lips were a brilliant red and a trace of a wanton smile curved at her lips, full of naked lust for men's bodies.

Under Han Shuo's odd gaze, Emily chuckled and swayed forcefully within the net. The durable branches tightened around her body, making her curves look even more wondrous, exuding a strong force of attraction.

"Mm, not bad, not bad. I won't let you die. There will still be plenty of ways for you to help me slowly lift the curse." Han Shuo started at Emily for a few deep moments and said to the old priest, "I think our strong forest troll warriors would enjoy this beautiful and mature human woman together."

The arrogantly chuckling Emily's face immediately drained of color as soon as he'd spoken and she cried out, "You can't do this!"

"Heh heh, why can't I? I'll have the forest troll warriors be careful when they rape you. Don't worry, they won't kill you!" Chuckling evilly at the panicking Emily, it was Han Shuo's turn to kick back leisurely.

Emily was frightened and panic stricken, her horrified eyes looking at the exceedingly ugly, yet fiercely built forest trolls. She didn't dare say anything else.

"Liaison, please don't make us do this. This human is so damned ugly, the children will have nightmares after having her. We're all followers of the great Datara. Liaison, you can't be this cruel!" At this moment, the old priest suddenly knelt down before Han Shuo and begged Han Shuo with a look of pain on his face.

"You blind old dog of a thing, how dare you sully my beauty! I'm going to kill you disgusting old worm!" Before Han Shuo had a chance to react, the previously panic stricken Emily immediately struggled furiously within the net and glared ferociously at the old priest, cursing loudly.

Han Shuo was involuntarily dumbfounded. Who would've thought that Emily would be so ugly in the eyes of the forest trolls? It looked like it was actually a cruel torture to gift Emily to them. This made Han Shuo not know whether to laugh or cry.

“Han, I think you should get back to more serious matters.” Trunks looked at Han Shuo with a slight smile and said.

Nodding, Han Shuo said, “Take back the spoils to the tribe. Stopper up the mouth of this woman and also take her back. Guard her well, but don’t touch her for now.”

The old priest immediately called out instructions to the forest trolls when he heard that they didn’t need to undergo such cruel torture. He told them to pick up all the spoils of war in the surroundings according to Han Shuo’s orders. The little skeleton was on guard duty next to Emily, ready to give Emily a strong blow at any time.

Throwing a significant look at Trunks, Han Shuo and Trunks left the area, with Han Shuo avoiding the forest trolls and stopping when he found a quiet place. He began to explain everything to Trunks.

Of course, Han Shuo withheld everything about the cemetery of death and refining the little skeleton. He only picked the bits that he could tell Trunks.

Trunks paused for a long while after Han Shuo had explained all of this and looked at Han Shuo in confusion. “This means that you’re also a necromancer?”

Nodding, Han Shuo smiled, “Of course, I’m a bonafide necromancer. Except, the little skeleton I’ve summoned is a bit odd, leading to the forest trolls mistakenly taking him for their great god Datara. Although these forest trolls are irritating and greedy, since they accept my orders, rather than let them commit evils as they will, why not control them so they raid targets they should raid? That’s why I’ve kept them around.”

“If you can use them appropriately, these forest trolls will be of a great help. I hadn’t thought that you’d be a necromancer as well. Hah, there are quite a bit of magical things about you. How much more are you keeping from me?”

“Eh, not too much else. Everyone has their own secrets. You never mention your own matters either.”

“Alright, then I won’t ask any further. You continue doing your own thing, I need to continue training in the further depths of the Dark Forest. Remember what you’ve promised me. I’ll have you help me when the time’s right.”

“Yes, I think we’ll have plenty of opportunities to meet in the future. When I finish handling all the matters at hand, I’ll also head deeper into the Dark Forest for more training. I think I’ll find a way to locate you then.”

The two were truly treating each other as friends by now, but everyone had their own secrets. Han Shou’s current base was in the cemetery of death, and he also had further necromancy magic to study. In addition, he needed to report to the Empire’s Dark Mantle organization and prepare the dwarves’ rations. He temporarily couldn’t just head further into the depths of the Dark Forest to train.

There wasn’t too much melancholy and sadness in parting with Trunks. When Han Shuo picked up the location of the original demons and little skeleton, he headed towards the forest trolls, finally reconvening with the forest trolls and heading back to the tribe.

The forest trolls had sent out five to six hundred trolls this time. All of them had brought pockets especially for raiding. Everyone mobilized themselves and brought back their spoils of war to within the forest troll tribe.

The McGrady Guild had been couriering resplendent silks and satins, soft and comfortable carpets, and a few other luxury items that nobles enjoyed. Apart from those, there were also battle chariots as large as carriages and a few items for use in attacking cities.

The luxury items were easy to take care of and sell off, but the battle chariots and other siege weapons would be a source of great trouble if they were being ferried to the Empire, but not to the army.

Han Shuo had learned from Phoebe that the McGrady Guild conducted a lot of smuggling. In this way, it seemed that these items likely weren’t being supplied to the Empire’s army. It seemed that the McGrady Guild did indeed have unfettered boldness.

Luxury items were usually stored within the space rings of the dead merchants. The battle chariots and siege weapons couldn't be stored within space rings, this was why they were being transported by the earth dragons. They took count of inventory back at the forest trolls' tribe and discovered that the number of luxury items filled two of the forest trolls' warehouses, and there were another three warehouse worth of battle chariots and siege weapons.

Looking at the five warehouses full of resources, Han Shuo wasn't sure how to handle this. The space ring on his hand was already full of gems and gold from the forest trolls. He had no way of storing more items. Han Shuo smiled ruefully as he looked at the mounds and heaps of resources within the forest trolls' warehouses.

"Right, how do you usually handle the items that you've raided?" The forest trolls were a race of high intelligence that understood the pleasures of life. Therefore, Han Shuo inquired after their previous methods as he looked at these items.

"Someone will make a trip to trade food, weapons, and necessities for these items. Stuff that we have no use for is in high demand from others. This is enough for us to trade for a winter's worth of food and necessities. Many thanks to the great Datara's favor. It was the great Datara who led us down the right path." The old priest explained to Han Shuo.

Nodding, Han Shuo privately thought that this was indeed the case. The merchants who traded with the forest trolls must've garnered their trust and brought the food, rations, necessities and weapons necessary to come and trade for these priceless items.

Items like food, rations, and necessities weren't that expensive within the Empire. If they were transported here and used to trade for the valuables that the forest trolls had looted, then these merchants would be sure to be able to earn an eye-popping margin. This was no wonder that despite the presence of danger all throughout the Dark Forest, there were still so many merchants who still swarmed into the Dark Forest without heed for their lives.

The Dark Forest would be exceedingly cold when winter arrived, and many magical creatures wouldn't venture out then. Because the roads would be sealed off, merchants and adventurers wouldn't easily venture in as well. Therefore, all tribes had to hurry and prepare the rations and food they needed to weather the winter, otherwise they'd be in bad straits when winter arrived. This was why the dwarves were worrying and why the forest trolls were raiding and looting in all directions.

The old priest was dumbfounded but nodded his head in understanding, as if thinking that Han Shuo's command was a bit baffling. However, the old priest was accustomed to following orders and didn't ask much.

"All of you temporarily don't go out raiding during this time. The great Datara and I will look around and notify you when we discover a better target. When I come back next time, I'll bring a portion of rations and necessities for your use. Be at ease." Han Shuo said to the old priest after thinking for a while.

"Liaison, what do we do about the ugly woman?" The old priest nodded and brought up the difficult question of Emily.

Han Shuo also felt a bit of a headache when this question was posed. He mused silently and then said, "I'll take her with me."

It wasn't until they were a few li away from the forest trolls and at a pond that Han Shuo finally loosened the restraints that covered Emily's eyes. Two zombie warriors had been carrying the ensnared Emily along the way, with Han Shuo completely disregarding her groans and moans. There was no other way they could proceed out of the forest troll tribe territory, thus Han Shuo had to proceed in this fashion.

When he reached the water's edge, Emily started cursing at Han Shuo when the coverings over her eyes and restraint on her mouth were released. Han Shuo ignored Emily's curses and undid his shirt, revealing an evenly fit body.

Contrary to Han Shuo's expectations, several traces of panic were displayed in Emily's eyes when she saw that Han Shuo took off his clothes without another word. She hastily spoke, “What, what do you want to do?”

Han Shuo had only wanted to take a shower within the pond, but a plot formed in his mind when he saw the panic in Emily’s eyes. He immediately leered and chuckled oddly as he took steps closer to Emily, wantonly looking up and down her mature, full body. He asked her in return, “What would you like me to do? Ahaha!”

Chapter 120: Forcing himself on a female archmage

Emily's body was alluring and curvaceous, presenting a deadly attraction as her mature body was revealed as it was tightly leashed within the net. Emily's eyes were full of obvious panic now, and this only further heightened the temptations of her body.

Han Shuo had only planned on terrorizing Emily, but as he drew near to her, a surge of an uncontrollable desire grew from his heart, uncontrollable like an avalanche. The speed in which his magical yuan was churning was many times faster than usual, and the heavily panting Han Shuo suddenly felt his mind go dull and heavy and his consciousness slowly become hazy.

"No, please spare me, I'll lift the curse for you!" Emily was truly panicked and watched Han Shuo prowl over like a wild beast. She could no longer suppress the fear within her heart and started screaming frantically.

NSFW Part

Walking towards the pond, Han Shuo suddenly felt alert and full of vigor. The heavy injuries he'd sustained a few days ago seemed to have all taken a turn for the better. When he walked into the pond to wash himself, Han Shuo suddenly discovered that there were traces of red between his legs.

He was immediately shocked as his gaze swiftly landed on the unconscious Emily. Her body mature and tantalizing, Emily had seemed like a beautiful woman and her actions had been rather wanton. Han Shuo had originally thought that she was greatly experienced, but hadn't thought at all that this would be her first time. This was simply too baffling.

No wonder Emily would have such panic in her eyes when she first saw him display that lascivious expression. No wonder Emily had sobbed with pain in the beginning, later moaning involuntarily, and finally unconsciously continuously moving with him in the end.

If Emily's body had long been defiled, Han Shuo wouldn't have had too much of a burden. A mature woman wouldn't be too overly concerned with this matter, but now that Emily's body condition was obviously testifying that Han Shuo was her first man, this made the tenor of this matter a bit different.

As Han Shuo washed himself, he wracked his brains to decide how to handle this. His brain was a churning mess in that moment, and he couldn't find an appropriate way to handle this matter. Han Shuo washed himself unconsciously like this within the pond, coming to himself with an abrupt start when a low moan sounded.

A broken piece of rag was still shoved into Emily's mouth and her hands were still tied. Standing across from Han Shuo, she seemed to have just woken up and was looking at Han Shuo with a frightening gaze. All sorts of hatred, anger, and hesitation were swimming within her clear eyes as she coldly stared unblinkingly at Han Shuo, who stood within the water.

Scratching his head awkwardly, Han Shuo also felt his scalp tingle with numbness. He hesitated, then hesitated some more and thought a bit more, finally walking out of the pond and taking out a new set of clothing from the space ring to wear. He smiled with embarrassment as he walked towards Emily, "I didn't mean that, that was an accident!"

Emily still looked at Han Shuo with that frightened gaze. He suddenly remembered that her lips were still sealed only after he walked up to her, and thus she likely wasn't able to talk. Taking a deep breath in, he first summoned the little skeleton and then took the rag out from Emily's mouth.

Exactly as he'd expected, a string of furious curses exploded out from Emily's mouth, like bombs, when the rag was taken out of her mouth.

Her voice choked up, Emily switched various sorts of evil curses, hectoring Han Shuo's shamelessness and that he was less than an animal. She finally stopped when she herself was tired after half an hour, and then sobbed lowly, saying a few words that Han Shuo couldn't hear clearly.

Seeing that Emily's out of control emotions were finally calming down, Han Shuo finally awkwardly opened his mouth as he scratched his head. "Everyone's a grown adult here. It was my first time as well. You aren't any worse off. Let's just let it go like this!"

"Release me, release me! You damned kid, I'll have your life for this!" Emily had finally gotten herself under control, but her struggles began anew when she heard Han Shuo's words, as if she wanted to lay down her life.

His scalp numb, Han Shuo took a step back and spread out his hands with a rueful grin. He asked Emily, "How was I supposed to know that that was your first time? Now that the matter's happened, what do you say we should do?"

"You little brat that's less than an animal, you shamelessly raped me! What do you say should be done?" Fires of anger spurted out from Emily's eyes as she said furiously.

"Although you were in a bit of pain originally, I saw that you also looked quite comfortable afterwards. It was my first time as well, you weren't that taken advantage of. How about I let you go, and then we go our separate ways? It can be as if we don't know each other. Han Shuo furrowed his brow and thought carefully, proposing this to Emily.

"Shut up!" Emily yelled out, making Han Shuo jump with fright. Emily then quieted down and first displayed a weak expression of resignation, then stared directly at Han Shuo, saying lowly, "If you don't have an explanation for me, I'll kill myself immediately. You'll be hard pressed to escape death as well when the curse takes effect upon my death."

Scratching his head out of habit, Han Shuo walked ruefully towards Emily. He took out the Demonslayer Edge and removed the restraints from Emily's hands and legs. He opened his mouth and said softly, "Why don't you wash your body first, we can talk after!"

After saying these words, Han Shuo raised his level of alertness and was privately on guard against Emily suddenly attacking him in a rage. However, when the restraints on Emily's body had been released, she didn't make any moves out of the ordinary. She only continuously patrolled her eyes over Han Shuo's body, as if wanting to see him clearly.

After staring at him for a while, Emily nodded her head blankly and wrapped the robe around her body tightly, walking towards the pond. She tripped halfway through and almost fell to the ground. Her face reddened as she cursed lowly, slowing down her pace afterwards.

When she walked into the pond, she took off robe and flung it far away from her, revealing the charms of a mature woman and started washing up without any reservations.

Taking in his fill of Emily's mature body, having had his first taste of the pleasures between man and woman, Han Shuo's heart started itching again, but he spoke with all seriousness, "Hey, I'm still here. You've taken off the robe and started washing up just like this, that isn't the best option, is it?"

Suddenly turning around, Emily fully displayed her taut abdomen and a patch of black between her legs to Han Shuo. She glared ferociously at Han Shuo, saying, "You've seen all there is to see and touched all there is to touch! How dare you act serious in front of me, you're truly not just typically shameless! Humph. If I were to move too far away, who knows if you would take advantage of the opportunity to run away. I'm going to keep you close at hand."

Han Shuo had really been about to run away when given the chance. When he heard her say so, he smiled awkwardly with some embarrassment, "I'm not the type to avoid responsibility. Heh heh, go ahead and wash up, I'll keep a look out for you."

After a while, a freshly washed up Emily with a new set of luxurious magic robes once again reappeared in Han Shuo's vision. Radiating with beauty, she walked to Han Shuo and first looked askance at the little skeleton wielding a bone dagger, then stared at Han Shuo and asked, "After contemplating for so long, have you decided what explanation to give me?"

Having looked his fill for a while, Han Shuo pulled Emily into his embrace with one hand and suddenly kissed down on Emily's red, luscious lips. His hands started unceremoniously roving all over Emily's well rounded body. An intoxicating, wondrous sense started to spread out from Han Shuo's heart as their mouths and tongues entangled and he entwined himself with her body.

Emily started struggling fiercely at first, but even with the restraints on her hands and feet having been released, she still had no way to break free from Han Shuo's embrace. As Han Shuo drew her into a long kiss, her body also started becoming pliable as her struggles became weaker and weaker, finally voluntarily moving within Han Shuo's mouth like a little snake.

After a while, when both their breathing was starting to become difficult, they finally panted heavily and broke apart. Han Shuo then drew close to Emily's bright red ears, nipping her bright red ear tips, and said softly, "Well then, you're my woman then!"

Emily's body first stiffened, and then encircled Han Shuo's body like a snake after he'd spoken and also bit his ear tip, "Humph, shameless brat, at least you know what's the right thing to do!"

Laughing wildly in pride, Han Shuo swept up Emily by the waist and started a ravaging campaign on her amidst her protestations. He only stopped when Emily was about to faint.

Over the next three days, Han Shuo and Emily appeared on the path leading to the cemetery of death. The two had been at odds with each other, but suddenly became inseparable after three days of intimacy.

During this process, Han Shuo's strong body had caused Emily to sway and waver whenever she walked. Emily had gone from her initial lust to subsequent panic, and finally begged Han Shuo to let her off the hook before she could finally recovered.

Having tasted sweetness, Han Shuo finally knew that the taste of the pleasures between man and woman were beyond words. The conquests of the past two days made Han Shuo feel that he'd lived in vain before, and had thoroughly let himself go in depravity.

The closer they drew to the cemetery of death, Han Shuo finally thought of something as he looked at the brilliant and mesmerizing Emily next to him. The two of them hadn't volunteered information about their own identities, and neither had they asked each other. Therefore, Han Shuo still didn't know Emily's identity, even until now.

At this moment, the only thing that Han Shuo felt was a bit inappropriate was that he wasn't sure how to face Fanny in the future. He had true feelings for Fanny, and was only with Emily due to ridiculous circumstances. He wasn't sure how to handle the future, and could only take each step as they came.

But as they neared the cemetery of death, Han Shuo involuntarily started worrying. The cemetery of death was Han Shuo's greatest secret, and the fastest way to the Empire was through the transportation matrix within the cemetery of death, but Emily had already expressed that she was going to cling onto him no matter what. He knew nothing of Emily's status right now and didn't dare take the risk of telling her this secret. Therefore, he was in a bit of a hard spot.

"Don't worry, I was lying to you about the curse I'd cast on you. You don't need to be worried at all. Such a strong curse would need something from your body as a medium, it wouldn't be as simple as a kiss if I really wanted to cast it. I would have to pay a heavy price as well." Emily saw that Han Shuo had a long face and thought that he was worrying about this. She smiled involuntarily and spoke up in comfort.

Han Shuo started, and although he wasn't fretting over this, he still felt a bit relieved to hear her say that the curse was fake. He then recalled the strange feeling that had entered his body when Emily had kissed him. He furrowed his brow and looked at Emily in confusion, asking, "But I clearly felt a strange energy enter my body then. What was that?"

"Heh heh, that was a low level disease magic that I'd released, purposefully to create an illusion for you." Emily looked at Han Shuo with pride as she explained with a smile.

Pausing, Emily seemed to suddenly remember something and stared oddly at Han Shuo. “Speaking of this disease magic, I rather forgot that you should’ve long since been sick by now. You’re just a small necromancer. Why is it that there’s nothing wrong with you at all, and you’re full of boundless energy when you commit that bad act? What’s going on?”

An ordinary magic of disease would, of course, not have any effect on his perverted body. The magic yuan’s repeated reforging had crafted an enormously strong body for Han Shuo. Add to that Emily had always thought Han Shuo was just a necromancer, it was no wonder that she would find it odd. However, Han Shuo didn’t explain and only chuckled evilly, not saying a word.

“Mysterious evil little brat!” Emily paid no attention and also rolled her eyes at Han Shuo.

Suddenly, Han Shuo’s brows knit together as an original demon patrolling nearby suddenly detected the appearance of people who shouldn’t be here – the wind archmage Duke and the senior swordsman Erick!

Last time in the Babylon Academy of Magic and Force, because Han Shuo had made a report to the Dark Mantle, the old witch Camilla disappeared without a trace. Duke and Erick had also hastily returned to the Kasi Empire. Who would’ve thought that these two would appear again after only twenty or so days.

“Someone’s seen the cemetery of death nearby, but that person died suddenly of unexplained circumstances.” Erick waved the longsword in his hand and hacked away at the strong growth of shrubbery and grass around him, speaking as he opened a path.

“Mm. It looks like the cemetery of death is nearby. The Dark Mantle of the Lancelot Empire is very frightening indeed. I wonder how Camilla’s identity was exposed – she was actually killed that night. It was a good thing that we read the situation correctly, otherwise we would’ve been hard pressed to escape death as well if we’d stayed.” The old mage Duke frowned and revealed some information in his low murmurings. It looked like Camilla had been done away with by the Dark Mantle organization.

“Hey hey hey!” A shout that became louder and louder suddenly rang out from Emily’s mouth. When Han Shuo abruptly came to himself, Emily was tenderly stroking his face. She asked merrily, “My cute little devil, just what evil thoughts are you thinking of that you’re so entranced?”

“Eh, there’s sounds to the south, let’s go take a look!” Duke had been walking along unhurriedly and unrushed when he suddenly made a shushing motion towards Erick, saying this softly afterwards. He immediately floated up using a floatation spell and swiftly neared where Han Shuo and Emily were.

“Someone’s coming, we need to hurry and hide!” Han Shuo had been about to respond when he detected Duke’s movement and hastily called out to Emily. He used another original demon to continue observation and grabbed Emily by the waist, dashing towards a big tree on the left.

When he arrived, Han Shuo said lowly, “Use a floatation spell to go up the tree, we should stay together.”

Han Shuo climbed adroitly up the tree when his words had finished, landing into a thick patch of branches and leaves in the blink of an eye, waving down towards Emily who was floating in the middle of the tree.

“How come I haven’t heard anything? Are you overreacting?” Emily said softly with some suspicion, but still meekly squirmed into the thick of the leaves and even leaned comfortably on Han Shuo’s body, squirming her snake-like body around.

“Shh!” Han Shuo made a shushing motion and then took a deep breath in, immediately calming down his heartbeat and breathing.

She’d originally thought he was overreacting and was about to speak again to make fun of Han Shuo, Emily’s brow suddenly furrowed as she too felt the same disturbance. She chanted out an incantation in a low voice as a cloud of grey air appeared and obscured the two’s location.

As an archmage, Emily also naturally had sensitive hearing, but because a wind archmage majored in wind magic, their ears would be a bit more sensitive than ordinary archmages, otherwise Duke would've been hard pressed to hear Emily's cry.

"It's Duke from the Kasi Empire!" Killing intent suddenly flared in Emily's eyes when Duke appeared.

Han Shuo was surprised when these words were spoken and looked quite in surprise with Emily, didn't think for a moment that Emily would also know Duke.

Chapter 121: It turns out it was our own people

Duke used a floatation spell to arrive where the two had been hiding and inspected the four surroundings for a sign of anything out of the ordinary, with a lofty air and above everything. The senior swordsman Erick also rushed in from a distance and carefully poked his head through the shrubbery. He raised his head towards Duke up in the sky, “Mister Duke, nothing out of the ordinary here!”

The wind archmage Duke closed his eyes and didn’t say a word, concentrating and listening to the wind, as if trying to obtain some clues.

Situated within the thick growth of branches and leaves, Han Shuo and Emily were completely concealed. Their surroundings were also covered by a grey magic wall from the dark major arts. The dark major magics were veiled in mystery and adept at hiding traces of movement. As a fellow archmage, it would be difficult for Duke to detect the dark magic wall that she had set up.

After a low exclamation, Emily looked at Han Shuo, extremely astonished. “How did you do that?”

His expression grave, Han Shuo looked at Duke, who hovered in the distance, and made a careful gesture, indicating for Emily not to speak and alert Duke and Erick.

Extending a finger to tap Han Shuo’s forehead, Emily smiled. “What are you being furtive and scared about? There are thick branches and leaves concealing our whereabouts. The wall I just set up has sound insulating properties. Even if Duke is a wind major archmage, he won’t be able to hear a bit of our conversation. What are you worried about?”

Emily had spoken several times, but Duke, standing in the distance, was still listening with his eyes closed. It looked like he truly hadn’t discovered anything. Heaving a sigh in relief, Han Shuo grabbed the finger that Emily had extended and bit it, making her roll her eyes at him with a brightly flushed face.

“Speak, how did you do it?” Emily, her face brilliantly red, stared at Han Shuo as she asked.

At this moment, Emily was leaning on Han Shuo’s left side, and half her body was pressing against him. Her full chest was resting on Han Shuo’s left arm and her long and smooth thigh tightly mashed against his waist. Emily, with an extremely amorous expression, was an uncontrollable temptation for Han Shuo, who had just gotten an initial taste of the pleasures between man and woman.

Chuckling lowly, Han Shuo said, “So there’s a soundproofing effect. Heh heh, we haven’t done it on a tree yet!

Han Shuo grabbed Emily as soon as he’d finished speaking and moved to position her behind at his waist. He immediately started ravaging with his hands as Emily’s face and necks immediately flushed red from Han Shuo’s actions and the finger that he’d just bit. She said, “Duke is below and Erick is also observing from below as well. We can’t do this! It’s too embarrassing!”

“No worries, that’s what makes this exciting. Heh heh!” When Han Shuo had ripped Emily’s shirt apart, his mouth neared her earlobes and he kissed her tenderly as he chuckled evilly in a low voice.

After this string of teasing, Emily finally couldn’t hold it any longer and emitted a tempting moan from her sweet lips. She forgot everything that’d they been talking about before and no longer cared that they were in a large tree, with two enemies making observations around them. She voluntarily reached out a hand into Han Shuo’s shirt as her well rounded bottom searched for the right position.

“Ah... “ Both of them gave out a comfortable cry when he entered.

After a while, when Emily’s body had gone completely soft and she’d screamed herself hoarse, everything began to slowly calm down. Maintaining their position, Emily sprawled on Han Shuo’s chest and used her index finger to trace small circles. She asked again, “How did you do that?”

At this moment, the wind archmage Duke and Erick had long since left. An original demon trailed far behind the two and relayed everything it reacted to into Han Shuo's mind. Because the two of them had come with the intention of finding the cemetery of death, their speed in walking away wasn't that fast. They would find it difficult to escape the surveillance of the original demon within a short amount of time, thus Han Shuo wasn't in a hurry.

His large hand unconsciously roved over Emily's naked back, Han Shuo asked, "How did I do what?"

"I'm a dark major archmage and I didn't discover when Duke was approaching us. You're just a minor necromancer, how could you detect this disturbance? In addition, you're a mage, but your adroitness and deftness in climbing this tree was more ridiculous than an ordinary swordsman. I've also seen how you've adjusted your breathing and heartbeat. What's going on?" Emily breathed out lightly in enjoyment after they'd calmed down from Han Shuo's motions and asked him on the side.

Remaining silent for a while, Han Shuo said, "Apart from training in necromancy magic, I'm also training in a wondrous martial arts technique. This wondrous technique is different from ordinary fighting aura. Therefore, I can count as a mage swordsman. All of the particular points you saw just now are because of this martial arts technique."

Her body straightening slightly, Emily looked in astonishment at Han Shuo, "Such a wondrous martial arts technique exists? Then can you fight like a swordsman?"

Nodding, Han Shuo said affirmatively, "Of course." His forehead then creased as he looked at Emily with confusion. "How do you know those two?"

It was Emily's turn to be silent after his question. She hesitated, and then said slowly, "I haven't told you everything about me because I was afraid of bringing you trouble. I'm actually someone from the Lancelot Empire and was escorting the McGrady Guild's smuggled goods from the Brut Merchant alliance this time because I was investigating something. I wanted to get to the bottom of who was receiving this batch of resources that would be used for war.”

“Honestly speaking, I belong to a secret organization. Duke and Erick have come with an unspeakable secret to the Empire this time, and their actions threaten the livelihood of the Empire. Therefore, our organization is making a move against the two. Although I wasn’t in the Empire, I have the clearance level to know everything that happens.”

“I also saw Duke and Erick’s head shots within the organization’s files. The organization is sending people to shadow their movements. The organization said that they might appear on the borders of the Empire and thus wanted me to return to the Empire through the border. I paid quite a bit of attention, that’s why I know so much. Although our organization allows everyone their space and usually won’t interfere in members’ lives, there’s still no benefit if you know too much.”

The soft and tender voice emitted from Emily’s mouth as she calmly relayed the entire matter and her identity. After all of this, Han Shuo suddenly displayed a strange smile, scaring Emily. She wondered if something was up with him.

“What’s wrong? Are you frightened? Don’t worry, our organization answers to His Majesty the king and exists completely and only for the security of the Empire. We don’t interfere in members’ lives and I don’t think they will be of any threat to you. Oh, are you afraid of me? Are you prepared to throw me away?” Emily first explained, but then felt a bit afraid when she saw Han Shuo’s weird smile. This man had gotten everything of hers and was quite cute when he was acting bad. He had helped her heart enjoy the past few days in peace, and so she wouldn’t let him go, no matter what. Emily’s heart raced frantically.

Beneath Emily’s worry and fear, her previously reddened and flushed face appeared full of fear and trepidation. When she got to the end, her voice was choking up. No matter how strong or as mature a woman was, when she gave her body and heart to a man, she would display weakness and timidity in front of the man who had received her all. Emily was naturally no exception.

After a while, Han Shuo said with a shadow of a smile, “Your organization is called the Dark Mantle, right?”

Her heart leaping in fear, Emily’s body stiffened as she looked at Han Shuo in astonishment and shock. She asked, “How do you know that?”

His space ring lighting up, the iron medallion that represented his identity as a Dark Mantle member suddenly appeared in Han Shuo’s hand. Han Shuo said to Emily, “Because I’m also a member of the Dark Mantle!”

Emily, “...”

“Heh heh, who would’ve thought that we’d be colleagues? Hurry and let me see your medallion and let me know what rank you are?” Han Shuo chuckled oddly as he grasped Emily’s small hand and caressed her space ring with his finger.

“You wicked little brat!” Emily blanked for a moment and suddenly started chuckling delightfully, splaying herself on Han Shuo’s chest with tears of joy. She reached out her hand and ran it across Han Shuo’s chest. When Han Shuo was breathing out comfortably, her teeth suddenly bit down fiercely and started squeals from Han Shuo.

“See if you dare bully me again, humph!” Emily chuckled with pride when she saw Han Shuo scream out of startlement. She put on an air of glaring ferociously at Han Shuo before subsiding.

Feeling that the distance between them and the original demon trailing Duke was increasing further, Han Shuo suddenly pulled down his shirt and also looked over Emily before saying, “Let’s follow Duke and see what he’s up to?”

When Han Shuo finished speaking, Emily recited an incantation in a low voice and the grey air that had been surrounding them suddenly disappeared without a trace. As Han Shuo poked his head out of the leaves and grabbed Emily, he directly jumped down from the tree amidst her screams. He landed solidly within the shrubs in the back and didn’t cause any harm to Emily’s body.

Leveraging the original demon tailing Duke, Han Shuo and Emily exchanged some information. Han Shuo also told Emily about his recent experiences within the Dark Forest. However, he picked which ones he could say, and still concealed what he had to conceal.

“A minion of the Third Dark Star, you need to listen to me in the future or I can directly punish you!” When she knew that Han Shuo was just a lowly Third Dark Star, Emily continued to lightly tease Han Shuo along the way. Candide, one of the three heavyweights of the Dark Mantle, was at the highest level of Fifth Dark Sun. Emily was already a Third Dark Sun and thus her status within the Dark Mantle would surely be very high. No wonder she had the authority to know so much.

“Who would’ve thought you would be a Third Dark Sun! Heh heh, so what if you are? You’re still conquered by my prowess! You live if I want you to live, you die if I want you to die.” Han Shuo smacked his palm on Emily’s butt and laughed delightedly.

“You crude, despicable little brat! I’m going to make you completely tame and make you answerable to me sooner or later!” Emily’s hand that was curled around Han Shuo’s arm suddenly pinched him fiercely, and wasn’t in the slightest bit angry about Han Shuo’s crudeness.

His body suddenly froze as Han Shuo discovered, through the original demon, that Duke and Erick had actually discovered traces of the cemetery of death. Duke kept circling the area around the cemetery of death with a frown on his face, as if he’d discovered something.

Emily stopped when Han Shuo halted and looked askance at him, opening her mouth to ask, “What now? Are you annoyed at me because I said I would tame you? You know I’m joking!”

Shaking his head, Han Shuo said lowly, “Should we kill Duke and the other?”

“Let’s not for now. If I’m guessing correctly, the old fox Candide must be planning on thoroughly understanding Duke’s intentions. That’s why he’s still alive. Otherwise, there’s no way that the two of them would be able to leave the Lancelot Empire alive. You’ve just entered the Dark Mantle so you don’t know how strong the organization is. It’s impossible for a wind archmage and a senior swordsman to escape from that sly fox Candide's hand." Emily mused deeply and then opened her mouth to explain to Han Shuo.

"I actually understand, because I answer directly to Candide!" Han Shuo said in a low.

Covering her surprise and looking at Han Shuo, Emily said lightly, "You're joking! You're just a Third Dark Star! You don't have the right to be managed by him at all?"

Shrugging, Han Shuo said, "If you don't believe me, you can look into the internal information of the Dark Mantle. I was directly inducted by Candide, and he said that I would be under his deployment in the future. That's how things are."

Emily rather believed Han Shuo after his words. She stroked his cheek as she said, "You're quite something alright. How did the old fox take a fancy to you?"

"Let's not talk about this, we should hurry and follow them. I think Duke and them are planning on doing something." Han Shuo suddenly said and tugged Emily towards Duke and Erick's direction.

Leveraging the original demon's vision, Han Shuo discovered that Duke and Erick were circling the outside of the cemetery of death. It looked like Duke had indeed discovered something. He changed magical incantations and released several Grim Wind spells. They howled around the edges of the cemetery of death, attempting to discover something.

Just as this moment, the concealed original demon discovered someone crouched within the shrubbery. This man wore a body of dark brown clothing, with the color of the clothing melding into the trees. He lay there unmoving, and it would be difficult to discover him if one didn't look carefully.

His clothes and actions clearly indicated that he was after Duke and Erick. From the information that he'd just received from Emily, Han Shuo's thoughts raced and he immediately understood that this man was likely someone that the Dark Mantle had sent to keep an eye on Duke and Erick.

The Grim Wind spells blew randomly and tore through everything around them. When one of the Grim Wind spells blew over, it happened to crash directly into him. Although the man lay crouching on the ground and didn't move, a bloody furrow was gouged out of his body and he involuntarily cried out from the pain.

"Who is it?" The sensitivity of Duke's ears were beyond belief as he heard a cry of pain from such a distance away. He'd been standing within the bushes, but suddenly once again, used the levitation spell to drift through the air and make straight for where the person was.

Seeing that he'd been made, the person immediately stood up and planned on hastily leaving the area. However, as a wind archmage, Duke's speed was obviously faster than this person. He'd arrived behind the person with a whoosh as soon as he'd activated the levitation spell.

"You Dark Mantle people again, you really linger and refuse to leave. You've discovered me even in the Dark Forest! I have to say that you Dark Mantle people are truly infinitely resourceful!" Duke said this with a light smile and chanted an incantation.

Great winds suddenly appeared in front of the Dark Mantle member, who was attempting to leave, obstructing his path forward. The howling wind formed blades of wind and criss-crossed as they shot towards the Dark Mantle member.

When his body met the obstruction, a dagger appeared in his hand as he dodged nimbly within the shrubbery, evading most of the attacks from the wind blades. He then waved the dagger to defend against the other wind blades. Explosions rang out, and although his dagger defended against a few of the wind blades, two deep gouges of blood appeared on his legs.

"Oh no, the observer from our organization keeping an eye on their movements seems to have been caught. We should hurry on over. You take care of Duke and I'll handle senior swordsman Erick." Han Shuo was deathly afraid that the cemetery of death would be revealed and thus planned on using Emily's power to kill Duke and Erick once and for all. He immediately cried out when he saw this situation developing.

Emily's facial expression immediately changed when she heard Han Shuo's words. A grey robe suddenly appeared as it covered her entire body. She also casted the levitation spell and flew out after murmuring "be careful" to Han Shuo.

Apart from serving within the Dark Mantle, many within the organization had other identities. Therefore, unless there was no other option available, they wouldn't easily show their true faces to others. This was the basic modus operandus of all Dark Mantle members.

When Emily left, Han Shuo also took out a grey robe to cover his entire body as two of the original demons flew towards Duke, with the other closely tailing Erick. Han Shuo was quite familiar with this area as he dashed over from another path and planned on intercepting and getting rid of Erick halfway.

Han Shuo's injuries were mostly healed by now, and his magical yuan had greatly increased after last time's experience of entering a demonic trance. As his magical yuan circulated now, it gave Han Shuo a feeling of being free from inhibitions.

When Erick heard Duke's voice, he grasped his longsword and quickly, but cautiously approached the same spot. When he reached an uneven hill, Han Shuo, who'd been lying in wait, suddenly chanted a magical incantation. A bone spear suddenly shot towards Erick, and a crossbow also twanged when the bone spear materialized.

When the crossbow bolt shot out, Han Shuo's body also shot out like lightning. When Erick saw these two attacks charging towards him, Erick completely lost his composure as he panicked and used a most practical, yet exceedingly ugly roll to move out of the way towards the front, not giving a thought to how he looked.

The ugly method was quite useful as he evaded Han Shuo's two waves of attacks. Erick then appeared right in front of Han Shuo and stabbed forward with a sword imbued with dark green fighting aura. Han Shuo hastily took out the Demonslayer Edge, but his hand trembled slightly from the impact.

Erick also grunted, but didn't actually make use of the opportunity to follow up. He stood up and chased in Duke's direction.

Snorting lightly, Han Shuo grasped his Demonslayer Edge and quickly followed. Another original demon, who was observing Duke, discovered that Emily had already exchanged blows with Duke, and it seemed that she had the upper hand. It was a pity that she seemed to be a few steps too late as the Dark Mantle member already had multiple lacerations crossing his body. He seemed to be dead.

"Master Duke, I'm going!" Erick cried out loudly and charged over with upraised sword. Duke, in the midst of his fight with Emily, had his facial expression flicker rapidly, but when he saw Han Shuo chasing behind Erick, the staff in his hand suddenly shook as he released a hurricane spell, lifting up Han Shuo's charging body and flinging it into the distance.

At this moment, the Eye of Darkness that had been stored within Han Shuo's space ring actually flew out of the ring automatically, flaring out with sparkling green light, opening the boundary that protected the cemetery of death. Han Shuo's body also landed within the cemetery with a thud.

"Oh, my gosh, it really is the cemetery of death!" Duke had been about to turn back and handle Emily when he saw the green light explode in the air, revealing the bizarre view of the cemetery of death. He immediately cried out with joy and suddenly dashed over, paying no heed to anything else.

Erick and Emily were both incredibly astonished. They first stared, dumbfounded, and then sprinted forward with all their might before the boundary to the cemetery closed again.

Chapter 122: Thinking for you

Tall and angular buildings were erected within the cemetery of death that was strewn with bones. All of them drew Duke's attention. In that instant, he concerned himself with looking around wildly and didn't continue making a move against Han Shuo.

However, when Emily rushed into the cemetery, her first task wasn't to take in the surroundings. Rather, she flew to Han Shuo instead and asked anxiously, "Are you alright?"

If it'd been an ordinary person falling from such a height, they might have actually been injured. but Han Shuo, of course, wasn't injured at all. He shook his head at Emily and stood up with a darkened face, fixing his gaze tightly onto the wind archmage Duke in the distance.

Looking around with excitement, Duke said joyfully when senior swordsman Erick arrived next to him, "This is the cemetery of death, there's no doubt about it. Who would've thought that we'd actually make it inside?"

"Master Duke, we didn't discover anything after a such a long period of studying, but the boundary to the cemetery of death opened when green light was emitted from that person. It's very strange!" Erick looked at Han Shuo from afar and said lowly to Duke.

Nodding, Duke said, "That's right. It looks like there's something odd about this person. That green light just now also gave me a familiar feeling, it seems to have come from the Eye of Darkness!"

Erick was greatly astonished when these words were voiced. "How is that possible?"

Grasping the Demonslayer Edge in his hands, Han Shuo recited an incantation and the little skeleton, wielding a bone dagger and sporting seven wings, appeared. Three zombie warriors also appeared. They all held wooden clubs and barred the path to Han Shuo and Emily along with the little skeleton.

“You were the one who opened the boundary to the cemetery of death?” Emily breathed a sigh of relief when she saw that Han Shuo was unharmed. She then recalled what had just happened and asked Han Shuo with great confusion.

Nodding, Han Shuo said with a darkened face, “That’s right. The cemetery of death was opened by something on my body. Duke and Erick must die now. You help me take care of Duke, and I’ll explain to you after we kill them!”

Emily didn’t ask anything else after hearing Han Shuo speak thus, and docilely picked up her magic staff, setting her sights on the approaching Duke with a look full of killing intent.

“He’s also a necromancer to boot, it looks like this will be a slightly difficult fight!” Erick had traded blows with Han Shuo and could feel that Han Shuo’s strength was not in the slightest bit weaker than his own. When he saw that Han Shuo had even summoned zombie warriors, his brow creased as he spoke.

“Kill them first. We’re excavating the secrets of the cemetery of death!” Duke snorted lightly and floated over. Erick didn’t say much else after pausing for a moment and following Duke in a charge over.

A string of incantations leisurely surged out of Emily’s mouth. The magic staff in her hand suddenly shot out a few strands of black air and like snakes twisted and twined towards the approaching Duke. When Duke saw the black air attacking him, his face became incomparably grave. A tornado formed suddenly in front of him and churned up all the white bones on the ground. It made for the black air and twisted all of them into the tornado.

Snorting coldly, Emily said, “Be careful”, to Han Shuo and also flew towards the black air. She waved the magic staff in her hand and started fighting fiercely with Duke within the air.

“We shouldn’t just idly stand around either.” Han Shuo grinned and gave a long laugh. The little skeleton led the three zombie warriors in heading towards Erick. At the same time, Han Shuo kept an eye behind Erick and Duke, via the original demons, observing their every gesture and move.

“Do you think three zombies and a skeleton are enough to stop me?” Erick snorted lowly with disdain as dark green fighting aura flared out of the longsword in his hand. His body was like a bulldozer as he sent dirt and dust flying as he charged directly towards Han Shuo.

Continuously laughing coldly within his heart, Han Shuo made use of his mental strength to manipulate the zombie warriors and little skeleton, blocking the way in front of him. The little skeleton’s usual speed was as fast as lightning, but was now being purposefully curtailed by Han Shuo so that he was as slow as the zombie warriors. Dashing over, Erick’s dark green fighting aura formed a ball of light as it enclosed a zombie warrior within it.

The sound of bones exploding suddenly emitted from the zombie warrior’s body. Beneath the effects of the dark green fighting aura, the first zombie warrior had its body shattered. Its wooden club also broke into several segments. Turning his body sideways with a disdainful smirk, Erick’s nimble body evaded the crashes from the other two zombie warriors’ wooden clubs and stabbed forward with his longsword, slashing open the neck of another zombie warrior. The zombie warrior swayed and looked like it was about to fall down.

The little skeleton raised the bone dagger and pressed itself against the other zombie warrior, jerkily raising the bone dagger in its hand and stabbing it towards Erick. Erick could easily handle even the zombie warriors, so he paid absolutely no attention to the little skeleton’s upraised dagger, raising his sword rather impatiently to block the strike.

At this moment, the originally abnormally slow bone dagger suddenly increased more than tenfold in its striking speed. The previously stiff and slow little skeleton became so agile that it caused Erick’s eyes to bug out. Erick’s longsword had just started rising and he hadn’t had time to make his move before the bone dagger was already landing on its target.

Erick retreated in horrified fright, but he was still a beat too slow. A puncturing sound rang out as a large piece of flesh and blood flew out from his chest. As Erick cried out in pain, he also called out with incredulity, "How is this possible?! What kind of skeletal warrior is this?"

It was a pity that the little skeleton had no reaction to Erick's astonished yells. When he'd succeeded with one of his blows, he didn't relax and immediately followed up afterwards. He didn't wait for Erick to stabilize his footing before appearing in front of him. As Erick's fighting aura gathered anew on his longsword, the seven bone spurs on the back of the little skeleton's spine flared out at the same time and they flew in a semi-circle, landed accurately on Erick's body.

The seven bone spurs pierced through Erick's neck, forehead, and heart. He didn't even have time to release the fighting aura that he'd gathered before his body fell backwards. The frightened and terrified expression on his face didn't even vanish in death.

Duke and Emily had been fighting when they both noticed the disturbance on this side. When they saw that Erick had died a gruesome death, both were surprised. However, Duke's worry and Emily's joy followed closely after that surprise.

Emily had already witnessed the little skeleton's miraculousness last time, and even she, a dark archmage, had been powerless in the face of the little skeleton's pursuit. The little skeleton's nimbleness and speed had left a powerful impression on Emily. Upon seeing that the seven bone spurs on the back of the little skeleton could even harm someone, she had a deeper understanding of Han Shuo's mysteriousness.

Duke was already having trouble fending off attacks from Emily alone, he'd actually been hoping that Erick would help him after taking care of Han Shuo. He hadn't thought that the seasoned and well experienced Erick would die so quickly. Han Shuo was still standing there, having made not a move. This made Duke panic momentarily.

"What, you want to run? Do you think you can get away today?" After killing Erick, the original demon noticed that Duke's eyes were darting around. Han Shuo drew near to him with a shadow of a smile as he opened his mouth in mockery.

Duke's face suddenly grew frosty as his usually benevolent features twisted as he stared at Han Shuo, "You're seeking death!"

Many sharp shards of bone fragments on the ground suddenly shot towards Han Shuo as Duke waved his magic staff. The sound they made while shooting through the air was extremely ear piercing, and their momentum was quite frightening. When Emily saw that Han Shuo was under attack, she was even more nervous than Han Shuo as she hastily chanted a dark magic spell.

An inky black opening appeared out of thin air before these sharp bone fragments reached Han Shuo. When the bone fragments arrived, they were all attracted to the black opening and completely sucked in.

After releasing his attack, Duke didn't continue to attack, but rather hurtled his body towards the outside in an attempt to escape. It looked like he'd counted on Emily being concerned for Han Shuo. That's why he'd attacked Han Shuo so that Emily would save him, and then take advantage of the opportunity to run off.

However, it was easy to enter the cemetery of death, but quite difficult to leave. After the Eye of Darkness had revealed itself, it'd once again sank back into Han Shuo's space ring. Without the Eye of Darkness, even him, a wind archmage, would be unable to open the boundary.

He crashed headfirst into the boundary, and a large bang sounded out. A ball of green light flared out from the boundary as Duke was affected by its power. He was unable to maintain his levitation spell and fell from midair. Some broken pieces of bone happened to pierce his calves, stomach, and waist, causing immediate injury to his body.

"My condolences!" Han Shuo approached Duke with a cold smile as Emily and the little skeleton surrounded Duke. Han Shuo ripped the mask off his face and said, "Long time no see, benevolent Mister Duke!"

Duke, crying out painfully, immediately spoke with fear when he saw Han Shuo reveal his true face. "Why is it you? I remember that I once saw you in the Babylon Academy. Aren't you that necromancy student?"

Nodding, Han Shuo smiled sinisterly and said, "That's right, it's me." He then took out the Eye of Darkness and placed it on his palm, lighting it up. “The small errand boy, whose tracks you guys discovered last time, in the cemetery in the mountains at the back of the Academy, was also me. Heh heh, I was the one who gained the Eye of Darkness that Dylan buried in the ground. You guys didn’t think that I wouldn’t die, did you? It’s come full circle not too long afterwards!”

“So you were the one who obtained the Eye of Darkness! No wonder the boundary to the cemetery of death was opened after that light came from your body!” Duke spoke in sudden enlightenment.

Three more zombie warriors appeared, making it a total of four zombie warriors and one little skeleton. They walked slowly towards archmage Duke. Han Shuo raised his crossbow and took aim at Duke, Emily chanted a dark major spell, officially sealing Duke’s fate as the little skeleton’s seven bone spurs flew around in a dance.

When the seven bone spurs flew out, Duke used wind blades to rapidly defend against them all, but the approaching four zombie warriors and little skeleton made him feel quite troubled.

When Han Shuo’s crossbow had shot it, the bolt pierced through the hastily dodging Duke’s thigh and nailed him to the ground. Emily’s dark magic had already enclosed Duke before Han Shuo had taken out the Demonslayer Edge. Thick smoke rose up from Duke’s body in that instant as he became another set of stark white bones within the cemetery of death.

The little skeleton drew close to Duke and took off the space ring from the white bones of his hand. He handed it over to Han Shuo along with the pouch of the senior swordsman Erick.

Emily stared at the little skeleton with clear eyes and was dumbfounded for quite a while by the little skeleton’s motions. She finally couldn’t hold it in any longer and asked Han Shuo with an exceedingly high amount of curiosity, “Can you tell me what was up with that wondrous little skeleton?”

“Heh heh, nothing much. I refined it with a secret art. That’s why its performance is so wondrous!” Rubbing the little skeleton’s clean and smooth skullcap, Han Shuo smiled as he picked up the spoils of battle being offered up to him.

Emily glared fiercely at Han Shuo and said huffily, “Just how many more things are you hiding from me? Why do you have the Eye of Darkness and how come you’re able to refine such an amazing skeletal warrior? You’re just a small necromancer, yet you also have uncommon fighting techniques. Just what is going on here?”

Some things had to be explained at this moment. Han Shuo explained everything that had happened in the necromancy major, including the discovery of the cemetery of death, to Emily. However, he still didn’t mention anything with regards to refining the little skeleton and the magical yuan.

This conversation caused exceedingly great shock to Emily. As she contemplated silently, Han Shuo started searching through Duke’s and Erick’s things.

But after rifling for a while, Han Shuo discovered that Erick was one heck of a poor guy. There wasn’t anything valuable in his pouch. Duke should’ve had some interesting items on him, but he’d set up a magical boundary within his space ring and Han Shuo was completely unable to break it to obtain anything from inside.

After a while, Emily looked at Han Shuo with a grave face. “Does anyone else know that you’ve obtained the Eye of Darkness and that you can come and go from the cemetery of death, apart from you and me?”

“No one else knows.” Han Shuo looked at Emily and hesitated before asking, “What do you plan to do?”

“In that case, then we’ll continue to keep this secret. Duke and Erick are dead anyways, and the agent that the organization had sent to chase them is gone. No one else knows about this matter. Then, in the future, the cemetery of death is still your secret alone, the foundations for you to train your body to slowly control the Dark Forest.” Emily gazed deeply at Han Shuo as she spoke lowly.

Staring in stupefaction for a bit, Han Shuo smiled slightly and suddenly yanked Emily into his arms. He smiled, “You’re my woman alright, I thought you’d want me to offer the secret of the cemetery of death to the organization!”

Rolling her eyes in a display of ill temper at Han Shuo, Emily said, “Do you think I don’t know what you’re thinking? If you wanted to tell the organization about this secret, you would’ve done so a long time ago, why would you wait until now? I understand what the cemetery of death means to you, and it seems very important for your future development. We’re already like this now, I would naturally think for you.”

Han Shuo was really a bit touched upon hearing Emily’s words. He privately thought to himself that women were incomprehensible creatures alright. Once their bodies and hearts were captured, then all their previous resolutions would completely collapse. When she spoke these words, it meant that Emily had chosen to lean towards Han Shuo between the Dark Mantle and himself. If Han Shuo had any conflicts with the Dark Mantle in the future, it looked like Emily would be willing to make a stand against the Dark Mantle for Han Shuo.

“Right, you said that your goal this time was to investigate where those weapons had gone. I used the forest trolls to rob that batch of resources this time, will it affect your mission?” Seeing that Emily was thinking on his behalf, Han Shuo thought for a bit and suddenly recalled what Emily had mentioned last time, and so opened his mouth to ask her.

Smiling merrily for a bit, Emily looked soulfully at Han Shuo in the midst of his surprise. “You bad boy, you’re finally willing to think of my situation. How nice!”

Han Shuo was speechless as he thought back to prior events and discovered that he really had never thought on Emily’s behalf. He’d thought for himself from start to finish, and he now felt a bit embarrassed by her words. He laughed a bit awkwardly.

“Don’t worry too much about this matter, I actually had a fair guess of where these resources were going. I just wanted to catch him in the act so that he'd have nothing to say. Although these resources have been intercepted, many of the McGrady Guild's men have made it out. They'll surely think of a way to ransom back the siege weapons from the forest trolls."

"If anyone wants to purchase the siege weapons from the forest trolls, just let them handle the matters they usually would. You'd be doing me a great favor that way. When they obtain all their items, they'll still deliver it to my target. I'll arrest him then, and it won't affect the greater picture." Emily looked at Han Shuo and said with a smile.

Nodding, Han Shuo said, "No problem, I'll go back to the Empire and get my hands on some rations. I'll return to the Dark Forest after that. I'll go speak to the forest trolls so it won't impact your mission at all."

"Oh right, you can't open Duke's space ring either. So why not give it to me? I'll think of a way to break through the barrier and see just what's inside."

"Okay, you take it then." Han Shuo straightforwardly handed Duke's space ring over to Emily, and then suddenly remembered Yuna's pretty space ring from his previous encounter when that thought struck him. Yuna was only an adept mage. Theoretically, the boundary that she'd set up should be easily broken by Emily.

Therefore, he took out Yuna's space ring and gave it to Emily. "There's also a boundary placed within this space ring, but that person was only an adept mage. I think you should be able to break the barrier inside and see what's in it?"

Emily took the space ring without asking how Han Shuo obtained it, took a deep breath, and focused her concentration.

The jade green space ring suddenly lit up, and abruptly dimmed when a strong pulse of magic was felt. Breathing out slightly, a few items suddenly appeared in Emily's hand. There were some female personal effects, a crystal card, a book on water magic, and some medicine to treat injuries.

Staring at Han Shuo oddly, Emily asked, "To think you would be such a brutal person as to destroy a feminine flower. How did this woman die in your hands?”

Turning the items over after taking them from Emily, Han Shuo put away the jade green space ring when he discovered there wasn't anything valuable. He smiled, “A wanton woman betrayed me. I was so angry that I killed her. This is quite normal.”

“Pah! I don't believe you!” Emily said.

“Alright, I have two more days before I need to report to the organization. I must hurry and leave the cemetery of death. You already know my identity and origins, so we can temporarily leave this place. Go about your business first, whether you are going to report to the Dark Mantle or the Academy first, I think it'll be easy for me to find you. We should part ways here.” Han Shuo remembered that he had a ton of things to do and spoke to Emily.

“Alright, although you're a dishonest brat, it is indeed easy for me to find you. I'll ask you a final question, between Bryan and that weird name Han Shuo, which one should I call you by?” Emily asked.

“How about Han Shuo? This is the new name that the person who passed on the martial arts technique created for me. Call me that in the future!” Han Shuo thought for a moment and responded.

Nodding and saying nothing else, Han Shuo took Emily on a quick tour around the cemetery, and the two left via the transportation matrix amidst Emily's repeated exclamations of surprise.

Chapter 123: You didn't rob the giant dragon, did you?

After leaving the cemetery of death, Han Shuo and Emily went separate ways. Emily still had to accomplish her mission from her superiors and couldn't stay by Han Shuo's side.

He hadn't returned to the Babylon Academy in a while and he was rather missing Fanny. Except, the whole incident with Emily had happened, and this made Han Shuo a bit uncertain of how to face Fanny. He hesitated and didn't directly return to the Academy, rather walking to the Boozt Merchant Guild first.

Han Shuo had asked Phoebe to help look for items to refine an earth elite zombie. So much time had passed, it was time to ask if she was ready. There were also treasures that had come from the forest trolls' sacred land within his space ring that needed to be disposed of via Phoebe. Add to that the fact that he needed to prepare rations for the forest trolls and the dwarves, so he rather needed to make a trip to the Boozt Merchant Guild.

After experiencing the Grover incident, Phoebe had already grasped the reins of power at the Guild. After making a couple visits, those within the Guild were all familiar with Han Shuo.

When Han Shuo presented himself at the door this time, the guards sent him in directly. When he walked towards the living room, Han Shuo suddenly heard the sounds of Fabian lecturing someone in a room, "Your father spent gold coins to help you enter the Guild, so you must work hard! Otherwise, with my position in the Guild, I won't be able to protect you."

"Understood, uncle." Another voice that Han Shuo was familiar with responded honestly.

When this voice sounded, Han Shuo's body sped up in surprise. When he arrived at the door to the room, he pushed the door open without knocking because he was so agitated, giving Fabian a shock. He immediately cried out, “Who dares to trespass in my territory!”

“It’s me, Mister Fabian.” Han Shuo laughed lightly and walked in with great strides.

When he heard Han Shuo’s voice, Fabian heaved a sigh of relief and walked out chuckling from the room. He said, “So you’ve come, heh heh, are you here to come see our Miss Phoebe again?”

Another fat and chubby body quickly dashed out of the house. When he saw Han Shuo, he cried out with unexpected surprise. “Bryan, how come it’s you! How come you’re in the Boozt Merchant Guild as well? Heh heh, are you a member of the Guild as well? We can be colleagues again?”

Little fatty Jack’s body had grown a bit taller, but his weight seemed to have increased even faster. When he rushed out of the house with large strides, the ground sounded with thumps.

“Long time no see Jack! How come you’re with the Guild?” Han Shuo was also quite happy to see Jack again. Little fatty Jack was the closest friend that Han Shuo had met after arriving at the Academy. When Han Shuo gave him a sum of money last time, he thought he’d never see Jack again. Who would’ve thought that the two would see each other again after not too long had past.

“You two know each other?” Fabian was a bit taken aback as he looked at Jack and then at Han Shuo.

Nodding, Han Shuo smiled as he explained, “When I was in the Academy, I was an errand boy with Jack. Heh heh, not only do we know each other, but our relationship is quite good.”

“Yes uncle, Bryan is quite amazing. Who would’ve thought that I’d run into him here?” Jack said, delighted.

“Mister Fabian, I’d like to catch up with your nephew. I’ll go meet Miss Phoebe later! Please pass that along for me!” Han Shuo said to Fabian with a smile.

Han Shuo had saved Fabian and Phoebe’s lives, and had brought a great deal of business with him the last couple of times. This made Fabian long since view Han Shuo as a person of great fortune. When he heard Han Shuo speak thus, he immediately agreed and winked at Jack, as if hinting something to Jack.

It was a pity that the excited Jack didn't discover his uncle's hints, but rather, the more mature and experienced Han Shuo saw it all clearly and laughed ceaselessly in his heart.

When Fabian left, Han Shuo immediately asked, "Jack, how did you come to the Boozt Merchant Guild?"

"When you gave me the gold coins. I left the Academy. When I returned home, I didn't know what to do and helped my father butcher cows and sheep. I saw that things were difficult at home, so I secretly exchanged the gold coins you gave me into bits and pieces and gave them to my father, but he discovered my secret in the end, so I told him I found a bag of gold coins on the streets."

"My father felt that I couldn't always be a butcher, and so he took half of the gold coins to find my uncle Fabian to ask him to let me help in the Guild. I'm learning bookkeeping from someone, and that's how things are. Right, why are you in the Guild? I see that my uncle seems to have a lot of respect for you, what's going on here?" Jack looked at Han Shuo with surprise and asked in confusion.

Han Shuo said something random and fobbed Jack off with them. Han Shuo and Jack chatted for a while. From Jack's expression and words, Han Shuo felt that he was actually quite happy to work for the Guild. So he decided to help Jack a bit and was prepared to say something to Phoebe. He felt that Phoebe would at least give him this face.

No wonder he was happy to stay here. When he was an errand boy in the Academy before, not only did Jack have to work day and night, but he was often bullied by other students and errand boys. His days weren't too comfortable. Now that he was in the Guild, he had the protection of someone like Fabian, who worked at Phoebe's side. At least no one dared do anything to him. Compared to the backbreaking work of an errand boy, the material he was now learning was much more interesting. No wonder

Jack liked it here.

They talked for quite a while until Fabian came to rush Han Shuo, telling him that Miss Phoebe was waiting for him. Han Shuo then patted Jack's shoulder, saying with a smile, "Then I'll be going. Since you're within the Guild, we'll have plenty of chances to meet in the future."

"Alright, you go about your business. Come see me whenever you have the chance! Although I'm doing well here, I don't have that many friends."

"Mm, I know."

After leaving Fabian's room, Han Shuo's sensitive ears immediately heard Fabian and Jack's conversation. Fabian was telling Jack to build a good relationship with Han Shuo, saying that Han Shuo was a person of great fortune, etc.

Phoebe was still stunning as usual. A well-tailored, form fitting green robe even more fully offset her tall, slender, and uncommon demeanor. Faint blush powdered onto her cheeks displayed their clean smoothness, with a hint of red blush hidden within them. Her bright eyes were embedded into a face that seemed a work of art, appearing completely perfect and flawless.

"You've disappeared for almost a month, what do you plan on talking about this time?" The surrounding maids had long since left as Phoebe sat within the hall, holding a cup of tea within her hands and leisurely sipping it. She flicked a noncommittal glance at Han Shuo and delivered her words faintly.

"I've only been gone for a month, but why does Miss Phoebe look even more beautiful?" Han Shuo spoke truly. When he'd seen Phoebe before, she'd never purposefully dressed up, but this, time, she'd noticeably put on some makeup, and her beauty truly had been enhanced a bit in Han Shuo's eyes.

When these words were spoken, Phoebe's eyes lit up as the faint red on her cheeks slowly spread out. A happy curve traced her lips as she said in a soft, gentle voice, "You've grown more glib in the month that I haven't seen you."

Laughing heartily, Han Shuo walked in front of Phoebe and took the teapot and cup from in front of Phoebe, pouring himself a cup and taking a sip before saying, "Before we chat about serious matters, I hope you can do me a favor. Help my friend advance a bit."

Phoebe wasn't surprised to hear that, and her translucent chin nodded lightly twice. She said in a quiet and beautiful voice, "I heard from Fabian just now. Who would've thought that you'd be friends with the fatty? Heh heh, he's such an honest person and has you as a friend?"

Breaking out into laughter, Han Shuo scratched his head, "With your words, am I not honest enough?"

"Humph! If you counted as honest, then there'd be no people who don't abide by the rules in this world. I remember all the bad things you've done to me, how dare you say that you're honest?" Phoebe rolled her eyes in a pretty way as she bit off her words while glaring at Han Shuo.

Abruptly taking in a sip of tea to hide his awkwardness, Han Shuo said awkwardly, "Don't mention what's in the past! You still haven't agreed to help me take care of Jack!"

"No problem, I'll take good care of him for you. It's easy to help you with a small matter like this, but the other matter is a bit trickier." Phoebe said a bit thoughtfully.

Starting, Han Shuo looked askance at Phoebe, asking, "What's tricky?"

"About the materials you asked me to buy for you," Phoebe thought for a moment and opened her mouth to speak.

The refinement of the earth elite zombie was something that Han Shuo felt imperative he wanted to complete. When he heard Phoebe said that she'd run into some trouble, Han Shuo immediately felt a bit worried. He hastily asked, "What trouble? Is it that your Guild can't find those materials?"

Shaking her head, Phoebe's painted eyebrow creased slightly as she sighed lowly, "With our Guild's abilities, if these items exist in the world, then we'll be able to get our hands on it as long as someone can afford the price. I had thought that the items wouldn't be that expensive, but who would've thought that after careful inquiry, I'd discover that all those unknown items would all be at an exorbitant price."

"According to my calculations, all these materials added together would need at least thirty thousand gold coins. Although I hold the power within the Guild, but I've just become the head and don't have the authority to completely mask such a large transaction for you, because each transaction will leave behind a record."

Han Shuo had been a bit worried when he heard her say she'd run into troubles, but now that he saw that it was due to the price, he rather breathed a sigh of relief. The current Han Shuo could be short on other things, but he had so many gold coins that he couldn't take them all with him at any given time. When he heard Phoebe say that the problems resulted from pricing, he immediately smiled.

"What are you smiling about? I know you've got some savings in your hands, but thirty thousand gold coins isn't a small amount. I can privately put together ten thousand for you, but I can't access my father's savings before I'm 25, so I can only take out so much. Why are you still laughing? I'm talking about serious matters!" Phoebe was frowning and trying to think of a plan for Han Shuo, but he was smiling and laughing as if nothing was the matter. This made Phoebe feel a bit irate.

"Right, how old are you now?" Han Shuo halted and asked Phoebe.

Her face reddening, Phoebe appeared a bit shy. She hesitated, and then snuck a glance at Han Shuo with a bashful expression, "23, you?"

"17!" Han Shuo said.

Phoebe's face whitened and she appeared a bit panicked. She hastily cried out, "Who are you kidding? Do you talk and look like a seventeen year old?"

Han Shuo only remembered that he'd already been 24 when he'd possessed Bryan's body. Bryan had originally been thin and small, but now looked completely like an adult after the reforging from the magical yuan. Add to that his original way of speech and experiences, he didn't look like a seventeen year old no matter how one cut it.

Thinking for a while, Han Shuo finally chuckled, "I'm kidding, I'm 24."

Phoebe noticeably heaved a sigh of relief when she heard these words and then laughed wryly at Han Shuo, "Don't think of using me to make a plan. There's still two more years until I'm 25. I don't think you can wait two more years. Let's think of another plan."

A smile still hanging on his lips, Han Shuo blew a breath of air at the space ring and rubbed it with his fingers. Blocks of gold and all sorts of jewels, jade, and precious gems appeared one after another within the hall. In that instant, the hall was filled with the luster from the jewels as all sorts of dazzling, opulent splendor made the hall extremely luxurious and extravagant.

"Is this enough?" Han Shuo looked at Phoebe, who'd sunk into a dumbfounded state, and asked merrily.

The riches within the hall had come from many years of forest troll looting. When he took them all from the space ring and piled them in front of Phoebe, it did indeed cause a huge shock to her.

"Heart of the Blue Ocean, Sierra Leone Jade, the Mudanee Necklace, King Finley's Crown..." Phoebe's stunning face was full of shock as her slender fingers rifled through the jewels that had appeared. She murmured these amazing names in a low voice.

After a while, Phoebe took in a few breaths in a row, finally looking deeply at Han Shuo and asking, "A lot of missing treasures are here. You didn't rob a giant dragon, did you?"

Shaking his head with a low laugh, Han Shuo said, "Don't ask how I obtained these items, just tell me if they're enough for me to exchange for the materials I requested?"

"Eh... I temporarily can't estimate the value of these goods, but I think their value will definitely exceed thirty thousand gold coins." Phoebe's clear eyes still stared firmly at Han Shuo as she slowly responded.

Nodding, Han Shuo said straightforwardly, "Good, these items are showy but not substantial, they don't have much value for me. Collect them all and dispose of them for me at a reasonable price. I need the materials that I mentioned earlier. In addition, please purchase another space ring for me, I'd like to take the rations from last time with me."

"With so many treasures, aren't you afraid that I'll list some random price that disadvantages you?" Phoebe looked at Han Shuo and stared for a bit, a trace of a faint smile blossoming on her lips as she asked him.

"I believe that you won't!" Han Shuo smiled. "I'll visit again in a few days, I hope the items I need will be ready then."

"Stay for lunch." Phoebe nodded and hesitated, suddenly saying lightly when she saw that Han Shuo was about to leave after leaving the treasures behind.

Han Shuo felt a bit strange when he heard these words, but Phoebe truly could help him with a great deal of things right now. Although he had a lot of things to handle at the moment, the time it took to eat a meal wasn't that long either. Therefore, he decisively nodded and agreed to it.

The location of lunch was near the artificial mountains where Phoebe and Han Shuo had once crushed themselves into. This place had been redecorated now and all sorts of expensive flowers and grass had been planted in the surroundings. The branches and leaves of some green and luxuriant, soft plants were entwined around the stone pillars of the little pavilion. It looked quite charming.

Han Shuo continuously felt a bit uncomfortable as he sat at the table within the little pavilion, after the maids had filled it with food and wine. His eyes kept drifting to the crack in the artificial mountain that he'd squeezed into with Phoebe as he kept recalling what had happened here.

Phoebe rather looked quite comfortable, and she didn't seem to pay any attention to that area at all. She waved her hand and dismissed all the maids and guards, hospitably encouraging Han Shuo to drink wine and tea. This change in attitude made Han Shuo feel uncomfortable.

After eating and drinking, although Han Shuo wouldn't get drunk thanks to the magical yuan, now that he'd tasted the wonders of women, he kept recalling the time that he'd taken advantage of Phoebe, for some reason. His serious and professional glances at Phoebe were suffused with another meaning at some unknown point.

Phoebe observed Han Shuo's changes, and whether it was because of the sweet wine, her cheeks became even more reddened and beautiful. As her chilly facade retreated, Phoebe's charms continued to increase rapidly, making Han Shuo across the table from her panic inwardly and think random thoughts.

Chapter 124: We haven't even slept together!

"Why are you looking at me like that?" Phoebe drank another cup of translucent and clear red wine that sparkled with a wondrous light. She flicked a glance at Han Shuo as she said lowly.

"No... nothing much." Han Shuo panicked and he stammered a bit.

"Then why are you drooling?" Phoebe pointed at the corner of Han Shuo's mouth as she lightly laughed playfully.

He touched his chin and discovered that there really was some trace of water on his chin. Han Shuo said awkwardly, "Eh, that isn't drool. It's wine, it's really wine."

"Oh." Phoebe smiled delightedly, "So it's wine. How is it possible that you'd miss some even when drinking wine? How interesting."

He kept feeling that the atmosphere was a bit odd. Han Shuo felt very comfortable at heart as he listened to Phoebe's soft and gentle words. His mind kept making connections as his eyes once again involuntarily drifted to the crack in the artificial mountain.

"It's only been a short time since we started eating, and you've already glanced to the left at the crack in the artificial mountain nine times. Just what is there that deserves your attention?" Phoebe's beautiful eyes darted around and landed on Han Shuo's body as she said lightly.

Panicking inwardly, Han Shuo blurted out, "How do you know that I kept glancing at that area, and that I've done so nine times?"

These words made Phoebe's face even redder. She tsk'ed lightly and said lowly, "You've been looking around shiftily. Sitting in front of you, of course I saw everything. I know what bad thoughts you were harboring when you looked there."

"Then what bad thoughts would you say I've been thinking?" After what he'd just gone through, Han Shuo suddenly felt that he was a bit too passive. A demonic practitioner was unafraid of all conventions and was most at ease when he did what was on his mind, no matter what others would think or say. When he suddenly understood this, Han Shuo no longer wildly casted around surreptitious glances, but rather stared directly at Phoebe and asked her with a smile.

Phoebe started as the red blush on her cheeks slowly spread down her slender, white neck. She stuttered and stammered, but didn't say anything with her reddened face. Her affectedly bashful face was even more ill at ease than Han Shuo had been earlier.

Seeing Phoebe like this, Han Shuo gave a happy laugh, feeling that the depressing passivity from earlier was completely swept away. He said merrily, "Who would've thought that Miss Phoebe would care so much about me? You've even noted how many times I glanced over. I'm truly overwhelmed by your favor."

"Oh shut up Bryan, I've discovered that you're full of bad thoughts. Looks like I'll receive the short end of the stick whenever I do business with you in the future." Phoebe flew into a rage and glared fiercely at Han Shuo, complaining as she did so.

When Phoebe said this, Han Shuo suddenly remembered the matter having to do with the McGrady Guild. The humor on his face was immediately replaced with seriousness as he asked Phoebe, "Talking of business suddenly reminds me of something. You mentioned the McGrady Guild last time and said that they were your competition, right?"

Phoebe was a bit surprised that Han Shuo had suddenly mentioned this, and she looked at him, taken aback. Phoebe nodded and responded, "That's right, the McGrady Guild belongs to the Brut Merchant alliance and have been doing a lot of business in our Lancelot Empire lately. The items they transport do not travel through the towns of the Empire and thus they don't need to pay customs taxes to the Empire. When their goods arrive, they can keep their prices low and thus impact our Guild's business a bit as well."

Smiling faintly, Han Shuo said, "Not going through the proper channels can indeed result in large profits, there are particularly huge, even frightening profits to be made in the industries forbidden by the Empire. The McGrady Guild is quite daring to act and risk a lot.”

“Why are you suddenly mentioning the McGrady Guild?” Phoebe looked at Han Shuo with confusion as she asked him.

“I have a friend in the Dark Forest with a rather particular profession. He robbed the McGrady Guild entourage lately and came by many luxury items. He wants me to get rid of them. I wonder if I can do that through you?”

“Being a robber is a robber, what particular profession? There are all sorts of robbers within the Dark Forest, there’s nothing strange about that. Heh heh, the McGrady Guild wouldn’t dare pass through the Empire’s cities because they want to avoid the high customs taxes. However, this naturally increases their risk of danger, but their McGrady Guild has private guards, and therefore, very few robbers are blind enough to make a move against them. Your friend is quite something to be able to rob them.”

“Of course. So, do you dare accept goods from the McGrady Guild?”

“Our Guild will accept everything as long as it’s not siege weapons. I’ve heard that the Empire is investigating this area rather closely recently. Forget it if it’s siege weapons.”

Han Shuo remembered the matter that Emily had mentioned when Phoebe spoke, and he seemed to catch a vague hint of something. However, Han Shuo had long since promised Emily the batch of war resources. He’d only planned on selling to Phoebe the goods used by nobles, and so he had no particular concerns.

“Be at peace, I wouldn’t make life difficult for you. I’ve eaten well today and will come by in a few days to come find you again. Help me take care of my matters as soon as possible if you can.” Han Shuo comforted Phoebe and stood up, preparing to take his leave.

Seeing that Han Shuo was about to leave, Phoebe hesitated and then said with a bit of difficulty, “I actually have a favor to ask as well.”

Looking at Phoebe in baffled surprise, Han Shuo asked, "What is it?"

"I need to attend a banquet in five days time. If I appear alone, some annoying people may bother me. I'd like for you to come with me and act as my boyfriend like last time." Phoebe looked a bit shyly at Han Shuo and said lightly.

A rueful smile on his face, Han Shuo shook his head, "Forget it, I don't want to be your shield again. If I trigger someone else's jealousy and they come at me from the darkness, I'll be in some danger. Why don't you find someone else?"

"No!" Phoebe shouted, and then explained with a wry expression, "I've previously introduced you to the founding elders in the Guild. If I suddenly change to someone else within a month, they'll say I have loose morals! This absolutely won't do."

Han Shuo was still hesitant and appeared a bit ill at ease. Phoebe stared at Han Shuo, and then pouted. "If someone doesn't agree, then I won't be serious about my business either. It will be very normal if the thing that I promised him is delayed by ten days or half a month."

This was what Han Shuo didn't want to see. He had no choice but to nod after Phoebe's words and say, "Then alright, as long as you don't think I'm embarrassing you then."

"There we go, how could you allow someone else to take me to the banquet? What if they take advantage of me, wouldn't you be worried?" A faint smile reappeared on Phoebe's face when she saw Han Shuo agree.

"Then aren't you afraid that I'll take advantage of you?" Han Shuo rolled his eyes at Phoebe and said bad temperedly.

When he said these words, Phoebe's beautiful face flushed again, and she turned her head away, too shy to look at Han Shuo. She said lowly, "No, you've already taken all the advantage you can."

Han Shuo's heart lurched as he looked at the redness of Phoebe's neck and ears, and in a curious coincidence, blurted out, "Not all. We haven't even slept together!"

Han Shuo immediately reacted and swiftly walked towards the outside before Phoebe had a chance to speak. He hastily said, "I'll be going now that I'm full. I'll come by five days later."

"You rubbish talking villain!" Phoebe hadn't thought that Han Shuo would say such things and immediately flew into a rage. She cursed at Han Shuo's fleeing back and only broke out into a low laugh when his body sped up and vanished. "Damnit, how dare he say that to me. Huh, he's getting bolder and bolder."

It was just past noon after leaving the Boozt Merchant Guild. Since the last time he'd reported into the Dark Mantle, it was almost a month. Thus, after seeing the time, Han Shuo hired a carriage and set off for the Dark Mantle's stronghold.

When he was a street away, Han Shuo disembarked and released the three original demons to survey the surroundings, walking to the manor on foot.

"Boss, you're finally here! I've been counting the days and knew that you would come and report soon. Therefore, I purposefully swapped shifts with others and have been waiting here to bring you into the organization's interior." The bandit Chester squirmed out from inside when Han Shuo arrived and said lowly with excitement.

"Eh, why are you calling me boss?" Han Shuo looked oddly at Chester and asked him with confusion.

"I'll follow you in the future, and I hope that you'll give me tips and pointers. Of course I need to express my respect towards you." Chester said matter-of-factly towards Han Shuo.

"This title doesn't sound very nice, let's just go by our given names. Heh heh, but don't you worry. If there are any good missions, I'll ask to bring you along as well." Han Shuo said.

After receiving Han Shuo's promise, Chester appeared overjoyed and brought Han Shuo inside with passion and excitement. He chattered away non stop, asking where Han Shuo had been during this time, and if he'd gone out on any missions.

Han Shuo carelessly responded to Chester's questions and walked slowly into the internals of the Dark Mantle organization. There was no surprise for him this time, and he walked with an air of familiarity directly towards Candide's room.

"Ooh, you really are here. I thought Emily was lying to me." Candide sat in a shadowy corner and was examining something in a magical flask. He didn't raise his head when Han Shuo came in.

Han Shuo hadn't anticipated that Emily would mention him, and was a bit surprised. He didn't know what Emily had said to Candide, and thus stood there silently.

After a while, Candide put away the flask in his hands, finally speaking with his never-changing sinister face, "Emily said she happened to bump into you in the Dark Forest and rather admired your style and competency. I was quite surprised. I hadn't thought that Emily, with her high standards, would speak so highly of you. It looks like there truly are some unique things about you."

No shit, Emily's my woman, of course she'd say good things about me. Han Shuo thought with pride, but maintained his usual expression on his face. He opened his mouth to say, "It's been one month since my last mission. I've come to report in as per the rules and see if there are any other missions."

The Dark Mantle usually didn't interfere in personal matters, thus Han Shuo didn't go into detail about how he and Emily had met. Since Emily had already spoken of it, she surely would've concealed all that had to be concealed. As long as Han Shuo didn't give anything away, nothing would happen at all.

Nodding, Candide said, "Emily gave you a round of compliments and said that she wanted you to complete the mission in her hands with her. You'll share the rewards and honor together then. What do you think? You're one of mine. Emily won't be able to make use of you without your agreement, but if you agree, then it's another matter entirely."

With Han Shuo and Emily's relationship now, there was naturally no reason not to agree. Not to mention Emily needed to get the resources out of the forest trolls through Han Shuo for her mission. He had already become unwittingly embroiled in all this. If this became a mission that he could benefit from, then it'd be even better.

“No problem, I'm willing to complete the mission with her.” Han Shuo didn't hesitate and nodded in agreement. He paused and said, “The bandit who brought me in, Chester, is quite smart. Can he join as well?”

“The mission is Emily's, it's up to her if she needs another person. You can ask her directly.” Candide said faintly, paused and then said, “Emily is Amyes' sister by blood. Her status within the Dark Mantle isn't low. It will be good for you to interact more with her. However, Emily's identity within reality is a bit mysterious. Keep an eye out, don't give others any gossip to talk about.”

Amyes was one of the three heavyweights of the Dark Mantle and was in charge of surveillance and investigation of all nobles and officials. He was a character within the Dark Mantle who was hugely active in the political scene, and one who held great power in his hands. To think that Emily was his sister by blood.

In addition, Candide seemed to be alluding to something else about Emily's other identity. This made Han Shuo a bit surprised, unsure of the meaning within his words.

“Looks like you didn't know all this, let this be a reminder to be careful. Mm. This will be all. She's already pulled your information to peruse and will be able to find you easily. Come find me after you complete the mission with her.” Candide said as he looked at Han Shuo.

Chapter 125: I'm damn good aren't I?

When he left the Dark Mantle, Han Shuo left some instructions with Chester, telling him to wait here for news.

When he walked out of the Dark Mantle headquarters, Han Shuo didn't linger and returned to the Academy. When he was about to arrive, he disembarked from his carriage and went to the graveyard in the mountains behind the Academy, entering the tomb that went to the cemetery of death.

He didn't return to the cemetery of death, but rather rubbed his space ring and took out the Fruit of Dagmar that was shaped like a human brain. Han Shuo had sealed the three fruits in special containers. When he took it out, he took a good look and discovered that this Fruit of Dagmar didn't have a remarkable appearance, and it looked rather ugly.

Taking a deep breath in, Han Shuo sat down cross legged, hesitated, and swallowed the Fruit of Dagmar that was a bit larger than the size of a fist. It tasted a bit bitter and was tough to chew. It tasted really bad compared to normal, ordinary fruit.

When Han Shuo had completely swallowed the Fruit of Dagmar, he immediately circulated his magical yuan and slowly started concentrating it towards the back of his brain.

Nothing abnormal happened as first, but Han Shuo slowly felt something was different after some time had passed. Swirls of strange energy emanated from his stomach and bubbled up from his lower abdomen, spinning as they moved to the brain.

The strange energy within these swirls was accompanied by a pain that pierced into his bone marrow. Even Han Shuo, with his resolute tenacity and willpower, felt it was a bit tough to endure. When these bubbles of strange energy made it to Han Shuo's brain, his mind shuddered greatly, as if a hundred bombs were exploding at the same time. The sounds of explosions rocketed through his brain.

Bone piercing pain accompanied the violent explosions in his head.

When his brain had been opened up by the magical yuan, the perceptiveness of his five senses greatly increased. Han Shuo could feel that the folds on the left and right sides of his brain was suffused with the power within this swirls.

It was a bit similar to when Han Shuo had expanded his meridians. Because of the effects of the Fruit of Dagmar, Han Shuo's brain was being developed bit by bit. This process was mysterious and strange. Even Han Shuo didn't know what had happened as he succumbed under the painful process.

If it'd been anyone else going through such strong stimulation of their brain. They would basically immediately turn into an idiot or a madman. This was because the brain was the most complex thing in the world. Any abnormalities within it could immediately trigger changes that upended the heavens and earth.

This kind of bone achingly deep pain that seeped into a person's heart would be enough to immediately make a normal person lose their mind and never recover from it. Even Han Shuo, someone with extreme mental strength and the protection of the magical yuan, suffered greatly throughout this process, under the effects of the Fruit of Dagmar. Any other bystander would've only faced death in front of them.

His entire body trembling, Han Shuo was raining sweat as he sat there cross legged. He hadn't screamed himself hoarse in a long time, but these screams once again erupted uncontrollably from his mouth. Finally in the end, the place that Han Shuo was sitting on was soaked with sweat, and his hoarse screams slowly became weaker and his lips trembled like the rest of his body.

He remained in this position for a long time as Han Shuo lay there stiffly within the drenched soil, sinking into a coma in that instant.

After who knew how long, Han Shuo slowly woke up. When he came to himself, he felt that his head hurt so much that it was about to split open, and that his body ached all over. He raised his head and shifted his body. When he looked upwards, Han Shuo's heart was immediately filled with delight.

Within the gloom of the tomb, Han Shuo could clearly see even the smallest of the patterns within the stone slabs a few meters over his head. Although Han Shuo's original vision had been quite clear, the feeling was even more marvelous now, and he barely believed his own eyes in that moment.

When he'd carefully observed the four corners and discovered that he could see anything within the dusk of the tomb as long as he concentrated, Han Shuo's astonishment grew even greater. It was as if his eyes had transformed into a magnifying glass. If he slowly concentrated on something a few meters away, the distance would seem to slowly decrease. The originally small dot would be slowly enhanced, with him finally catching an eyeful of unparalleled clarity in the end.

This kind of feeling was quite marvelous and Han Shuo knew that this was absolutely due to the effects of the Fruit of Dagmar. If it wasn't for the fact that one couldn't eat the fruit repeatedly, Han Shuo really wanted to swallow the other two whole as well. In a frenzy of joy, Han Shuo sat down and meditated for a bit. He found that the concentration and circulation speed of his mental strength had indeed greatly increased.

In this regard, when Han Shuo meditated, he would obtain mental strength at an increased rate. When he used magic to fight against others, the recovery rate of his mental strength from meditation after it'd been exhausted would be vastly greater than the ordinary person's. This meant that whether in terms of training or battle, Han Shuo would be able to operate at a much faster tempo than ordinary mages.

In his great joy, Han Shuo didn't linger in this place. Now that he felt his mental strength had increased, Han Shuo decided to advance to the next step of necromancy magic. Han Shuo had only been able to fully grasp and skillfully employ several novice necromancy magics until now.

With the increase of his mental strength, Han Shuo was confident that he could achieve another breakthrough. It looked like it wouldn't be a difficult thing to graduate from the necromancy major as an adept mage in a short period of time.

Han Shuo had studied some of the intermediate necromancy magics for a while in the days when he was injured. There were still a few theories that he wasn't fully clear on. Now that he'd returned to the Academy, it looked like it was time to find Fanny for some answers.

When he crawled out of the tomb, the sky was brightening over a silvery world. There'd actually been a huge snowfall, and the snow covered everything. It was a snow white world as far the eyes could see.

As the harsh, chilly wind blew, Han Shuo's already sweaty and wet body felt a bit cold. Han Shuo took off his damp clothes in this cold, snowy place and faced this silvery world with a naked body.

The range of his vision had greatly increased as he looked out across the world. If it was said that Han Shuo's eyes had the function of a magnifying glass within the tomb, then his eyes seemed to have the function of a pair of binoculars as he walked out of the tomb and looked out. His vision expanded endlessly, taking in even the sights in the distance.

His eyes alighted on several nearby trees. They all appeared incredibly clear, and it was so amazing that Han Shuo almost wanted to whistle loudly in appreciation.

Although Han Shuo's current body wasn't afraid of changing seasons, in order not to appear too out of the ordinary, he still took out some new, thicker clothes from within his space ring and wrapped up his naked body, proceeding towards the necromancy major.

All the landmarks had their own flavor to them beneath the cover of the thick snow. His various memories with Fanny kept resurfacing in his mind as Han Shuo walked over, but every time he thought of his current relationship with Emily, Han Shuo felt a bit shy about facing Fanny.

When he arrived at the dark major, earth shattering yells immediately traveled into Han Shuo's ears. They were filled with excitement and fervor, as if some grand party was being held.

Han Shuo was astonished as he didn't know what was going on. There were a lot of buildings in the way on his way to the dark major, so he couldn't use his amazing vision to see anything. The distance of several hundred meters would be covered quickly, so he felt no need to release the original demons. Therefore, he picked up the pace and walked over quickly.

There were many students and teachers occupying the enormous square. There were dark and necromancy major students within, as well as the students and teachers from other majors. There were even a few knights and swordsmen mixed in, and it was all very exciting.

The enormous square appeared a bit crowded after taking in a hundred people. Many students on the outside were trying to push their way inside with all their strength. There were also a few dirty and depraved fellows staring at some female students and putting the weight of their bodies on the female students, eliciting a round of light screams and yells.

When he arrived here, Han Shuo had planned on releasing the original demons for surveillance, but felt strong magical pulses in the area. It looked like a magical boundary had been set up inside. If he accidentally had the original demons crash into the magical boundary and gave rise to attention from other people, that would be a bit unfavorable.

Therefore, he hesitated only a little bit and didn't release the original demons. He used his strong body to shove his way inside.

Several thunder mages glared at Han Shuo angrily beneath his shoving and pushing, and Han Shuo paid them no heed and ignored them, ramming them aside. Their fragile and thin bodies were a far cry from Han Shuo's, and they were shoved aside as Han Shuo's actions blazed a path for him.

His extraordinary senses were of use now. Han Shuo spied Lisa up ahead and immediately shoved aside those next to him, squirming his way towards Lisa. He was subjected to frowns and low curses along the way.

When he came near to Lisa, Han Shuo saw an exceedingly shiftY swordsman look hungrily at Lisa's now well rounded chest. He was attempting to get closer to Lisa and take advantage of her. Now that Han Shuo was inside, he finally discovered that the magical boundary that had been set up was for the magical battle that was taking place inside. No wonder it had drawn a lot of attention.

Lisa was giving the fascinating battle inside her full attention, and would cry out excitedly every now and then. Amy and Athena, at her side, were just as excited, and weren't paying any attention to the looks of those around her.

The swordsman had finally made it next to Lisa. He was taking in his fill of Lisa's chest and licking his lips as he approached, wanting to take advantage of her in the crush.

Bam! Han Shuo suddenly appeared midway and body slammed the approaching swordsman, pushing him into a group of male thunder mages. He was subject to a round of abuse and curses.

Han Shuo, smiling merrily, flashed a proud grin at the swordsman who'd finally regained his footing. He then leisurely stood next to Lisa and purposefully pushed his way forward a bit, placing himself at Lisa's back.

The swordsman had been about to get what he wanted when Han Shuo had thrown him for this loop. He displayed an angry and depressed expression, flipping Han Shuo off from the distance and mouthing the words, "You cut in line!"

Shrugging, Han Shuo had a proud look on his face and also slowly mouthed the words back, "So what?"

Rolling his eyes, the swordsman was a bit resigned. His shifty eyes spun in a circle as he planned on finding another target. At this moment, Lisa's elbow suddenly shot back swiftly and suddenly attacked Han Shuo's chest, catching him unawares.

However, this level of attack had absolutely no effect when it landed on Han Shuo. The swordsman on the other side however, immediately revealed an expression that delighted in the misfortune of others, and he looked at Han Shuo with an eager expression, hoping to see him get in trouble.

“Huh! Another blind idiot coming over to take advantage, how irritating!” Lisa’s impatient low growl sounded out, and she then twisted her head to angrily look over, but when she saw that it was Han Shuo, she immediately revealed a surprised and happy expression and hastily asked, “Eh, you’ve come back? Um... I didn’t know it was you, did I hurt you just now?”

Seeing the fellow across from him wanting to delight in his misfortunes, Han Shuo immediately pretended to rub his chest and displayed a pained expression. Lisa was greatly shocked and frantically reached out with her small hand, rubbing Han Shuo’s chest, because this place was already crowded, Lisa’s movement basically made her flush against Han Shuo’s chest.

The swordsman, who’d been ready to watch Han Shuo go down, was flabbergasted when he saw the situation develop. Han Shuo had a proud smile on his face and he mouthed to the swordsman, “Aren’t I awesome?”

The swordsman didn’t say anything else and stuck up his thumb at Han Shuo, indicating that, damn you’re good. I’m in awe. He then turned his head and set his sights on another girl, pushing through once again. It looked like he was trying to see if he had the same luck as Han Shuo.

By now, Han Shuo could fully see the fight within the square. He kept one eye on the battle between the dark major students and the light major students, and searched for traces of Fanny within the crowd.

Chapter 126: I want to battle

The Academy would hold a competition every winter between all the majors according to tradition. The victor would gain rich rewards, and this was used to spur the students to study even harder.

This was when the Academy was bustling the most as the majors competed not only for rewards, but also for the face of their major and teachers. Even the future of their teachers were closely tied to these battles.

Therefore, all the majors would send out their strongest students at this time every year to take part in the fighting. This was both for the students' own benefit, and for the face and future status of the teachers within the Academy.

Chapter originally published on volaretranslations. If you're not reading this chapter on volareTL, then it has been stolen without the translator's permission.

The dark major and light major had always been hated rivals. Open conflict and veiled struggles between the two majors had waged on for many years. The battle between the dark and light major was to determine who would win the title of the strongest major. This was why it'd attracted so many observers.

An enormous magic shield had enclosed the entire square, allowing combatants to battle to their hearts contents without causing injury to anyone. There were five participants from both the dark and light majors, and a fine show was being put on the stage.

If you're not reading this on volaretranslations, then this is a pirated copy of the chapter.

Han Shuo's gaze wandered around, finally resting on Fanny, who was sitting in the back corner of the row of teachers sitting at the front stage. Their section was raised, and the teachers from all majors were sitting there. The dean was also sitting there quite primly. It looked like everyone was placing great importance on this time's demonstration.

“Is anyone from our necromancy major part of the team?” Han Shuo started after Lisa had explained the situation for him, and opened his mouth to ask her.

If you're not reading this on volaretranslations, then this is a pirated copy of the chapter.

Shaking her head, Lisa said, “Our necromancy major is an offshoot of the dark major. The dark major teachers and students were awfully afraid that we'd be a burden to them, so they didn't count us in for this time's demonstration at all. Therefore, it's only students from the dark major being involved from beginning to end, and there's nothing to do with our necromancy major.”

“So that's the case. Who do you think will win between the light and dark major this time?” Han Shuo stared at the two groups within the square and asked carelessly.

“Not sure. The dark and light major have always been the two strongest majors within the Academy. After all these years, the two majors have been trading the title of strongest major back and forth. No major has been able to win consecutively. The dark major won last year, but the captain that led the team last year has already graduated, whereas the light major's is still here. I think the dark major is in some trouble this time.” Lisa fixed her gaze on the situation within the square and explained for Han Shuo.

If you're not reading this on volaretranslations, then this is a pirated copy of the chapter.

“Ai, too bad there's nothing to do with our necromancy major. After all these years, the dark major has always directly counted us out. Although Master Fanny and Gene try quite hard, because of this, their standing within the Academy keeps decreasing. See, Master Fanny can only sit in the last row, and Master Gene doesn't even dare show his face because he's afraid that people will laugh at him. Our necromancy major is truly a failure.” Amy shook her head and spoke dejectedly with a woebegone expression.

“This can’t be helped either. The creatures that our necromancy major students can summon are innately weak to light magic. Without the help from our summoned creatures, it’s very difficult for necromancy magics to obtain the upper hand against light magic attacks. This is why Master Fanny can only resign herself to accepting the arrangements from the dark major and not have us join in the battle. If we did so, we’d only be making life more difficult for ourselves.” Athena was also similarly dejected as she followed up on Amy’s words.

If you’re not reading this on volaretranslations, then this is a pirated copy of the chapter.

It wasn’t smooth and without obstacles within the square, but all sorts of artificial mountains and fake trees had been placed, as well as numerous moats that were jagged and uneven. The school authorities wanted the students to become used to real environmental situations, and thus had made the battleground quite complicated.

At this moment, the five students from their respective majors were making use of the fake trees and grotesque rocks to conceal their bodies within the square. They would pop out and attack each other every now and then, then make use of the terrain to back off or regroup with their teammates. The enormous magical shield protecting the square also made the light hazy and dim. It looked like this had been a conscious decision to create this effect, to make it easier for teams to cooperate.

If you’re not reading this on volaretranslations, then this is a pirated copy of the chapter.

The two sides were probing each other when one of the members from the dark major suddenly clutched his stomach and fell down. Cold sweat beaded his forehead as his face was drained of all color.

Dark major archmage Deo’s facial expression changed drastically when he saw the situation develop and he immediately spoke to Dean Emma, “Dean, Phillide seems to be feeling unwell. I’d like to halt the battle and see what’s going on.”

If you’re not reading this on volaretranslations, then this is a pirated copy of the chapter.

Space grand magus Emma was also looking at the fallen Phillide with some surprise. She seemed to be puzzled as to why he'd suddenly fallen down when the real fight had yet to take place. When she heard Deo's words, she nodded and said, "Halt, let's see what's wrong with Phillide?"

Emma then waved her hand and the enormous magic shield suddenly lit up. The other dark major students helped the anguished Phillide to Deo. Dark major archmage Deo and several other dark major teachers examined Phillide, with Deo finally speaking to Emma with a darkened face, "Dean, Phillide's eaten some food that he shouldn't have eaten. I don't think he can participate this time."

If you're not reading this on volaretranslations, then this is a pirated copy of the chapter.

"Oh, my gosh! What's going on? Phillide is almost graduating and is someone who's about to become an adept mage within the dark major. He's also the current team leader and the strongest. If he suddenly can't participate, then the dark major has even less chance this time." Athena spoke with some worry as she looked at the pale Phillide.

Sara nodded and spoke, "Indeed. Keelung from the light major on the other side was captain of the light major team last year. It's said that he already has the strength of an adept mage, but purposefully delayed the timing of his advancement due to this year's competition. With Phillide present, they would've been evenly matched, but now that this has happened, it looks like the dark major is completely without hope."

If you're not reading this on volaretranslations, then this is a pirated copy of the chapter.

Han Shuo, with his sensitive hearing, could clearly hear Emma and Deo's conversation. Because of Phillide's health issues, Deo was attempting to convince Emma to delay this year's battle for a few days, but Emma rejected Deo's request on the basis of Academy's rules. She only agreed to allow Deo to swap out for another dark major student on Phillide's behalf.

Deo had a face full of fury as he argued shrilly with Emma, saying that this was a conspiracy and he demanded for Emma to change the day of the demonstration.

If you're not reading this on volaretranslations, then this is a pirated copy of the chapter.

It was pity that archmage Deo was just a dark major teacher in the end, and naturally wasn't more important than the Academy's rules.

Unable to convince Emma, Deo said furiously, "Since this is the case, then we're not competing. Allow others to say what they will this time!"

If you're not reading this at volaretranslations, then this is a pirated copy of the chapter.

"Master Deo, please remember your status. Although an accident has occurred, I hope you don't think of changing the Academy's traditions. Please find a substitute for this year's demonstration and let's see it through." Emma, usually benevolent and kind, was obviously a bit annoyed as she spoke gravely to Deo.

Apart from being a space grand magus, Emma also had a sense of unquestionable authority since she'd established her position as dean of the Academy. When such a severe warning was issued from her mouth, Deo was immediately dumbfounded.

If you're not reading this on volaretranslations, then this is a pirated copy of the chapter.

Thinking for a bit with a darkened face, Deo turned to look at Fanny, who sat in the corner and spoke, "Master Fanny, the necromancy major has never been a part of the combat after so many years. I think it's high time that the necromancy major sent out someone. Please find someone to fill in Phillide's position so that the combat may continue."

Originally sitting in the back row expressionlessly watching everything, Fanny suddenly started when she heard Deo's words. She immediately recollected herself as rage filled her face, "Master Deo, what do you mean by this?"

If you're not reading this on volaretranslations, then this is a pirated copy of the chapter.

Anyone could see that Deo had purposefully spoken to Fanny when he knew that he had no way to win after Phillide bowed out.

Even if they lost, those in the know could tell that Deo's actions were completely as a result of his bad temper. After all, the necromancy major was known for being weak. Deo could've asked anyone other than the necromancy major to fill in the spot. His actions were a noticeable jab at the necromancy major, and could even be construed as humiliation for the major.

If you're not reading this on volaretranslations, then this is a pirated copy of the chapter.

"Master Fanny, as a member of the dark major, you still need to make an effort sometimes, wouldn't you say?" Another dark major teacher, off to the side, naturally understood Deo's intentions and spoke up after thinking for a moment.

The teachers next to Fanny were watching her with an expression of delighting in her miseries, with some also displaying expressions of pity. However, the necromancy major was well known for being weak, and no one expressed anything. Expressions of watching a good show prevailed more than not.

If you're not reading this on volaretranslations, then this is a pirated copy of the chapter.

"When do you usually ever think of our necromancy major? You think of us when you need someone to act as a scapegoat, I think not!" Fanny had already lacked face with no necromancy students participating, and she'd only hoped for the battle to be over as soon as possible, so as to not suffer through the mockery and sympathetic gazes of others. Who would've known that she'd be so humiliated by Deo at the very end? This immediately roused her ire.

Fanny was someone who was soft on the outside and tough on the inside, of this Han Shou was well aware of. Under normal circumstances, Fanny always greeted others with a smiling face and wouldn't cause conflict with others, but once someone stepped over her bottom line, Fanny would also fight back with all her strength. It was obvious that Deo had stepped over Fanny's bottom line this time.

If you're not reading this on volaretranslations, then this is a pirated copy of the chapter.

The conversations of the teachers on stage couldn't make it over here, so Lisa and the others were standing there with looks of bafflement, not knowing why Fanny had suddenly stood up. When Han Shuo relayed what was happening with a darkened face, they were all incredibly angry as they cursed at Deo's despicableness.

A strong body was useful in moments like this. He pushed everyone blocking the way aside, and walked towards the main stage amidst a flurry of student curses. He suddenly raised his voice, "Master Fanny, I would like to battle on behalf of Phillide. I hope you approve."

If you're not reading this on volaretranslations, then this is a pirated copy of the chapter.

Han Shuo could no longer contain the anger within him when he saw Fanny being humiliated. He cried out loudly with a look of seriousness, his voice ringing out clear as a bell and traveled a great distance to the stage.

The square was immediately silent without a sound as large hubbub immediately exploded after. Everyone's gaze was focused on Han Shuo and they were all full of excitement and curiosity, all wanting to know what was going on.

If you're not reading this on volaretranslations, then this is a pirated copy of the chapter.

"Who is that kid? He's got some guts!"

"Huh, such overconfidence. Even Phillide knew that he was no match for our major and pretended to be ill and backed out. To think there are those who invite humiliation!"

"Eh, isn't that our major's Bryan? When did he return?"

An uproar instantly suffused the scene as all the students and teachers patrolled curious gazes over Han Shuo's body. They even started asking those around them what Han Shuo's background was.

If you're not reading this on volaretranslations, then this is a pirated copy of the chapter.

Fanny was dumbfounded to see Han Shuo appear. Her clear eyes sparkled as a hint of a sweet smile blossomed on her angry face. She spoke tenderly to Han Shuo, "Forget it... can't you see that someone's purposefully using us as a scapegoat?"

Nodding his head, Han Shuo looked at Deo, who was busily pretending that nothing was out of the ordinary. He spoke to Fanny, "I know, but I still want to try. Our necromancy major has been quiet for so long that it's time we took our spot in the limelight again."

If you're not reading this on volaretranslations, then this is a pirated copy of the chapter.

This demonstration would affect the standing of all the teachers in the future. As a necromancy teacher, Fanny was being set up by someone like Deo. Han Shuo would naturally not allow something like this to continue to happen.

Some sort of message seem to be conveyed from Han Shuo's resolute gaze. Fanny stared dumbly at him for quite a few seconds before finally nodding. She spoke to Deo, "Alright, I agree to your request. He will act as a substitute for Phillide."

If you're not reading this on volaretranslations, then this is a pirated copy of the chapter.

Han Shuo's identity was quickly revealed from the mouths of the necromancy students. His life as an errand slave to his experiences within the Dark Forest quickly made their ways to the ears of all the teachers and students present.

When the tidbit of the old witch Camilla seeing Fanny and Han Shuo spending the night together and Han Shuo on Fanny's bed came out, this filled the minds of everyone present with endless imagination. This caused the voices of discussion to be louder and louder as people's gazes sharpened and grew with enthusiasm.

If you're not reading this on volaretranslations, then this is a pirated copy of the chapter.

"Then it's settled, he'll substitute for Phillide and immediately join the battle against the light major. Mm, he's just taking the stage for show. It'll be over quickly and won't waste much time." Deo nodded and said to Fanny.

Chapter 127: Cutting a smart figure

Under Deo's remote gaze, Han Shuo nodded his head woodenly and didn't say much. He flicked a glance at Fanny and walked inside of the magic barrier.

Arriving at Emma's side, Emma looked at Han Shuo with benevolence and kindly said, "You're called Bryan, right?"

Han Shuo was startled and looked at Dean Emma in confusion, and said, "That's right, how do you know?"

"Heh heh, of course I know of you. You made a great contribution to the necromancy major during the Dark Forest excursion. Mm, go in and have a good fight. You're not a good kid." Emma smiled merrily at Han Shuo and spoke slowly.

Han Shuo seemed to think there were some hidden connotations in Emma's words from the way she looked at him, but he didn't quite understand what she meant. He didn't pursue it and nodded politely at Emma, then walked into the square.

After Emma opened the shield, Han Shuo and the rest of the dark major, as well as the light major, all reentered the square. When they walked inside, Han Shuo suddenly noticed that what people saw inside and outside of the shield was different. When they looked in from the audience's perspective on the outside, they were able to see everything clearly although the lighting was dim.

But when Han Shuo walked in himself, he discovered that it was much darker inside than outside. There were even a few wisps of fog floating around the interior. All sorts of trees, artificial mountains, and moats existed, making the entire battlefield a place strewn with obstacles.

Han Shuo didn't dare to release the original demons within the magic shield. After all, there were so many audience members outside. Not only were there teachers from all majors, but the space archmage Dean Emma was there as well. With so many seasoned experts watching along with the existence of the shield, Han Shuo didn't dare take the risk of releasing the original demons.

Even without the original demons, Han Shuo wasn't affected by the fog or duskiness due to the way his brain was developed. The sensitivity of his ears and eyes were far greater than any of the other students present within the square.

Leveraging his eyes and ears, Han Shuo discovered that the five from the light major seemed to be setting something up under the guidance of Keelung. On the contrary, the four from the dark major were all trailing their heads in dejection. They looked like they'd all been forced into fighting.

That made sense. Ever since losing Phillide, they could tell from Deo's conversation that even Deo had given up on this year's battle. Having them battle was just for show.

It was a given that they weren't willing to go on stage for a fight they knew they'd lose, but they couldn't disobey Deo's orders either. It was no wonder they were drooping their heads and had no morale whatsoever. Since they'd entered the fighting grounds, the four of them had had no inclination to discuss any details with Han Shuo. It looked like they were planning on acting according to what Deo had said, and just make a random showing.

From where Han Shuo stood, he could see all of their expressions. Yet he didn't say much, he just chanted a section of magical incantation and summoned a few small skeletons and zombie warriors to battle.

The small skeletons and zombie warriors appeared faster than normal beneath Han Shuo's incantation. The six skeletal warriors and three zombie warriors appeared in almost the blink of an eye within the square. There was no pause in between each one, and their speed was astonishing.

"Yo, that fellow's incantation speed is rather abnormally fast. He's summoned so many creatures in the blink of an eye."

Those observing in the crowd were students and teachers from all majors. They naturally understood that the chanting of a magical incantation needed to be in concert with the speed in concentrating mental strength. If the two magics had a short interval in between them, that meant that the speed in concentrating mental strength was also very fast. They all displayed expressions of astonishment when they saw Han Shuo summon so many dark creatures in such a small time frame.

Even Dean Emma's eyes gleamed as she looked at Han Shuo in interest, as if she was very curious as to what Han Shuo was prepared to do.

"Humph. Light magic is the antithesis of dark creatures. He might as well save his mental strength for a few more necromancy magics, as opposed to wasting his mental strength in summoning dark creatures." One of the dark major teachers jeered as he looked at Han Shuo.

Fanny sat beside him, so these words were obviously meant for Fanny. Anger appeared on Fanny's face, but she didn't say a thing.

After summoning the skeletal warriors and zombies, Han Shuo was secretly delighted. When he'd summoned so many dark creatures previously, he'd felt a significant decrease in his mental strength. However, this time, after completing the summoning of so many dark creatures, the amount of mental strength depleted was negligible to Han Shuo. This was a practical demonstration that Han Shuo's mental strength had also increased by quite a lot.

Joy filling his heart, Han Shuo once again chanted an incantation and a few more skeletal warriors, zombie warriors, and ghouls appeared.

As he was summoning these dark creatures, Han Shuo had already left the clump of dark major students and arrived on the left most corner of the square. There was cover from artificial mountains and fake trees, as well as fog wreathing the area. Therefore, the light and dark major students wouldn't be able to see his motions.

When the dark creatures came out, they waved the weapons in their hands according to Han Shuo's commands and quickly began to set up traps within the area.

Ropes and snares, as well as further deepened moats became hidden dangers in the area. The skeletal warriors raised their bone daggers to work quickly, the ghouls speedily moved the dirt to pile up in the front and formed a wall that would impede others from entering the side. The zombie warriors then used the wooden clubs in their hands to made the mud walls a bit thicker and firmer.

The three dark creatures started working orderly and without confusion under Han Shuo mental manipulation. Under the gaze of the students and teachers outsiders, they began to calmly and gravely set up the damaging traps, as if Han Shuo was a calm hunter.

They'd all originally held the mindset of watching a joke, but when they saw so many dark creatures appear and quickly work to set up the traps, their expressions turned from comical to gravely serious.

"As long as a necromancer's mental strength is strong enough, he can summon an endless numbers of dark creatures. Only necromancers can use their dark creatures to complete work that requires manual labor. This is the kind of advantage that all other majors aren't able to emulate."

"This little fellow's methods have thoroughly utilized the advantage of necromancers being able to utilize dark creatures. His mind is rather nimble. I think there will be a spot of interest with the fight this time." Dean Emma flicked a slight smile at Deo and said faintly.

Snorting lightly, Deo's expression was still cold and remote. "He still has to lure the people into his traps in order for them to be effective. I think the necromancy fellow will be hard pressed to do that. When he appears in front of the light major students, a wave of magical attacks will be enough to lay him flat. By then, his traps will be completely useless."

Deo couldn't help but be a bit regretful when his words finished. If he'd instructed the other four to work together with Han Shuo, then perhaps he could've lured the light major students into the traps and maybe truly caused some misfortunes to happen.

But battle had officially begun by now, and no matter how much Deo regretted things, there was nothing for it now.

Coldly surveying everything within the square, Fanny's bright eyes landed on Han Shuo. She didn't relax for a single second, and didn't pay any attention to the mockery and jeering from those around her.

They say that a man seriously going about his business held the most allure. At this moment, Han Shuo was going about his business with not a trace of panic or franticness. There was even a hint of relaxed confidence playing about his lips. Add to that the fact that Han Shuo's current actions were on Fanny's behalf, he truly did have a mysterious allure to Fanny at the moment.

Because of the magic shield's effect after entering the square, the noise and scenes from outside the square were completely obstructed by the shield. Han Shuo couldn't see anything outside the shield after he'd entered it.

The dark creatures were still were busily. Han Shuo, having given his orders, began to walk amongst the shadows of the trees and artificial mountains like a ghost, approaching the center between the light and dark majors soundlessly.

Han Shuo's movements weren't particularly surreptitious, nor did he purposefully display a fast pace, but with Han Shuo's current vision, his control over his movements had already reached the level of astonishing and magical. Ordinarily speaking, anyone passing through the shadows of the trees and artificial mountains would need to pass through an area of light. Any of the others students would be able to see someone pass through if they just concentrated a bit.

As these students walked, they would inevitably unconsciously turn their heads to observe their surroundings. Han Shuo would only suddenly move through two shadows in the instant that they moved their eyes or when they happened to blink. It was as difficult as trying to scale the heavens for an ordinary person to grasp that instant of open space. It could even be said that it was a wonderful art, but the current Han Shuo had well and truly accomplished it.

Therefore, no one discovered traces of Han Shuo's footsteps as he snuck through the shadows and arrived at the artificial mountains at the center between the light and dark majors. The students and teachers observing on the outside also found it odd why the students inside hadn't seemed to notice Han Shuo. This bizarre phenomenon made them feel that something was afoot.

However, Emma and several other archmages with unparalleled vision happened to observe some peculiarities at the same time. Emma didn't say much after her eyes lit up, but two wind and water archmages exchanged shocked glances. Their originally disinterested expressions instantly refocused on Han Shuo.

Deo's face darkened even further. He hadn't thought either that Han Shuo would have such ridiculous powers of judgement and vision. As he was reeling in shock, he couldn't help but look at Fanny behind him, wondering if Han Shuo's wondrous abilities came from Fanny.

Han Shuo stopped in the shadows of an artificial mountain, and stood there without moving. The light major students had spread out and were cautiously probing in all directions on light footsteps, moving slowly towards the dark major's territory and using the surrounding trees and artificial mountains to conceal their movement. It looked like they hadn't lowered their guard even though Phillide had been taken out of the picture.

On the contrary, the four from the dark major side were lazily approaching the center area. Their expressions were dour and dejected as they complained ceaselessly. They seemed to be venting the anguish within their hearts. In their condition, they were likely to be demolished by the light major's first round of attacks.

A light major student suddenly approached where Han Shuo was and looked at the artificial mountains in which Han Shuo was concealing himself. He was paying attention to the direction where the dark major students were going to appear, drifting closer to the artificial mountain Han Shuo was residing in without any guard up at all.

This light major student was about ten paces away from the closest person. He'd initially looked over the artificial mountains as he walked closer, and didn't pay much attention to things when he didn't discover anything out of the ordinary. He started walking over with his guard down.

Within the shadows, Han Shuo's body was almost one with them. His body was like a boulder as he stood there unmoving. The audience outside looked on as the light major student approached Han Shuo in the shadows, sucking in a breath as the entire scene became deathly quiet.

Suddenly, Han Shuo, hidden within the shadows, became a demon concealed by the darkness. His demonic arms suddenly opened as one hand covered the mouth of the light major student, the other hand abruptly closed on his body and the light major student was dragged into the darkness.

Just as the light major student was reacting with astonishment, Han Shuo brought a fist crashing down onto the back of his head. The light major's student went limp and he fell directly unconscious. Within the darkness, Han Shuo dragged this light major student into the shadows and quickly swapped clothes. He then strode out openly from the shadows and slowly approached the center.

The five light major students were more than ten paces apart from each other. They could see those beside them, but could only determine that they were on the same side via the same clothes, due to the fog and duskiness. They couldn't see faces or features clearly. Add to that the fact that winter clothes tended to be thicker and made all their bodies bulkier. Therefore, Han Shuo's appearance didn't draw anyone else's attention.

However, the students and teachers within the square got a full view of what was about to happen. The outside was going crazy with noisy chatter and discussion. The necromancy major had suddenly become the center of attention. Lisa and the other's yells stood out even in the midst of the boisterous square.

"Oh my gosh, that's incredible, he took out a person just like that."

"The five from the light major have been observing their surroundings with their eyes for half the day. How could they have not discovered that he's approaching them, how is that possible?"

"He's become part of the light major team now. I think the light major fellows are in big trouble this time. Their companion has suddenly become a ticking time bomb, but no one realizes it. This is quite interesting!”

Voices raised in incredible conversation rose and fell in waves. The students still found everything hard to believe, but given that the truth was right in front of them, they had no choice but to believe.

“Master Fanny, your student is quite interesting!” Deo’s usually cold and remote face had become much more tender, as he looked at the composed Fanny. However, her subtly dancing eyebrows gave away her repressed excitement.

A feeling of comfort flowing through her heart, Fanny flicked a chilly glance at Deo and mocked, “Now how would that be? He’s just there to make up the numbers, Master Deo is too complimentary.”

Deo didn’t say much after getting shut down, and his expression also appeared a bit nervous. His gaze patrolled the demonstration area within the square as he paid attention to further developments.

At this moment, Fanny’s heart was filled with contentment. She’d been continuously mocked and belittled by others because of her major’s uselessness. Now, because of Han Shuo’s rise to prominence, the gazes of those looking at her were filled with astonishment and incredulity. Even Deo, who’d jeered at her before, had nothing much to say now. This almost made the joy within Fanny’s heart overflow.

Everyone had a vain heart, and Fanny had often been suppressed by others. Now that the situation was suddenly reversed, Fanny’s joy and comfort was felt even more strongly. When she looked at Han Shuo now, she found him extremely pleasing in her eyes and a trace of a sweet smile unconsciously curved on her lips.

Within the square, Han Shuo naturally didn’t know that there was an uproar outside the field because of his performance. He strode out calmly and steadily, slowly moving towards the center with the other four light major students.

The four dark major students slowly appeared from the other direction. They had spread out their formation and kept an appropriate distance from each other. When they saw the light major students, the four dark major students abruptly halted their footsteps.

Two Deep Slumber spells and another two Hand of Darkness magics were chanted from the mouths of the four dark major students. The two Deep Slumber spells came floating towards Han Shuo and another light major student. Two enormous hands also suddenly formed in the dim sky and started swooping down towards the other two light major students.

Light major captain Keelung was standing in the center and watched all of this with a cold gaze, completely unmoved. This was because not a single dark major attack landed on him, or perhaps this was because the dark major students knew that they would be useless on Keelung.

Han Shuo had also been attacked with a Deep Slumber spell. He shifted his body at this moment and walked swiftly, dodging the spell.

The light major student standing beside Han Shuo remained coolly composed when the Hand of Darkness appeared overhead. A Radiant Slash suddenly appeared and shot towards the Hand of Darkness high overhead.

A bone spear suddenly appeared out of thin air at this time, with another one appearing shortly thereafter. It pierced the Radiant Slash attack and both bone spears and the Radiant Slash broke apart as white dots of light. At the same time, an Agony of the Soul appeared in front of this light major student, along with the Hand of Darkness.

The sudden change completely derailed the light major student's train of thought. The Agony of the Soul had already landed on him before he had time to react. The Hand of Darkness followed quickly after and grabbed his body.

"Deron, are you alright?" Off in the distance, Keelung immediately cried out and started walking over when he saw what had happened.

Deron immediately reacted. Although Han Shuo's chant had been made in an exceedingly low voice just now, he still heard it because the two were so close.

Deron was anxiously trying to tell Keelung to watch out for Han Shuo, but unfortunately he was finding it difficult to breathe, given that the Hand of Darkness was wrapped tightly around him. The dark major student who'd casted it was watching with a face full of excitement off in the distance. The student reached out forcefully, causing Deron to pass out.

Apart from Deron fainting, the other light major students easily handled the dark major attacks that had targeted them. Keelung, having not been attacked, swiftly approached Deron, wanting to check on him.

There was one unconscious Deron between Han Shuo and Keelung. Han Shuo also approached the unconscious Deron as Keelung approached, appearing to want to see how Deron was doing.

The light major captain reached Deron first. He'd just stooped down and was about to examine Deron's condition when three bone spears materialized, followed by two bone arrows and an Agony of the Soul.

Keelung gave an abrupt start and suddenly stood up, finally catching a glimpse of Han Shuo's face. He shouted involuntarily, "This is bad!"

A light magic attack was suddenly released as an incantation was rapidly recited. It formed a semicircle in front of his chest and started rushing over. The bone spears, arrows, and Agony of the Soul were destroyed in an instant.

However, when the magical fallout had begun to settle down, several bone arrows flew out again. This gave Keelung a great shock as he hastily backed up.

The release of magic was dependent on the amount of mental strength and the speed of focusing it. Although the time elapsed between two magics could be decreased, theoretically speaking, the more destructive a spell was, the longer amount of time there must be between each cast. A spell, such as bone arrows, expended very little mental strength, and so it could be quickly cast in succession.

Seeing the situation, Keelung had sent out an answering wave of magic and needed a bit of time to recover. It was a pity that Han Shuo wasn't giving him any opportunity to. Three bone arrows flew out from behind, causing him some panic and taking one to the rear when he couldn't dodge in time.

"The necromancy major fellow is masquerading as Billy. This person's too sinister! Take him down first!" Keelung rubbed his butt and immediately called out.

Off in the distance, the other two light major students evading the dark major attacks hesitated only briefly and immediately met up with Keelung to attack Han Shuo after hearing his shouts.

Han Shuo laughed loudly at this moment, raising his voice, "Fainting already counts as being out. It's three of you now against us five, I think it'll be difficult for you to win!"

Han Shuo didn't stay where he was as soon as he'd finished speaking. He dashed off to where the traps had already been set up with the speed of a normal mage. Keelung and the others were stunned for a second as Keelung then said resolutely, "Take down this fellow first. The other four from the dark major have no fighting spirit left, we'll take care of them after.

The other two from the light major nodded and rushed towards Han Shuo after hearing Keelung's words, leaving the four from the dark major looking at each other with some embarrassment. One of them yelled out, "We're five now, why should we be afraid of the three of them? Let's take them out!"

In this way, the odd scene of Han Shuo running in front, the three from the light major in hot pursuit, and the four from the dark major chasing madly after was formed.

It was a hubbub of noise outside. If it was said that Han Shuo had been lucky when he took down a person within the shadows just now, then his later interactions with Keelung and the fast speed of his magic being released and injuring Keelung's butt proved that Han Shuo's strength was definitely uncommon.

Add to that the fact that they had seen Han Shuo setting up traps and saw him running there now, the audience immediately knew what sinister intentions Han Shuo had in mind.

“Oh damn it, why are things happening like this?” Light major archmage Voigtlander had been smiling smugly, assured of victory. He couldn’t help but cry out at this moment. The development of the situation was completely out of his expectations.

“Master Fanny, your student is very strong. To think that the necromancy major had a talent such as him. This is truly incredibly!” Suddenly, several teachers, who often mocked Fanny, had a complete change in attitudes, and they all spoke with great praise to Fanny.

This was Fanny’s proudest moment in all her years in the necromancy major. Han Shuo’s actions had won the respect of all those present for Fanny. She was crazy with joy inside, but still smiled demurely and said calmly, “This is nothing. Our necromancy major has great talent, we just tend to keep a low profile. Now do you understand how shallow your understanding was before?”

The other teachers looked askance at each other after Fanny had spoken. They hadn’t thought that thanks to Han Shuo’s bizarre rise to prominence, Fanny’s presence would also be bolstered as well.

Chapter 128: Stomping all of them together

Amidst the clamor from outside the arena, Han Shuo's body leapt as he threaded through a wall that he had constructed earlier, landing onto the flat ground behind it. The traps, that the skeletal warriors had dug up, were a few paces behind Han Shuo, with branches and twigs concealing the entrance of the traps. The ghouls had covered the exterior with dirt, and it all looked quite normal.

Having completed their mission, the dark creatures spread out according to Han Shuo's orders, hiding behind the big trees and artificial mountains in the back. Han Shuo then stood behind the earthen wall, firing out bone spears and bone arrows again, attacking the three quickly approaching light major students.

"Huh. You're asking for trouble by openly attacking us." Keelung drew near as two Radiant Slashes flew out, destroying the attacks that Han Shuo had sent their way, rapidly approaching Han Shuo with the other two students.

The other two students also recited incantations just before reaching Han Shuo, demolishing the earthen walls that Han Shuo had just erected. One of them walked over the dirt, setting foot into a snare on the ground. Han Shuo immediately gave an order to the zombie controlling the trap when he saw that.

The zombie warrior, standing in the distance, suddenly yanked hard on the rope in his hand. The loose rope suddenly tightened beneath the light major student's foot and abruptly entwined around his ankle, sending him soaring into the sky.

"Damn it!" Keelung roared and was about to make a play to save the light major student when Han Shuo, standing quite a distance away, sent bone spear attacks at him from another direction, forcing him to temporarily retreat.

The other student however, had sharp eyes and nimble fingers and released a Radiant Slash, slashing through the rope. This caused the captured student to freefall from a great distance and cry out in pain.

A large stone, bound by a rope, suddenly started rolling down from the artificial mountain from the left and came crashing towards Keelung and the others. They gave a great start of fright and also released magic at the same time to defend against the large rock, hurrying in the direction of the other traps afterwards.

Light magic had a marvelous effect in restraining dark creatures, but the ones that Han Shuo had summoned never engaged them in direct combat. Rather, they leveraged other tools and elements to attack the three light major students. This caused the restraining effect that the light major had on dark creatures to be completely nullified.

Finally, the four dark major students, who were chasing them, also arrived. When they saw the three from the light major busily fending off the attacks from the traps, they immediately joined in the fray with great gusto. They started chanting dark major magic from not too far away, preparing to add fuel to the flame and offer Han Shuo their assistance.

A string of magical incantation suddenly sang out of Keelung's mouth. Eye searing light abruptly shot out of the darkened sky. Everyone's eyes temporarily lost vision wherever the extreme light landed. Even the other two light major students didn't have enough time to react as they temporarily lost sight of everything happening around them.

Keelung had closed his eyes beforehand and calculated when the Strong Light spell would arrive. He suddenly opened his eyes and was ready to deal out a devastating blow that would turn the tide against all those who'd lost their sight.

However, in the second that he opened his eyes, he didn't even have time to chant any magic incantation before he saw more than ten skeletal and zombie warriors surrounding him. Under the strength of two zombie warriors pushing him, his body backed up against its will as he fell into a trap when his foot stepped out into empty air.

The other light major and dark major students, who'd lost their sight, were all standing there, extremely anxious. The dark creatures advanced upon them one by one and picked them up or pushed them, throwing all of them into the traps, making an exception for no one.

The Strong Light spell was an extreme shock to the eyes of ordinary people. Han Shuo had also fallen victim due to its swiftness, but his body was different than that of ordinary people and his eyes recovered extremely swiftly. Most would need at least ten seconds to recover from such a bright flash, but Han Shuo was out for only two seconds.

Before the effects from the Strong Light spell had fully faded away, and before Keelung had even opened his eyes, Han Shuo had already recovered and directed the dark creatures into action that would change the course of the battle. He wrenched around the outcome of the battle and settled it with one move.

Not only the students from the light major, Han Shuo had also thrown the four from the dark major into the pit as well. The trap had been dug quite, quite deeply and could more than hold these small mages, who didn't know the levitation spell yet. There were also dark creatures holding large stones standing over them, ready to fling them down at any time. This heralded the conclusion of the competition.

Deo had been watching with a more relaxed face and excitement when Han Shuo had been performing particularly well earlier, but when Han Shuo had targeted even the dark major students and thrown them into the trap in the end, he'd snorted coldly and once again tightened his facial expression, speaking to Fanny, "Your student has no sense of team spirit, look at what he's done!"

"I think it's your four students who had no morale from beginning to end. They weren't that useful at all. Bryan must've thought that they were useless and wanted to give them this reminder. It's just a joke, no big deal." Fanny was in grand spirits as she chuckled and repositied Deo's words.

On the other side, Light major archmage Voigtlander stood up with a face full of depressed dejection. He flourished his sleeves and spoke to Emma, leaving the square afterwards, leaving behind only Master Beacher to clean up the aftermath of the competition.

According to logic, because the necromancy magic was tied into the dark major, and that Han Shuo had taken the field in lieu of Phillide, this should have been a dark major victory.

But Han Shuo's motions were a direct slap to Deo's face. This made it difficult for Deo to be happy. When he saw Voigtlander give a random word of instruction to a teacher behind him, he also took his leave from Dean Emma and left gloomily.

As for Lisa and the other necromancy major students, they erupted into enthusiastic cheers. This was the proudest moment that the necromancy had had in many years. They'd always been suppressed and mocked, but because of Han Shuo's sudden appearance, not only had they salvaged Fanny's face, but all the students of the necromancy major had basked in glory as well.

When Han Shuo walked out after the magic shield was taken down, he immediately saw the light of fired-up glee in Fanny's eyes and the sounds of cheering from the other necromancy students.

"Eh... although the circumstances are a bit odd, I still must announce that the dark major has won this year's demonstration. Those who have participated in the fight will receive a space ring personally refined by me. Everyone will also receive a magic staff. I hope you will continue to learn and improve yourselves." Emma's voice sounded out smoothly after Han Shuo had walked out and carried throughout the entire square.

As onlookers watched in admiration, Han Shuo was the first to walk to Emma's side and receive the rewards from this time's battle. Those from the dark major side had finally crawled out of the trap with help from others. They were just about to get their revenge on Han Shuo when they heard Emma's announcement, and smiles made their way to their faces again. They ambled over to Emma.

Han Shuo swept the space ring with his mental strength after receiving it and was quite satisfied. The capacity of the space ring personally refined by archmage Emma was at least five times greater than the one worn by Han Shuo right now. The materials needed to refine such a large space ring would be even more uncommon. It also looked like only a character on the level of a space archmage would be able to refine it.

Part 2

Up until now, Han Shuo had never used a magical staff when casting magics. When he grasped it in his hand and imbued it with his mental strength, he suddenly discovered that there was another small space within the staff. The space had the ability to store mental strength. As he released a random spell and felt it circulate throughout the staff, the speed of the spell was increased slightly.

Judging from the looks of things, this magic staff had the effect of storing small amounts of mental strength and even increasing the casting speed of spells. No wonder mages were even willing to put their lives on the line in order to get a decent staff. A wondrous staff would more or less have a great effect of enhancing the mage's strength.

Han Shuo didn't hang around the square after receiving his space ring and magic staff. He nodded to Fanny from afar with a smile and left alone, leaving Fanny and the others to take care of any other remaining details.

"Wait a second, Bryan!" Han Shuo's departure wasn't unnoticed by the many students within the square. However, everyone only watched him leave with surprise, and didn't do anything after whispering to each other in hushed voices. When Lisa saw Han Shuo leaving however, she called out from a far distance and ran straight towards Han Shuo.

After leaving the square and arriving at the necromancy major's training fields, there was a look of astounded excitement on Lisa's face. She stared at Han Shuo and kept up a running litany of questions, "You were too amazing today! You handled them all by yourself! You did it all with a natural and smooth style, how did you do it?"

Shrugging, Han Shuo said noncommittally, "It wasn't that I was strong, but just that they were too weak."

Han Shuo had met many people during his trip to the Dark Forest that were all adept mages or senior swordsmen. He'd even met swordmaster Trunks and archmage Emily.

Those McGrady Guild guards, including Duke and Erick who'd shown up later, were experts who had experienced many battles and had astonishing strength.

Having fought against these people, Han Shuo had basically experienced all sorts of situations. He'd just faced off against mages who had yet to reach the adept stage, and whose battle experience was even more lacking. He naturally held every advantage, and it would've been odd had he not won instead.

If Han Shuo had mobilized the little skeleton, his own martial techniques, and the Demonslayer Edge, he wouldn't have needed to use any schemes or traps. He'd be able to completely annihilate the five light major students with his own strength, denying them the slightest change of resistance.

"When did you get this strong?" Lisa watched Han Shuo with every expression of interest as she asked curiously.

Grasping the magic staff in his hands, Han Shuo poured in his mental strength and began to practice the Bone Prison spell that a journeyman mage should be able to master. He imbued the staff with his mental strength and used it as the conduit to try to activate the Bone Prison spell.

The Bone Prison spell was a spell that imprisoned enemies. It would form a prison made completely out of white bones once it was cast and would confine enemies, making them unable to move a muscle.

If one had enough mental strength, one would be able to control every single bone within the Bone Prison. Not only would it be able to confine someone, but the caster would be able to use the bones within the prison to once again lock down the prisoner. The bones could be transformed into soft and supple vines. It was all very amazing.

It was his first time manipulating the Bone Prison spell. After more than ten bones had appeared in the air, they couldn't quite form a prison.

When Han Shuo relaxed his concentration, the bones didn't form any kind of structure before falling to the ground with a clatter.

"My strength is similar to yours and I'm not that great. If you practice diligently, I think your accomplishments will be even higher. You may even be able to represent our major in next year's battle." Han Shuo responded to Lisa carelessly as he continued to practice the Bone Prison spell.

Lisa made a silly face at Han Shuo at these words, then said lightly, "I'm too stupid. I've studied necromancy for so long, but you've only learned it for a few months and you're already much stronger than me."

"No, your strength is quite good compared to the other necromancy students. Heh heh, I meant that if you work even harder, you should be able to increase the rate of your progress. I feel that the magics of our necromancy major aren't worse off than any of the other majors. It's just that there are fewer people studying necromancy magic now, resulting in fewer experts emerging." Han Shuo chatted at ease with Lisa and practiced the Bone Prison spell over and over again.

After a while, some other students, who seemed to recognize the strength of necromancy magic for the first time thanks to Han Shuo's heroics, all skipped their meals and arrived enthusiastically at the training fields. They too began to practice magic one by one.

When the other students appeared, Han Shuo halted his magic practice and evaded the other students' excited babble. He walked out from the training fields and, after leaving them, headed in the direction of Fanny's lab.

When Han Shuo arrived at Fanny's lab, the door to the lab was locked. It looked like Fanny had yet to return. Typically speaking, Fanny would usually be at her lab right now. It looked like she'd been delayed by the necromancy major's newfound glory that she hadn't returned yet.

He wasn't in a hurry either as Han Shuo took a seat on the grass and took out the book of necromancy magic that he'd taken from the cemetery of death. He studied it as the three original demons patrolled three different directions. With no fear of someone suddenly approaching, he began slowly studying the Bone Prison magic that he wanted to master.

After a while, the space in front of Han Shuo suddenly twisted as light flashed by and Dean Emma materialized in front of Han Shuo.

Giving a start of fright, Han Shuo immediately quickly put the book of necromancy magic away in the space ring and wore a smile on his face. He said to Dean Emma, "Hello Dean, what are you doing here?"

Dean Emma looked kindly at Han Shuo, and an admiring smile appeared on her wrinkled face. She opened her mouth to say, "You're a hardworking child alright. You aren't willing to waste the slightest bit of time and still study while you're waiting for Fanny. No wonder you've had such accomplishments in such a short amount of time."

Han Shuo felt a bit baffled by Emma's words. He didn't know why Emma had soundlessly appeared here and spoken such odd words to him.

He thought for a bit and look at Emma with a frown. He opened his mouth to ask, "Have you come in search of me?"

Nodding, Emma said straightforwardly, "Of course, heh heh. I didn't appear here because I failed a space magic spell."

"Then, do you need something from me?" Han Shuo hesitated and then asked again.

Emma smiled kindly after hearing Han Shuo's question, "I actually want to thank you. If it weren't for you last time, I wouldn't have known that Camilla was a member of the Black Underworld organization from the Kasi Empire."

Han Shuo gave another start of fright upon hearing these words. Han Shuo hadn't breathed a word of this to anyone other than Candide, and now that Emma suddenly spoke of this, it really did frighten Han Shuo. His thoughts raced as he looked at Emma, "Did Master Candide tell you this?"

Nodding, Emma smiled, "Smart kid. Our house's old man says you're a good talent and Fanny's mentioned it to me as well. After today's competition, I've discovered that there are indeed some mysterious things about of you. However, I won't ask you why. I only wanted to try to convince you of something with my visit this time."

Shock written all over his face, Han Shuo would've never expected that Emma and Candide from the Dark Mantle would be husband and wife. No wonder Emma looked at him with that strange look before the battle.

"What would you like to tell me?" Han Shuo stared at Emma after coming back to himself.

"I can tell from your gaze that you have feelings for Fanny, but I hope that you don't develop anything with her before you're strong enough. If you're still just a student who has yet to graduate, and your relationship crosses over that bottom line, it won't be good for either you or Fanny, particularly Fanny. This could give rise to unnecessary troubles." Emma stared at Han Shuo and spoke sincerely.

Hesitating and then opening her mouth once again, "This is for your own good and Fanny's, I hope you take heed of my words of wisdom. When you graduate from the necromancy major and you're stronger than Fanny, I can even help you then if you run into issues in your relationship with Fanny. Eh, Fanny's coming, I'll take my leave now."

Emma's figure once again vanished after she'd finished speaking. When Emma had just disappeared, Han Shuo also heard the sounds of Fanny approaching.

Chapter 129: Flirting with Master Fanny

“Eh? What are you doing here?” Fanny called out in surprise when she caught a glimpse of Han Shuo from far away – there was a delighted smile all over her face.

Han Shuo left the patch of grass behind the lab and strode towards Fanny. “I came to find you and saw that you hadn’t returned yet, so I decided to wait for a while.”

Han Shuo had to seriously consider Dean Emma’s words. From her words, Han Shuo understood that if they truly had a relationship within the Academy, it might actually affect each other. Han Shuo wasn’t scared of anything happening to him, but he really didn’t want to see anything negative affect Fanny.

Original and most up to date translations are posted at volaretranslations.

“Come in! Let’s chat.” Fanny was smiling a lot more than usual because she was in a happy mood. She opened to the door to the lab and gestured for Han Shuo to hurry and come in.

When Han Shuo entered the lab, Fanny’s beautiful eyes stared a bit fervently at Han Shuo. “I must really thank you this time. The teachers of the other majors were truly too ridiculous to treat our major thus. Heh heh, do you know how comical their faces were after you won? I haven’t been this happy in the longest time!”

“Then how would you like to thank me?” Han Shuo found a stool for himself after he came in, and then looked at Fanny with an intense look and smiled. Fanny’s face blushed as she seemed to think of something, this caused her to be unable to look at Han Shuo in the eyes. She lowered her head and said, “Then how would you like me to thank you?”

“Give me a kiss!” This blurted out of Han Shuo’s mouth with no forethought at all. He felt that he was in for a beating as soon as he said this and decided to turn it into a joke, “I’m joking, joking!”

Contrary to expectations, a flaming red faced Fanny didn't immediately erupt in anger. She stood there silently for a moment with a flushed face and shyly walked over to Han Shuo. Before he could react, her cherry red lips darted out and gave him a lightning fast peck on the left cheek.

"Cheeky little bugger, did you finally get what you wanted?" Having kissed Han Shuo, Fanny didn't dare to look at him as she abruptly turned her back, and pretended to sort the things in the messy lab with a nonchalant attitude. However, her flushed and trembling shoulders betrayed the agitation in her heart.

Han Shuo stood there in dumb shock, reaching out a hand, he subconsciously ran it over the cheek that Fanny had kissed. He could feel the faint fragrance lingering on his cheek and used a finger to tap that wet patch. He then stuck his finger into his mouth to suck on it.

When she saw that Han Shuo was remaining silent, Fanny finally couldn't resist looking back. She happened to see his ambiguous and somewhat horny move. She immediately stomped her foot in anger and cried out, "Damn it, you're really lecherous!"

Han Shuo had long since forgotten Emma's words of advice by now and spoke in an utterly leering tone, "How am I lecherous? You're just too mesmerizing. I actually wanted you to kiss my lips just now, but you seemed to have kissed the wrong place. That didn't count, let's do that again." Han Shuo actually closed his eyes when he was finished speaking and pushed his lips forward. He looked lecherous no matter how one looked at him.

Fanny felt breathless from the anger as she saw Han Shuo's appearance. Her slender right arm suddenly reached out to pinch Han Shuo's cheek. She hectored, "You bad little kid, reaching out for a yard after taking an inch!"

When Fanny's words of censure passed her lips, Han Shuo immediately knew that he couldn't get what he wanted. He hastily opened his eyes and suddenly saw Fanny's white, tender right hand reaching out to pinch him when he was about to retreat. His heart lurching, Han Shuo didn't think at all and and turned with lightning speed, leaving a kiss in the heart of Fanny's beautiful palm, then retreating with lightning speed again.

A soft "eh" was emitted. It was as if electricity made its way through Fanny's body as she involuntarily emitted a low sound. She then recollected herself and huffily said, "You bad little kid are behaving more and more outrageously. You're dead meat!"

An irate Fanny immediately dashed towards Han Shuo after her words sounded as she seemed to want to get her revenge on Han Shuo. Having just committed a frivolous action on Fanny, Han Shuo felt his heart lurch as it became harder and harder to control himself. He'd also discovered that perhaps due to being happier than usual today, Fanny's attitude towards him was markedly different from the usual.

Under normal conditions, Fanny would've flown into a passion and denounced him had Han Shuo raised an outrageous request such as to kiss him. Who would've anticipated that not only would she not lecture him this time, she'd actually agreed to such a ridiculous request. When Han Shuo had kissed the heart of her palm just now, her embarrassment was noticeably greater than her anger. Han Shuo could clearly feel that the current Fanny was quite different from normal.

When he saw that Fanny was about to rush towards him, Han Shuo didn't dodge or evade, but suddenly snaked out a hand and grabbed Fanny's outstretched hand when she'd rushed to in front of him, pulling her into his embrace.

A waft of tantalizing scent suddenly surged towards Han Shuo's nose and mouth. When the fascinating, shapely body crashed into Han Shuo's embrace, the wondrous curves that stuck tightly onto Han Shuo's body immediately caused a great disturbance within his body, especially now that he was no longer a virgin.

At this moment, he'd long since thrown his conversation with Emma and the awkwardness having to do with his relationship with Emily to the four winds. His large hand wrapped around Fanny's waist as he descended upon Fanny's cherry lips and began to greedily taste his fill.

“Eurgh... “ With her body confined by Han Shuo, Fanny couldn’t budge. Even though she wanted to resist, she was powerless against him. Her small hands beat down furiously onto Han Shuo as protesting noises came from her mouth. But as Han Shuo continued his rapacious devourment. His big tongue churned behind her winsome lips, and an incomparably wondrous sensation slowly began to spread in Fanny’s heart.

She’d been pounding furiously on his chest originally, but the strength of her blows began to falter. Fanny’s hands had not only stopped their struggle in the end, but they’d even mysteriously entwined themselves behind Han Shuo’s broad back and neck. Her neck was tilted as she went along with Han Shuo’s avaricious intrusion as her almond-shaped eyes grew hazy. Her body temperature began to rise, and it was as if she’d sunk into a sweet dream that she was happy to stay within.

This wondrous sensation filled Han Shuo’s entire body. The person that he’d dreamed about day and night was lying in his embrace. This type of psychological satisfaction was enough to drive him wild.

Fanny’s shy response near the end brought a sense of glee that filled Han Shuo like an erupting volcano. He slowly found it difficult to control his originally innocent objective as his large hands unconsciously moved towards Fanny’s wonderful butt, and his highly erect lower body slowly began to look for an appropriate angle.

Suddenly, Fanny felt a hot passion that was as stiff as a metal rod around her waist, deep in the throes of her sensations. She immediately understood the current situation, and began to struggle without care for anything. Because Fanny had gone along with his motions earlier, his body had also relaxed. He hadn’t thought that Fanny would suddenly react so violently and was pushed away by her.

“You... you... I... I...” Having pushed Han Shuo away, Fanny stood there with her face flaming red and was panting loudly, trying to say something. But she couldn’t get a word out for a while because of her agitated emotions.

Han Shuo’s gaze was locked onto Fanny as he resolutely said, “Master Fanny, I think you know that I like you.”

Han Shuo’s expression was solemn and firm, and his low voice seemed to have a magnetic attraction to it. Fanny’s heart trembled as she was in obvious disarray. Currently she didn’t dare meet Han Shuo’s eyes. She averted her head and said, “Say no more. I don’t want to talk about this right now. If you can advance to the adept mage stage and graduate from the Academy, I’ll consider giving you a chance.”

Don’t support theft. Read the original translation at volaretranslations.

Standing with her back facing Han Shuo, Fanny was still panting as her neck was a patch of red. Han Shuo stared at Fanny for a bit whilst behind her, and then took resolute steps towards her. He suddenly reached out and hugged Fanny from behind, saying tenderly, “You were the goddess that I thought of day and night from a long time ago. Your kindness and passion have touched my heart, your amazing body makes it even harder for me to restrain myself. I think my entire life has perished in your hands...”

When Han Shuo had hugged Fanny at first, she’d trembled and wanted to break free. But when Han Shuo started his passionate declaration of love, her body had gone limp and it was as if she’d melted as she leaned softly into Han Shuo’s chest, her cherry lips opening and closing.

“Really, I think I’m unable to escape your spell. The honor of the necromancy major, personal glory, and rich rewards have no value in my eye. I didn’t want to see anyone insult you and so I stepped out to do battle. All I did was for you. I think you’ve known of my feelings a long time ago...” Han Shuo put a spin on a passionate topic and spoke of it with sincerity that overflowed with emotions. This caused Fanny’s body to burn up, and she breathed even more loudly due to the agitation of her feelings.

After a while, Fanny used an almost inaudible voice to say shyly, “I... I actually know all this. However, our current statuses aren’t that appropriate. This will be disadvantageous to both of us. If you graduate from the necromancy major, then we can, eh... you know.”

These words revealed Fanny’s internal thoughts, and Han Shuo’s heart was immediately drowning in gleeful joy. He then wrapped his arm around Fanny's waist, one that had not an ounce of fat on it and brought his mouth close to Fanny's exquisite ear. He blew hot air into it and said wickedly, "I don't know, can you tell me what?"

Han Shuo was holding Fanny and thus could clearly feel her shudder when he blew into her ear. That marvelous, subtle sensation had a different kind of allure to it compared to the excitement of previous. Han Shuo quite relished the situation.

"You bad little kid! What did I do wrong in this life to take you in as a student. Alright alright. If you graduate from the Academy, I'll be your girlfriend. Does this answer satisfy you?" Fanny turned around, rolled her eyes with a hotly flushing face and spoke softly.

With extreme joy and pride fully occupying all of his heart, Han Shuo only felt that this moment was the one most worth celebrating in his life. He stood there and smiled dumbly, not saying anything.

"Get out. I don't want to see you today. Hold whatever matters you want to mention. I want to be alone for now." As Han Shuo stood there and had a silly smile on his face, Fanny shoved him away in her shyness and pushed him out the door.

Just as Han Shuo had been pushed to the laboratory door, Han Shuo suddenly chuckled and reached out a hand, blocking the door that Fanny was about to close. He then said to Fanny, "Wait one more second."

Fanny couldn't close the door with Han Shuo's hand blocking it. She glared at Han Shuo with a red face and said huffily, "What else do you want, haven't you bullied me enough today?"

"No no," Han Shuo argued and said, "I agree with everything you said. But when I won today's battle, I received a space ring that Dean Emma had crafted herself. This space ring is of a much higher quality than the one I have, so I temporarily have no use for my space ring. I'd like to give mine to you." Han Shuo said tenderly with a smile to Fanny.

"I can't accept anything more from you. If I wear your space ring, then people will absolutely misunderstand our relationship. That won't do."

Fanny declined Han Shuo's gift with a reddened face.

Han Shuo abruptly halted and then understood after Fanny's explanations. Han Shuo had planned on giving Yuna's space ring to Fanny, but he'd suddenly received Emma's space ring and thus changed his mind to gifting his to Fanny. He hadn't thought that Fanny would have this level of consideration.

"Then, you can have this one. I don't think anyone will be able to read anything from this space ring." Han Shuo took out Yuna's space ring and handed it to Fanny.

"I said that I can't accept it." Fanny still didn't agree.

"I won't leave unless you accept it. Take it!" Han Shuo shoved it into her hands without caring whether or not she wanted it, and immediately left afterwards without waiting for her to say anything. He disappeared without a trace after a few steps.

Chapter 130: Full speed improvement

The Bone Prison spell was a magic spell that journeyman necromancers had to master. When this magic was deployed deftly, it would create certain conditions for dark creatures that makes it easier for them to defeat their enemies.

Han Shuo practiced the Bone Prison spell by himself in the cemetery behind the mountains to the back of the Academy for the next three days. His resolute determination and the intelligence afforded to him after opening up his brain allowed Han Shuo to grasp a clearer understanding of the innate character of necromancy magic.

Some magical theory that had been obscure and difficult to understand, or needing prolonged contemplation from Han Shuo for comprehension, had become easy to understand due to Han Shuo's mind becoming incomparably clear. He could quickly understand many concepts when he put his mind to it.

In a short three days, the use of the Bone Prison spell progressed from continual failure to occasional release. He also started officially practicing another spell of Bone Shield during this time. His fast training speed astonished even himself.

Clapclapclap.

The sound of applause rang out in the distance, as the well rounded and alluring Emily appeared in the distance with a slight smile, approaching Han Shuo slowly.

Halting his magic practice session, Han Shuo looked at Emily and said, "I've already met up with Candide. Who could've thought that your identity in the Dark Mantle is this high? Looks like your mission will include me in it."

"Hehe, my mission will require your communication with the forest trolls anyways. Although I don't have a high status like that old fox Candide, he still had to do me this favor when I brought up this matter with him. Now that you've joined this mission, I'll give you most of the credit after the matter's done. Perhaps your status within the Dark Mantle will increase another two stars this way." Emily reached out naturally to wrap her hands around Han Shuo's shoulder when she arrived in front of him, speaking to him in a seemingly fawning manner.

He was about to compliment Emily when Han Shuo suddenly remembered what Candide said, and was on his guard about Emily's other identity. He suddenly looked at her with a not so pleasant expression, "When I went to see Candide this time, he told me a bit about your true identity and told me to be careful, lest I incur unnecessary trouble. That was when I knew you were Master Aymes' blood sister. But I still don't know much about your other identity. Can you tell me now?"

Emily's face changed slightly when Han Shuo spoke. She looked at Han Shuo deeply and then sighed lowly, speaking, "Looks like Candide does value you highly, and he's deathly afraid that I'll lie to you. Alright then, since this is the case, I won't have to conceal some things from you then. I've actually been married for many years already, except my husband went out to war right after we were married and then died in the battlefield. I've been a widow until now."

Han Shuo became silent after Emily's words, finally speaking after a while, "It looks like that person's status must be high to warrant such a reminder from Candide."

Nodding, Emily said, "Yes, but that person's already dead and there's nothing much worth discussing. Because of my involvement with the Dark Mantle, I had a few missions to execute after he died and my actions were a bit odd because of the missions. This has caused my reputation to be a bit damaged amongst the upper echelons of society in the Empire."

"Why do you say that?" Han Shuo looked at Emily and asked faintly.

Emily shook her head self deprecatingly as she spoke with a dejected look, "Just like when you saw me just now and took me for a wanton woman, because of my status as a widow, it was inevitable that some gossip would start up because I had to come in contact with people when executing Dark Mantle missions."

Han Shuo had taken Emily's virginity from her. Therefore, while others may not believe her, but Han Shuo had no choice but to believe her. She was in such a dejected mood right now that Han Shuo unconsciously reached out a hand and wrapped her in his embrace, saying tenderly, "I don't care what other people think, but I took your innocence from you and naturally know that you're not like what they say you are. Be at ease, I won't be affected by those kinds of words."

Shaking her head with some gratitude, Emily said forlornly, "Candide's words reminded me, it looks like I must face reality. With your strength and rate of improvement, your future is bright without parallel. But because of the particulars of my status, it looks like I can only maintain an underground relationship with you. To do otherwise would bring no benefits to either of us."

Han Shuo was well aware of the meaning behind Emily's words. It was like when Emma had reminded him to be careful of the relationship between him and Fanny. There were some unavoidable taboos having to do with status in this world. If the rules were challenged, one would meet heavy oppression.

He kissed Emily as she laid in his arms —

Han Shuo spoke coolly with a darkened face, "Don't you worry, I won't force you to hide for the rest of your life! We'll be able to interact out in the open one day. I don't dare do so yet because I haven't yet climbed high enough. If my status is enough to decide everyone's life or death one day, I think everyone will shut up or give us well wishes if they ever open their mouths."

Emily's face showed delighted joy when she heard these words, as she turned Han Shuo's embrace around to hug him fiercely. She said with emotion, "You can do it, I believe you!"

After a round of entwinement, Emily spoke to Han Shuo with a hotly flushed body, "Hurry and handle the matter with the forest trolls. The McGrady Guild people have already contacted the merchants that deal with the forest trolls and they're heading for the Dark Forest. They're planning on buying the batch of siege weapons. You have to make the forest trolls sell the weapons to them.”

Nodding to indicate his understanding, Han Shuo thought for a bit and said, “I have good relations with a robber. He wants to do this mission with us, can we possibly add him?”

“No problem. I’m in charge of this mission and plenty of my people are on it already. It makes no difference if another one joins. If he’s trustworthy, I’ll deploy him immediately when I get back. This way, I can contact you through him whilst you’re at the Academy. After all, it’s not entirely appropriate for me to come into contact with you directly at school with my identity.” Emily was quite forthright as she immediately agreed to Han Shuo’s suggestion.

“Alright, he’s called Chester and should be the guard in charge of the northern stronghold as of this moment. If you have any instructions and are not at liberty to venture outside to take action yourself, let him do it. I’ll make a trip to the Dark Forest as soon as possible. Go about your business at ease.” Han Shuo opened his mouth to speak with Emily.

“Okay, I’ll be in touch if anything crops up. Don’t worry, I have confidence in being able to quickly complete this time’s mission.” Emily left after saying these words.

When Emily had left, Han Shuo thought for a bit and walked towards the Boozt Merchant Guild. There were two days until Han Shuo’s predetermined time with Phoebe. But the days seemed to be getting colder and Han Shuo was a bit worried that the dwarves would run out of rations and life necessities. He planned on making a trip to the cemetery of death and taking care of the rations that the dwarves need to make it through winter first.

Now that he had a space ring with greater capacity, he would only need to make one trip to settle everything. Add to that the fact that he had to visit the forest trolls in a few days and prepare the same rations and necessities, he probably should take care of the dwarves first. There were more forest trolls and so it was likely the space ring wouldn’t be able to hold enough rations to take care of things in one trip.

He made his way proficiently to the Booz Merchant Guild, but didn't get to see Phoebe today. Fabian was instead the one who came out to welcome him. He learned from Fabian that Phoebe was out today, and because of Han Shuo's relationship with Fabian, they could take care of the matter regarding the rations even if Phoebe wasn't present.

Because Phoebe held the reigns of power now, Fabian's status within the Guild had also risen accordingly. He took Han Shuo to the warehouse where the rations were stored and the warehouse was opened under his command. They filled Han Shuo's space ring with the rations that Phoebe had previously prepared for Han Shuo.

"Mm, tell Phoebe for me that I still need more. Please have her prepare them for me and we'll settle the accounts at once when I swing by two days later." Han Shuo said with a smile as he looked at Fabian.

"Heh heh, no problem. With our relationship, I can take care of a small matter like this. Don't worry." Fabian spoke merrily to Han Shuo as he promised.

"It looks like Mister Fabian's role within the Guild is becoming higher and higher." Han Shuo was surprised to see Fabian agree so easily.

"Not at all, not at all, this is all thanks to you. If it wasn't for you, I don't think I would've made my way up so easily. The reason Miss Phoebe values me so is also because I introduced you to her, I think. To be honest, I really need to thank you. Heh heh, even my nephew Jack has benefited from acquainting you. You truly bring great fortune to us." Fabian looked at Han Shuo as he spoke earnestly.

"You're too polite, please say hi to Jack for me and tell him I came by. However, I'm a bit busy today and don't have idle time to chat." Han Shuo exchanged some pleasantries with Fabian and left with a smile.

Chapter 131: Some rejoice and some worry

The Dark Forest was now covered by a thick layer of snow. Han Shuo sloshed his way through it as he made his way towards the dwarf village.

The dwarves had been forced to leave their village because of the forest trolls. Although Han Shuo vaguely knew where they'd relocated to with the help of the original demons, but he wasn't quite sure where exactly they'd gone either such a long period of time.

The forest trolls had left long ago and hadn't reappeared. Han Shuo felt that the dwarves wouldn't necessarily be willing to give up their old village, so he still decided to head in that direction first.

When Han Shuo arrived at the passageway into the village and looked around, a smile blossomed from the corner of his mouth. From the various concealments and setup of things around the passageway, Han Shuo could ascertain that the dwarves hadn't left.

Han Shuo whistled long and loudly, shaking the accumulated snow off the tree branches. His sensitive ears heard the sound of approaching footsteps as several dwarf warriors, holding battle axes, appeared after a short while, approaching from afar with looks of caution on their faces.

"Don't worry, it's just me, I've returned as promised." Han Shuo immediately called out before the dwarf warriors had gotten close to him.

The dwarf warriors in the distance all heaved involuntary sighs of relief when they heard Han Shuo's voice. When they walked to Han Shuo, one of them said, "Many things have been difficult now that winter has arrived. Although the village has been exposed, we're unable to build suitable houses in such a short amount of time, so although we knew of the potential for danger here, we still didn't want to suffer in the cold and returned to the village."

"Winter is here, so I've come this time to bring some winter rations and thick clothing for you. In addition, you can be at ease about the forest trolls. They won't ever bother you again." Han Shuo smiled slightly and comforted the dwarves.

The dwarves immediately cheered when they heard this. Their expressions were bafflingly overjoyed and filled with sincere delight and celebration.

“This is wonderful! We’ve gone through most of the rations you brought last time in recent days. The chief thought something had happened to you because you hadn’t appeared in a long time, but we also didn’t know how to help you so we could only worry about you. It’s wonderful that you came. Let’s hurry and enter to village to tell the good news to everyone.” The dwarf that had spoken before spoke joyfully as his short, stout legs moved forward rapidly, moving towards the depths of the village.

When they heard that Han Shuo had come, all the dwarves that had been warming themselves up indoors, out of the frosty winter weather, squirmed out one by one to give Han Shuo friendly greetings.

“Oh, it’s fantastic that you’re alright Han. We were very worried about you.” The dwarf warrior Bennett spoke with a look of surprise.

Han Shuo didn’t say much and proceeded to an area with flat ground that had been cleared of snow. He then took out the rations and daily necessities from his space ring with a smile. He laid them all out and gathered them into piles, covering a large area.

“These are the rations and necessities that I’ve brought with me this time, along with some thick clothes to help you guys keep warm this winter. In addition, you won’t have to worry about the forest trolls making trouble for you in the future. You can live here in peace and without worry, the forest trolls won’t be making any trouble for you in the future.” Han Shuo explained as he observed the dwarves’ delight. He felt that his actions had resulted in a proper reaction.

All the dwarves were beyond themselves with glee when they saw the ground covered with rations and daily necessities. Even the female dwarves, children, and elderly hiding in the houses came out when they heard the news and started cheering in the distance.

“Thank you so much Han, if it wasn’t for your rations and necessities, I think many of us would starve and freeze to death this winter. These rations and clothes are enough for us to make it through the winter. How can we thank you?" Chief Darwin genuflected to Han Shuo in the great gesture of the dwarves and spoke with great gratitude.

"We're friends, so say nothing of gratitude." Han Shuo responded.

To be honest, these rations and clothes weren't worth much money at all, but it was a bit difficult for merchants to transport them over. Therefore, after entering the Dark Forest, whether it was the forest trolls, dwarves, or other species, all would be willing to pay a high price in exchange for rations and daily necessities.

However, with the transportation matrix in the cemetery of death and the large capacity of the space ring, this task that would have taken a lot of people and resources to achieve was easily accomplished by Han Shuo with no difficulty at all.

"Han, you said that the forest trolls would no longer bother us, is it because the elves have already waged war against them and completely destroyed them?" The dwarf warrior Bennett thought of another matter and asked Han Shuo with great excitement.

When he asked this question, Han Shuo suddenly started and asked Bennett, "Can it be that the elves are already planning on waging a huge battle against the forest trolls?"

Nodding, Bennett spoke angrily, "Indeed, they've even invited us and said that they want to give those wicked robbers a harsh lesson. But the defensive capabilities of our village are too weak and the chief isn't planning on having us participate. Isn't it the elves that created this situation where the forest trolls won't invade us again?"

"Of course not, the scourge of the forest trolls will slowly be restrained in the future. Be at peace. Mm. Alright, alright. I still have some things to do and I'll come find you again in the future." Han Shuo spoke.

He then spoke a few random words and hurriedly left the village, despite the dwarves' efforts to keep him. Bennett said that the elves were going to wage war on the forest trolls. Han Shuo couldn't sit still after he heard that. If it was before, he would've wanted the elves to wipe the floor with the forest trolls.

But now, the forest trolls were absolutely under his control and could even be labeled as his private army. In addition, he needed the forest trolls to cooperate with Emily's mission. If the elves stirred up trouble now, that would be quite an inconvenient timing to choose.

Except, many days were necessary to travel from here to the forest trolls' stronghold. Han Shuo had many things he still had to take care of in the Empire and he really couldn't spare the time. This gave him a bit of a headache.

After thinking carefully, Han Shuo felt that there was no particular rush for things either. He'd only be delaying things by a day or two if he settled Phoebe's matters first and accompanied her to a banquet, then head for the forest trolls afterwards.

The elves making a move against the forest trolls may not take place in these couple of days. Besides, although the elves were strong, the forest trolls were no pushover either. After so many years of conflict, the fact that the elves had not wrung any major concessions out of the forest trolls had already illustrated how things stood.

When the sky was dark, Han Shuo made use of the darkness/silence to hurry back to the cemetery of death. He was in no hurry to leave immediately, so he took out a Fruit of Dagmar again and endured exceedingly painful torture within the cemetery of death, digesting the Fruit of Dagmar like last time and once again opening up parts of his brain.

When Han Shuo felt that his body had recovered and was reborn once again, the clarity of his five senses had taken another leap forward, while the concentration speed of his mental strength and the circulation speed of his magical yuan had also all improved. Han Shuo could vaguely feel that there were signs of him breaking through the molded spirit realm. It looked like he'd be able to progress to the next level of demonic magic before long.

The next stage would be the "true demon" realm. Once he entered this realm, Han Shuo would become an infant demon, truly becoming a demon in definition. The previous three stages of solid realm, open passages, and molded spirit were just to reinforce one's foundations for demonic magic. Before one became an infant demon, a practitioner didn't really count as a demonic practitioner.

Only after he entered the "true demon" realm will Han Shuo truly be considered as someone who has entered the halls of demonic magic. As an infant demon, he'd be able to fly through the air and use magical yuan to refine magical treasures. He'd be able to reforge the Demonslayer Edge all over again, and could train in various other amazingly powerful magics. He'd even be able to refine the yin demons that were a step above the original demons.

In other words, the true demon realm was a boundary. Han Shuo would have many ways to improve his strength after reaching this realm. His strength would once again take great leaps forward, so Han Shuo was filled with indescribable joy when he vaguely felt that he was exhibiting signs of breaking through.

By now, it was morning the next day, and Han Shuo didn't remain here. He used the transportation matrix in the cemetery of death to return to the Empire and walked directly back to the Academy.

After the ambiguous conversation with Fanny, Han Shuo's heart was filled with boundless expectations. Although Fanny hadn't immediately agreed to his pursuit, he basically understood Fanny's heart. He understood that if he advanced one step further, attained the level of adept mage and graduated from the Academy, he'd be able to capture the teacher's heart.

He was still a bit unclear on some parts of the new magics and more technical terms, so he had to inquire Fanny. Therefore, Han Shuo still needed Fanny's guidance in this stage.

Once he returned to the Academy and made his way to the necromancy major, he suddenly realized that he'd become a celebrity when he bumped into students from other majors along the way. The gazes that other people used to use when looking at him were filled with surprise and admiration, with some pretty female students even revealing the light of romantic interest in their eyes.

This kind of attention hugely satisfied Han Shuo's vanity. He was in quite a good mood all along the way. When he saw the attention and feelings from the pretty girls, Han Shuo even gave them friendly greetings, displaying a brilliant smile. These female students immediately ran away with short strides and reddened faces.

However, once Han Shuo passed by the training fields, his good mood was immediately shattered. The smile on his face was replaced with a darkened look. Earth rider knight Clark was standing in front of the doors of one of the necromancy major's training fields, wearing a form fitting shirt and holding a large bouquet of fresh flowers in his hand. He was looking inside with a faint smile.

Passing through the open door, Han Shuo saw that Fanny was explaining some magical theory to some necromancy students with a smile on her face. Judging from her demeanor, she wasn't affected by Clark, nor did she look at Clark at all. She was practically ignoring Clark's existence.

Even so, Han Shuo still felt ticked off by seeing Clark stand there looking soulfully at Fanny. As he took large strides to the doors of the training grounds, he suddenly darted forward and purposely exerted pressure with his right shoulder after tilting his body, scattering the bouquet of fresh flowers all over the floor.

Han Shuo had purposely lightened his footfalls in his movements just now, accelerating only when he'd walked up to Clark. Engrossed in watching Fanny, Clark had been caught off guard and reacted too late. It was a bit comical how broken and scattered his bouquet was now.

"Oh, I'm sorry, so sorry. It's just that these are the training fields for the necromancy major, and I bumped into you by accident because you were blocking the door." Han Shuo immediately appeared apologetic when he saw Clark spitting fire with his eyes and staring at him.

"Oh, Bryan, what are you doing here in the training fields today?" When Fanny saw that Han Shuo had come, her beautiful eyes immediately brightened and her whole face glowed with health. She indicated for Han Shuo to hurry up and come inside.

Han Shuo was somewhat mollified by Fanny's reaction, but Clark's existence still irked Han Shuo, and so his facial expression was a bit ugly. He looked at Fanny and then looked at the fresh flowers in Clark's hands. He spoke with a voice dripping with acid, "Just who is the noble knight Clark waiting here for with flowers in his hand?"

Fanny started and rolled her eyes bad-temperedly at Han Shuo. She then walked over as if expressing her stance, speaking a bit coldly to Clark, "Mister Clark, I think I've been clear enough. I only want to teach in peace, and hope that you'll stop bothering me. In addition, your status is noble and lofty. I don't want to be embroiled in any unnecessary trouble with you, I think you probably understand what I mean?"

Fanny's words were for Clark, but also for Han Shuo. They were an obvious refusal of Clark's pursuit and a subtle indication to Han Shuo of her own attitude, also telling him to relax and not to think too much.

Thus, when these words came from Fanny's mouth, Clark's face immediately dulled and became dejected, whereas Han Shuo felt damn good and had smiles reappear on his face again.

Clark nodded his head, hugely depressed, and sighed lowly. He took the destitute flowers and departed from the training fields with a downcast face, not saying a single word further.

"Are you satisfied now?" Reaching out a hand to pinch Han Shuo, Fanny said viciously, "How dare you not believe me!"

"Ouch, that hurts, I believe you, I believe you!" Han Shuo felt like he was on cloud nine as he pretended to be in pain.

Chapter 132: Abnormalities in the night

“Master Fanny and Bryan, what are the two of you doing?” Lisa called out from behind them, looking at both of them suspiciously.

“No, nothing.” Fanny glared at Han Shuo and pointed her finger in the direction of her lab, turning and walking inside afterwards.

When she reached out her hand, the space ring that Han Shuo had given her was displayed very prominently on her hand. Han Shuo was filled with joy after taking only one glance at it. He knew that Fanny had already accepted the ring. She was pointing in the direction to the lab, obviously telling him to wait for her there.

He hadn’t planned on lingering anyways, and he smiled foolishly as he nodded at Fanny. He then left on his own accord and walked to her lab.

After waiting there for a while, Fanny returned to the lab after ending her class in the training field. She opened the door to let Han Shuo in and asked him with her usual expression, “Alright, what do you want?”

Although Fanny was acting normally, both of them knew that their relationship had undergone a subtle shift. It was basically impossible for Fanny to maintain the dignity of a teacher in front of Han Shuo now.

Grinning cheekily at Fanny, Han Shuo smirked, “Don’t be so serious!”

Rolling her eyes bad temperedly at Han Shuo, Fanny said, “I need to be serious towards you; otherwise you shine so radiantly if I give you the slightest bit of warmth and your hands and feet become naughty.”

How were these ambiguous tones those of a teacher to a student? It was practically a flirtatious byplay between lovers. Han Shuo still felt content at heart even when Fanny was glaring at him.

Although he was delighted, Han Shuo’s willpower had gone through much tempering and he wasn’t someone who didn’t know what was truly important. He stilled for a moment, then started asking Fanny about all the difficulties in magical theory he’d run into lately.

When she saw that Han Shuo was raising questions, Fanny also turned solemn as she regained her attitude as a teacher. She carefully explained all the theories in detail detailed out all the theories for Han Shuo. When she saw how hardworking Han Shuo was, and that he could even use the journeyman magic of Bone Prison now, Fanny was happier than even Han Shuo.

She sighed after a while, "With your abilities, it looks like you'll be able to progress to adept mage before too long. I have to think for a moment before answering the questions you're asking now, and can't just answer off the cuff like I did before. It looks like I'll be unable to teach you before long."

A good student would impart onto the teacher an incomparable sense of achievement. But because Han Shuo had truly progressed too quickly, this gave Fanny some pressure. She was only an adept mage after all, and was only one level higher than Han Shuo now according to the divisions of power and levels.

Han Shuo's rate of improvement was beyond her imagination. If things progressed at the current rate, Fanny would make a weaker and weaker impact on Han Shuo. This made it difficult for Fanny to bear when this feeling permeated her heart, but she was still rather resigned to it.

"Heh heh, no matter what, you're always going to be the Master Fanny who brought me in and set me on the right path. Hehe, even if our relationship changes in the future, your identity as my teacher will never change." Han Shuo's brain was working quite fast at the moment, and he could more or less guess her current thoughts based on the changes in her expression. He immediately spoke to her with a smile.

Shaking her head with a slight sigh, Fanny's beautiful brows immediately creased and she spoke in a worried tone. "Our Babylon Academy only has Gene and I as the two teachers in the necromancy major. We're only adept mages. When you learn all of our knowledge and have no one to teach you then, your rate of improvement will surely face obstacles. I'm most worried about this!"

"You're thinking too much. When that day truly arrives, there may even be an even better way to resolve things. You don't need to worry that much at this time." Han Shuo could clearly feel Fanny's concern for him. However, with the existence of the cemetery of death, Han Shuo believed that as his strength improved, he'd be able to make it into the further depths of the cemetery of death. He could vaguely feel that the inner depths of the cemetery of death would have ways to help him become even stronger.

Fanny seemed to think things through with Han Shuo's speech and she nodded with a smile. "Perhaps you're right, I am indeed thinking too much. Alright, it's getting late. Go practice magic if you have nothing else. I'm going to go get dinner as well."

"How about if we go to dinner together?" Han Shuo's heart lurched as he offered this naughty suggestion.

"Humph. Dream on. I will have nothing to do with you before you become an adept mage. Mm, hurry and leave now. You're never up to any good if you stay here." Fanny smiled and waved a magic staff in her hand, trying to get Han Shuo to leave.

Han Shuo was in no rush either as he yelped accordingly and backed up towards the door. Just as he was about to be swept out of the lab, he suddenly moved like a flash of lightning and kissed Fanny, laughing merrily as he made his escape amidst Fanny's embarrassment.

"Darned kid, I'll get you one day!" Fanny said huffily as she slammed the lab door closed with an audible clang.

At this moment, something registered in Han Shuo's mind as he suddenly heard a low panting sound. Three original demons suddenly flew out without a sound and floated towards the origin of the sound.

Earth rider Clark was hiding by a fence post in the distance, his originally handsome features distorted by anger. He was staring at Han Shuo with a look of hatred, and Han Shuo was quite familiar with that kind of look. That was how Fitch had been looking at him before he'd taken his revenge.

His heart chilled, Han Shuo suddenly felt that this was a bit tricky. Clark was an earth rider, and Han Shuo had witnessed the might of his strength before. Although Han Shuo's strength had taken great leaps forward, he was well aware of his limits and knew that he absolutely couldn't take Clark on alone. It was a bit difficult to be hated by such a character.

Privately weighing up solutions to take care of him, Han Shuo walked slowly towards the dorm. The earth rider Clark was following close behind him, leaving silently only after Han Shuo walked into the dorm. Through his observation via the original demons, Han Shuo could clearly see the expression on Clark's face and knew that Clark wouldn't take things lying down.

With his strength as an earth rider and the methods he displayed in the Dark Forest, Han Shuo believed that if Clark was to make a move against Han Shuo, he wouldn't try hidden subterfuge like the kid Fitch. It was likely that Clark would bring about an attack as indomitable as a thunderbolt once he commenced, and would absolutely give him no chance to come back. With Clark's strength and confidence, he would never leave anyone alive.

Clark and Claude were brothers, and so their personalities were exceedingly similar. They were both people who appeared forthright and full of sunshine on the surface, but were characters that were filled with darkness inside. Han Shuo had long since discerned this point and thus he'd been privately on his guard.

Han Shuo didn't linger in the dorm that night, but rather hid himself in the old warehouse, placing one original demon in the dorm. He wanted to see if Clark would take advantage of this opportunity to bring about a devastating blow to himself.

The warehouse was as messy and dirty as usual as all sorts of useless items were shoved within, only to be cleaned in the morning by Borg and Carey. Now that Han Shuo was tall and buff, and more than double his original size, the warehouse was a bit of a tight fit for him. But for security concerns, he still had to do so.

When all was quiet in the dead of night, Han Shuo meditated silently to concentrate his mental strength. As he remained alert mentally, his entire body seemed to meld with the color of the night. His breathing and heart beat decreased at an astonishing pace. If it wasn't for the fact that heat remained within his body, bystanders would've thought he was a dead man.

The speed of his meditations was much faster than previously. Although Han Shuo had been mentally prepared for this phenomenon, when he felt the concentration speed of his mental strength was much faster than before and that his mental strength was replenishing at a flabbergasting pace, he finally understood that the level of his mental strength training had surely outstripped ordinary mages.

After who knew how long, when the frosty night was about to pass, the original demons finally discovered Clark's body, just when Han Shuo felt that he'd overreacted and Clark wouldn't come by. In stark contrast to the Dark Mantle or any other nightwalker, Clark didn't conceal himself at all. He still wore the clothes he wore during the day, but his face appeared a bit overcast. He strode in from afar and didn't arouse anyone's attentions.

When he arrived at the window of the room Han Shuo lived in, Clark dashed forward and leapt upwards, flying through the air and landed adroitly within Han Shuo's room.

"Although I don't have concrete proof, the disappearance of my younger brother Claude must surely have something to do with you. Don't think that I'm too harsh, it's that you're simply too irritating. You'll vanish after today, and Fanny will never find traces of you even if she searches." Clark muttered to himself after landing through the window and surged forward like lightning, stabbing downwards with his sword.

Han Shuo had used some of the pillows in the closet to set up his bed and made it so that someone did seem to be sleeping there. Therefore, when Clark stabbed downwards and even made a faint sound ring out with his sword, it gave him a feeling that something was amiss. Clark pulled back the blanket to see that there were only pillows inside. His face changed slightly.

He stared off in space for only a moment and immediately put things back as they were. He retreated from the room like lightning and seemed to plan to return along the way he came.

Just as this moment, the original demons patrolling the area suddenly felt another person approaching. This person was like a shadow in the night, his body was almost glued to the wall of the classroom building and observing Clark's actions from afar.

Han Shuo had thought that this person was in cahoots with Clark, but when the person followed surreptitiously behind Clark after he left, Han Shuo immediately understood that this fellow's target should be Clark. He was greatly startled as he hadn't thought so many random, bizarre matters would take place in the Academy.

As he saw Clark and that person run in the direction of the knight school, Han Shuo was deathly afraid that the original demons wouldn't be able to see everything clearly because they needed to keep a distance. He immediately dashed out of the warehouse and kept an exceedingly far distance from the two, observing them through the original demons.

When the original demon followed them back to the knight school, Han Shuo discovered that Clark entered one of the rooms and sat there without speaking. This room was where Clark had once spoken to Duke. It seemed like this was where Clark lived now.

The shadow that had been following Clark made its way here and stood for a while in the distance after seeing Clark enter a room. He then made his way soundlessly in another direction in the knight school.

He sent an original demon to remain within Clark's room and had another keep watch on the surroundings. The third original demon followed behind that shadow, trying to glean more information about it.

After a short while, the shadow made its way to an isolated room in the knight school, lifted up a few tiles on the roof and bounded into the room from above.

"You've come back." Lawrence was sitting in the dim room and holding a cup of hot tea in his hand, speaking faintly to the shadow that had landed from the roof.

Han Shuo was greatly astonished. He hadn't thought that the shadow's final point of return would be Lawrence's room. As the son of a great finance minister in the Empire, Lawrence had actually bought black iron ore from him a while back. Han Shuo had even sparred with Lawrence, and had some goodwill towards this person. To think that he'd sent someone to follow Clark!

Han Shuo suddenly thought of Candide's words to him the first time he'd arrived in the Dark Mantle. Candide had said that Lawrence's identity was uncommon, and had reminded him that if Han Shuo walked too closely with Lawrence, it could result in attracting an enormous amount of trouble. Candide had wanted to speak further about Lawrence's identity, but didn't say more.

When Han Shuo saw this scene, he immediately understood that Lawrence's identity wasn't as simple as merely the son of a great finance minister. The son of a finance minister wouldn't warrant such a reminder from one of the three heavyweights of the Dark Mantle.

"Yes, Clark went to the necromancy dorms after leaving his room and darted into one of the rooms. He seemed to want to kill one of the students. However, I saw him walk out with a dejected look on his face and didn't hear any sounds of fighting. He likely didn't find who he was looking for." The shadowy figure responded.

Lawrence was suddenly interested as he looked at the shadowy figure. "Oh, that is a bit odd. Right, tell me which room did Clark enter?"

When the shadow described the location of Han Shuo's room, Lawrence was taken aback and then smiled mysteriously, "So he'd wanted to make a move against Bryan. Heh heh, this is interesting. Quite interesting. It looks like I need to sit Bryan down for a good conversation."

Chapter 133: I want to kill him too

“He’s just a necromancy major student, is he really worth that much attention from you?” The shadow spoke in surprise.

“Heh heh, he’s not ordinary! There’s many mysteries surrounding him and even I can’t figure out what secrets he holds now. This person is quite interesting.” Lawrence spoke slowly with a smile.

“The goal of Clark’s visit to the knight school should be you this time. Most likely, he and that Duke from the Kasi Empire wanted to make a move against you, but for some reason, their mission was aborted halfway through and Duke suddenly left our country. This entire matter is very bizarre.” The man continued his report.

Nodding his head and remaining silent for a while, Lawrence opened his mouth to say, “Alright, you are dismissed for now. It’s not that easy for Clark to make a move against me in the knight school anyway. Hmm. It looks like I need to move first and eliminate Clark.”

The shadow didn’t say much when he heard those words and jumped up onto the roof, squirming out from a hole beneath the roof. He vanished into the distance as Lawrence sat inside, silently sipping his tea and contemplating something.

The sky had already brightened at this point as the figure left and flew towards the mountains behind the Academy, walking even further out. Han Shuo couldn’t blatantly continue his pursuit either because of the lightened sky. Add to that, the matters of today, Han Shuo decided to momentarily give up on investigating that fellow.

Making use of the time before the students of the knight school had awoken, Han Shuo returned to the necromancy major early in the morning. He spent the morning alone in the dorm, practicing necromancy magic as usual and silently contemplating Lawrence’s identity, and his relationship with Clark.

Han Shuo moved to the Academy’s cafeteria for the first time at noon, resulting in a small riot.

Each major of the Academy had their own independent cafeteria, the dark major was no exception either. The cafeteria was divided into two, with the lower level being completely free. Students were free to partake after turning in their tuition fees, but of course, what was free naturally didn't taste that good.

There was another level upstairs that many chefs were in charge of. Its level was much higher than the one beneath it. Of course, the food on this level could only be enjoyed by spending additional gold coins. It was usually for students who were more well off.

Han Shuo was no longer a poverty stricken scholar. There were enough gold coins stored in the crystal cards that were in his space ring for him to enjoy life as he would. Therefore, he didn't linger on the first level, went directly to the second. He swiped his crystal card to order a few expensive and exquisite dishes. He took a table for himself and started pigging out.

After last time's battle, Han Shuo had become a celebrity in the school. Those enjoying their meals were now all dark major students. Although Han Shuo had gained glory for the dark major last time, his actions hadn't won respect for the dark major. Rather, he had thrown dirt in their faces. So when he appeared on the second level of the cafeteria, he had attracted everyone's attentions.

Han Shuo paid no attention to any of this. As his strength and breadth of experience grew, he slowly paid less and less attention to these Babylon Academy students. In his heart, these students were only kids who'd never seen the outside world, so they posed no threat to him.

"Eh, so there you are!" Lisa exclaimed softly as she and Lawrence walked through the door. She smiled and walked over to Han Shuo with Lawrence.

Lawrence smiled and nodded at Han Shuo from afar, then he went off to order his own food. Lisa sat down peremptorily in front of Han Shuo and she looked at the looks full of hostility around her. Her charming face chilled as she stuck her hands on her waist, "And just what are you looking at? What is there to look at here?"

Although the little witch Lisa was in the weak necromancy major, her bad temper was renowned throughout the entire dark major. Therefore, when she yelled, those glaring at Han Shuo had their expressions turn ugly and they ducked their heads, muttering a few curses and then turned their heads again.

“Pay no attention to them, they’re just jealous of you.” Looking around her and cursing angrily, Lisa sat down merrily and stared at Han Shuo.

At a loss for words internally, Han Shuo said, “Then just let them be jealous. I won’t lose any hair over their jealousy, but, if anyone dares materialize their jealousy into action, then I can promise that they won’t only be short of hairs!”

Han Shuo had spoken softly in the beginning, but when he noticed that there were still people staring at him in hatred, he raised his voice with a cold face, filling it with a warning tone.

Han Shuo hadn’t dealt killing blows in last time’s combat display, but the cold remoteness and resolution had already told everyone that he was absolutely not someone who was kindhearted and would show mercy. The bystanders then had even had the strange impression that if it weren’t for school rules, Han Shuo might very well have truly coldly killed those people.

Therefore, when Han Shuo issued those warnings with a angry face, those who hadn’t lowered their hostile gazes after Lisa’s hectoring slowly ducked their heads in the end.

“Heh heh, it looks like you’re quite unpopular!” Lawrence walked over from afar as he carried a tray of exquisite food. He said down across from Han Shuo with a smile, next to Lisa, after giving a plate to her.

Shrugging, Han Shuo said diffidently, “The key thing is that some people are truly too bored. They’re incompetent, but have a strong sense of jealousy. Not only will they not be grateful if you show them a friendly face, but they’ll think you fear them instead.”

“Indeed, I deeply empathize with your perspective.” Lawrence chuckled in agreement and nodded his head to say so.

Amy and Athena, the two girls from the necromancy major, suddenly appeared at this time. When Lisa saw the two take another seat, she hesitated and then picked up her plate. "You guys chat, I'll go sit with Amy and the others."

Lisa stood up after she spoke and made her way down two walkways, greeting Amy and the others in the distance and sat down with them.

Han Shuo and Lawrence were the only ones left after Lisa's departure. Because of Lisa and Han Shuo's repeated warnings just now, there was a large area of free space around Han Shuo. Therefore, no one should be able to listen in on their conversation.

"I've heard that Clark likes Fanny, but he left with a face full of dejected failure today because of your appearance. Did such a thing happen?" Lawrence seemed to ask randomly with a slight smile.

Han Shuo was frantically going over things at this moment in his heart. He lifted his head to take a glance over Lawrence and responded with seeming indifference. "How could such a thing have happened? Master Fanny turned down Clark because she wasn't interested in him. This had nothing to do with me, don't you go sprouting random nonsense."

Lawrence's expression abruptly turned normal after Han Shuo's words, and he then spoke merrily, "Bryan, ah Bryan. We're friends, do you want to lie to me? Rumors of the matter between you and Master Fanny is all over the dark major. They say that nothing comes from nothing. I, for one, don't believe that there's nothing between the two of you."

"Say whatever you want to say." Han Shuo declined to comment. He lowered his head and continued eating, seeming to not mind Lawrence's words at all.

"I happen to know a bit about Clark's personality, he's not as just and kind as he appears on the surface. It looks like you've offended him. I've also heard that he suspects that you killed his little brother. It looks like you're in a spot of trouble!" Lawrence continued to speak and used his eyes to silently observe Han Shuo's expression. When he saw that Han Shuo was completely unmoved, Lawrence remained silent for a bit and continued to speak, "Bryan, we're friends, right?"

Nodding, Han Shuo put down his cup and looked at Lawrence with a smile, "I'd say so!"

"Then alright. Since this is the case, I'm willing to bet that Clark will definitely make a move against you. I hope you believe me." Lawrence spoke seriously.

"Of course, when I returned to the dorms today, I saw that the blanket on my bed had traces of it being sliced open. It was a good thing that I wasn't in the dorms yesterday, otherwise you likely wouldn't have seen me today. I thought for a bit and felt that only Clark would want to act like this towards me." Lawrence had beat around the bush and said so much. His aims were slowly revealing themselves. Thus, Han Shuo knew what Lawrence was trying to do and stopped talking in circles, directly admitting to things.

When these words were spoken, Lawrence's eyes lit up and he stared at Han Shuo in astonishment. He then flashed a brilliant smile and nodded, "You're not a simple character at all. So you'd been prepared in advance! And to think that I'd been worried for you. Mm. Since you treat me as a friend, I can actually help you take Clark down."

These words were the main point. A glimpse of astonishment flashed through Han Shuo's eyes as he took a deep look at Lawrence. He lowered his head and spoke lowly, "You mean to say, you'll team up with me to kill Clark?"

A prickle of fright rippled through Lawrence as he was shocked. He looked around and said lowly, "Bryan, what makes you think that?"

Han Shuo stared at Lawrence, pausing for a bit. When he'd stared at Lawrence so that he caused the hairs on the back of the latter's neck to stand up, he spoke lowly, "Lawrence, when you spoke of handling Clark just now, I could feel your killing intent. I can be certain that you also have these sort of thoughts too, right?"

It was Lawrence's turn to become silent after these words were spoken. It was like he was meeting Han Shuo for the first time. Lawrence looked at

Han Shuo with an odd look on his face and was silent for a long while before nodding. He sighed, "Bryan, I bow to your knowledge. That's right, I want to kill him too!"

"This isn't a place to talk. I have some things to do today. Come find me tomorrow afternoon. Perhaps we can come up with a good plan." When Lawrence also spoke of his desire to kill Clark, Han Shuo suddenly didn't look at Lawrence anymore. He lowered his head and ate nonchalantly, speaking lowly as he did so.

Also similarly silent, Lawrence and Han Shuo sat across from each other and ate with lowered heads. They didn't speak anymore, and didn't raise their heads to look at each other again.

Maintaining this bizarre situation for a while, Han Shuo stood up after, walking outside with leisurely and unhurried strides. When Han Shuo was about to walk out of the cafeteria, that was when Lawrence suddenly raised his head and looked intently at Han Shuo's back, speaking in a voice audible only to him, "What a frightening fellow!"

When he left the cafeteria, Han Shuo dwelled no more on what had happened. He left through the mountains to the back of the Academy and hired a carriage when no one was looking, heading for the Boozt Merchant Guild.

This was the day that Han Shuo had set an appointment with Phoebe. The materials needed to refine the earth elite zombies and the forest trolls' rations still needed to be done through Phoebe.

Han Shuo was also starting to make preparations to refine the yin demons that were a step higher than the original demons after advancing to the true demon stage. Han Shuo had also discovered a place of extreme wood in the sacred ground of the forest trolls. This way, he could also refine the wood elite zombies and would have to trouble Phoebe for more materials.

When he arrived at the Guild, Han Shuo learned from Fabian that Phoebe had yet to return. Phoebe had left instructions with Fabian that if Han Shuo swung by, to have him wait for a bit. She would return later in the evening.

Seeing that the night was still young, Han Shuo had Fabian lead the way to catch up with Jack. When Jack heard that Han Shuo had arrived, he was also delighted. He found an empty place for the two of them and they began chatting happily.

Han Shuo learned from Jack that Phoebe quite valued him due to Han Shuo's recommendation. Jack was apprenticing beneath the best teacher in the Guild, learning how to keep the books and knowledge of how to operate a business. It looked like Phoebe was planning on cultivating Jack into someone of Fabian's status.

Phoebe finally returned when it was night and spoke immediately when she saw Han Shuo, "I've been busy all afternoon and made evening wear for you. Come with me to my room and change into it. Let me see if you fits you well."

When Phoebe said that she had spent all afternoon to make evening wear for him, Han Shuo felt something odd stir in his heart. His heart lurched as he ambled confusedly after Phoebe, following her to her room.

Chapter 134: An awkward encounter

They entered Phoebe's room and stopped in front of an enormous mirror. Phoebe then stopped by a pile of black evening wear hemmed with exquisite, rolled gold edges that included a full set of boots and undergarments.

"Change out of your clothes first and I'll help you with the exterior wear in a moment." Phoebe left after handing the pile of clothes to Han Shuo and went to wait outside.

Han Shuo looked at the dress shirt, boots, and bow tie with an aggrieved look. He hesitated, then followed Phoebe's request anyway and put them on. He looked at himself in the mirror and felt that he'd noticeably become more vigorous and handsome.

"Are you done yet?" Phoebe asked outside.

"Yes, I'm done." Han Shuo responded.

When she heard Han Shuo's response, Phoebe walked in from outside and looked Han Shuo up and down with her clear eyes. She nodded, "It fits you very well. You look quite dashing in these clothes!"

"Oh, is that so? I feel quite good as well." Han Shuo smiled faintly with a careless response.

"I'll help you with the outer jacket." Phoebe walked next to Han Shuo and picked up the jacket in Han Shuo's hands with ease. She didn't wait for Han Shuo to speak and took the initiative to help Han Shuo into the jacket, her expression quite happy.

The two of them were close to each other as the faint fragrance wreathed around Phoebe wafted into Han Shuo's mouth and nose. Add to that Phoebe's indescribably tender movements, this all made Han Shuo's face flush and heart race.

After Phoebe had helped Han Shuo into all pieces of his evening wear and helped him tie his tie, Phoebe took a small step backwards and focused her sparkling, beautiful eyes on Han Shuo, taking a deep look.

“I hadn’t thought that you were so fit. This set of formal wear appears to be quite form fitting on you.” Phoebe breathed softly with some surprise as she looked attentively at Han Shuo.

“Then, did you finish what I asked you to do?” Han Shuo finally couldn’t help but ask what he cared most about after holding in his words until now.

She rolled her eyes ill temperedly at Han Shuo, saying unhappily, “Can we not talk about your business for now, and talk about them after the banquet ends?”

Han Shuo hadn’t thought that his careless question would incur Phoebe’s unhappiness. He thought privately that a woman’s heart is difficult to guess alright. He was asking someone else for a favor and so could only nod his head with a rueful smile.

“Alright, alright. Don’t give me that unwilling and reluctant look. I promise you that as long as you accompany me to the banquet and back, you’ll leave the Guild satisfied.” Phoebe said when she saw that Han Shuo was sporting a wry grin.

She then told him to wait for her for a bit and turned to walk into her room. After the sounds of rifling through clothing, a stunning Phoebe dressed in a simple, elegant pale-blue dress with faint powder on appeared in front of Han Shuo.

The unadorned, elegant pale-blue dress tapered into a thin waist from the torso, fully offsetting the perfect curves of her chest and thin waist. The skirt that began around her lower body rippled like petals of beautiful flowers. It was as if waves were lapping when she walked. Her gorgeous cheeks were even more mesmerizing due to the presence of light makeup. Han Shuo was flabbergasted in the moment he saw her.

“What’s wrong, why are you looking at me in such a silly fashion?” Phoebe appeared a bit proud as she threw back her head a little arrogantly and asked Han Shuo.

“No, nothing.” Han Shuo’s lips were a bit dry and responded after swallowing some saliva.

Laughing lightly, Phoebe lifted her head and walked outside. A faint fragrance drifted around Han Shuo when she passed him. She opened her mouth after arriving in front of the door, "Let's go and attend the banquet now."

Following behind Phoebe, Han Shuo got into a carriage that had long since been prepared. Two journeyman swordsmen were acting as groomsmen and spurring the horses on into the distance.

"Where are we going?" Han Shuo couldn't help but open his mouth with a question when he saw that Phoebe was sitting in the carriage, seemingly thinking of something.

"The finance minister of the Empire is holding a banquet and has invited several notable businesspeople in the Empire. It's a meeting of the businesspeople and a good timing to discuss business." Phoebe looked at Han Shuo and opened her mouth to explain.

Starting, Han Shuo said, "Then isn't that Lawrence's father's banquet?"

"Eh? How do you know that Lawrence is the son of the finance minister of the Empire?" Phoebe was a bit surprised and asked Han Shuo with confusion.

"Lawrence and I have a good friendship, we're both from the Academy. We've also had a few transactions before, so of course I know a few things about him." Han Shuo didn't tell Phoebe that Lisa had been the one to tell him about Lawrence. He spoke matter-of-factly, making it seem that the two of them had close relations.

Phoebe didn't suspect a thing as she nodded, "So this is the case. I hadn't known that you were close to my senior brother. This rather surprises me."

The two of them chatted about about Lawrence afterwards. It was mostly Han Shuo taking the chance to ask questions and Phoebe responding. Contrary to Han Shuo's expectations, Phoebe didn't know much about Lawrence. She only knew that he was the son of the Empire's finance minister, and although they had the same master, the two of them didn't meet much.

According to Phoebe's words, Lawrence didn't seem to be one who focused on training martial techniques. He spent more time studying random things with their teacher than martial techniques, so it was no wonder that Lawrence's martial skill wasn't that extraordinary.

Phoebe was unsure about more of Lawrence's matters. She only knew that he dealt with people well and had a good relationship with their teacher. Lawrence was also a bit resourceful and seemed to have many secrets about him, but Phoebe was uncertain of that as well.

The two of them had unknowingly arrived at their destination as they chatted. It wasn't until when Han Shuo got off from the carriage that he discovered they weren't too far away from the palace.

Alighting from the carriage with Phoebe and walking to the door of a luxurious, opulent manor, there was a well mannered butler long since awaiting to welcome Han Shuo and Phoebe inside. They made their way through a corridor and arrived in a courtyard surrounded by artificial mountains and rivers. They discovered that all sorts of soft and comfortable chairs had been placed in the surroundings, with many exquisite sweet delicacies and fine wine set up in the plains around the artificial mountains.

People dressed in extravagant clothing were scattered in all areas, grasping wine glasses in their hands and conversing with a smile on their faces. When Han Shuo and Phoebe walked in, the stunning Phoebe immediately drew hot eyed stares from many gentlemen within the area as well as some envious glances from some noble ladies.

"Hello Phoebe, I'm very happy that you could come and participate in this time's banquet." An ordinary looking middle aged man with normal features called out softly from the grass next to the flowing waters, walking over with a smile.

"Uncle Eevee, how would Phoebe not dare attend an event that you've issued an invitation for?" Phoebe tugged on Han Shuo and walked in the direction of finance minister Eevee of the Lancelot Empire.

Eevee Egadi was the father of Lawrence Egadi. Han Shuo stared at Eevee, observing him closely and marveling at how Eevee could sire such a handsome son as Lawrence, given his own ordinary features. He felt it truly incredible.

“Is this handsome young fellow your boyfriend?” Eevee looked at Han Shuo with a smile and asked in surprise when he saw Han Shuo standing by her side.

“Yes, Uncle Eevee, he’s called Bryan and he’s also quite close with senior brother Lawrence.” Phoebe nodded and responded with a smile. She purposefully drew close to Han Shuo as they talked and reached out a hand to take his wrist, speaking with a look of happy contentment.

Although he knew that Phoebe was doing so to purposefully prove their relationship to Eevee, Han Shuo still felt something odd in his heart when Phoebe held onto him so intimately.

“Oh, so this is the case. Heh heh, Lawrence has returned from school today as well and is changing into his evening wear. I think he’ll be out in a bit. You can have a nice chat later.” Eevee spoke with surprise and then smiled at Han Shuo and Phoebe. “I’m a bit busy today and need to attend to other guests, I’m afraid I’ll have to leave you for now.”

“No worries Uncle Eevee, go attend to what you need to do!” Phoebe said graciously with politeness.

Eevee had just left when a middle aged man with a protruding belly walked towards Phoebe with a glass of wine in his hand. The man suddenly saw Han Shuo standing next to Phoebe before he’d reached her and his face immediately darkened, but he covered it quite well.

“It’s been a few days, but Miss Phoebe is as beautiful and enchanting as ever. I don’t know if you’ve considered the matter that I brought up to you last time?” When the person reached Phoebe, his ardent gaze stared at Phoebe without abandon as he spoke in question.

“Apologies Mister Cameron, our Boozt Merchant Guild is not willing to join your merchant guild.” Phoebe’s face resumed its cold expression as she flicked a glance at Cameron, speaking diffidently.

Cameron's face changed as he stared deeply at Phoebe, saying, "Our merchant guild exists to oppose the Brut Merchant Alliance. As members of the Brut Merchant Alliance, the McGrady Guild seems to pose quite a threat to your Boozt Merchant Guild. I hope you can seriously consider my proposal."

"Hello Mister Cameron! Who are you talking to?" A familiar voice suddenly sounded from behind as a curvacious and alluring Emily, all dressed up, suddenly appeared behind Han Shuo.

Her facial expression had been relaxed and carefree when it suddenly changed after she caught sight of Han Shuo when her body was turned. When her gaze landed on Phoebe holding onto Han Shuo's arm, her eyes danced even more as a weird look focused fixedly on Han Shuo.

Chapter 135: Giving tit for tat

Han Shuo received even more of a fright. He never thought that he'd run into Emily here. There was no way he could explain the fact that Phoebe's hand was wrapped around his arm.

"This beautiful lady is the master of the Boozt Merchant Guild." Cameron's expression grew a bit reserved when he saw Emily appear and he spoke up politely.

Emily's gaze was still focused on Han Shuo at this moment, and she only recollected herself after Cameron started speaking. She flicked a glance at Phoebe who stood to the side, saying faintly, "So you're Miss Phoebe."

"This is Madame Emily, she's of the Empire's Betteridge family. Her husband is the second son of the head of the Betteridge family, Mister Hahn." Cameron looked at Phoebe and cast some light on Emily's identity for her.

The Betteridge family was a large family in the Empire, renowned for producing famous generals for the Empire. The Betteridge family had achieved many distinguished accomplishments for the Empire over the years, with Master Hahn now retired at home due to his advanced age. However, no one dared question his influence in the military.

When she heard that Emily was of the Betteridge family, Phoebe's eyes lit up and she gave a friendly bow, "Greetings to Madame Emily."

"Hehe, you're too polite. Eh, this young fellow is quite handsome, is he your boyfriend?" Emily had lost her composure earlier, but had fully recovered by now. She chuckled and stared at Han Shuo in inquiry.

Phoebe had felt that Emily seemed to keep flicking glances at Han Shuo, but she didn't think much of it when she heard that Emily was already married. Now that she heard Emily's question, she immediately tightened her grasp on Han Shuo's arm and smiled, "That's right, his name is Bryan."

"Hello, beautiful Madame Emily, pleased to meet you." Han Shuo reached out a hand politely and wanted to shake hands with Emily.

“It’s very nice to meet you, you’re very much like one of my friends!” An odd smile clung to the corners of Emily’s mouth. She stretched out her hand and clasped Han Shuo’s, but suddenly exerted pressure when their hands met as her fingers dug fiercely into the back of Han Shuo’s hand that was facing the ground.

A wry smile suddenly appearing on his face, Han Shuo knew that Emily was definitely doing this on purpose. He grimaced and revealed a pained expression. Emily’s expression didn’t change, but was obviously in a better mood after getting her revenge. She relaxed her hand and flicked a glance at Han Shuo and Phoebe, saying diffidently, “I need to go somewhere else for now, can I chat with you later?”

“Of course!” Phoebe agreed happily.

Nodding, Emily sashayed away. She suddenly turned her head back halfway and viciously threw a look at Han Shuo when Phoebe and the others weren’t paying attention. She made a subtle ‘come hither’ motion behind her back.

“Mm. I’m going to the restroom.” Han Shuo understood Emily’s meaning and leaned against Phoebe, whispering in her ear. He then extracted his arm from Phoebe’s and left.

He made a circle first and then walked past a corridor, sneaking towards a pavilion. Han Shuo’s vision could clearly pick up traces of Emily’s path, even without use of the original demons. He avoided some people along the way and made for an artificial mountain that was a bit out of the way.

He’d just entered the artificial mountain when a shadow suddenly walked out from the gloom, giving Han Shuo’s waist a firm pinch. The person spoke angrily next to Han Shuo’s ear in a low voice, “How come you never told me that you actually have a girlfriend?”

Han Shuo didn’t even need to think to know that it was Emily. He turned the hand back on her and held her tightly, pushing her flush against the artificial mountain and running his hand over her pert bottom. His other hand clasped around her waist and kissed down on her brilliantly red lips.

“Eh... ooh...” Emily struggled twice and pounded furiously on Han Shuo’s chest. She couldn’t stop his invasion however, and her own body slowly began to grow hot and go limp.

Emily was wearing a brown evening dress today. The long, tapering dress clung tightly to her mesmerizing body figure. The curvaceous evening dress was tight on the bottom as it enclosed around Emily’s long, slender legs. It looked like the bottom half of a mermaid, further enhancing the body’s slenderness.

Breasts that looked like they were about to burst out of their fabric and a well rounded, pert bottom were firm and toned. They were also completely accessible beneath the dress and left nothing to one’s imagination, sending out a strong allure. When she sashayed, Emily sent alluring beams of beauty all over, appearing to be an incomparably beautiful woman. Han Shuo had noticed that many men present were looking at Emily with a completely distracted look, staring so hard that it seemed their eyes were about to fall out.

“Speak, what’s with that Phoebe?” After they were done, Emily bit off her words while she helped Han Shuo clean up.

Basking in his freedom from inhibitions and lying back comfortably with closed eyes, Han Shuo leaned on the artificial mountain and explained about the matters between him and Phoebe. Emily’s face warmed a little afterwards, but didn’t let Han Shuo entirely off the hook. She suddenly naughtily grabbed Han Shuo lower body and said huffily, “Phoebe that little chit looked so natural with her hand around your arm just now, she didn’t look like she was pretending at all. I think things aren’t that simple between the two of you.”

His little brother having been caught, Han Shuo exclaimed in surprise. He hastily straightened his pants and breathed a sigh of relief, explaining mischievously, “Alright, alright, don’t be jealous. We really don’t have that kind of relationship.”

“Bryan, are you here? I’m looking for you!” The original demons detected Lawrence calling out loudly and approaching this area at this time.

“Damn it, what’s he doing here?” Han Shuo felt a shiver of horror as he and Emily hastily adjusted their clothing, anxiety written over their faces.

Lawrence seemed to know that Han Shuo was here as he yelled and walked in this direction. When Lawrence was almost where they were, Han Shuo pointed in another direction and said to Emily, “Leave in that direction, now!”

Emily was also in complete disarray right now as she hiked up her dress and stumbled into a run out of there. When Lawrence finally showed himself, he laughed merrily, “I was asking people where you were and the butler said he saw you walk in this direction. You were indeed here. Eh, who’s that?”

Lawrence spoke with a smile when he saw Han Shuo and then suddenly caught a glimpse of Emily’s back disappearing in another direction. He immediately exclaimed softly in surprise and looked at Han Shuo with a look of confusion.

“No, nothing. Eh, no, I don’t know.” Han Shuo had finally gotten everything in order and was privately cursing Lawrence as a bastard. He stammered a bit incoherently when he opened his mouth.

Lawrence’s facial expression was a bit odd as he took a few glances at Han Shuo, suddenly saying, “I just heard Phoebe say that you’re her boyfriend and was about to come find you for a good chatting. I happened to see a woman leave, are you going behind my junior sister’s back and coming here to rendezvous with another woman?”

“Haha, how is that possible, you must’ve seen incorrectly, or someone happened to walk by.” Han Shuo glossed things over and then changed the topic with a solemn face, saying to Lawrence, “How do you plan on proceeding with regards to Clark?”

Seeming to see through Han Shuo’s purposeful attempt to change the subject, Lawrence looked oddly at Han Shuo and didn’t continue asking him. He said with a smile, “My father is holding the banquet today and you’re attending as a guest. You should thoroughly enjoy yourself. Let’s not talk about such dirty tasks.”

Lawrence's words happened to fall in line with Han Shuo's thoughts. He walked out with a faint smile, "Alright, then let's go back to the banquet hall."

Nodding, Lawrence didn't say much else as he left the area with Han Shuo, walking back to the banquet hall.

A melodious song had started sounding at some point as many of the guests outside had entered a large lobby. Some of these people started dancing gracefully in the rises and falls of the music. Those without partners or without interest stood around the outskirts by themselves.

Off in the distance, Phoebe's expression appeared quite irritated as she impatiently dealt with Cameron's conversation. There was another madame standing next to Cameron wearing a disdainful cold smile on her face. She seemed to be saying something to Phoebe that made her facial expression become uglier and uglier.

"What's going on?" Han Shuo asked Phoebe with a frown when he and Lawrence walked over.

"Oh, this little thing is your boyfriend? Heh heh, he's just an ordinary student at the Babylon Academy of Magic and Force. How would he measure up to Mister Cameron's wealth? Oh, are you paying for this little thing's tuition? It'd be very interesting that way!" This older lady was wearing luxurious clothing and adorned in brilliant jewels, seemingly deathly afraid that people wouldn't know that she had money. Her features were middling, but her body was curvy to the point of being over the top. She rather appeared a bit bloated.

"Eh? Who's this old granny?" Han Shuo flicked a surprise glance at this older lady when he walked over and exclaimed to Phoebe.

"Pfft." Phoebe covered her mouth and couldn't help but laugh. Her face then regained its composure as she said, "She's Madame Valerie of Lielan Garments."

"Impudent thing, with which eye did you see an old granny?" Valerie was beyond incensed as she placed her hands on her hips and glared at Han Shuo.

Pointing at his left eye, Han Shuo said, "This left eye." He then pointed at his other eye and continued, "This right eye."

A trace of a delighted smile curved Phoebe's eyes as she came over to tenderly hug Han Shuo's arm, saying to Valerie, "He's just this blunt, I'm truly sorry!"

As a swordmaster, Phoebe's own strength was unquestionable. However, she wasn't adept at verbally sparring with others and couldn't bear to let go of her face to do so. With Han Shuo at her side kicking things off however, she didn't mind going with the flow and adding fuel to the fire.

"Old granny, you're already at an advanced age. You should be staying at home and enjoying the little bit of time you have left. What are you doing in the outside world putting your face out there? In addition, the difference in our ages is simply too great to the point of being unable to communicate. If you're truly that lonely, you should find someone similar to your age to communicate with!" Han Shuo ignored Valerie's anger and mocked viciously. He then pointed at someone in front and said, "There, you should communicate with that old gentlemen over there. You can flirt with him and maybe experience some old love!"

There was an elder man with white hair, holding a cane, in the direction that Han Shuo was pointing in. He was sitting on a chair not too far away and slowly drinking wine.

Valerie took a look at the old man and was so angry that her cheeks were red. The two meatballs in front of her chest swayed back and forth as she turned to stare at Han Shuo angrily, unsure of what to say.

Following Han Shuo's gaze, Cameron, Phoebe, and Lawrence looked at the old man at the same time. Phoebe laughed lightly and pinched Han Shuo covertly, seeming to admonish him for making fun of the elderly. Cameron looked at the old man and turned his head, telling Valerie in a low voice to not be angry.

However, when Lawrence looked at the old man, his facial expression suddenly changed as he was a bit shocked and taken aback. He finally revealed an odd, wry smile.

“Little fellow, I heard you were talking crap about me from afar.” The old man suddenly turned at this moment and looked at Han Shuo with bright, piercing eyes, speaking with a resonant, carrying voice.

Chapter 136: Difference in position

Han Shuo was flabbergasted when he saw the old man get to his feet and walk over. He hadn't discovered it when the old man was sitting, but when the old man drew himself up straight, he immediately appeared extraordinarily awe inspiring. His body was tall and fit, and didn't appear old and clumsy in the slightest.

Phoebe pinched Han Shuo covertly, wanting him to hurry and apologize. Lawrence, on the other side, kept throwing glances at Han Shuo, seeming to urge him into an apology to the old man.

When he saw the old man walk over, Han Shuo said with a rueful smile, "Your ears are truly sensitive, but I didn't say anything bad about you, just wanted to introduce a good companion to you in your old age."

"Oh? Now this is a bit interesting. I didn't think you'd be so kindhearted." The old man walked over and flicked a glance at Han Shuo, one that sent chills running through his heart. He then pointed at Phoebe and smiled, "Do you mean this beautiful lady? If it's her, I'd be very happy to, heh heh!"

Han Shuo was immediately gobsmacked by these words as Phoebe's face turned bright red. She flung a vicious glance at Han Shuo, seeming to blame him for playing with fire.

"No, this lady is noticeably unsuitable for your age. I was thinking that this old granny is more suitable for you." Han Shuo felt that his aura was a bit blocked when he faced this old man. He opened his mouth and continued spouting off random nonsense in an effort to shake off that oppressing feeling.

On the other side, Lawrence appeared a bit anxious and continued sending certain looks at Han Shuo. However, he was still a bit too late as Han Shuo spoke his mind.

"Such a rude thing lacking breeding and vision. In what way am I a good match for this old thing? Are you seeking death?!" Valerie was exceedingly angry as she bawled out at Han Shuo with a violent look. She also glared at the elder as well for good measure.

“Little fellow, you must be joking. Although I’m not young, I’m noticeably younger than this madame. I think she’d be more suited for my late grandfather.” When the elder heard Valerie also curse at him, he actually merrily riposted in the same manner.

Although his age was advanced, his words made Valerie out to be completely worthless. Valerie was so incensed, that smoke was almost rising from her seven orifices. She immediately stared at the old man angrily and shouted, “Damned decrepit thing, how dare you say that about me.”

A slap rang out as Lawrence suddenly made his move and flung a slap at the rich madame. He said with a cold face to Cameron off on the side, “Uncle Cameron, your friend is simply too rude. We don’t welcome people like her. Please have her leave immediately.”

Cameron’s face changed slightly as he couldn’t quite understand why Lawrence would do so. The madame almost wanted to go on a rampage. She covered her mouth as a few traces of blood could be seen. It looked like Lawrence hadn’t held back with this slap.

Cameron began to subtly feel that something was amiss and was about to ask what Lawrence meant when Finance Minister Eevee walked over from the distance. He immediately cried out with surprise when he came over and gave a bow, “Master Hahn, what brings you here?”

Han Shuo’s heart jumped with surprise as he suddenly remembered Mister Cameron’s talk of Emily’s identity earlier. The current head of the Betteridge family was called Hahn. As he thought of this and once again looked at the elder, he vaguely guessed at his identity.

Cameron’s face also changed as he shouted coldly at Valerie in a low voice. “Shut up!” He restrained Valerie, who’d been about to continue making a fuss. He then spoke fearfully to the elder, “My apologies Master Hahn, we’ve been most impolite. I will take her away now and personally visit in a few days to offer my apologies.”

Valerie had finally recovered herself in this moment and her expression was filled with awe and fear as well. She stood there in a dumb haze, not sure of what to say. It was obvious that she was stunned by Hahn's identity.

"No need, our Betteridge clan cannot accommodate such characters like you." Hahn on the other hand, maintained his usual expression and cast a cold look at the two of them as he spoke faintly.

Cameron's expression was still humble as he continued to express his apologies and kept tugging the dazed Valerie, quickly walking outside. He kept bowing and offering his apologies before he left, until his figure vanished into the distance.

In this world, even with all the many gold coins that merchants could earn, their status in society would never be on par with nobles such as Hahn, particularly when Hahn's clansmen were senior officials in the military. They wouldn't dare offend Hahn no matter what.

"Little fellow, you've got some guts." Seeing that Han Shuo still had the same expression on his face after Cameron had left with clear explanations from Lawrence and Eevee, Hahn was a bit surprised to see that Han Shuo didn't offer an apology or appear that frightened. He snorted softly at Han Shuo.

Actually, when he found out Hahn's identity, Han Shuo was also a bit shocked. However, he hadn't said anything that was too offensive just now so he wasn't that afraid of Hahn. When he heard Hahn's words, Han Shuo said with a conciliatory smile, "I was just joking with you earlier, I think you surely wouldn't mind with your magnanimity."

"Heh heh, I'm a very narrow minded person. Everyone knows that." Hahn laughed oddly and responded with something outside of Han Shuo's expectations.

This made Han Shuo feel a bit taken aback as he stood there, at a loss for appropriate words.

"Eh, honored father, what are you guys standing here chatting about?" Emily had changed into a new set of clothes at this time and first flicked a glance at Han Shuo, then looking at Hahn in surprise.

Emily had married Hahn's second son, but that unlucky fellow hadn't had time to consummate the marriage before Hahn had sent him onto the battlefield. He hadn't returned in the end and had left Emily a widow. Therefore, after Emily had become a Betteridge daughter-in-law, old Hahn kept reprimanding himself and felt that he owed something to his son and daughter-in-law. It was said that he dearly loved Emily and was even closer to her than his own son.

"Nothing much, just that I've met an interesting little fellow. Mm, let's go, let's go. I'll go dance with you. I don't understand you at all. You used to never bring a date to these banquets, but wanted to drag me along this time. You'll be the death of me sooner or later." Old Hahn first responded carelessly and then complained merrily as he walked towards the dance hall.

Emily had wanted to speak more, but she could only quickly follow after old Hahn. When she left however, Emily still raked Han Shuo with a subtle glance.

Old Hahn's words seemed to subtly indicate something. He thought about it briefly and understood that it might have been because of him to make Emily change. He was quite touched internally.

"Eh, so she's Madame Emily. It should be my first time meeting her today, but why does her back look a bit familiar?" Lawrence looked in the direction that Emily had disappeared in and flicked a glance at Han Shuo, questioning in a low voice.

Lawrence's words seemed to point at something, particularly that last glance at Han Shuo. This made Han Shuo feel that Lawrence seemed to have discovered something, but to Han Shuo, his relationship with Phoebe was the fake one, and thus he wasn't afraid of Lawrence telling Phoebe about his relationship with Emily. He felt that he was on firm ground at heart and wasn't panicked.

"Little Phoebe, you didn't offend old Hahn, did you?" Finance Minister Eevee looked at Phoebe and spoke with a bit of worry after Hahn and Emily had left.

“Never mind Phoebe’s matters, heh heh. Go back to whatever you were busy with and don’t worry. I’ll take care of things here.” Lawrence stood by the side and suddenly spoke up.

Eevee seemed to listen very much to Lawrence as he nodded and didn’t say much else after Lawrence had opened his mouth. He left with a slight smile.

“Don’t worry, Master Hahn isn’t someone who confuses right from wrong. He won’t make trouble for you, I can promise that. The ball has already started, the two of you can go enjoy yourselves.” Lawrence spoke with a small smile at Han Shuo and Phoebe after Eevee had left.

“Mm, understood senior brother.” Phoebe smiled and pulled on Han Shuo’s arm, seeming to say randomly, “Come, dance with me.”

Han Shuo started and said a bit frantically, “Forget it, I don’t know how to dance, not at all!”

Phoebe started and hesitated. Just as she was about to give up, her eyebrow suddenly lifted and she said a bit mischievously, “No problem, I can teach you. It’s really simple.”

“Forget it, I’m really stupid. It won’t be good for me to embarrass you in front of everyone.” Han Shuo shook his head and declined with a wry smile.

Her slender, white neck rising up, Phoebe said with a bit of a pout, “What did you promise me before? Don’t try to change the subject.”

Phoebe wrapped her hands firmly around Han Shuo’s arm after she’d spoken, with no thought of whether or not Han Shuo had agreed. She tugged him in the direction of dance floor, not giving him the chance to decline.

Chapter 137: Strange happenings at the ball

Han Shuo didn't know whether to laugh or cry. He was resigned as he allowed Phoebe to drag him over to the dance floor.

Original and most up to date translations are posted at volaretranslations.

When he reached the dance floor, he noticed that a few merchants and other nobles were holding onto the waists of their ladies and dancing gracefully in the center of the floor. Han Shuo stood dumbly in a corner after being led there by Phoebe, watching the others dance with narrowed eyes and praying that he wouldn't be too embarrassing later.

"Here, place your arm around my waist." Phoebe's body twisted as she stood across from Han Shuo. Her slender jade hands rose as she placed one into Han Shuo's right hand, guiding Han Shuo's left hand to her waist with her right hand.

All other reproductions of this chapter are theft.

When Phoebe's small hand landed in Han Shuo's large hand, Han Shuo's heart lurched slightly as it never had before. A smooth, warm, and boneless small hand felt quite comfortable to the touch. Han Shuo couldn't help but squeeze her hand, which caused Phoebe's body to tremble all over, her cheeks reddening unknowingly.

She glared at Han Shuo and said softly, "No monkey business allowed!"

When Han Shuo's large hand landed on Phoebe's waist and the two of their bodies were flush against each other. They could smell the scent on each other, and their breaths would even waft into each other's mouths and nose when they spoke.

Original and most up to date translations are posted at volaretranslations.

"Come, I'll lead you in dancing, just follow my rhythm." Phoebe was a bit scared to look directly at Han Shuo as she lowered her head and said that. She took a deep breath in, placing her empty hand on his shoulder and slowly walked towards the dance floor.

Phoebe appeared to let go of her reservations with the elegant and wonderful music. She didn't continue looking down at the floor, but stared soulfully at Han Shuo with her beautiful eyes. She explained the main tenets of dancing to Han Shuo in a low voice.

Translator etvolare has not given permission for her works to be reproduced elsewhere.

With Han Shuo's current intelligence and observation skills, he'd already grasped the main principles of dancing after a round of observation. When he listened to Phoebe's detailed explanations and was lead forward by her, he immediately grasped the knack of dancing and slowly became familiar with dancing after his initial unfamiliarity.

Phoebe was a swordmaster, and thus her strength, flexibility, and agility was naturally extraordinary. After enduring the reforging from the magical yuan, all the various functions of Han Shuo's body were even more outstanding than an ordinary person's. When their two bodies leaned close to each other and settled into the same rhythm, their dancing style was very much in sync and quite mesmerizing.

Their bodies leveraged the fact that their hands were clasped together to move in incredibly harmony. Han Shuo would understand what Phoebe meant when she sent a glance over, and his footsteps would move with Phoebe's, in moving slowly, quickly, or turning. This kind of wondrous sensation caused ripples of odd emotion in both Phoebe and Han Shuo's heart.

When the song was over, both of them felt that they hadn't given full expression to their thoughts, so when the next song sounded, Phoebe pulled Han Shuo into a dancing form again. Their strong accordance perfectly demonstrated another dance to perfection, and their handsome and beautiful forms attracted much attention from the many eyes within the dance floor.

Reproduction of any GDK chapter is theft, even if credit is given.

Just as he was feeling greatly content, Han Shuo's eyes swept the area and suddenly noticed Emily dancing with old Hahn not too far away. A pair of eyes full of the light of jealousy were fixed intently on him. This made Han Shuo's heart jump and flash a rueful smile at Emily from afar.

When she saw that Han Shuo had only just now noticed her gaze, Emily was a bit angry as she viciously rolled her eyes at Han Shuo, telling him that she was truly jealous.

There was really no way that Han Shuo could explain anything at this moment, and could only smile wryly at Emily in the distance. Several waiters appeared from three directions at this time. Their gazes were flitting back and forth and their steps light and slow, as if trying to hide something.

Han Shuo hadn't paid them much attention at first, but his sensitive ears seemed to filter out the wondrous music and heard a very, very faint tinkling sound. This seemed to be the sound that jade and jewels would make after hitting metal.

Do the right thing, don't support theft.

His thoughts racing slightly, Han Shuo's expression tightened as he began to involuntarily closely observe the waiters who had just appeared. As everyone was mesmerized in romantic dance steps, the appearance of several waiters holding trays with wine glasses on them was a bit jarring. In addition, although the waiters' gazes were calm, they would involuntarily travel to old Hahn in the middle of the dance floor, with a cold light subtly appearing when their eyes landed on him.

As Han Shuo continued his observations, he noticed that the waiters were slowly converging on one area. He also judged that Emily's and old Hahn's footsteps would travel to where the waiters were in another few breaths. Han Shuo vaguely felt uneasy as he noted the waiters' gazes.

His mind racing now, Han Shuo tilted his forehead forward and brought his lips up to Phoebe's ears. Lost in the dance, Phoebe suddenly sensed Han Shuo's movements and her heart was thrown into disarray. The redness of her cheeks spread out to her nape.

She moved her neck slightly to the left, seeming to want to put some distance between Han Shuo's lips and her neck. She then quickly lifted her head and snuck a glance at Han Shuo after moving her head like that, noticing that Han Shuo had furrowed his brow. This made her heart panic even more.

She hesitated a bit and seemed to decide on something, rolling her eyes at Han Shuo inwardly. Her neck didn't continue to dodge and stayed there as she seemed to be waiting for something with reddened cheeks.

"Those waiters seem to want to take action against old Hahn and Madame Emily. I made a joke out of old Hahn just now earlier. Move there with me now and I'll go and repay him for his favor." Han Shuo finally placed his lips next to Phoebe's ears and said softly.

Her body had first trembled in anticipation, Phoebe's body had then changed from soft and pliable to quite stiff after Han Shuo had spoken his words. A trace of disappointment flashed through her heart, after which she widened the distance between her and Han Shuo to use her eyes to indicate that she understood.

Looking at Phoebe's gaze, Han Shuo knew that Phoebe had fully understood his intentions, given how in sync he was with her. He nodded and didn't say much else, covertly changing their dance moves together. The two of them exchanged positions with another couple at an unknown moment and swiftly danced towards old Hahn and Emily.

To Han Shuo, he wasn't doing so in order to pay back old Hahn any sort of favor. He was doing so because Emily was there. Emily was dancing with old Hahn and when she saw Han Shuo winking incessantly at her, she thought that Han Shuo was feeling guilty and wanted to explain something. She glared huffily at Han Shuo and turned her head to no longer look at him again, seeming to still be greatly angry.

Seeing danger approach, Han Shuo's heart became more and more calm. His gaze focused on the bodies of the waiters and mentally charted out their plan of action and timing. He measured it all up clearly and accurately calculated when they would make their move.

When Emily and old Hahn finally started moving towards a corner, Han Shuo's large hand on Phoebe's waist suddenly abruptly exerted force and they took two quick steps towards Emily.

At the same time, the gazes and demeanors of the waiters, who'd waited for quite a while suddenly made a drastic change from their peaceful looks. A cold and severe presence emanated from their bodies. The waiter, with the tray of wine glasses in his hand, suddenly flung it forward, sending the tray and its contents flying towards Emily and old Hahn. Their bodies moved at the same time as a dagger, sparkling with cold light stabbed towards old Hahn and Emily like lightning.

Emily and old Hahn had been dancing to the graceful music when their faces suddenly changed drastically, but when they reacted, the fatal attack was already close at hand. One dagger stabbed towards Emily as another four stabbed towards old Hahn. The five assassins moved quickly and cleanly. It was obvious to see that they were old hats with lots of tough training under their belts.

A sharp and severe whistling suddenly sounded, appearing all the more ear-piercing in the midst of the melodious music. The Demonslayer Edge shot out of Han Shuo's sleeve like lightning in accordance to his thoughts, aiming for the dagger making straight for Emily.

Han Shuo and Phoebe had swiftly whirled to old Hahn's side at this time and surged into the other four assassins attacking old Hahn before they'd had a chance to react.

Original and most up to date translations are posted at volaretranslations.com.

Having long since made their preparations, Han Shuo and Phoebe acted to defend at the same time. Han Shuo used a dwarf-forged dagger to block a hit, Phoebe's longsword twirled fiercely and strongly deflected two daggers into the sky. Making use of this opening, Han Shuo shoved fiercely with his back and tried to push old Hahn away from the danger zone.

To his surprise, old Hahn wasn't pushed out of the way after his strong shove. Old Hahn's upper body swayed slightly as he reached through the air to snatch out a flying tray. Old Hahn hauled it behind him and blocked the last dagger with a loud clang.

The suddenly appearing Han Shuo and Phoebe had blocked three of the daggers that'd been for old Hahn, completely throwing the assassins plans into disarray. The five waiters looked at each other and didn't make another move. They retreated quickly towards the outside as screams and panic ensued on the dance floor, with everyone trying to flee and hide.

Old Hahn and Phoebe both set their sights on different assassins and immediately ran off in pursuit. As the two of them were taking action, Han Shuo quickly ran to Emily's side and grabbed her hand, saying lowly, "Are you alright?"

"I'm fine, go after the assassins!" Emily was a senior executive of the Dark Mantle alright, she didn't display any panic and immediately admonished Han Shuo lightly.

"It's none of my business. it's good as long as you're alright. Everything else has nothing to do with me!" Han Shuo shook his head and picked up a wine glass from beside him at random, staying where he was and slowly sipped at wine as he looked at Emily, having not the slightest intention to rise.

"You, you darned brat!" The meaning behind Han Shuo's words was obviously placing Emily's safety first and being too lazy to care about anything else. When Emily heard his words, she was both angry at Han Shuo not listening to her and touched by his concern. She pouted and rebuked him.

The dance floor was in complete chaos at this moment as the merchants reacted to the sudden developments. They were all fleeing in mass panic to the courtyard beyond the dance floor. No one was paying any attention to the conversation between Han Shuo and Emily.

Seeing that there were fewer and fewer people on the dance floor, Han Shuo and Emily finally walked outside. A grave, sharp sound sounded when they reached the door as the Demonslayer Edge threaded through the frantically fleeing crowd and suddenly landed in Han Shuo's palm, vanishing without a trace in the blink of an eye.

"The person who attacked you is dead!" Han Shuo said faintly to Emily when he put the Demonslayer Edge away.

When the Demonslayer Edge had flown back just now, it had been flying close to the ground. The people panicking around it naturally hadn't noticed, but Emily had been walking with Han Shuo and had seen the Demonslayer's miraculous, automatic flight with her own eyes. It'd then concealed itself within Han Shuo's sleeve, making Emily flabbergasted.

"What's the weapon that you're using?" Emily's voice trembled as she looked in disbelief at Han Shuo.

The Demonslayer Edge that could fly according to his own will naturally appeared mysterious and unpredictable in this world. It was understandable that Emily was so shocked.

Smiling mysteriously, Han Shuo explained with a dashing air, "This has to do with the martial arts technique that I'm training, I'm not at liberty to explain. All you have to know is that my weapon is indeed a bit different."

"You wicked brat, just how many secrets are hidden amongst yourself?" Strange lights danced in Emily's eyes as they focused on Han Shuo, asking with extreme curiosity.

Shrugging, Han Shuo smiled without responding and gave off the air of unfathomable mysteriousness. This made Emily's teeth itch to throw all decorum to the winds and bite him where they stood.

Just as Han Shuo and Emily were conversing quietly, the chaotic scene slowly came under control as Phoebe, old Hahn, a slightly frantic Finance Minister Eevee, and Lawrence, with a darkened expression, returned from all directions.

"One made it out and the others committed suicide. There was nothing to be gleaned from their bodies." Phoebe first looked in surprise at Han Shuo and Emily and spoke lowly to Han Shuo when she returned.

Han Shuo and Emily had already put some distance between themselves before Phoebe and the others had returned, and their expressions had gone back to normal and didn't express anything special in particular. Therefore, although Phoebe was curious why Han Shuo hadn't gone after the killers and stayed with Emily, she didn't ask anything.

"Little fellow, thank you for your aid in saving me and Emily." Old Hahn said approvingly to Han Shuo with a smile after he walked over.

"Not at all, treat it as me returning the favor after making a joke out of you earlier. Heh heh, this way even if you really were narrow minded, you likely wouldn't be able to find it within yourself to make trouble for me." Han Shuo winded at old Hahn and said teasingly.

Old Hahn laughed heartily when these words were uttered, "Fascinating, what a fascinating little fellow!"

Chapter 138: We can be together

“I’m so sorry, it was because our defensive precautions weren’t good enough that it caused you to be frightened!” Finance Minister Eevee spoke with a look of worry to Hahn.

Waving his hands, Hahn’s face was grave as he said seriously, “Don’t apologize Eevee, I won’t hold you responsible. Don’t investigate this matter further, I’ll handle it myself.”

Eevee first heaved a sigh of relief when Hahn said so and then asked askance, “Why?”

“Honored father, since grandpa Hahn has already spoken, don’t think too much about it.” Lawrence’s face was a bit dark as he spoke to Eevee.

“Mm. Lawrence, don’t you worry either. I know who did this.” Hahn flicked a glance at Lawrence and seemed to know something as he spoke.

Lawrence nodded his head remotely and looked towards Han Shuo and Phoebe. He hesitated for a moment, then asked Phoebe, “Did Cameron try to force you to join his organization’s merchant alliance?”

“Yes, but I’ve already turned him down.” Phoebe responded.

“Very good, don’t give in at any cost, otherwise your Boozt Merchant Guild will face incredible danger.” Lawrence who contemplated silently gave this piece of advice to Phoebe.

Taking in their conversation, Han Shuo made his observations. He seemed to notice something from Lawrence and Hahn’s discussion, but since the two of them didn’t talk about anything tangible and so he didn’t inquire further.

As for the other matters, Han Shuo wasn’t that curious about them. Since this assassination attempt had taken place, it was difficult for the banquet to continue. Han Shuo lazily stretched his waist and said to Phoebe, “I believe the banquet is already over. Can we leave now?”

Rolling her eyes at Han Shuo, Phoebe bowed slightly to Eevee and old Hahn. Then, with a slight smile, she said, “We still have matters to attend to, so we'll be taking our leave now.

Eevee couldn't very well keep them now that such a matter had occurred. He sighed and said lowly, "Alright, be careful on your way back."

"Bryan, remember what we said, I'll come find you tomorrow. Don't disappear for another few days now!" When he saw that Phoebe and Han Shuo were about to leave, Lawrence suddenly reminded Han Shuo not to forget their arranged appointment.

Han Shuo nodded in understanding. Just as he was about to leave, Hahn opened his mouth again, "So you're Bryan, heh heh. I'll remember you."

Smiling and not responding, Han Shuo and Phoebe left the banquet along with some other merchants who were leaving in a hurry. Everyone boarded their carriages and traveled back along their original routes.

"Just who wants to kill that old Hahn? Even I know of Master Hahn's accomplishments for the Empire. Many of the current officers in the military are Master Hahn's former men. With his status, there shouldn't be that many within the Empire who dare make a move against him." Phoebe's beautiful eyebrows creased slightly after they entered the carriage and she spoke with a distant voice.

To remain vigilant, the three original demons had been deposited nearby and were continuously keeping an eye on the surroundings. When Phoebe had voiced her thoughts, Han Shuo thought briefly and said, "We helped old Hahn today, but that may bring great trouble to us. But for your merchant guild, the advantages of having a good relationship with old Hahn definitely outweigh its disadvantages. Mm, however, this matter doesn't have much to do with me as I'm not afraid of anything. But you, you should be careful."

Phoebe flashed her teeth in a smile, "Don't you worry, I know my limits."

"Then I won't speak further. Can you now fully detail the items you promised me?" Han Shuo nodded and then drew himself up slightly, staring straight at Phoebe as he asked this question.

"Alright alright, just look at you. I found someone to professionally assess the wealth that you obtained from that unknown source. It's worth roughly forty thousand gold and can fully cover those random items you purchased. In addition, I've thoroughly prepared large amounts of rations for you. However, the space ring with a larger capacity that you want will take some time. There's temporarily no supply of that in the market." Phoebe's spirits hadn't been dampened with running into an attack on the banquet, as she spoke quite lightheartedly at this moment.

When Phoebe spoke thus, Han Shuo finally breathed a sigh of relief in his heart and revealed a very gratified expression. He spoke with a laugh, "I'm at ease with you at the helm. Forget about the space ring, I've just gotten one with an even bigger storage space."

"When we arrive at the Guild, you can take what you need. I've already taken the risk of gathering all of it earlier when I didn't know if you'd have enough gold coins to pay for it all. Be at ease, there won't be any troubles." Phoebe threw her head back proudly and said softly.

Han Shuo was a bit touched by Phoebe's words. He knew that Phoebe had taken the risk to do so purely based on their friendship. Phoebe had even thought of paying for some of it herself. From this point alone, he could conclude that Phoebe was a friend worth having.

Just as Han Shuo was feeling gratitude, Phoebe reached out and pinched Han Shuo's cheek while glaring at Han Shuo. "Also, you lied to me that you didn't know how to dance. You were so well practiced! You're the worst."

In all honesty, Han Shuo wouldn't have known how to dance if it wasn't for this time's banquet. He'd learned on the spot and muddled his way through. It was only because his brain had been developed so much that his ability to pick things up was incredible. This was why Phoebe had the misconception that Han Shuo was pretending that he didn't know how to dance.

"I'm innocent! I really didn't know how to dance before, you were a good teacher!" Han Shuo complained with an aggrieved air.

"Do, do you like dancing with me?" Phoebe suddenly lowered her head to ask softly, and she looked a bit bashful.

Nodding, Han Shuo responded carelessly, “Yes, it feels rather nice.”

“Then, I want you to promise me that you will dance with me again next time, or I won’t help you with your matters in the future.” Phoebe’s face lit up as she spoke happily.

“Alright alright, I promise you. As long as you help me seriously, I’ll promise you anything you want. I have no problem killing or setting fires for you, not to mention dancing.” As there were plenty of annoying matters that he’d have to bother Phoebe with in the future, Han Shuo agreed without any hesitation.

The two of them didn’t run into any troubles along the way as they returned amidst happy chatter. When they arrived at the Boozt Merchant Guild, Phoebe took out the materials that Han Shuo needed, including a few warehouses full of rations and daily necessities, almost filling up Han Shuo’s current space ring.

“Keep the other gold coins for me for now. In addition, these are the other materials that I need you to purchase, please continue collecting them for me.” The wood elite zombies and yin demons all needed to be refined. Han Shuo had therefore prepared another list and gave it to Phoebe after taking care of everything that needed his attention.

Looking over the list that Han Shuo handed over, Phoebe looked at Han Shuo with surprise, saying, “Rations for hundreds of people and all sorts of bizarre materials, just what are you planning on doing?”

“Heh heh, nothing much nothing much. Just take care of it for me and I’ll make up for the insufficient gold to you next time I visit.” Han Shuo didn’t explain much as he uttered this sentence and left the Boozt Merchant Guild, returning to the Academy alone.

When Han Shuo returned to the necromancy major, it was already pitch black outside. The chilly wind of winter howled through the night and it was so bone achingly cold that no one wanted to venture outside.

However, there was a figure standing not too far outside the entrance to the dorms. It was so cold that the figure's small face was beet red as it continued to circle around a stone statue not too far away.

"What are you doing here?" Han Shuo couldn't help but ask when he saw that the figure was Lisa.

"I'm waiting for you!" Lisa's eyes displayed happiness when she saw Han Shuo appear and she quickly walked towards Han Shuo, speaking urgently.

His brow furrowing, Han Shuo took off the coat on his body and covered Lisa with it. He asked in bewilderment, "Why are you waiting here for me on such a cold night?"

Han Shuo's movements made Lisa overjoyed, but she then spoke with a worried face, "My mother is sick and so I need to make a trip home. I may not come back for a while, so I wanted to say goodbye to you."

"If it's just a goodbye, you can tell me tomorrow. Why must you wait for me in the middle of the night?" Han Shuo hesitated when he saw that Lisa was still shaking, then activated the "Mystical Glacial Spellfire", his right hand swayed slowly as waves of warmth came forth, warming Lisa's trembling body.

"You often disappear mysteriously. I was afraid that I wouldn't be able to see you because I'm leaving tomorrow, which is why I waited for you here. I didn't know if you'd come back, but in the end you did." Lisa breathed out softly in comfort when her body warmed up and then spoke softly to Han Shuo.

"Eh, you don't have to go out of your way to come say goodbye to me." Han Shuo felt that the atmosphere was a bit odd and was silent for a while before responding.

Lisa remained silent for a while, her gaze was fixed onto Han Shuo. She suddenly said, "Bryan, you said that you like me. You're no longer a slave or an errand boy now. Come home with me, let's be together."

Han Shuo was greatly astonished by her words as he faced her, and he stood there, dumbfounded. He didn't know what to say when he saw Lisa rigidly standing there with a solemn expression.

Chapter 139: The fate of the original demons

“Eh, I have a buttload of things to do right now. I’m afraid I don’t have time to spend with you.” Han Shuo thought for a moment and then responded to Lisa.

With regards to Lisa, Han Shuo had rather disliked her in the beginning, but with his later interactions with her, he realized that Lisa wasn’t a vile person. She was just a bit too naive. Particularly towards the end of their interactions, Lisa had protected him in many ways. This made it difficult for Han Shuo to maintain his heart of revenge towards her like he had before.

However, as much as he didn’t dislike Lisa, he still didn’t have any feelings from her. Therefore, when Lisa made her suggestion, Han Shuo could only fob her off with a careless excuse.

When Han Shuo spoke thus, Lisa remained silent for a bit and then nodded. “Alright, I’ll return home tomorrow. I hope you’ll be stronger the next time we meet.”

Lisa was noticeably distracted when she said this, and she smiled after her words concluded. She walked back to the girls’ dormitory alone, her back shaking slightly as she did so.

Shaking his head and sighing lightly, Han Shuo only returned to his room when he saw Lisa disappear into the distance.

When he arrived in front of the dorm, Han Shuo had just pushed open the door when a longsword came stabbing towards his chest. His face changed drastically, and he tried to back out of the doorway without even thinking about it.

However, the sword’s movement was like lightning, as it’d already arrived at Han Shuo’s chest after the cold light had flashed. Han Shuo’s rapidly retreating body tilted sideways as he quickly fell to the side.

Pfft, the longsword stabbed deeply into Han Shuo’s body through the ribs, injuring him in that instant. The ambusher then quickly retracted the longsword with ease.

Although pain wracked his body, Han Shuo didn't make a sound as the Demonslayer Edge flew out from his right sleeve. It pierced through the door and stabbed directly towards his attacker.

Dark green fighting aura suddenly exploded as the door turned into splinters. A figure, with its face covered, suddenly appeared in front of Han Shuo with the accompaniment of metallic clashes.

With Han Shuo's current powers of vision, all concealment would basically be useless as long as he'd gotten a glimpse of a certain person once. Han Shuo hadn't thought that Clark would be so scarily dogged. He'd retreated with all due haste when he hadn't discovered anything last night, but he'd laid in wait tonight to make a move against Han Shuo.

Because he'd felt a bit apologetic towards Lisa, Han Shuo hadn't been on guard this late at night and thus he'd been less cautious. He hadn't thought that Clark would actually ambush him and so had been injured when the ambush started.

As an earth rider, Clark's fighting aura should've been milky white. However, it looked like he finally understood that Han Shuo wasn't an easy target after last night's failure and was being much more careful this time.

These thoughts flashed through Han Shuo's mind like lightning. Before the only partially hidden Clark sent another stroke his way, Han Shuo looked at Clark as his legs suddenly exerted power and he madly retreated outside, crying out loudly, "Assassin!"

Bam! Han Shuo's back suddenly ran into a sturdy and chilly wall. When he turned back for a look, he discovered that there was only air behind him. His heart immediately tightened as he understood that Clark had come prepared this time.

Han Shuo had concentrated all his attention after Clark had appeared and could sense that there was no one else around. As an earth rider, for Clark to have set up the water magic in the surroundings that was this sturdy ice wall meant that he must've used a costly magic scroll that didn't need magic as a catalyst. This was why he could release the sturdy ice wall in the surroundings, completely blocking off Han Shuo's escape path and all sound from traveling.

Indeed, the sturdy ice wall didn't break when his back hit it. Han Shuo patently saw a jeering look flash through Clark's eyes, his entire face so muffled that only his eyes showed. Another ball of dark green fighting aura then flared out, forming the appearance of rolling waves and churned towards Han Shuo.

His mind racing, the Demonslayer Edge, that'd just returned to his hand, suddenly howled as magical yuan infused it. It danced with exceedingly hot flames to counter Clark's wave of fighting aura attack.

It was a pity that Clark felt a strange power suddenly appear when he sensed the magical yuan infused Demonslayer Edge, halfway through his attack. His eyes flashed and Han Shuo discovered that the roiling fighting aura attack was dark green in the front, yet milky white in the back.

He didn't even need to think that Clarke was afraid of failing when he sensed the unknown power. He finally exposed his hidden strength and fully displayed the ferocity of an earth rider.

Although his magical yuan was limitless in power, Han Shuo had only been training it for a few months. He knew that it would be difficult for him to defend against this all out attack. He weighed his options with extreme speed in his mind, and the three original demons circling Clark instantly melded into Clark's body and ate away at his essence with reckless abandon.

"Agh!" The silent Clark immediately screamed hoarsely in agony when the original demons started eating away at him. The milky white fighting aura, that he'd just released, was partially pulled back into his body in an attempt to destroy the three rampaging original demons.

Bam! sounded out as Han Shuo's magical yuan and Clark's fighting aura finally clashed. Han Shuo staggered backwards, his mind a bit woozy.

Suddenly, three pricks of pain reflected in Han Shuo's nerves, and his somewhat foggy mind instantly cleared. He understood that this meant that the three original demons had already been destroyed in Clark's body. He focused his concentration and looked at Clark, noticing that Clark was looking at his body with panic as a strand of blood slowly seeped out from the corners of his mouth.

Because of the three original demons eating away at his essence, Clark's body was surely injured as well now. Otherwise, he wouldn't be looking at himself with such horrified eyes. After all, to the people of this world, having an unknown entity enter their body and devour their essence would be something that they would remember for the rest of their lives.

The Demonslayer Edge, newly infused with magical yuan, carried with it a burning, flaming momentum as it struck into the back of the sturdy ice wall with a howl. A sharp ping sounded as Han Shuo charged towards the hallway with a look of joy.

Just as Han Shuo threw back his head and was about to cry for help, Clark suddenly jumped out Han Shuo's window and quickly made his escape, as he'd felt the boundary collapse. He looked a bit bedraggled. It looked like he knew that with the collapse of the boundary, the plan to kill Han Shuo this time had failed and thus he immediately decided to retreat.

Opening his mouth, Han Shuo didn't call out. Given that Clark had left, there was no point in him calling for help.

Because of the sound isolation effect, although there'd been an extremely harrowing fight in Han Shuo's dorm and the hallway, it hadn't wakened any of the other students. Han Shuo's heart still pounded in fright as he looked at the shattered door and walked in silently.

The three painstakingly refined original demons had been destroyed by the fighting aura within Clark's body due to the need to contain him. However, it'd been because of the effect of the three original demons that saved Han Shuo's life. Although the three had been destroyed, Clark's body had also been injured because his essence had been eaten away by the original demons. He'd have to rest for the immediate future and it'd be tough to prepare a second attack.

“It’s alright, the new will replace the old. It looks like I can begin refining an even higher level of the yin demons. When I make it to the true demon stage and bring forth the elite wood zombie and yin demons, it’ll be your death sentence then Clark.” Han Shuo murmured to himself.

The next day, morning.

Lawrence came looking for Han Shuo according to their agreement, and the two sat down in Han Shuo’s room.

“Clark came by last night, I was almost unable to see you again.” The door was still shattered and there were noticeable traces of a fight around it. Han Shuo didn’t hide anything and spoke frankly to Lawrence.

Giving a start of shock, Lawrence was astonished, “So soon?”

Nodding, Han Shuo said again. “Yes, I didn’t think that would happen either. However, Clark’s body has also been injured and I don’t think he’ll make another attempt any time soon. You don’t need to worry about anything.”

“You, you harmed Clark?” Lawrence looked at Han Shuo with disbelief as he asked in shock.

“Yes, but if you think that means my strength is greater than Clark’s, you’d be dead wrong. I harmed him through a fluke, and if it wasn’t for me evading in time, I would’ve definitely been killed by him. This person is really difficult to shake off.” Han Shuo’s face was grave as he spoke lowly.

Even without Han Shuo’s reminder, Lawrence knew of how thorny Clark was, given his greater familiarity with the latter. Although Han Shuo didn’t speak of how the battle unfolded last night, Lawrence could tell from his expressions that it must’ve been very heated indeed. No matter what methods he’d used, that Han Shuo could injure Clark meant that Han Shuo wasn’t a simple man either. Thus, when he heard Han Shuo’s words, Lawrence’s opinion of Han Shuo raised another few notches.

“With my understanding of Clark, it will be difficult for us to find him now that he’s injured. He must’ve returned to a safe place to rest and recover. Our plan to kill him can only be delayed.” Lawrence thought briefly and spoke slowly.

“Alright, I happen to have to take care of some matters as well. Let’s end matters here for today and I’ll come find you after another ten days. We’ll chat then.”

Lawrence also nodded in agreement after Han Shuo spoke, then looked at him deeply before taking his leave. Han Shuo also proceeded cautiously to the mountains in the back, planning on starting the earth elite zombie first in the cemetery of death and then finishing the matter with the forest trolls.

Chapter 140: Advancing to true demon

After arriving at the cemetery of death, Han Shuo immediately placed all the materials needed to refine the earth elite zombie in the place of extreme earth.

He was in no hurry to immediately take action as he first refreshed the refining method for the earth elite zombie in his mind. He only started after he thoroughly considered the various steps in the procedures and places that he'd need to keep an eye out for.

He first found the place in which the earth qi was thickest in the place of extreme earth. Han Shuo took out the Demonslayer Edge and dug a hole, turning it into the place where he'd be putting the zombies. All sorts of materials landed exactly where they should be placed according to the setup of the formation. He coalesced all of his mental strength in his mind and went over everything clearly and cleanly. Han Shuo acted without hesitation and completed all preparations with extremely high efficiency.

When a ball of oozing, black dirt was embedded in a natural dip in the place of extreme earth, a small, weak wind seemed to start blowing in this location of extreme earth. However, upon taking a close look, one would discover that it wasn't a weak breeze blowing, but that some grey colored matter was slowly converging in the center of the pit from all sorts of directions in the place of extreme earth.

The concentration of the essence of earth qi was a indicator that the formation was complete. Han Shuo broke out in a grin when he saw this situation take place, and then immediately used necromancy magic to summon zombie warriors.

Three zombie warriors suddenly appeared in front of Han Shuo. Theoretically speaking, any zombie warrior would have the chance to become an immensely powerful earth elite zombie with the particular preparation in the place of extreme earth. However, if the conditions of the main ingredient, the zombie warriors, was better all around, it would naturally have a greater chance of becoming an earth elite zombie.

Taking in a deep breath, Han Shuo once again summoned three zombie warriors. When six zombie warriors appeared, Han Shuo gave them the order to attack each other. He wasn't sure which zombie warrior was better, thus the order for them to attack each other was the simplest and most effective method.

His brow furrowed in concentration, Han Shuo watched the struggle between the six zombie warriors with with glittering eyes. He immediately ordered them to stop after a few minutes because his eyes had lit upon one of the zombie warriors with the bulkiest build. His battle strength seemed to be a bit stronger. If he allowed them to continue fighting, this zombie would undoubtedly be in tattered pieces afterwards. This would obviously impact the refinement of the earth zombie afterwards.

All was in readiness now as Han Shuo once again ran over everything that he needed to pay particular attention to in his mind. He cast his eye over everything in the place of extreme earth with his astounding powers of observation. He gave the order to the zombie warrior after he was certain that he hadn't missed any details. The zombie warrior slowly shuffled into the pit in the place of extreme earth.

When the zombie entered the pit, its body was covered by the coalesced essence of earth qi. That grey essence of earth qi slowly seeped into every drop of the zombie warrior's bone marrow according to a profound way of circulation. The zombie warrior was a bit uncomfortable in the beginning as his body shivered slightly. A while after all the earth qi essence had been absorbed, the zombie warrior appeared to enjoy things quite a bit.

Smiling slightly, Han Shuo suddenly waved his hand and all sorts of strange, colored dirt suddenly landed within the pit, covering it in the span of an instant. The pit was also filled in by the strange dirt, but the essence of earth qi continued its slow collection and percolated through the dirt and continued drilling into the zombie warrior's body.

Having done all that he needed to do, what Han Shuo needed to do now was wait. He knew that the zombie warrior would only turn into a earth elite zombie after all the earth essence qi in this place of extreme earth had been fully absorbed by the zombie warrior. He wasn't sure how long the entire process would take either, but now that everything was proceeding according to plan, Han Shuo felt that he had no reason to remain.

Walking out of the cemetery of death, Han Shuo continuously trained and practiced his magical yuan and magic along the way as he headed further south in the Dark Forest. It was indeed a bit inconvenient without the surveillance of the original demons along the way. It was a good thing that Han Shuo's senses were extraordinary. He didn't run into any particular danger along the way.

In the dead of the night, the snow covered, chilly Dark Forest seemed to be shrouded with a silver veil. Beneath the rays of the quiet moon, the entire Dark Forest was surrounded in a still and peaceful atmosphere.

Han Shuo sat cross legged on top of a single, towering tree with thick branches. His entire body trembled as thick, viscous clouds of demonic power wreathed around Han Shuo's body. The bright moonlight couldn't pierce through this layer of darkness at all.

When the last of the Divine Brain Fruit had been consumed by Han Shuo, and he'd suffered through the painful effects of the fruit, he was finally breaking through the molded spirit stage. As essence blood slowly gathered in his mind and abdomen, a baby demon slowly started forming, interspersed with magical power and Han Shuo's thoughts.

Clouds of demonic power traveled out from Han Shuo's pores. The baby demon was a symbol of the true demon stage, indicating that Han Shuo had broken through the molded spirit stage. This stage was a line of demarcation in demonic magic. Only when the baby demon was truly formed would a practitioner really counted as having become a demon. Therefore, this was the most dangerous and risky moment.

He kept this position as the magical yuan within Han Shuo's body furiously flowed into the baby demon. The baby demon had originally only been the size of a thumb as it continued to absorb Han Shuo's magical yuan and blood essence. It slowly grew bigger and even sparkled with a faint halo.

He experienced this for seven straight days as the baby demon grew to the size of a fist. As Han Shuo's magical yuan ran dry and he grew a bit dizzy, his body trembled as he suddenly fell from the large tree in a moment of weakness.

Crying out with pain, just as Han Shuo was panicking, he suddenly sensed that the baby demon that had been continually absorbing blood essence and magical yuan seemed to suddenly form a mysterious connection with him. The magical yuan, that had been continuously taken in by the baby demon, suddenly surged back into his limbs and bones with the force of an exploding volcano. The magical yuan seemed to have fundamentally changed due to its association with the baby demon, and Han Shuo himself seemed to feel that he'd been reborn.

A thought striking him, he activated the "Mystical Glacial Spellfire" and a red and purple flame roared to life after magical yuan was infused. It felt like he was holding two lamps in his hands, appearing all the more wondrous and magical.

Waving his left and right hand around, the red and purple balls of flame suddenly flew out, landing on two different small trees. One of them was charred to cinders and gave off thick smoke, while the other instantly froze and multiple branches fell down with sharp cracks.

Now in the true demon realm, Han Shuo could adeptly control the "Mystical Glacial Spellfire". He could form the purple and red spellfire in the palms of his hands and cast them from his hands as an attack. This was the wondrous effect after his magical yuan had transformed.

The Demonslayer Edge flew out from thin air, howling in a way that would possess souls and steal spirits. The surrounding trees and hills all broke apart or exploded as the Demonslayer Edge pierced through them. When the Demonslayer Edge had circled the premises in its flight and returned to his hand, the surroundings were devastated, as if a great battle had taken place.

Now, he could finally refine the yin demons that were a level even higher than the original demons. With the effect from the baby demon, Han Shuo would be able to truly fly through the air after he practiced the “Art of the Demonic Ninth Heavens” as listed in the magical tome. Traveling thousands of li in a day would be a piece of cake.

When he had previously faced off against Clark, Han Shuo had been extremely passive throughout the entire encounter. However, now that he’d reached the true demon stage, Han Shuo was confident that he could fight with Clark on equal footing were he to encounter Clark again. He wouldn’t just duck and weave like he had last time.

As Han Shuo practiced the “Art of the Demonic Ninth Heavens” and made his way further into the southern part of the Dark Forest, he finally appeared outside the forest troll residence after two days.

Casting a glance in the distance, Han Shuo saw traces of battle outside the forest trolls’ village. Some large trees had been toppled as fired arrows and some broken weapons indicated that the forest trolls must have experienced a battle.

It went without thinking that the battle between the forest trolls and elves had already started. Han Shuo surveilled the surroundings but didn’t find traces of the elves. He didn’t know whether or not the two sides had finished their battle.

Summoning the little skeleton, Han Shuo made his way slowly towards the village where the forest trolls lived. Several forest trolls walked out in full battle gear when they reached the outskirts. When the forest trolls saw Han Shuo and the little skeleton, they all cheered in unison and cried out, “Datara!”, welcoming Han Shuo and the little skeleton into the village with great fanfare.

When he walked over, Han Shuo saw that the forest trolls around them were all holding weapons, ready to fight at a moment’s notice. Even the forest troll women and elders in the distance were holding weapons as they prepared food.

When he paid attention, he noticed that the numbers of forest trolls within the village were more than the amount that had been present when he left last time. He made a rough estimation and determined that there were at least eight hundred adult forest trolls that could wage war. That was three hundred more than the amount that had been present when Han Shuo had come last time.

However, it was obvious that the forest troll didn't have enough weapons and equipment to use. Some of the forest trolls in the back were holding only crude clubs or even rocks, with some metallic weapons spotted with rust dotting the crowd. Some were even starting to munch on tree bark and weeds. It looks like they were also short on rations.

Chapter 141: Worshipping the oracle

Han Shuo's arrival resulted in a round of cheering from the forest trolls. The old priest trembled and knelt on the ground, crying out with hot tears in his eyes, "The mighty Datara and liaison, you've finally returned!"

Taking in the sights around him, the Han Shuo felt odd emotions in his heart. Logically speaking, these forest trolls were the greediest of robbers. Han Shuo should've had a distaste for them, but when he saw the forest trolls treat him like an oracle from the gods and listen to all his commands, Han Shuo suddenly felt that they weren't that evil.

Raiding and looting was this race's innate nature. Their actions were acceptable according to the rules of survival in the Dark Forest. Just like how some of the larger magical creatures would naturally hunt some of the lower level magical creatures, this was what the forest trolls did as well.

As he looked out over them, all the forest trolls, whether elderly or young, were all looking him with great expectation and yearning. It was the most pious and reverent sort of faith a religious follower would have that was present in their eyes. It was as if one of his commands would cause them to rush headlong into death without a second thought. This kind of feeling made Han Shuo feel a bit odd.

"Don't worry, your mighty Datara would never abandon you." After surveying the surroundings, Han Shuo opened his mouth gravely after remaining silent for a moment.

The old priest translated this sentence in a shout of celebration as hot tears filled his eyes. All the forest trolls raised up empty pockets and cheered loudly, as if a guarantee from Han Shuo was enough for them to forget their current difficult straits.

Han Shuo took out hemp sack after hemp sack of rations from the space ring, piling them on the stone floor that had been cleared of snow. All sorts of thick blankets and daily necessities filled the space in front of the forest trolls, dazzling their eyes. This caused the forest trolls suffering through the harshness of winter to all caper with joy.

“These items were prepared for you to make it through this winter. The several warehouses full of rations are enough for you to smoothly make it through this winter without having to go out and raid. The mighty Datara made this trip in order to ready these items for his people.” Han Shuo’s low voice carried out smoothly over the forest trolls’ village.

As the old priest led the way with tears of gratitude bursting from him, all the forest trolls knelt in homage. The old priest then gave orders and the chief of the forest trolls led the way in lifting up the rations and daily necessities, storing them in a cave towards the back of the village.

Han Shuo followed behind the old priest and arrived at the newly redecorated temple within the village. Not only had a small sculpture of the little skeleton been erected, but there was even one of Han Shuo. This made Han Shuo feel even more odd, as if he’d unknowingly truly become their protector.

“When I arrived just now, I saw the traces of battle outside the village. Did those annoying elves start a war again?” After he walked in with the small skeleton, he gave an order and the little skeleton flopped down into the head seat. Han Shuo sat down next to the little skeleton and looked at the old priest with inquiry.

“In response to the oracle, it was indeed those pesky elves who have once again come to start a war, but be at peace oracle, your brave people will never allow the elves to win. Beneath the splendor of the mighty Datara, the elves will surely retreat in great defeat again.” Light shone from the old priest’s face as he spoke with great confidence.

Waving his hand, Han Shuo halted the old priest’s continued boasting and thought for a bit before instructing, “The rations and daily necessities that I’ve brought should be enough to last all of you the entire winter. If any more merchants want to trade for the weird items in your possession, you can trade with them.”

“In addition, don’t go out raiding this winter without my instructions. If we’re going to rob anyone, we’ll do a big heist and none of those small jobs. The mighty Datara will inform you when he's found a suitable target. You don't need to worry that you'll have nothing to do. How many did the elves bring this time and when did you start fighting? Tell me all the details."

The old priest didn't ask why after receiving Han Shuo's instructions and agreed to his request. He immediately told the forest troll warrior beside him to convey Han Shuo's two points to the chief.

The old priest then thoroughly detailed the entire battle with the elves to Han Shuo. From the old priest's explanation, Han Shuo understood that the elves would always have a big battle with the forest trolls every winter. This was because it was only then that the forest trolls were likely to be short on rations, daily necessities, and weapons, and this was when the forest trolls' fighting strength was at their weakest.

The elves had followed the same actions as last year and taken advantage of the fact that the forest trolls couldn't raid in winter to make an attack. However, their numbers weren't as great as the forest trolls' and thus they couldn't occupy at absolute advantage. They'd only just made a feint when they retreated to discuss next steps again.

From the old priest, Han Shuo knew that the forest trolls had many large and small tribes within the Dark Forest. Because this tribe had the duty of protecting the mighty Datara's sacred ground and the fact that it had around five hundred forest troll warriors, the old priest's tribe had a certain authority over the other forest troll tribes in the Dark Forest.

Because of the little skeleton and Han Shuo's appearance, the old priest had used their name to issue an order and command all the forest trolls, scattered throughout the forest, to gather, intent on giving the elves a painful lesson.

Because the mighty Datara was the god of the forest trolls, the impact of the little skeleton's appearance was immeasurable. More than three hundred forest troll warriors from four small tribes had rushed over in ten days, wanting to bask in the little skeleton's presence.

According to the old priest, the forest trolls from various tribes within the Dark Forest would gather together within a short period of time. By that time, not only would the elves' attack not have the anticipated effect, but rather they would even suffer heavy losses.

Han Shuo had been worried that the elves would kill a great number of forest trolls, but hadn't thought that because of the little skeleton's charisma, forest trolls that had been scattered throughout the Dark Forest, who normally had no relation with each other, were all rushing here as if for a pilgrimage. From the old priest's words, Han Shuo understood that when all the forest trolls gathered, they would number more than two thousand.

As for the elves within the Dark Forest, there seemed to be only a few hundred of them. Although they had a few divine archers and mages, it was very possible that they would suffer such a thorough setback that they'd lose the shirt off their own backs.

Rubbing his head, Han Shuo had a bit of a headache. He thought for a moment and then opened his mouth, "It looks like it should be the elves who should be worried this time. Mm. It's said that the elves are very rich, I think we should rob them all."

"The liaison's meaning is...?" The old priest started and asked, perplexed.

"Do you know where the elves live within the Dark Forest?" Han Shuo thought for a bit and then asked.

The old priest was stunned and then thought with a furrowed brow before finally saying, "We're aware of the general location, but have never been inside."

Nodding, Han Shuo smiled, "Alright, then when the forest trolls from the other tribes arrive, have them stay and keep the elves in check. Our tribe can travel to where the elves live and make use of this time to rob their homes."

"But liaison, why don't we stay and meet up with the brothers from other tribes and kill all of the elves' warriors? These elves are truly wicked. They always make mischief and sabotage our operations. They also fight with us every winter and have killed many of our tribe over the years." The old priest blanked momentarily and asked in confusion, not blindly following Han Shuo's suggestions for the first time.

"The nature of us forest trolls is raiding and not killing. In addition, the elves within the Dark Forest aren't the whole of their tribe. If we kill all the elves here, it will bring further trouble for us. There's no need for that." To Han Shuo, there really was no point in having the forest trolls and elves fight each other to the death. In addition, he didn't actually want all the elves to be killed. What he needed now was wealth. He needed large amounts of gold coins to support his demonic magic and practice of magic. This was why he made this suggestion.

Although he still didn't fully understand, the old priest didn't continue his questioning. After a few more days in which more forest trolls gathered from all areas, Han Shuo and the little skeleton received a tsunami of cheers and pious worship before leaving a portion of the forest trolls behind to contend with the elves. Han Shuo, the little skeleton, and the five hundred forest troll warriors from the old priest's tribe left to visit the elves' village.

On this chilly winter day, the five hundred forest troll warriors brought with them sufficient rations, thick blankets, and sharp weapons as they made for the deeper reaches of the Dark Forest.

Chapter 142: The suggestion to slaughter the dragon

Winter had arrived. The chilly wind howled ferociously as large snowflakes floated through the air like goose down, causing even the long term residents of the Dark Forest, the forest trolls, to shiver with cold and feel frostbitten. It was a good thing that Han Shuo had brought enough rations and thick clothes upon visiting this time, otherwise this cruel winter would've been a disaster for the forest trolls.

Han Shuo and the forest trolls ventured deeper into the Dark Forest over the next couple of days. Their progression this time didn't take them directly into the depths towards the south. They veered towards the west from the very beginning.

Over the past couple of days, Han Shuo also had the forest trolls craft a crude carriage for himself and he silently practiced the "Art of the Demonic Ninth Heavens". This Art needed to infuse the meridians of the hands and legs with magical yuan, and then circulate magical yuan according to a particular circulation route before being able to fly through the air.

After experiencing the foundational training of the solid realm, open passages, and molded spirit realms, now that he'd reached the true demon realm, Han Shuo's speed in practicing the "Art of the Demonic Ninth Heavens" was much faster than when he'd initially trained in the "Glacial Mystical Spellfire". Because the meridians had already been opened and reinforced, Han Shuo didn't feel the slightest bit of obstruction as he circulated his magical yuan according to the "Art of the Demonic Ninth Heavens".

Over the last few days, Han Shuo didn't continue to remain within the carriage. He came up with random excuses and secretly tried to fly through the air with the "Art of the Demonic Ninth Heavens". Once he understood how to deploy it, a bit of practice and mastering its knacks was still needed in order to truly fly. Han Shuo tried many times and could only hover. Because he still wasn't adept at controlling direction, he fell from high heights multiple times.

On this particular day, the blizzard stopped its ravaging of the land. The forest trolls also stopped in front of a mountain valley. Han Shuo was in the back, still attempting to quickly master the "Art of the Demonic Ninth Heavens". When he discovered that the forest trolls suddenly stopped, he immediately stopped practicing and quickly rushed to the front from the back.

"Liaison, the mountain valley ahead should be where the elves live. Two of our children saw a large amount of elves appear near this area a long time ago." When Han Shuo walked to the old priest, he pointed at the snow covered mountain valley and explained respectfully to Han Shuo.

He took a deep breath in and narrowed his eyes, looking into the distance. It was a pity that due to the cover of the accumulated snow, the trees and ground were all covered and thus Han Shuo couldn't actually make out anything in the distance.

A string of mysterious incantation chanted out lowly from Han Shuo's mouth as an oily green ring of light flew out in front of him, making for the snow covered mountain valley.

"Life Reconnaissance" was a journeyman magic of the necromancy major, and something that Han Shuo had just started to grasp recently. "Life Reconnaissance" had no use in attacking, it was as its name indicated, a spell that probed for life. It was useful in unfamiliar environments and unknown surroundings.

Han Shuo narrowed his eyes to sense things as soon as this magic had been deployed. He didn't sense any traces of life wherever the "Life Reconnaissance" spell flew over. When the magic had circled the mountain valley, it vanished without a trace due to a lack of mental strength.

"There are no signs of life within the mountain valley. However, we can still take a look. If the elves do live here, they must've left signs on the trees. It'd be best if we can discover the elves' homes here." Han Shou thought for a bit and instructed the old priest.

Han Shuo then took the lead with the forest troll warriors, with the hunters and priests bringing up the rear. They slowly moved alertly towards the depths of the mountain valley. As their feet creaked through the packed down snow, the forest troll warriors waved the weapons in their hands and knocked the snow off the top of the trees, kicking vigorously at the snow that had accumulated on the ground, trying to see if there were any clues.

A shout of astonishment came from a young forest troll. Han Shuo's ears captured this exclamation as his body flashed like lightning towards that location, but when he stood at the source of the sound, he discovered that the forest troll who'd cried out had already vanished without a trace.

His brow furrowing, Han Shuo paid attention to the sounds of disturbance all around and then circled the accumulated snow a few times. He finally stood on top of the messy, snowy ground and suddenly stomped down hard.

Han Shuo's body suddenly freefell with a plonk and he landed in a pitch black cave within the span of a breath. The startled cries of the young forest troll were still sounding from a corner not too far in the distance. It was quite ear piercing in the pitch black darkness of the hole.

Han Shuo's body had now adjusted to the darkness as his eyes rolled around, discovering that the cave he was in continued on through to someplace beneath the ground. He looked carefully and discovered that the entrance to this cave was quite spacious. The ground leading downwards from the entrance was a bit messy as there were many traces of footprints.

Could it be that the elves who worshipped the goodness of nature and loved the forest all lived underground? Han Shuo was a bit confused. He activated the "Art of the Demonic Ninth Heavens" after looking around dumfounded for a bit. His body slowly floated upwards and he punched upwards where he'd landed through the ground, destroying the snow covering overhead.

The forest troll, who had accidentally fallen down just now, had only slowly grown accustomed to the darkness after flailing around in surprise for a bit. He felt his way around and slowly climbed out as well.

A weird whistling sound suddenly traveled from the depths of the ground. Han Shuo gave a start of surprise as he once again released the “Life Reconnaissance” magic and aimed it towards the source of the sounds from the depths.

When the “Life Reconnaissance” magic was released, Han Shuo discovered immense traces of life and gave a great start of fright. He abruptly rushed out from the cave, threw his head back and whistled sharply.

When the old priest heard Han Shuo’s cry, he came searching for Han Shuo from a far distance away. The forest troll, who’d fallen down, had also crawled out at this point. The forest troll warriors who were observing the situation in the surroundings all rushed over with their weapons, shoveling the snow away from the cave and revealing a deep cave that could contain three or four people walking abreast.

Several arrows whistled fiercely as they were shot from the mouth of the cave, scaring the forest trolls who had stuck their heads out to take a look. The old priest’s face grew angry and was about to give the order to attack the creatures within the cave, but Han Shuo reached out a hand and stopped him.

The elves greatly loved nature and naturally wouldn’t live in such a dark and gloomy place. Han Shuo understood this and thus he hadn’t had the forest trolls immediately make a move.

Several figures shot out from the mouth of the cave with a whoosh. Their sharp ears, handsome and beauty features were the unique trademarks of the elves, but these elves had black or darkly purpled colored skin and white hair, appearing all the more different.

“It’s the dark elves!” The old priest immediately exclaimed when he saw these strange elves appear.

Han Shuo finally reacted after the old priest’s cry. This tribe was also made up of elves, but they'd forsaken peace, nature, and worship of the goddess of nature. They worshipped the queen of the night, Rose, instead. Living in the gloomy underground world for a long period of time had caused their skin to turn black and dark purple.

Their natures were evil as they burned and looted everywhere. Their society was a matriarchal one as females were mainly in positions of power. Within the underground world, they were like the forest trolls, an evil race full of villainy.

After the first couple of dark elves dashed out, even more of them slowly poured out. When they appeared, they first guarded the entrance to the cave as they stared in an unfriendly fashion at Han Shuo and the forest trolls, grasping weapons in their hands.

Han Shuo waved his hands and indicated for the old priest to not make any moves at the moment, and for everyone to slowly back up and spread out behind them. However, he also had everyone brandish their weapons against the dark elves, in case they suddenly made a move.

The beautiful female dark elves wore revealing outfits, displaying tantalizing bodies from all of them. Although it was the winter season, they still didn't seem to be willing to cover the skin on their bodies. Although the dark purple skin was bizarre, it had another sort of enthralling allure.

After a while, a beautiful, dark elf noblewoman, who looked quite stately and opulent, walked out from the cave. She was wearing a soft, leather jacket and was subtly revealing her beautiful legs with a fey air about her.

When the beautiful dark elf madame walked out from within the cave, she looked askance at the forest trolls in the surroundings and gave a coy laugh. She asked in the common tongue, "So it's our brave forest troll friends. What are you doing here?"

The old priest also knew that they'd come looking for the wrong people at this time. As the sage of the forest trolls, the old priest's experience was also quite broad. He naturally understood that the dark elves also weren't those of the light. He snorted lightly and responded, "Our children recently discovered the traces of a large group of elves. Because us forest trolls hold deep hatred for the elves, we've come to destroy them."

The fey, beautiful madame had a much friendlier attitude after his words had been spoken. She nodded, "We also have a deep grudge with those who live on the ground. They enter the underground world every now and then to attack us. The large numbers of elves you discovered must have come to do battle with us. Hehe, we've long since heard the brave ferocity of your forest troll tribe on the ground. It looks like we have a common enemy."

The old priest was silent for a bit after she'd spoke and turned to ask Han Shuo respectfully, "Liaison, what should we do now?"

Han Shuo actually wanted to rob the dark elves, but he didn't know just how many they had in numbers or how strong their fighting capabilities were. Thus, he weighed things up privately.

The fey dark elf madame was very surprised by the old priest's inquiry towards Han Shuo. Although he wore a dark robe and had covered his entire body, his body was noticeably smaller than the forest trolls and it was obvious that he was of a different race. It naturally made the beautiful woman quite surprised to see the old priest's respectful attitude.

"Brave friend, our family is facing the attacks from a dark dragon at the moment. If you're willing to help us, we can offer you a cartload of gold and a cartload of jewels in thanks. If you can kill the dark dragon, everything on it will belong to you." The dark elf madame suddenly spoke up when she saw Han Shuo stand there without a word.

Han Shuo started. He hadn't expected that these dark elves would be facing the attacks of a dark dragon right now. Dark dragons were evil dragons and also liked to live beneath the surface. The dark elves were truly unlucky to run into a dark dragon.

Frowning, Han Shuo thought for a bit and felt that this dark elf's suggestion was a bit tempting. Although the dark dragon was likely incredibly strong, but the combination of this group of dark elves and five hundred forest trolls, there should be a chance to kill him.

There was extraordinary treasure on each dragon that would cause anyone to tremble. Therefore, the rewards in killing a dragon was a temptation that many couldn't resist.

"Let's go see the underground world first. If the addition of us means we can handle that dark dragon, we'll agree to your proposal." Han Shuo thought for a moment and opened his mouth to say.

"I can promise that with the aid of your five hundred brave forest troll friends, that dark dragon is dead without a doubt. My name is Dana, you're welcome to join us in the underground world." The dark elf madame said happily and then gave a word of instruction to the dark elves.

The dark elves who had just rushed out of the cave once again re-entered the cave under Dana's orders. Dana lifted her buttocks and walked in in the very end, waving a hand at Han Shuo and the old priest.

Following behind them meant that they could back out if anything went south. Therefore, when he saw that the dark elves went down first and Dana had stayed behind to look after them, Han Shuo felt that there should be no danger and he nodded at the old priest.

Han Shuo and the old priest was in front, the carriage holding the little skeleton was in the center. Five hundred forest trolls filtered in through the cave and started walking down into the underground world that the dark elves lived in.

The further they walked, the more spacious the cave became. There were even some red-brown rocks growing down in the depths, sending out a faint light and making so that it wasn't so dark inside.

Chapter 143: Everyone with their own plans

The group walked downwards for quite a long period of time, with Han Shuo discovered that the cave was becoming wider and wider. All sorts of complex paths led in all directions.

At this time, Han Shuo concentrated and his eyes took in the surroundings, remembering the way they'd come in from in order to prevent them from being unable to find their way back.

When their footsteps downwards slowed down and Dana led Han Shuo and the others to walk on flat ground, Han Shuo lifted his head to look up and discovered that those red-brown glowing rocks were hung high overhead, appearing like the sunset that would appear on the ground.

As he looked out, he noticed that apart from the red-brown rocks covering the skies overhead, the sights all around weren't that much different from the world above. It just wasn't as cold as the outside world, and seemed to even be a bit warmer.

"Those who live below the ground also include gnomes and lizardmen, as well as super creatures like the dark dragon, apart from us dark elves. Although the world below and the world above are a bit different, it's not that much so." When Dana saw Han Shuo and the old priest look in all directions with great interest, she beamed and explained. Her mesmerizing eyes seemed to look at Han Shuo with great expression.

The dark elves were naturally lascivious, and their female elves even more so. As the matriarch of the dark elves, Dana was naturally no exception. Han Shuo only needed to take one look at her glance to understand the meaning within it.

"Why is the dark dragon attacking your tribe? Where does he live?" Han Shuo didn't pay any attention to Dana's attention as he frowned and asked her about important matters.

"We originally didn't have much conflict with this dark dragon, just that the lizardmen seemed to use some methods to bribe it into attacking us. This is because our tribe has been fighting the lizardmen for a fertile piece of land recently. We've engaged in several battles, and the lizardmen turned up with this dark dragon after they were defeated." Dana was a bit glum and anxious when Han Shuo brought up this matter and spoke with a sigh.

"How many people did you send out to battle the dark dragon? What kind of attacks does it use, will we be of any effect if we join you?" Han Shuo continued to ask.

"Our tribe has more than three hundred dark elf warriors who have already engaged this dark dragon in combat. Its body is incredibly durable, with only its head and neck being slightly weaker. It can spit out a dragonbreath attack that will eat away at flesh. It can also spew out a hot flame that has lava mixed in."

"We used magic and arrows to attack it from afar and lost more than twenty dark elves during this time, but we also successfully harmed it. It's now hiding in the swamp, licking his wounds. If we add your five hundred forest troll warriors, I am certain that we can kill it." Dana answered confidently.

Han Shuo didn't open his mouth again. Many dark elves continuously gathered along the way. When they finally arrived at swamp with deeply dark sludge, the original ten dark elves had turned into more than three hundred.

"Give us our payment first. We've decided to help you." Han Shuo thought for a bit and suddenly said with a low voice.

Dana was quite forthright as she nodded with a smile. A few male dark elves in the distance pushed two carts to Han Shuo. They lifted the grey cloth covering the cart to reveal the gleaming cart of gold and a sparkling cart of jewels. Han Shuo's eyes lit up as he looked silently at the payment, appraising it privately. He was sure that this cart of gold and jewels was worth at least tens of thousands of gold coins.

To think that these dark elves were actually quite rich. Han Shuo weighed things up privately and walked to the cart of gold and jewels, using the space ring to unceremoniously put the contents of the two carts away. As he did this, Han Shuo covertly observed Dana's reaction. From her eyes, Han Shuo suddenly detected a hint of coldness and disdain.

After ascending to the true demon realm, not only Han Shuo's five senses, but even his perceptions felt all the more mystical. He could miraculously detect many fine details, just like the expression that had just flashed through Dana's eyes. Han Shuo hadn't even purposefully paid attention to it, but still magically grasped this detail unconsciously.

A thought striking him, Han Shuo maintained his bent over posture and put away the items in the two carts. He silently debated the meaning of the coldness and disdain in Dana's eyes. A few more traces of wariness appeared in his heart as he began to secretly plot some things.

"Alright, I've accepted the items, what now?" Han Shuo lifted his head and kept an eye on the swamp as he spoke to Dana.

"Our tribe doesn't have any strong warriors and only has archers and mages to engage in long distance attacks. I think we should have your forest troll warriors lead the charge later, with our dark elves using arrows and magic to attack from behind." Dana spoke matter-of-factly.

Shaking his head, Han Shuo turned her down decisively. "No, the dark dragon also has a strong body. Our people will be going to our deaths if we take the lead. If you insist on doing this, then we can't continue this business deal."

If the forest trolls led the charge, they would face a dark dragon of unknown strength in front and the coldly scheming dark elves behind. Facing danger in this way would subject the forest trolls to danger from both sides, placing them in an exceedingly disadvantageous situation.

Even if Han Shuo hadn't discovered Dana's plotting, he would've never agreed to this suggestion. Not to mention that Han Shuo now felt that Dana had other plans, he naturally wouldn't allow such conditions to form.

Dana's smiling face darkened when Han Shuo turned her down, and she then looked at Han Shuo with some anger. “Someone has to be in front at least, do you want my weak tribeswomen to go to their deaths? We’ve paid you two carts of gold and jewels.”

“Don’t worry, we just want cannon fodder don’t we? Leave it to me. As long as you can lure the dark dragon out, I can take care of the cannon fodder. Will this do?” Han Shuo’s voice had also descended as he responded.

When Han Shuo’s words finishing ringing out, he chanted a magical incantation and a zombie warrior appeared out of thin air. Han Shuo continued chanting as more zombie warriors and skeletal warriors appeared, including a few ghouls as well. They formed a meat shield in front of Dana.

“So you’re a necromancer.” Dana nodded, but her gaze at Han Shuo had turned slightly contemptuous because he had only summoned zombie and skeletal warriors.

He paid no heed to her look and said, “Well, can you make your moves now?”

“Yes. I’ll go make arrangements and lure that dark dragon so it leaves the swamp immediately. You’ll have to immediately send your summoned creatures forward and have your forest trolls attack with us from the distance. We can’t give the dark dragon any breathing space or chance to talk, otherwise we’ll be in grave trouble.” Dana nodded and then backed up to where the dark elves were. They chatted quietly in an exceedingly low voice as they looked in Han Shuo’s direction.

It was at this moment that Han Shuo’s extraordinary ears proved their use. He could clearly hear Dana’s conversation after he concentrated. When he discovered that Dana’s words were discussing on how to handle the forest trolls, he couldn’t help but continuously laugh coldly.

He waved the old priest over and bent his head to the old priest, giving a few instructions in a low voice. The old priest was first greatly startled and then recollected his wits. He listened carefully to Han Shuo’s words and then walked off to give some order to the forest troll chief, having him act in accordance to Han Shuo's words.

A young, female dark elf walked naked to to the swamp, singing out with a clear voice as she walked. Her naked curves was tantalizing as her dark purple skin glistened and gleamed. Her buttocks from the back were full and pert, her spine smooth and alluring. She was full of a fey beauty.

The pure, desolate song emitted from her mouth, making even Han Shuo's heart caper and his mind race. When she walked to the end of the swamp, her cute feet sank into the soft, pitch black sludge as she cutely kicked at it, created not a small bit of sound.

The peaceful swamp suddenly sank in on itself, forming a huge whirlpool. The whirlpool sucked in all the sludge around it as the naked dark elf girl gave a start of surprise, evading it a bit frantically and dodging the pull of the whirlpool.

The whirlpool had been in the center when it slowly changed position, quickly moving to the little girl. Just as it was about to reach the end of the swamp, a huge wave of sound erupted from the the whirlpool as an inky black dark dragon stuck its head out. Its red eyes were like two lanterns. When its spine and sharp claws were also revealed, its body extended to tens of meters beyond into the swamp. Its body shape was huge, making Han Shuo flabbergasted as it was his first time seeing a dragon this close.

"Little wench, come play with me, don't run away." The dark dragon was full of lascivious teasing after it'd emerged. It shook its enormous body as it chased after the dark elf girl.

Chapter 144: A step ahead

It was a depraved dragon alright. Han Shuo cursed under his breath and gave an order. The dark creatures he'd just summoned walked out from the cover on either side and looked at the dark elves, ready to make a move against the dark elves along with the dark dragon.

"Come on, come on!" The dark dragon leered as its over ten meter long body took flight with a thunderous rumble, sending sludge flying every which way in the swamp.

The naked dark elf girl had panic written all over her face as she desperately ran towards where Han Shuo and Dana were hiding. Her lofty melons swayed in tantalizing ripples as her slender legs furiously churned. Her allure only increased as mud adorned her lithe body..

When the dark elf girl finally made it to the zone that Han Shuo and the others had erected, Han Shuo gave an order to the dark creatures. More than ten zombie and skeletal warriors, as well as a few ghouls, broke out from concealment and brazenly charged towards that lustful dark dragon.

Han Shuo called out at the same time and the forest trolls readied their weapons. Aiming for the dark dragon trying to rise into the sky, the forest troll hunters threw out sharp spears and javelins. In the same breath, the dark elves covered the sky with a shower of arrows and dark elf magic.

"Damnit, it's you lowly races again." The dark dragon bellowed as he opened his mouth and shot out an awe inspiring jet of flame with bits of lava mixed in.

"Stand back and evade." Han Shuo roared out, as the forest trolls quickly hid towards the back when the old priest shouted out as well. The jet of flame seared where they'd just stood, setting fire to the dry weeds and grass that littered their surroundings.

Attacks from all sorts of spears and javelins, as well as arrows and magic from the dark elves, landed on the dark dragon's durable body. They had no effect at all. The ones aimed at the dark dragon's neck, eyes, and head were all sent flying in another direction with a wave of the dark dragon's claws.

The dark dragon's enormous body soared through the air as it arrived above Han Shuo's summoned zombie and skeletal warriors. Its metal claws suddenly swiped downwards, crushing the skeletal warriors into bone fragments. The zombie warriors fared no better, their bodies falling to pieces with another swipe. They were indeed only good as cannon fodder.

The strength of the dark dragon was within Han Shuo's expectations. He didn't feel pained when he saw the dark creatures disappear into shards and fragments beneath the dark dragon's attacks. He sent a significant look at the old priest from afar.

The dark elves continued attacking as their archers, with magic bows in the back, started shooting icicle-like arrows. In addition, they also started using explosive arrows, which caused a huge disturbance and enraged the dragon even more.

"You lowly, pathetic lives will all die before the anger of I, the wondrous Gilbert!" The dark dragon Gilbert roared furiously and continued flying forward in the face of icicle and exploding arrows. As he flew close to the ground and churned the ground with his claws, it finished off the rest of the dark creatures that Han Shuo had summoned.

The dark elves, according to orders received from matriarch Dana, all swiftly dodged to the back after firing their attacks, attempting to continue handling the dark dragon from behind the forest trolls. It was a pity that Han Shuo had long since given his instructions that whenever the dark elves started moving, all the forest trolls should even forget attacking the dark dragons and race backwards in retreat with all due haste. They were even faster than the dark elves in escaping to the back.

"Bring down the stone wall!" Han Shuo roared furiously in the midst of the forest trolls after they'd arrived at a small mountain valley, not too far off in the distance.

The old priest gave his instructions and the forest trolls roared out his order. More than ten forest trolls stood at a high vantage point and threw down boulders, instantly blockading off the mountain valley and blocking off the dark elves.

When Han Shuo eavesdropped on the dark elf matriarch Dana's words earlier, he knew that Dana had long since made preparations in the surrounding valley. She'd prepared large amounts of boulders and had intended on evacuating the dark elves to the area after enraging the dark dragon, leaving the forest trolls to face the dark dragon. They'd then emerge after the battle and eradicate the surviving side. In this way, whether it was the dark dragon or the forest trolls, neither of them would escape the dark elves' grasp.

If Dana's marvelous plan had been deployed according to her ideas, then Han Shuo and the forest trolls would likely not have left this place alive. It was a good thing that Han Shuo's hearing was extraordinary and caught every detail of Dana's vicious plan. This allowed the forest trolls to be one step ahead and hurry to the mountain valley before Dana and the others could react. They then used the stones that the dark elves had prepared to seal off the valley.

"What do you mean by this?" Dana finally revealed panic as she shrieked at Han Shuo and the old priest from the other side of the stone wall.

"Nothing much, just that I've discovered this dark dragon is simply too hard to handle. I'm canceling our deal earlier, we don't intend on continuing this battle. I'll be sure to return the two carts of gold and jewels after you take out the dark dragon, and I'll compensate you for your losses as well. My deepest apologies!" Han Shuo shrugged and spoke quite sincerely to Dana.

Dana had never thought that Han Shuo would deceive her at the most crucial moment. Although Han Shuo was apologizing with a sincere face, his eyes were sinister and cold, obviously bearing ill will towards her. How could Dana be blind to it? When she thought about what she'd planned earlier, she felt her hands and feet grow cold and a huge headache throb at her temples. She was so anxious that she didn't know what to do.

“Lowly, cowardly lives, receive the rage of the mighty Gilbert!” Dark dragon Gilbert roared and sprayed acidic poison from his mouth. More than ten dark elves couldn’t dodge in time and emitted hideous screams after being covered by the acidic liquid.

“To hell with him!” A handsome elf roared angrily as the exquisitely carved longbow in his hands suddenly expanded, as if sucking in something. His originally slender body seemed to be sucked in by the bow as he started shrinking rapidly.

“No!” Dana cried out loudly, her expression a bit frantic.

“Hurry and give the order, otherwise my sacrifice will have been in vain!” The male dark elf howled as his body became stick thin. His life surged into the strange bow as the bow flared out a faint, dark light, looking quite evil and strange.

Han Shuo looked at the bow with astonishment, revealing a very curious look. After the bow sucked in the dark elf’s life, an arrow, with inky black light circling around it, formed magically on the bow. As the dark elf’s body dried out, the arrow started emanating a dangerous aura.

Even the cocky dark dragon felt danger at this moment. He started his charge, sending out streams of blazing flame. The back of the mountain valley had been blocked off by Han Shuo’s orders, so the dark elves could only face the dark dragon’s attacks and had no avenue of retreat at all.

Since things had progressed to this point, Dana had no choice left available to her. She grit her teeth and gave the order. A few dark elves threw themselves in front of the elf with the bow without hesitation, rapidly deploying all sorts of elven magic to help him defend against Gilbert’s attacks. In the span of a moment, more than ten dark elves were engulfed by the dark dragon’s flames that had lava mixed in and turned into a crisp in the blink of an eye.

A ghastly wail sounded at this moment as the arrow finally swallowed all of the dark elf’s life and shot out towards the dark dragon. Unfathomably swift, Gilbert had no chance to evade the mysterious arrow.

The strange arrow formed by the black light abruptly metamorphosed into a black cloud as it drew closer to Gilbert, eventually completely enveloping him. A string of crackles exploded from the cloud of black light, intermixed with Gilbert's pained screams. It looked like the dark dragon was enduring an inhumane amount of pain.

But as a super rank magical creature, the dark dragon still spewed out flames and poisonous liquid when assaulted by such pain. His body even landed amidst the dark elves from the air, as the black cloud enveloped him, his claws tearing all the nearby dark elves to pieces.

Even more dark elves died in a sickening fashion beneath the attacks of the flames and the poisonous liquid. Another hundred dark elves perished after a few breaths. There were less than a hundred out of the original three hundred dark elves.

When the cloud of dark light dispersed and the dark dragon's body once again revealed itself, Han Shuo discovered blood running down the dark dragon in multiple places. Even Gilbert's flesh and skin were charred and burnt. His movements weren't as agile as before and both his eyes were injured. He moved around blindly like he couldn't see anything.

"Prepare yourselves, we're going to be dragonslayers very soon." Han Shuo smiled sinisterly at the old priest behind him as he gave the order.

Chapter 145: Capturing the lewd dragon

“Kill that damned dark dragon!” The dark elf matriarch Dana no longer possessed her previous beauty and demeanor as she screamed with her hair wildly strewn all over the place.

Due to the dark dragon’s random rampaging, the dark elves scattered and dodged in all directions, occasionally running into the dark dragon’s poisonous bouts of flame. Even though Dana had the protection of the dark elves, she still appeared quite bedraggled.

Under Dana’s instructions, the remaining dark elves started attacking the almost blind dark dragon. All sorts of arrows and magic struck the dark dragon’s body, further worsening his injuries.

As an advanced rank magical creature, the strength of the dark dragon was beyond all doubt. Even with three hundred dark elves, if it hadn’t been for the male dark elf sacrificing his life to activate that strange bow, it was likely that they would have been unable to harm the dark dragon.

But up to now, because the dark dragon had already been gravely injured to the point where his eyes could no longer see, his large body had become a living target. As injuries racked his body, his speed became slower and his attacks weren’t as powerful as before.

The dark elves in the back were pushed up against the rock wall that Han Shuo and the others were standing behind. When Han Shuo saw that the dark dragon was about to die as he observed everything, he immediately nodded at the old priest.

“Obliterate the stone wall, we’ll go in and cleanup.” Han Shuo laughed sinisterly and gave instructions to the old priest.

The forest troll warriors were ready after the old priest conveyed Han Shuo’s instructions and immediately started moving the boulders away. The dark elves had long since made their preparations to clean up afterwards and dug a sloping pit not too far in the distance. The forest troll warriors only needed to exert a little bit of strength to turn the thick logs that the dark elves had prepared. The boulders rolled at a slope and surged into the deep pit in the back.

When all the boulders in the mountain valley had rolled into the deep pit, the passageway was finally opened again. Han Shuo swept the scene with a cold gaze and waved his hand, telling the forest troll to charge.

The forest trolls hunters in the back row hurled out spears and javelins with their thin arms, and the weapons whistled as they landed amongst the dark elves. Although the dark elves had been prepared for an attack, they still cried out with multiple howls of agony as the multitude of spears and javelins rained down.

Scores of dark elves were nailed dead beneath this wave of attack. The matriarch of the dark elves was so incensed that she wanted to leap over and fight Han Shuo to the death.

“Matriarch, let’s retreat!” A female dark elf elder cried out loudly.

“Shameless forest trolls, I’ll settle this with you sooner or later!” Dana’s shrill voice bawled out loudly. She then turned desolately and gave the order, “Retreat, everyone retreat!”

The dark elves, who hadn’t died yet, all ran for their lives under Dana’s orders. Even Dana swiftly left under the cover of some experts.

If roots weren’t fully removed, they’d reappear again when the spring wind blew. Since they’d erupted in full blown hostility, Han Shuo naturally hardened his heart and spoke coldly to the priest, “After them, exterminate them all.”

The forest troll chief gave the order to attack and the forest troll warriors came howling out of the mountain valley, giving chase to the remaining dark elves.

Han Shuo targeted one of the dark elves and gave the little skeleton the order to kill. Wielding the bone dagger, the little skeleton was as fast as lightning as it swept past the hordes of forest trolls, speeding towards the dark elf with the strange bow.

The male elf had expended his life earlier to activate the strange bow into shooting a frighteningly powerful arrow, riddling the dark dragon’s body full of injuries. Han Shuo was exceedingly curious about that strange bow, so he'd kept his eye on it all along.

When the dark elf, who'd used up his life had died, the bow was grasped by another dark elf. Han Shuo had the little skeleton chase him because he wanted to obtain the bow in the elf's hands.

Gilbert roared out raspily as its enormous body rolled, creating thundering sounds as he thrashed around on the ground. The forest trolls around him hastily avoided the dragon when they saw that he was moving around again.

Even when heavily injured, the strength of an advanced realm magical creature was still very frightening. The forest trolls had already seen him terrorize the dark elves, so they were deathly afraid of the dark dragon's enormous strength to the point of being unwilling to let up their guard even now.

The dark dragon's body thrashed as it slowly moved towards the swamp. It looked like it would attempt to flee back to its old nest at all cost now.

Seeing that the dark dragon wanted to flee and casting a look at the dark elves escaping in all directions, Han Shuo immediately roared at the old priest, "Split half of our force to handle the dark dragon and have the rest chase after the dark elves. Those chasing the dark elves shouldn't go too far. Even if they can't kill all the dark elves, they should return in a short amount of time.

The old priest made a simple hand gesture and half of the forest trolls, who'd all been ready to chase after the dark elves, automatically split off, with the remaining half attacking the dark dragon.

The forest trolls had more than twice the amount of numbers compared to the dark elves. Once two hundred trolls joined forces in attacking the dark dragon, it was unable to escape after a mere second.

"Wah wah... that hurts, don't hit me! Don't hit me! I surrender!" The dark dragon Gilbert cried out loudly as his large body slowly began to shrink beneath the circling black lights.

Han Shuo started, he hadn't expected that the dark dragon would actually beg for mercy. He laughed uproariously as he lifted a hand indicating for the forest trolls to cease their attacks, intent on seeing what the dark dragon wanted.

When the forest trolls had surrounded the dark dragon in the center, the dark dragon's body continued to shrink beneath the circulating black lights, slowly transforming into a humanoid form.

A tall, slender young man with burnt skin, smoke coming out of his head, and traces of blood around his eyes appeared. He grimaced and cried out with pain, continuously begging for mercy. "I surrender, I surrender!"

Casting a glance at the old priest and all weapons leveled at this young man, Han Shuo grasped the Demonslayer Edge and slowly walked in front of the young man. "There's no use in surrendering. There are many valuable things on you, your dragon crystal, dragon meridians, and dragon horns are all priceless treasures. I can obtain them all if I kill you, do you think your surrender is of any use?"

Dark dragon Gilbert immediately raised both hands and called out, "No, no! My most valuable things aren't on me. I can belong to you and form a master and slave contract with you, as long you give me beauties and treasure and keep me by your side."

Han Shuo immediately paused when this suggestion was raised, and thoughts spun madly through his mind, weighing up the possibilities of this suggestion.

"Don't hesitate, think about it. If I become your servant, I can help you kill people, burn things, and fly everywhere and take out your enemies. As my master, you only need to give me treasure and beauties to enjoy. What a good business deal this is." The young dark dragon called out loudly, as if deathly afraid that Han Shuo wouldn't agree. He then added on, "I can compromise if you don't have treasure, but I must have beauties to sleep with, or I won't do it!"

Han Shuo didn't know whether to laugh or cry as he looked at the shameless and cowardly dark dragon. He stood there, not knowing what to do. The old priest suddenly walked over to Han Shuo and hurried him, "Liaison, hurry and agree. He'll be an absolutely loyal servant if he forms a contract with you."

"Lewd dragon, why must you have beauties?" Han Shuo stared at Gilbert and asked, amused. The latter was covered in burns and blood and looked like he would die at any time, but still roared loudly for beauties.

"I don't know, I really don't know. That's what my daddy told me when I was born. Us noble dark dragons must have plenty of treasure and beauties to win respect from other dark dragons. Beauties are our goal." Gilbert's black hands kept rubbing his eyes as he answered loudly.

"Eh, is this your first time away from home?" Han Shuo stared at him and asked once again.

"You, how did you know that it's my first time away from home?" Gilbert started as turned towards Han Shuo's voice.

This lewd dragon was actually quite silly. Han Shuo contemplated silently and then opened his mouth, "Alright, I accept your request. You and I will immediately form a master and servant contract, otherwise I'll immediately kill you."

"Master, I'm your servant now, will you find beauties for me?" The lewd dragon Gilbert cried out and pleaded Han Shuo.

"I haven't found any for myself yet, you wait there on the sidelines!" Han Shuo said nonchalantly.

Chapter 146: I'll safeguard it for you

“How can you do this, you can't do this!” Gilbert's loud complaints traveled far.

“Alright, alright. Let's talk about this later. Rest up first.” Han Shuo randomly fobbed Gilbert off with some excuses and silently mused over the mental pulse he'd felt earlier.

When he'd sealed the contract with Gilbert earlier, a marvelous connection formed between the two. According to the power of the contract, Han Shuo was able to locate Gilbert's position even with his eyes closed. In addition, Han Shuo knew that with the power of master and servant, he could absolutely dictate the life and death of the lewd dragon.

As Gilbert complained and whined, the little skeleton returned to Han Shuo with the bizarre bow in hand. When the small lewd dragon Gilbert saw the little skeleton appear with the bow, it recognized the presence and instinctively dashed behind Han Shuo in a panic.

Since the bow had appeared, that meant the dark elf who'd wielded it was done for. Han Shuo took the bow from the little skeleton and held it in his hand, sensing it. He didn't discover anything uncommon about it at all. He observed it closely and discovered that the entire bow gave off a dark brown color like ancient tree bark, full of complex, strange, and mysterious patterns.

“Liaison, the matriarch of the dark elves Dana and one third of the dark elves successfully escaped.” The old priest reported what the forest troll chief had to say and stood next to Han Shuo to speak respectfully.

Nodding, Han Shuo first stored the strange bow within his storage ring and said, “The dark elves are very familiar with the underground world. They're the masters of this place and it's not strange that they'd be able to use the terrain to escape. In order to prevent the dark elves from coming back and seeking revenge, we should leave the underground world as quickly as possible. Otherwise, we'll have great trouble once Dana gathers the other dark elf clans to attack us.”

“Master, are you returning to the world above? Oh, that’s wonderful. I’ve never left the underground world. I can finally see what the outside world looks like now.” Gilbert appeared very excited to hear that Han Shuo and the others were returning to the world above and cheered loudly.

Looking at Gilbert strangely, Han Shuo asked with a frown, “Have you always lived underground? Then how did you become enemies with the dark elves?”

“Eh, there’s nothing much to it. I ran away from the Dark Dragon City underground and then got lost. I wanted to go aboveground and ran into the lizard men. They treated me as an honored guest and agreed to take me out of the underground world, and promised to help me find beauties and treasure. So I then helped them destroy the homes of the dark elves in return.”

“But when I came to destroy their village, I discovered that the dark elf girls were very pretty. It was a pity that these girls came running to me actually attacked me instead. I escaped to the swamp when I was hurt and you know the story from there.” Gilbert looked innocently at Han Shuo as he detailed what had happened to him.

Although these words were confusing, out of order, and didn’t explain many vital details, Han Shuo more or less understood what Gilbert meant. He was too lazy to inquire further and so nodded and asked, “Are your injuries serious?”

“Very serious!” The little lewd dragon scratched his head and said dispiritedly. He paused and then said, “But I’ll be able to slowly recover after some time. It was mostly that weird arrow that made me feel pain. I really don’t know why such a weak and fragile lifeform could shoot such a powerful arrow!”

Han Shuo slapped Gilbert’s black head and said, “Idiot, didn’t you see the dark elf immediately die after shooting that arrow? That was an evil arrow that consumed life in its wake. Of course it’d be strong. Don’t think you’re really something just because you have a large body.”

Gilbert cried out in pain and rubbed the head that Han Shuo had just slapped, muttering, "I'm already injured. Even though you're my master, you still can't bully me!"

Thinking for a bit, Han Shuo took out the Medusa's essence blood and gave it to the little lewd dragon. "This is the essence blood of the Medusa, it has a miraculous effect on injuries and will definitely be good for your injuries. Take it and use it sparingly, don't waste it."

"Oh, wondrous master, I salute you." Gilbert temporarily couldn't see anything because his eyes had been injured, but when he heard that there was Medusa's essence blood that could heal his injuries, he waved his hands as he kissed up to Han Shuo, finally laying his claws on the small flask with the Medusa blood."

"Bring my litter over and carry this blind dark dragon. We need to leave the underground world as soon as possible. Otherwise, we'll have incredible trouble when Dana gathers the other clans of dark elves."

The old priest also understood the danger they were in with their current situation. He gave instructions to the forest troll chief in the distance and two litters were carried over. The comfortable, spacious one held the little skeleton and the somewhat crude one held the little lewd dragon Gilbert. Han Shuo walked in front, leading the way.

It was a good thing that Han Shuo had silently taken note of the path on the way here. With Han Shuo's current memory and brain, he was able to fully recall the complicated and winding roads in his mind. They didn't run into any difficulties on the way back out under Han Shuo's guidance. When they reached the entrance passage once again and started walking into the spacious and interwoven caverns, the old priest was incredibly surprised.

"Liaison, we've only walked through this area once, yet you've remembered the entire path already?" The old priest couldn't help but ask with curiosity after holding his questions in for a while.

"Oh, this is all conducted under the guidance of the mighty Datara and has nothing to do with me." Han Shuo responded carelessly.

He gave an order and the little skeleton poked a head out of the litter, waving his little hand at the old priest and saluting Han Shuo. The old priest was baffled as he didn't know the significance of the little skeleton's saluting motion, and so gave the little skeleton a round of compliments again.

Halfway through, many scattered and random footsteps rang out in Han Shuo's ears. His heart seized as he urged the forest trolls onwards, wanting them to leave the underground world as quickly as possible.

His sharp eyes saw some strange creatures with the body of a man and head of a lizard at the end of the cavern. He remembered the conversation between Gilbert and the dark elves, immediately understood that these creatures were likely the lizardmen below ground. However, what he didn't understand was why the lizardmen were here.

"Some lizardmen are here, do you know what's going on?" Han Shuo snapped his fingers and some forest troll warriors brought the litter holding Gilbert over to Han Shuo, allowing him to ask his question.

"Oh, it really is the lizardmen. I hadn't thought that they'd keep their word. They promised me that they'd take me out of the underground world, but I ran into the dark elf trap later and retreated back into the swamp. To think that they were still waiting for me!" Gilbert cheered and surged out of the litter.

Perhaps it was because of the effects of the Medusa's blood, but Gilbert's eyes, the ones that previously had blood gushing out of them, were now back to normal. Although he was still covered in injuries, the blood had stopped flowing from his wounds.

The little lewd dragon suddenly roared out lowly with a resonant voice, "Lowly lifeforms, are you here to offer tribute to me?"

The lizardmen at the end of the cavern suddenly cheered when they heard Gilbert's voice. Dozens of lizard men appeared from either side of the cavern, with a few of them lifting a chest, respectfully placing it beneath Gilbert's feet. An elderly lizardmen hobbled forward on a cane, "Mighty, noble dark dragon, we've heard of you punishing the evil dark elves for us. This chest of treasure is what we've promised you, please accept it.”

Gilbert walked over and lifted the lid to see that it was filled with all sorts of radiant and sparkling crystals. He was immediately very excited as he then asked, “What about the beauties you promised me?”

The old lizardman snapped his fingers and three curvaceous female lizards walked in front of Gilbert. One of them used unpracticed common tongue to say shyly, “Honored noble dark dragon, us three sisters will serve you well, please take us with you.”

“Ah hahaha.” Han Shuo laughed loudly as he watched the little lewd dragon’s smile freeze on his face. He couldn’t help but laugh a bit mockingly.

“Forget it, I’ll accept the crystals, but you take the three lady lizards away. I don’t need them.” Gilbert picked up the chest of crystals and avoided the three lizard beauties’ attentions. He immediately spoke to Han Shou and wanted to leave immediately.

When Gilbert drew near, Han Shuo snaked out a hand like lightning and grabbed Gilbert’s box of beautiful crystals and threw it into his space ring, ignoring Gilbert’s complaints. “Yours is mine, I’ll safeguard it for you. Heh heh.”

The forest troll entourage then walked towards the world aboveground thanks to Han Shuo’s amazing memory.

Chapter 147: The mission is a go

Not running into any further danger along the way, Han Shuo and the others made it safely out of the underground world, exiting from the mountain valley they'd come in through.

Although this time's outing had been a bit different from the original plan, he was still satisfied with the overall result. Not only had he received two cartloads of gold and jewelry from the dark elves, he'd also received a chest of beautiful crystals, a mysterious bow and a dark dragon subordinate. Han Shuo felt that this trip had been quite worth it.

As they walked towards the forest trolls' village, dark dragon Gilbert kept complaining, switching tracks between wanting Han Shuo to return his chest of crystals to him, and Han Shuo finding beauties for him. Indifferent to his whining, Han Shuo turned him down flatly.

The dark dragon knew a lost cause when he saw one, and didn't continue wasting his breath, preferring instead to sulk in a corner and tend to his wounds. Meanwhile, Han Shuo didn't remain idle either. He mastered another journeyman level necromancy magic, "Dark Fog". Not only could this magic create fog within a certain perimeter, but it was cast in such a way that the caster would be unaffected, allowing only enemies' vision to be obscured. It was a very practical magic to use in attacking and running away.

Han Shuo had mostly grasped the Art of the Demonic Ninth Heavens by now. After some testing, he discovered that apart from some issues in grasping direction, all his other problems were being resolved through continuous practice. It would appear that he really would be able to soar through the air before too long.

When they passed by the forest trolls' sacred ground, Han Shuo had the forest trolls wait outside. He and the little skeleton went inside and stored all the remaining treasures within his space ring. The place of extreme wood still had great use for Han Shuo, so he left specific instructions for the forest trolls guarding the sacred ground to keep an eye on this place.

After returning to the village, Han Shuo discovered traces of a violent fight outside the village. As he entered the village and listened to the old priest's summary, he learned that the forest trolls that had gathered from all areas had engaged the elves after they'd left. The forest trolls' superior numbers forced the elves to retreat after losing a few of their number.

As the god that the forest trolls worshipped, the little skeleton received adoration from all the forest trolls. Han Shuo then gave instructions to the old priest and took all the luxury items that they'd robbed from the McGrady Guild. Using the excuse of observing potential targets, he left the forest trolls along with the little skeleton and lewd dragon Gilbert.

Han Shuo arrived at the cemetery of death after a few days of walking. Because of the contract, Han Shuo wasn't afraid of Gilbert spilling his secrets and led him directly into the cemetery of death. When Gilbert discovered that Han Shuo possessed the cemetery of death, a string of fawning words poured out from his mouth and lauded Han Shuo up to the heavens.

"Alright, you stay here temporarily and rest up. I'll come find you if I have any instructions." Han Shuo paid no attention to Gilbert's rambunctiousness and left through the transportation matrix. He returned to the Empire's capital of Ossen.

Han Shuo discovered Emily's marks right after walking out of the cemetery of death. This cave was where Han Shuo had placed the transportation matrix for transporting in and out of the cemetery of death. Only Emily knew about it apart from Han Shuo.

From Emily's message, Han Shuo knew that Emily had come looking for him and wanted him to contact Chester at the Dark Mantle as soon as he'd returned from the cemetery of death.

He picked up the transportation sticks from the ground and didn't return to the Academy, but made for the Dark Mantle stronghold instead.

"Oh, you've finally appeared! Mistress Emily has looked for you many times already. I've also been to your Academy to look for you but couldn't find traces of you. In the end, Mistress Emily told me to stay here and said you'd contact me. To think that you'd actually appear!" Coincidentally, the bandit guard Chester walked out as Han Shuo arrived at the Dark Mantle's stronghold and started yelling excitedly.

"Has something gone wrong that Emily is looking for me so urgently?" Han Shuo asked askance when he saw Chester's look of anxiety.

Chester nodded and shook his head, speaking with a wry face, "Something must've happened, but Mistress Emily didn't tell me specifically what had happened."

"Then, what did Emily tell you?" Han Shuo knew that Emily would not tell Chester information he had no right to know, and thus asked about Emily's instructions for Chester.

"Leave the capital with me immediately. We need to head for Valen City. Mistress Emily should be there already." Chester responded and then added, "Mistress Emily told me to take you to Valen City and contact her through the organization. She'll explain in detail to you then."

"Then let's go!" Han Shuo nodded in agreement.

Valen City was on the western frontier of the Empire and was separated from the Kasi Empire by the Kerlan Grand Canyon. The Empire's Gryphon Legion was stationed there to defend against the Kasi Empire.

Han Shuo only realized the Dark Mantle's true strength when they were on the move. Han Shuo and Chester used the Dark Mantle transportation matrix to directly travel to Valen City from within the Dark Mantle headquarters.

When the two arrived at Valen City and contacted the local Dark Mantle members, the local members immediately prepared a carriage for them when they heard the two were on business for Emily. The carriage drove directly to the hotel where Emily was staying.

The soil of Valen City was poor, so the entire city would only bustle with activity when the Lancelot Empire went to war with the Kasi Empire. But after so many years of war, the originally poor Valen City became even more impoverished. Many locals had already moved to other places and the ones who remained conducted their trade with the army.

Han Shuo hadn't seen Emily in quite a while. Emily had taken up residence in an elegant room within the spacious hotel and was furiously writing away at something. She was quite overjoyed when she saw Han Shuo, but grew serious as she saw Chester following behind him, "Chester, you wait outside first, I have some words for Han Shuo."

Chester wasn't unhappy at all and retreated quite respectfully. He stood guard outside for Han Shuo and Emily, preventing others from disturbing their conversation.

"I've already left instructions with the forest trolls. Whoever comes to purchase the siege weapons will be able to do so." Han Shuo walked directly towards Emily and arrived at the side of a burning brazier.

"Our target this time is the Gryphon Legion. According to our speculations, the chief of the Gryphon Legion plans to rebel. What I need to do is gather evidence." Emily didn't conceal anything and directly gave voice to their plans.

Han Shuo gave a start of fright but then felt joy slowly forming inside. As the sons of the chief of the Gryphon Legion, Claude and Clark had long since formed deep grudges with Han Shuo. Claude had died at his hands and Clark had tried to assassinate him earlier. It looked like he'd be able to kill off Clark during this time's mission as well.

"Why does the chief of a legion want to rebel?" Although he was happy, Han Shuo didn't forget the task at hand and asked in confusion.

"His Majesty's health has continued to decline, becoming poorer and poorer. The two princes aren't worth much and neither of them are able to truly obtain his trust. Curiously enough, the chief of the Gryphon Legion petitioned His Majesty to have the princess marry his son Clark. Even though His Majesty declined him in the end, the chief still holds great military power in his hands, and his motives for his petition remain unclear."

"The Dark Mantle then discovered that his movements were becoming a bit suspicious. They seem to indicate that he has some contact with the Kasi Empire. Our goal is to collect as much evidence as possible. As long as we have enough evidence, my brother will personally make a move and arrest the chief of the Gryphon Legion.” Emily looked at Han Shuo and explained.

“Then, what should we do next?” Since Emily knew the detailed particulars of this mission far better than Han Shuo, he didn’t dare express any opinions and directly asked Emily.

“According to our Dark Mantle’s observations, a storm seems to be brewing within the Empire. The Kasi Empire is watching us with greedy eyes, and seems to be prepared to launch fierce attacks as soon as His Majesty dies. The chief of the Gryphon Legion won’t make his move immediately, but since you’ve already given your orders to the forest trolls, I think the siege weapons stolen from the McGrady Guild will appear in Valen City before too long.”

“This batch of siege weapons could be what Gryphon Legion chief Bob Ascher is planning to use when attacking the palace. As long as we can discover this batch of siege weapons in their house, we can arrest them before they start their rebellion.” Emily explained as she looked at Han Shuo.

“His son Clark isn’t in Valen City right now. I want to kill him first!” Han Shuo suddenly spoke with a low voice when he finished listening to Emily’s words.

Emily started when she heard these words. She couldn’t fathom how Han Shuo would know Clark and moreover, hold such hatred towards him.

Chapter 148: A familiar female slave

“No matter how your grudge against Clark was formed, he is still an earth rider. You shouldn’t move lightly.” Emily couldn’t help but remind Han Shuo anxiously when she saw his desire to kill.

Nodding with a faint smile, Han Shuo comforted Emily, “Don’t worry, I’m not that kind of brash person. I wouldn’t do anything to him without absolute guarantee.”

Emily’s mind was put at ease only after Han Shuo said thus. “I’m not sure whether or not Clark is in Valen City right now. I heard that he had returned, but I’ve yet to receive word. If Clark really has returned to Valen City, I’ll tell you that Valen City is the Gryphon Legion’s territory. You must be very, very careful.”

“Understood, what should we do next?” Han Shuo asked Emily.

Emily took a fur cape from the seat to the side and wrapped it around herself. She stood up and patted herself down, saying to Han Shuo, “I’ll take you to a place and see if you can collect any intelligence.”

Emily stood up and was checking herself out in the mirror when Han Shuo suddenly remembered the jewels he obtained from the forest trolls. He took out a necklace made from large red agate and walked tenderly behind Emily, laying the necklace over her head and onto her white neck.

The pure and elegant nape of her neck was like white snow. The strand of faintly sparkling red agate further heightened her beauty, adding a few traces of luxurious opulence to her demeanor.

Although Emily’s status was noble and she’d seen all sorts of jewelry, the meaning was greatly different when Han Shuo gently placed the red agate necklace on her neck. When he put it on her, beautiful lights danced within her eyes. It looked like she liked it very much.

“You bad little brat, you rather know how to make someone happy!” Emily’s laughter rang out as she turned back to hug Han Shuo fiercely, giving him a kiss. She then wiped away traces of the kiss from Han Shuo’s lips before walking outside.

Her expression returned to normal after walking outside and gave orders to Chester, "Go prepare a carriage, we're going someplace."

"Very happy to be of service." Chester responded respectfully and walked off.

When Emily and Han Shuo walked out of the hotel, Chester had already readied a carriage. The two of them sat inside while Chester sat outside with the groom. Their journey started out heading for the southern side of Valen City.

The carriage stopped in front of a spacious mansion after half an hour. There were many sumptuous carriages parked in front of the mansion. Several fierce looking warriors were standing guard with broadswords in hand. Numerous armored guards patrolled the mansion. It looked like security was very tight.

Emily didn't say anything and Han Shuo didn't ask anything either. Emily took out a card when they arrived at the door. The two guards at the door immediately let them through when they saw it and Emily brought the other two into the mansion.

They passed through a hallway paved with oval stones and arrived in a large hall. The hall was particularly bright as more than ten burning braziers lined the walls. This made the entire hall quite warm, and there were many iron cages scattered throughout the hall. All sorts of male and female slaves were inside. Some of the male slaves looked tall and muscular, likely for hard labor. Some of the female slaves had prettier features and wore very revealing clothing. Their exposed skin was full of temptation.

Many men and women wearing extravagant clothing were pointing their fingers at and sizing up the slaves within the cages. They would occasionally pull over a smiling slave trader standing on the side to negotiate prices. There were many wearing military uniforms as well. Judging by the Gryphon patches on their shoulders, it was apparent that they were a part of the Empire's Gryphon Legion.

“This is Valen City’s largest slave trading house. The person behind the scenes is the chief of the Gryphon Legion, Bob Ascher. Make note of the guards in this place. You’ll discover that these guards have strict discipline and it’s obvious that they’re military men. Although they’ve taken off their uniforms, it’s difficult to change the military air about them.” Emily pretended to peruse as she explained things to Han Shuo in a low voice.

Han Shuo started when he heard Emily’s words and asked, shocked, “The Empire has a written law that all titled nobles and officers cannot participate in the buying and selling of slaves. This Bob Ascher dares act so brazenly?”

“Bob Ascher is the emperor of Valen City. Many know that he’s the person in charge behind the scenes of the largest slave trading house. Even His Majesty knows this, but because Bob Ascher has done so much for the Empire, His Majesty had planned on just letting it slide before Bob Ascher wanted to rebel.”

“But some of his actions are now threatening the Empire’s profit, so we can no longer sit idly by. As long as we can gather evidence from the largest slave trading house of Valen City, we can also use this a means to prosecute Bob Ascher.” Emily’s eyes roved around the surroundings as she leisurely explained to Han Shuo.

Chester was a bit surprised to see Emily’s intimate attitude towards Han Shuo.

But as a member of the Dark Mantle, Chester naturally understood that sometimes, he’d have to pretend that he hadn’t seen some things. Thus when Emily noticed his attentions, Chester hurriedly looked away. His expression had already gone back to normal by the time he lifted his head, just that there would be hints of surprise and admiration in his eyes when he looked at Han Shuo, even a slight trace of envy.

“The quality of these slaves aren’t much, I’ll show you some better ones. Maybe you’ll be able to select one that you would like as a maid or serving girl.” Emily’s voice suddenly raised higher when two guards walked towards them as she tugged Han Shuo in the direction of a small house.

Emily once again displayed the card when they reached the door, and the guards respectfully let them through after they examined it. “Beautiful madame, I hope you find a slave that satisfies you.”

She chuckled and turned to nod at Han Shuo, saying with a slight smile, “Come in.”

There was a dim hallway inside that was carpeted with a soft, red carpet and glass chandeliers hung high above. Paintings were hung on the walls of the hallway with a guard stationed every ten steps.

The three of them entered a round auction room after walking for a minute. The auction floor was decorated very opulently. There were regular seats like a movie theater and small rooms for VIP seating. Emily walked to one of the small rooms on the left and conversed a bit with those inside. One of the guards respectfully led her upstairs after a swipe of her crystal card.

Han Shuo heard riotous calls of prices as soon as he entered. A savage with an exceedingly fierce body was restrained in a cage and emitting roars like a wild animal. The people beneath the stage were raising their signs one after another to bid on the fierce-looking savage.

“Some nobles like to fight. They send their gladiators in for private fights, stopping only when one side is dead. Hence they’ll come to pick some slaves with astonishing capabilities because there are less complications with slaves.” Emily explained faintly when she led the two upstairs to the VIP room.

Han Shuo nodded to express his understanding and saw that there was a sign for bidding when he walked into the small room. He also saw a simple magical apparatus that would display the desired bid when activated. It was quite convenient.

Some people have a lofty status or have certain reservations so they don’t wish for people to discover that they’ve appeared in such a place. This is why these small rooms, that can conceal oneself, and can look out but not in, exist.” Emily’s gaze swept alertly across the stage and the people beneath it after they entered.

“The next character to be auctioned will be familiar to the Valen City guests tonight. She’s the young miss of the Addison family of Valen City. The Addison family has colluded with the Kasi Empire and was found out by the noble chief of the Gryphon Legion. The Addison family was thoroughly exterminated a few days ago and all traitors were executed. The young miss of the Addison family has been branded as a slave status.”

“Heh heh, this feisty miss once had a widely known reputation throughout Valen City. Her breasts have now fully developed and she’s still a virgin. I believe that everyone will be quite interested in this feisty miss of Valen City.” A host, wearing a tuxedo, described all this with a smile on stage, perking the interest of those below. He then raised his arm and called out, “Miss Lisa of the Addison family! Oh, little Lisa isn’t a miss anymore, but a female slave that you can enjoy at your leisure about to go home with you. Starting price of three hundred gold coins, the bidding begins!”

A cage descended slowly from the ceiling when his words concluded as Lisa, wearing a ghastly expression and brimming with tears, appeared within Han Shuo’s vision with her very full breasts covered by sexy veils.

Chapter 149: She's yours

Han Shuo was greatly startled to see Lisa appear inside a cage. His originally wandering gaze became a bit harsh.

Han Shuo had once borne hatred towards Lisa, but as the two spent more time together, he discovered that she wasn't as bad as he had originally thought. She'd then protected him whenever she could. All of this had slowly changed Han Shuo's impression of Lisa.

Lisa's eyes were brimming with tears as she was held captive within the cage. Her bright, clear eyes were now dim and lackluster, suffused with a sense of helpless despair. This made Han Shuo's heart ache with pain.

"Is there some feud between the Addison family and Bob Ascher? Why was the Addison family suddenly destroyed and branded with the tag of traitors?" Han Shuo looked coolly around his surroundings and asked Emily.

Emily had felt that Han Shuo had become a bit on edge when Lisa had appeared, and she couldn't help but ask when she heard Han Shuo's words, "You seem to care a lot about this Lisa?"

Nodding, Han Shuo turned to explain, "Lisa is one of my classmates in the necromancy major back at the Academy. We're good friends and she's helped me quite a few times. I definitely won't sit idly by now that she's in dire straits."

Emily was startled when she heard Han Shuo's words and then responded, "The Addisons were already on bad terms with Bob Ascher before he wanted to rebel. However, because the Addison family had a certain status within Valen City, Bob Ascher didn't dare to do anything."

"But now that Bob Ascher is obviously intent on thoroughly grasping Valen City in his hands, any family that doesn't answer to him must be wiped out. It looks like the Addison family was one of those unlucky families. From the intelligence gathered by the Dark Mantle has been able to obtain in recent times, Bob Ascher has commenced his actions using a variety of excuses.

“Little Lisa’s body is now eye popping, but I must warn you all that she’s also a necromancer. The magic dampening cuffs on her wrists must not be taken off.” The organizer on the stage was still describing Lisa.

The bidders beneath the stage were exceedingly interested in Lisa, and her price increased rapidly. It’d been raised from the original 300 gold coins to over six hundred gold coins, double the original.

When Bryan had been sold originally to the Academy, he’d only been worth five gold coins. To think that Lisa would command such a high price, more than a hundred times more than Bryan’s price. It looked like people were greatly interested in this renowned Lisa.

Those beneath the stage were originally participating in the auction, but bids kept sounding out from the boxed seats above towards the end. Lisa’s price kept climbing up from six hundred to seven hundred gold coins.

Han Shuo watched the proceedings with a cold eye as he suddenly made a move and activated the magical box and keyed in a price of a thousand gold coins. The bid of a thousand gold coins was displayed after the space in front of Han Shuo whirred, causing the noisy hall to immediately quiet down. Everyone’s gazes turned towards Han Shuo’s box in astonishment.

“She’s just a female slave and isn’t worth a thousand gold coins. Your actions will cause others to take notice of us.” It was apparent that Emily didn’t quite understand as she looked at Han Shuo.

“I must save this girl. There’s no point in hemming and hawing and slowly adding on to the price. One high price can cause others to stop in their tracks.” Han Shuo said as he looked at Lisa in the cage, lying there as if she were dead.

Indeed, the bidders, who’d been greatly eager to bid, all stayed their hands with displeasure.

A female slave for the purposes of pleasure wasn’t worth a thousand gold no matter how they looked at it. Although Lisa’s status within Valen City had once been lofty and thus was of some temptation, a thousand gold coins wasn’t a small sum. Setting aside her status, any other slave of equivalent looks would only be worth fifty gold coins.

Therefore, when Han Shuo's high price of a thousand gold coins was placed, the organizer happily slammed down the gavel after calling out three times. "Congratulations to bidder number 83, you only need to swipe your crystal card within the box and transfer a thousand gold into our trading house's accounts. Little Lisa is all yours."

To the current Han Shuo, a thousand gold coins wasn't a big deal at all. His trophies from the Dark Forest in recent times had all been worth tens of thousands of gold coins. Therefore, he didn't even frown at the thought of a thousand gold coins and took out his crystal card, prepared to swipe it through the slot within the box.

Emily suddenly reached out her hand and stopped him. She swept the crystal card in his hand to the side and said, "Let me. If we use your card, the name on your account will be registered in the trading house. Although they will keep your information confidential, it will be easy for Bob Ascher to know your identity if he wanted to investigate you."

Han Shuo felt that her words made sense and said, "Alright, I'll transfer a thousand gold coins to your crystal card and you can use a secure card to make the payment."

Emily actually hadn't planned on letting Han Shuo do so originally, since a thousand gold coins wasn't much to her either. However, when Emily was about to pay for Han Shuo, she noticed Chester eyeing them from the side. She finally nodded and accepted Han Shuo's suggestion, transferring a thousand gold coins from his card to hers and then paying for Lisa.

Some female elf slaves and two fox women were auctioned off next, including a very fierce berserker. Han Shuo's group didn't make any further moves and watched everything happening around them with cold eyes.

"We should come and canvass this place late at night next time. We shouldn't walk around since you participated in today's auction." Emily fully explained everything about the trading house, including things to watch out for, as the auction progressed.

He nodded and agreed, walking out of the room with Emily and Chester.

He was planning on leaving with Lisa when his sharp eyes noticed that someone had entered through the door.

His body suddenly halted and Han Shuo made a gesture towards Emily, then spoke in a low voice, "You and Chester go take charge of Lisa first, I have something else to attend to."

Han Shuo quickly left after saying these words and threaded through the crowd with large strides, abruptly appearing in front of the door and heading towards Lawrence, who'd just appeared. However, two people appeared beside Lawrence before Han Shuo had even drawn close and they took one step forward, staring at Han Shuo alertly.

Lawrence finally noticed Han Shuo at this moment and looked at him with surprise. He then turned his head and spoke sharply at the two men, finally waving at Han Shuo afterwards.

Lawrence asked him with great astonishment when Han Shuo drew close to him, "Bryan, what are you doing in Valen City?"

"I had a few things to take care of in this area. What are you doing here?" Han Shuo asked.

His face growing frosty, Lawrence spoke in a cold voice, "Something's happened to my cousin's Addison family and now even Lisa's fallen victim to a plot to make her a slave. I heard that she was being auctioned off here and have come to rescue her."

Lisa and Lawrence's family were related, and it seemed that he was well aware of what had happened to her family. This was why he'd purposefully made the trip from the capital. This also raised Han Shuo's opinion of him. It would appear that Lawrence was one who valued family.

Logically speaking, there was a limit to how close cousins would be, not to mention that Bob Ascher gave labeled the Addison family as traitors. Such a crime was enough to cause all relatives to pause, as it would be easy for them to become embroiled as well. For Lawrence to make his way here from such a far distance was enough for Han Shuo to view him with new eyes.

“You’re too late, Lisa’s already been purchased for a thousand gold coins!” Han Shuo looked at Lawrence and said with a slight smile.

“It must be that old dog Calvert. Lisa’s family and his family have never gotten along. He must’ve been one of the instigators for what happened to Lisa’s family this time. He would certainly be willing to spend large sums to buy Lisa and take her home to torture.” Lawrence’s face darkened and he spoke to the two behind him. “It looks like we’ll have to be the burning and looting sort of robbers today.”

The two behind Lawrence had no expressions on their faces and wore very ordinary, loose clothing. There wasn’t much that could be gleaned from their outfits, but Han Shuo discovered that one was a swordsman and the other a mage after he concentrated a little. However, he couldn’t determine how strong they were.

“How would I let Lisa be taken by others since I’m here? Don’t worry, I’ve got Lisa.” Han Shuo could be certain that Lawrence was truly worried about Lisa and spoke with a small smile.

Lawrence noticeably heaved a sigh of relief when he heard these words and spoke heartfully towards Han Shuo, “Bryan, I owe you one!”

Chapter 150: I can help him

“You don’t owe me anything. Lisa and I are good friends at school, so I simply did what I should have done.” Han Shuo saw that Emily and Chester had walked out with Lisa’s figure, draped in a black cloth, as they spoke.

“Let’s leave this area first.” Lawrence noticed Emily and Chester’s movements as he followed Han Shuo’s gaze. His eyes lit up as he spoke softly and turned to walk outside.

A lot procedures needed to be passed before entering the trading house, but it wasn’t so strict when leaving. Han Shuo and Lawrence didn’t meet any resistance as they followed behind Emily and Chester. Emily was escorted by two guards from the trading house and they stayed respectfully when Emily dismissed them at the door.

She was slightly surprised to see Lawrence appear by the carriage. Han Shuo maintained a calm expression on his face and said to Lawrence, “I made Madame Emily’s acquaintance at your place last time. I’ve been hired by her to take care of some things in Valen City.”

Lawrence seemed to understand some things, but didn’t say much. He flashed a friendly smile at Han Shuo and said, “This is between the two of you, so you don’t need to tell me anything. I think we should see how my cousin is doing first.”

He lifted the carriage curtains and the two boys entered. They’d just entered when a weeping Lisa threw herself into Han Shuo’s arms, sobbing her heart out, “Bryan, they killed my entire family. My father, mother, and grandfather are all dead!”

Lisa was heartbreakingly weak at this moment. Han Shuo patted her shoulder lightly and said in a soft voice, “You’re safe now. These people will get what’s coming to them.”

She hugged him fiercely, using all the strength in her body, as if wanting to prove that this moment was real. She stuck her pinky in her mouth and bit down on it, finally crying out in pain, “I’m not dreaming! I’m still alive.

I want to get my revenge! I'm going to kill those brutal people!"

Lisa had always been a small terror at the Academy, but her entire being seemed to have undergone a change after such a drastic event in her life. The innocence on her face had been replaced by hatred, and it seemed like it was the only thing giving her the will to live in this moment.

"Lisa, just what happened? You must tell me in detail. I'll obtain revenge for you." Frosty, cold light shot from Lawrence's eyes as he asked the wailing Lisa in a low voice.

Lisa finally seemed to realize that there was someone else in this carriage other than Han Shuo. She wiped away the tears on her face and looked at Lawrence, immediately choking up again, "Brother Lawrence, I don't know what happened either, only that my father said my mother was sick and wanted me to return home to look after her."

"I'd only just returned when I learned that there might be trouble at home. Mother wasn't sick and father didn't let me go home either. The next day, Calvert, that dog of the Gryphon Legion, brought men and rushed into our home. He killed and captured people everywhere. They're all dead except for me. All dead!"

"Don't worry, I'll get revenge for you." Lawrence promised Lisa with a darkened face.

"Help me kill Calvert! You have to kill him for me!" Lisa murmured helplessly, looking at Lawrence first and then fixing her stricken gaze on Han Shuo.

Her entire family and all her kin had been extinguished in the span of a second. The impact from this stimulus was too much for Lisa. This also made the usually bullying Lisa reveal a helpless side of her that caused others to want to protect her.

"I'll help you." Han Shuo was silent for a moment beneath Lisa's stare, but he finally nodded his head solemnly and promised her.

"We should thoroughly discuss things first if you want to kill Calvert." Emily suddenly said lowly outside the carriage and then stuck her head in to look at Han Shuo and Lawrence. She said, "We should leave this place at the very least."

"Lisa, come with me." Lawrence ducked out of the carriage and then nodded at the two men standing coolly off to the side. The swordsman departed and came back leading a carriage. Lawrence dragged Lisa in with him and the carriage began to move slowly after the groom cracked his whip.

"Follow him." Han Shuo told Chester outside and then turned to look back at Emily with some apology. "This may conflict with your plan some, but I have to do so."

"I understand. Besides, killing Calvert was our original plan anyways. This causes no tangent from our original plan, and we've gained some additional assistance, no?" Emily first smiled slightly and then spoke a bit gravely. "However, although Lawrence is the son of the finance minister, his two followers seem quite strong. In addition, Lawrence seems to be acting a bit weirdly. How did you get to know him? Do you know of his background?"

Shaking his head, Han Shuo hesitated before responding, "Master Candide once told me that Lawrence's identity was complex. He said that I may land in trouble if I grow too close with him. However, I've been in contact with Lawrence for a while and feel that this fellow is quite alright."

"Candide that old fox! If he knows of Lawrence's identity and didn't tell you, that means that Lawrence's identity is really not that simple. It looks like I have some new questions to ask my brother." Emily spoke with a furrowed brow and was a bit perplexed.

The carriage that Lawrence was in suddenly stopped and he stuck his head out. He opened his mouth when the carriage that Han Shuo and Emily were level with his own, "Bryan, I think this matter has no direct relation with Madame Emily. If you're thinking of her behalf, you should try to make sure she's not embroiled in this."

Han Shuo blanked momentarily and exchanged glances with Emily within the carriage. Emily frowned and mused, before speaking with Han Shuo, "Go with them and see what the preparations are. Come find me at the rally point afterwards. It'll be a good time for me to go back and investigate Lawrence."

Nodding to Emily, Han Shuo alighted from Emily's carriage and walked towards Lawrence, saying with a smile, "Your considerations are quite thorough, it's true that there's no need to involve Madame Emily."

"My apologies Madame Emily, but you know I'm doing this for your own good. The Aschers don't fear anyone in Valen City, so there are some things that you won't be able to become involved with, even with your status." Lawrence called out softly to Emily's carriage and then ordered those in front of him, "Let's go."

When Han Shuo entered the carriage, he noted that Lisa seemed to have calmed down after Lawrence's consolation. Lawrence didn't say much and mused on certain things with a darkened face. Han Shuo didn't know how to comfort Lisa, so he remained silent along the way.

The carriage stopped in front of a house and Lawrence said gently to Lisa, "You go and rest in that house, Bryan and I will be going out to take care of a few things and will return soon. Don't worry, you'll be very safe inside the house."

Having suffered through such a painful disaster, Lisa was much more malleable than usual. She nodded docilely and was helped down by Lawrence. Lawrence knocked on the door, causing a person to walk out. This person was hidden in the shadows, and Han Shuo immediately discovered that he was the expert that had once spied on Clark.

"Escort her in and tell those inside to protect her. You'll be coming with me." Lawrence returned back to the carriage after giving his orders, with the man walking back outside after Lisa went in. He sat down in front of Han Shuo and Lawrence without saying a word.

Han Shuo took a good look at him as they sat face to face. He discovered that this man looked ordinary, and there was nothing overly special about his face at all. However, it was enough to prove that his strength wasn't ordinary given that he could tail earth rider Clark without being discovered.

“His name is Lucky. He’s an assassin. The two with the groom outside are senior swordsman Divac and earth major adept mage Adela. We’re going to go kill Calvert now.” Lawrence first introduce his men to Han Shuo and then suddenly announced that they were going to go kill Calvert.

“What sort of plan do you have?” Han Shuo was silent at first and then spoke up in inquiry.

“Calvert is the loyal dog of Chief Ascher of the Gryphon Legion and is in charge of distribution of rations within Valen City. He’s also an officer in the Gryphon Legion and is thirty or forty years old. He only had one son called Caernand who once tried to rape Lisa, but Lisa chopped off his manhood instead. Thus, the two families formed an irresolvable feud. As a senior knight, Calvert has scores of servants at home. Many of them are part of the Gryphon Legion and aren’t too hard to take care of.” Lawrence slowly explained all of this, which proved that he must have thoroughly investigated him prior to all this.

“I happened to receive news that Clark has already returned to Valen City and seems to have arrived at Calvert’s home, seeming to bring some sort of instructions from his father.” Lucky, who’d remained silent until now, suddenly spoke up at this time.

Shock appearing on Lawrence’s face, his brow furrowed tight. Han Shuo’s heart also leapt as a thick killing intent appeared on his face.

Lawrence’s hesitant expression explained that he’d become uncertain with Clark’s appearance. However, having entered the true demon realm, plus the aid of the little skeleton and necromancy magic, Han Shuo was willing to go head to head with Clark. However, he too wasn’t certain if he could beat an earth rider, so he remained silent.

“Uncle Lucky, how confident would you be in killing Clark if you made a move?” Lawrence opened his mouth to ask the assassin Lucky after remaining silent, waiting for an answer.

“I’ve roughly fifty percent certainty.” Lucky replied indifferently.

Nodding, Lawrence said, "Alright, then you make the first move. I trust that with your strength, you'll be able to retreat safely even if you don't succeed. We can then judge based off Clark's condition to see if we need to make a move as well."

"Mm, I think there's no way that Clark will be able to find me if I want to leave!" Lucky responded.

"I think if I coordinate with Mr. Lucky, I'll be able to increase the odds by thirty percent." Han Shuo looked at Lucky and suddenly spoke.

"Bryan, are you certain you won't be discovered and won't affect Uncle Lucky?" Lawrence's face was grave as he looked solemnly at Han Shuo.

"I feel that my inclusion will bring him aid. If you believe in me, I'd like to make a move with him." Han Shuo said seriously as he looked back at Lawrence.

"Alright, Uncle Lucky, take him with you. Give up halfway through if things won't do. We can always find another opportunity." Lawrence thought for a moment and spoke to the assassin.

"Alright!" Lucky responded and looked at Han Shuo. "We'll leave immediately. If Calvert's house catches on fire later, that means the mission's a go and you can come charging in. Otherwise, don't come near us."

"Don't worry, I know what to do. Be careful." Lawrence nodded.

"Let's go." Lucky looked at Han Shuo and jumped down softly from the carriage. He jumped up and landed on a roof that was three meters up without making a sound.

Han Shuo took a deep breath in and concentrated, focusing his magical yuan to employ the "Art of the Demonic Ninth Heavens" to take a great leap as well. His body flew out in midair as he jumped even higher than Lucky, also landing silently beside the assassin.

"Eh!" Lucky looked back at Han Shuo in surprise as the corners of his indifferent face tugged upwards. He said faintly, "Not bad, perhaps you really can assist me."

The old assassin didn't look at Han Shuo afterwards as his body started threading through the roofs agilely, seeming to glide through them like a wild ghost, making Han Shuo greatly admire his agility.

However, having already reached the true demon realm, Han Shuo's agility and pliability were just as extraordinary. Making use of his supernatural five senses, he followed closely behind Lucky and didn't fall behind at all.

Chapter 151: One thing after another

Han Shuo only got to experience the old assassin Lucky's skill after the two flew to Calvert's house. A decent assassin would maintain his position before he made a move on his target. He would only allow his target to feel his presence in the moment that he made his move.

Lucky was quite professional in this regard. He first crouched on the roof after entering Calvert's home, looking out over the entire building, then pointing out the use of each room to Han Shuo. He clearly explained which was the living room, which was the master bedroom, as well as the bathrooms.

It looked like Lucky was very well versed in all architectural styles, and must have given quite a bit of thought to this. Otherwise, he wouldn't have been able to obtain so much information after just glancing at the layout shortly after arriving here.

Lucky changed into a grey robe that matched the color of the walls. When he slowly walked along the wall, no one detected any disturbance, even as the bright rays of the moon rained down.

Han Shuo took out a similar robe beneath Lucky's gaze and followed behind Lucky, moving towards the roof of the brightly lit living room.

Han Shuo's breathing became measured and steady as they neared the living room, and the rate of his heartbeat also suddenly became quite slow, matching the pace of his breaths. Even the heat emanating from his body began to decrease as they drew near the living room. When they got close enough, he could, at the stage, be mistaken for a shingle on the roof when he wasn't moving.

Lucky was unable to conceal his body as well as Han Shuo had done even after taking a pill. When he finally reached the top of the roof, Lucky looked at Han Shuo with disbelief as he was incredibly surprised by Han Shuo's control over his body.

Since reaching the true demon stage, Han Shuo could feel that his body was indeed more agile and deft than before. He could adjust his body condition to all sorts of situations by making his own adjustments, making it very easy for him to do something like concealing his presence.

Because Clark would possibly be in the living room, the two didn't dare lift the tiles of the roof to look inside. They placed their cheeks on top of the roof and attempted to listen in on the conversation inside.

"Alright, let's do it like this. Keep your wits about you lately, Lawrence seems to have been spotted in Valen City, so he may try to make trouble or you." Clark's voice rang out as he reminded Calvert to be careful.

"Lawrence is just the son of the finance minister. Isn't he courting death if he comes to find me in Valen City?" Calvert didn't mind at all as his hearty laughter rang out like a bell.

"Uncle Calvert, Lawrence's identity isn't that simple. Anyways, you must always be on guard. My father will send people over to protect you in two days." Clark reminded Calvert.

"I've caused the chief to worry. Heh, it's getting late, why don't you rest here tonight? I've prepared special entertainment for you." Calvert chuckled.

"That's alright, thank you uncle. However, some strangers have appeared in Valen City lately and I have a lot of things to take care of. I won't be staying here tonight." Clark made his excuses and seemed ready to leave.

His ear lifting away from the roof tiles, Han Shuo stood up and threw a glance at Lucky. The two left with a sound and quickly moved away from the manor.

Lucky had decided to change the plan since Clark was going to leave and wanted to get rid of him while he was traveling. He would have to pass through a certain street after leaving Calvert's house. There were all sorts of buildings and several leafy trees on that street, making for a good place to make a move no matter what direction they came from.

"You hide and wait in a tree, pick the best timing after I make my move to attack Clark." Lucky instructed and then crouched on top of a nearby wall, as if he was a gecko, melding into the night.

Lucky had no way of being able to cue when was good time to make a move. Lucky could only let Han Shuo attempt to grasp that critical moment himself.

A horse carriage left Calvert's house after a while, the clopping sound of the horse's hooves appeared quite ear piercing. The groom was a muscular guard and he waved the whip in his hand to spur on the horse. When the carriage passed by where Lucky was concealed, a figure flashed out of the corner of concealment so quickly, that it was as if it had no weight, and stuck itself to the bottom of the carriage.

Han Shuo clearly saw all of this from his vantage point in the distance. He took in a deep breath when he saw the carriage approaching the big tree he was hidden in. Holding it in and watching things closely, he tightening his grasp on the Demonslayer Edge.

A cracking sound erupted from the bottom of the carriage at that moment as the carriage exploded into pieces. Wood shards, sand, and dust flew everywhere as milky-white sword aura shot up two meters into the air, flaring out over the now destroyed carriage. The exploding sword aura was like a bristling porcupine, and Lucky had the body of the porcupine within the spikes of the sword aura.

At this time, Han Shuo discovered that Lucky was an assassin who also happened to be a sword master. The milky-white sword aura flashed by and vanished like it had never appeared. The pieces of the carriage were shattered and lay all over the ground. One person within the carriage was full of bloody holes and had died instantly, whereas the groom at the front of the carriage was running for his life.

Han Shuo had felt extraordinarily surprised in the beginning, thinking that Lucky had succeeded so quickly. However, he realized that the person in the carriage was completely foreign to him when he looked at the corpse. It wasn't Clark at all. The scattered footsteps swiftly approaching from all directions immediately made Han Shuo realize the severity of the situation.

"We got played, retreat!" Han Shuo immediately called out from the treetop and leapt down from the thick growth.

Lucky's expression remained calm as he scanned the surroundings, calling back softly, "We'll split up and go through the surrounding houses."

Han Shuo nodded and didn't say much, leaping into the air and landing on a roof. When he looked back, he saw that Lucky had already disappeared miraculously.

Han Shuo's heart became even calmer at this time as he coolly looked around and noticed that several soldiers had appeared on the streets to the front and back. These men were charging down on the back of horses, and several had drawn back on their bows to send arrows shooting towards him.

Clark, with an easy expression on his face, walked out from the direction of Calvert's house with another middle-aged knight that was well built. Their gazes landed on Han Shuo as they spurred on the battlesteeds beneath them to come charging over.

There were many houses in the surroundings, but when Han Shuo concentrated and listened, he noticed that there didn't seem to be anyone living in them. He didn't know if they'd been moved beforehand. It was only now that he was a bit regretful that he hadn't used his extremely sensitive senses to investigate his surroundings. He'd been too focused on killing Clark and hadn't thoroughly probed the details.

Han Shuo dodged nimbly when the arrows came shooting over, he noticed many more soldiers were approaching. He weighed things up and cast the "Art of the Demonic Ninth Heaven", sending himself shooting into the air and away like a hawk.

The numerous arrows whistled over and were batted away by the Demonslayer Edge. He'd flown out of the encirclement in the blink of an eye and alighted on a large tree in the distance.

Although Han Shuo wasn't that well versed in the Art yet, he had no problem simply flying through the air. It was because of this Art that he could break free from the soldiers.

In addition, Han Shuo discovered that compared to the levitation spells that archmages could cast in this world, the “Art of the Demonic Ninth Heavens” was much more advanced. None of the levitation spells that the archmages could cast even came close to his Art’s speed and maneuverability.

He took a deep breath in and took stock of his surroundings, discovering that Clark had almost a hundred soldiers with him. These people were conducting a carpet style search, going through each room looking for Lucky. They gave up hunting down Han Shuo after he left and was focused on finding Lucky.

Just as Han Shuo started worrying for Lucky, a figure, using a levitation spell, quickly approached from the distance. The moon was covered by a cloud of dark mist in a second and the already dim sky immediately darkened. When the figure drew close, it took out a mage staff, made of white bone from its spacious sleeves and chanted out a spell in a low voice.

Suddenly, numerous skeletal, zombie, and ghoulish warriors, as well as gargoyles and hate warriors appeared, charging towards the soldiers.

Another low chant rang out as bone arrows flew wildly through the air and crashed into the soldiers, making them cry out in agony.

“Oh my gosh, it’s an archmage level necromancer!” Calvert suddenly cried out with shock.

Han Shuo was also greatly surprised as he fixed an ardent gaze on the necromancer that had appeared in the air, absolutely taken aback by the destructiveness of the necromancy magic.

Chapter 152: I only need one chance to kill you!

Necromancers were few to begin with, as it was apparent from the numbers of archmages specializing in necromancy magic. This was why the necromancy magic elicited so much attention when it actually appeared.

Han Shuo had only escaped from that area when he activated the Art. He hesitated when this development occurred and decided to move across the roofs of the nearby houses, going back to where he'd started.

The dark creatures that the necromancer had summoned from the other dimension greatly impacted the soldiers who were attempting to chase after Lucky. The enormous hate warriors and gargoyles flying in formation were particularly destructive.

The enormous and incredibly powerful hate warriors were able to pound a soldier into meat paste with a swing of its iron club, whereas the agile gargoyles were equally lethal when they came swooping down with their iron claws.

“Damn it, I’ll kill him myself!” Clark roared out angrily and whipped his battlesteed into action. A spear appeared in his hand as he charged towards the necromancer.

Thanks to the coordination of the galloping battlesteed and the sweeping spear, none of the skeletal and zombie warriors were obstacles in his path. Knights made use of the charging force of their battlesteeds to enhance their own battle strength. Thus, when Clark and the battlesteed charged as one, the scattered dark creatures couldn’t stop him at all.

Because of the appearance of an archmage level necromancer at this time, the soldiers on the side were busily fending off the summoned creatures and couldn’t assist Clark. Senior knight Calvert stayed where he was and was busily directed his troops. When these highly trained soldiers finally calmed down to coolly battle the summoned creatures, rows and rows of skeletal and zombie warriors began to fall down.

Although the mental strength of the archmage necromancer was colossal, the numbers of his summoned creatures couldn't compete with the number of soldiers here. The ghouls and skeletal warriors in particular were of limited use in this type of battle situation, and were often destroyed by a single stab from a Gryphon Legion soldier.

However, the enormous hate warriors and gargoyles howling through the darkness were still quite fierce, and had killed quite a few soldiers in the blink of an eye. It was a pity that there were only five hate warriors, and six or seven gargoyles. More than ten Gryphon Legion soldiers also surrounded each hate warrior.

Another low chant emitted from the necromancer's mouth as two fallen hate warriors suddenly exploded violently. The two "Corpse Explosion" spells immediately caused scores of Gryphon Legion soldiers to die with agonized howls.

When the necromancer opened his mouth to chant the next spell, Clark, on the back of a battlesteed, had already charged in front of him. The spear in his hand suddenly flared with a milky-white aura, and Clark flew into the air using the momentum from the battlesteed. He shot towards the necromancer, floating in midair, like lightning.

An enormous white skeleton abruptly materialized in mid air, forming a shield of white bone with mind boggling speed. The white bone shield was three meters tall and two meters wide, completely blocking the way in front of the necromancer. The clean, eerily sparkling white bones didn't leave any gaps between them as they came together. Some sharp bone shards were even in front of the shield as reverse spikes. The shape looked very odd.

Clark's concentrated blow smashed against the white bone shield. Even such a highly advanced shield like this one started splintering from Clark's violent thrust, with bone shards flying randomly where it had been struck by Clark's spear.

The necromancer grunted quietly and floated away in retreat like a ghost. It looked like he had also realized that Clark would be a tough opponent to face and planned on putting some distance between them. Clark's body moved forward with the momentum from his charge as he landed on a roof, putting his spear away and swapping it out for a sword. He moved quickly over the roofs and pursued the necromancer fixedly.

Another dark mist was released as the retreating necromancer's body flashed through the dark mist, vanishing without a trace. Three bone spears came hurtling through the empty air, aiming straight for Clark. Clark also finally pinned down the necromancer's location after the three bone spears appeared.

At the same time, Han Shuo's sharp eyes caught slight movement from a piece of protruding rock on one of the roofs that Clark was moving towards. This made Han Shuo's heart jump and his body abruptly half-crouching to conceal himself on another roof.

The Demonslayer Edge had soundlessly approached Clark according to Han Shuo's wishes.

Snorting coldly, Clark didn't halt his momentum as he suddenly changed direction halfway, the longsword in his hand suddenly flicked upwards and slashed through the bone spear that he hadn't avoided. At this time, Clark's body finally approached the protruding boulder as a strand of cold light suddenly shot out of the rock-like structure and Lucky appeared, wrapped in a gray robe.

Clark hadn't expected an ambush after just batting away the necromancer's bone spear. His fighting aura was halfway through pulling together when he raised his sword to block the hit. A metallic clang rang through the night as Clark's body was flung downwards from the roof.

As Clark descended, a severe whistling sounded out as a thin strand of purple flame appeared in mid air, ramming into the Clark's back and sinking into his waist, vanishing within Clark's body.

A ghastly scream emitted from Clark's mouth. As his body slammed into the ground, his entire body became consumed in purple flames. Han Shuo's eerie figure flew in front of Clark, he looked coldly at Clark suffering as the purple flames consumed him. He sent out a mental summons and the Demonslayer Edge exploded out of Clark's chest and vanished into Han Shuo's palm without a drop of blood.

"It's, it's you?" The spirit of extreme extreme cold was invading Clark's organs, and his body had been heavily damaged by the Demonslayer Edge. When he saw Han Shuo reveal himself and tug off his mask, Clark spat out these words with difficulty as his teeth chattered with disbelief.

"That's right, it's me. You tried and failed to kill me twice, but I only needed one chance to kill you." Han Shuo said coolly and waved his right hand around fiercely, slowly circulating the "Glacial Mystical Spellfire". A flower of red flame entered Clark's body. His internal organs had been frozen solid and Clark had been about to die when he was thawed out by the flame and turned into a bloody puddle. The speed of change was unbelievably fast.

Three bone spears appeared out of nowhere again and targeted Han Shuo. Their whistling noises startled Han Shuo as he leapt upwards, slashing down with his Demonslayer Edge and destroyed one of the bone spears. Han Shuo shouted out to Lucky in the distance, "Damn it, why is he attacking me as well?"

"I don't know him." Lucky responded and evaded like lightning, because the necromancer had attacked Lucky as well.

So it wasn't one of their people. Han Shuo was surprised and hastily escaped outside. When the necromancer saw Han Shuo escape, he actually came after Han Shuo and pursued him doggedly. The appearance of this necromancer was a bit odd. He wasn't on Lawrence's side and this greatly confused Han Shuo, making him uncertain as to which side he belonged to.

Now that Clark was dead, Han Shuo saw that Lucky had made himself invisible again and was sneaking towards Calvert. It looked like he was planning on taking care of Calvert as well. As for his colleague, Han Shuo didn't know anything about him at all, just that he had his sights set on Han Shuo. Han Shuo didn't know whether to laugh or cry, but he knew that he didn't want to become further entangled by him as he fled for his life at his top speed.

When Han Shuo was a few hundred meters away from the Calvert house, his amazing vision picked up Lawrence's carriage in the distance. Overjoyed, he made quickly in that direction as the necromancer following Han Shuo summoned a few gargoyles to tail him. It was only when Han Shuo appeared next to the carriage that the necromancer abruptly retreated with his gargoyles.

"Bryan, what's going on? There was no signal from you guys, but everything's a chaotic mess over there." Lawrence immediately poked his head out of the carriage when he saw Han Shuo and anxiously asked for a status update.

"Don't mention it. Things have been really odd tonight. Lucky and I don't know what happened as our movement was mysteriously revealed to Clark and we were almost captured. An archmage level necromancer suddenly appeared and attacked Clark and them, and then attacked us as well. I have no idea what's going on." Han Shuo complained.

"Then what of Uncle Lucky, and is Clark dead?" Lawrence asked again.

"Mister Lucky is making his way towards Calvert and seemed to want to take him out as well. Mm, Clark is done for, you don't need to worry about him." Han Shuo responded.

Lawrence couldn't hide the glee in his expression as he laughed with satisfaction, "Dead, he's dead! Valen City will be in chaos now!"

Chapter 153: An identity to be cautious of

When Lawrence spoke thus, the expression on his face was very bizarre. It was a slightly manic one that seemed anxious to see the world plunged into disorder.

“Bryan, I’m going to stay in Valen City for now. You can come find me in the house we dropped Lisa off in. Where can I find you if I need?” Lawrence was in a great mood as he turned his head to look at Han Shuo.

Han Shuo was silent for a moment and then told Lawrence the address of Emily’s hotel, leaving quickly afterwards and not paying attention to anything that happened after.

The hotel that Emily was staying in wasn’t one of the Dark Mantle strongholds, thus Han Shuo wasn’t afraid of Lawrence finding his way there. When Han Shuo made his way back to the Dark Mantle stronghold, metallic horse hooves clopped endlessly on the path to Calvert’s house. It looked like Clark’s death had indeed had a great impact on the entirety of Valen City.

Han Shuo didn’t linger here at this moment and didn’t care to find out whether or not Lucky had succeeded in eliminating Calvert. He masked his traces as he swiftly made his way to the Dark Mantle stronghold.

He easily found Emily after reaching the stronghold. When she saw him, she waved her hand and dismissed Chester. Her beautiful face was grave as she said to Han Shuo, “I know of Lawrence’s identity.”

She was a senior executive of the Dark Mantle alright. Han Shuo looked happily at Emily and said enthusiastically, “Wonderful, just who is that guy? His status seems quite high!”

“You! You better mind your tone and language when you interact with him in the future. This person could have a drastic impact on you.” Emily glared huffily at Han Shuo and then whispered an incantation. A boundary formed within the room and enclosed Han Shuo and Emily within it.

“The members outside won’t hear my words when this boundary is in effect.” Emily said gravely.

Han Shou was quite surprised to see Emily take such precautions. He asked a bit anxiously, “Alright, stop playing it up, just who is Lawrence?”

Taking a deep breath in, Emily sighed lightly and said, “He should be the third prince.”

Starting in fright, Han Shuo looked at Emily with some incredulity. “You’re joking! The king only has two sons. Every citizen of the Lancelot Empire knows of this. How could there be a third prince? Besides, everyone knows that Lawrence is obviously the son of the finance minister, how could he possibly be the third prince?!”

“I mean it.” Emily reached out a hand to pinch Han Shuo when she saw that he didn’t believe her. She explained, “This is actually one of the royal family’s scandals. The finance minister, Eevee, has some problems in that area, and can only look at his beautiful wife, Alice. Eevee’s relationship with the king is quite good, and the king met Alice at one of Eevee’s private banquets. The king was conquered by Alice’s beautiful looks, and the two finally walked together because Eevee was functioning inadequately in addition to the king making purposeful moves.”

“Eevee detected this because Alice became pregnant. The king himself then put in an appearance and explained the matter to Eevee. Since the deed had been done, and the king was still the king in the end, and Eevee knew that he couldn’t say anything to Alice and thus silently accepted this.”

“Because the fallout from this matter would have been too severe, both sides have concealed it until now. Those who truly hold power within the capital have some sort of understanding towards this matter, but no one dares to talk about it openly that Lawrence is the son of the king and Alice. Lawrence has been raised in the care of his ambitious mother since birth, teaching him the tenets of ruling and the knowledge he should know when controlling a kingdom.”

“Lawrence knew of his status since young, but his potential is extraordinary and he has uncommon social graces, so he has a good relationship with even his adoptive father. It's a pity that due to his illegitimate status, he can't enter the royal family. The king also feels quite guilty about this and thus treats Lawrence very well. He often meets with Lawrence privately to express his affection, and it's rumored that the king is very satisfied with Lawrence as well."

"Of the other two princes, one of them is fierce and general material, the other is extremely crafty, but is wishy washy about making decisions. It looks like neither of them are ruler material. Because the king's health is starting to decline, he too may feel that he doesn't have much time left and thus has been walking closer to Lawrence lately. It's been said that the king has the desire to reveal Lawrence's identity and have him inherit the throne."

"However, the mothers of the other two princes hold great power within the Empire. If the king acts rashly, he'll lose control of the situation and thus hasn't made a move yet. As the king becomes weaker and weaker, a storm is starting to brew within the Empire. That old fox Candide doesn't want you too close to Lawrence, likely because he's also worried that Lawrence's identity will affect your future path."

These words had an extreme impact on Han Shuo. He'd never thought that Lawrence would have such a lofty identity. If all went smoothly, then he could absolutely become the next king of the Empire and hold all of Lancelot in his hand, deciding the fate of anyone within the Empire.

Emily understood that her words had had a huge impact on Han Shuo when she saw him take a breath in, his eyes continuously dancing. When she saw that he had sunk into deep thought, she didn't disturb him and only stood there, looking at him, waiting for Han Shuo to sort out his thoughts.

After a while, Han Shuo nodded and said with a smile to Emily, "Alright, I understand the particulars of this matter now. Don't worry, I know how to handle my relationship with Lawrence."

"Our Dark Mantle has never intervened in the complex situation of the power struggle within the royal family, and simply takes orders from the king. We normally don't get involved before the situation has cleared up and the king has given definitive orders. The fact that that old fox would give you a subtle hint after your first mission means that he values you greatly."

"He also means the best for you. The more you know about this matter, the more disadvantageous it is for you. I understand you too well and know your strength and ambitions. This is why I've told you such a highly classified matter. As for how to grasp the situation, I leave that to you." Emily stared at Han Shuo as she continued explaining.

"I know you mean well. Heh heh, I know what to do. Oh, I forgot to tell you. I killed Clark. Valen City should be engulfed in chaos by now." Han Shuo smiled faintly at Emily.

It was Emily's turn to have shock written on her face after she heard these words. She looked at Han Shuo with incredulity, asking with extreme shock, "What, what did you say? You said you killed Clark?"

Nodding, Han Shuo said firmly, "Yes, I killed Clark, but someone helped me with it and I only did it through an ambush. Don't be too surprised."

Breathing out slightly, Emily was still quite surprised. She shook her head and said, "We've investigated Clark's strength and he's a solid earth rider. He reached this level at such a young age. His potential is extraordinary, and to think that he would die so easily after being ambushed by you. It looks like you're keeping quite a few things from me."

"No, I'm really not hiding anything from you. Just that an archmage necromancer appeared halfway through, and my colleague helped us with Clark. We've received great help from his strength, otherwise we would've never succeeded." Han Shuo smiled wryly and quickly summarized what had happened.

Emily's expression grew even graver after she finished listening to Han Shuo. She murmured, "Necromancers are rare enough already, an archmage necromancer is like the feather of a phoenix or the scale of a dragon. I wonder which faction this necromancer belongs to?"

"I'll need you to investigate that." Han Shuo smiled.

“Come and make a trip with me, we need to find something.” Emily pondered for a bit and then wrapped herself with a nearby fur.

“What are we doing?” Han Shuo walked up to Emily and tenderly adjusted a corner of her clothing.

Smiling coyly at Han Shuo, Emily cackled like a little girl planning on playing a prank. “Clark’s just died, so the entire Valen City must be in an uproar right now. The Gryphon Legion must be in a busy panic right now and searching through the entire city for you two. What we need to do is stir the muddy the waters and make things even more confusing.”

“Heh heh, that’s wonderful. I find that I like doing bad things. Perhaps I was a killer or an arsonist in my past life.” Han Shuo smiled faintly.

“You’re also quite a villain in this life.” Emily rolled her eyes at Han Shuo, taking down the boundary and walking outside together.

Chapter 154: Why bother so much?

Within the span of a few short months, of Bob Ascher's two sons one had mysteriously gone missing and the other was killed in the streets. This was simply too great of a shock to him, particularly because Clark had been the son that he'd valued more and placed the most hope in. To have him be killed by others in Valen City made him go utterly crazy.

This night in Valen City was destined to be a chaotic time. All of the Gryphon Legion had been summoned and were conducting a carpet style search for all suspicious personnels. Because of their chief's explosive rage, all the ordinary soldiers within the Legion all held equally poor tempers. Any unfamiliar faces or merchants would be beaten viciously if they gave the slightest hint of not cooperating.

Metal hooves galloped over the streets as citizens, sleeping soundly in the middle of the night, were rudely awakened. Even the symbol of the Gryphon Legion, a troop of gryphons, soared through the night skies of Valen City on patrol. Everyone was as if they were confronting a great enemy, and all thought that the Kasi Empire had invaded in the night.

The gryphons in the sky were black dots as their strange cries reverberated through people's eardrums. They flew from the west side of the city to the south. Then flew from the south to the north. They would land and search with the soldiers on the ground whenever they saw something out of the ordinary.

"So these are gryphons. They're truly big alright." Han Shuo stood behind a large tree near Bob Ascher's slave trading house and murmured to himself as he inspected the gryphons.

"That's right, the gryphons are a very fierce flying species. A single gryphon by itself can rip apart ordinary magical creatures. The king values old Bob so much and doesn't dare make a move even though he knows that he wants to rebel in large part because of this Gryphon Legion." Emily huffed lightly and shivered a bit as she spoke.

The water that had accumulated on the streets had already frozen into thick sheets of ice in this harsh winter night. Icicles from the edge of the roofs, glinting with cold as the severe cold wind came howling over. As a mage, it made sense that Emily would find herself cold.

Sucking a breath in, Han Shuo's right hand clasped Emily's smooth, small hand as he circulated his magical yuan. Han Shuo's right hand was like a small furnace as he brought warmth to Emily.

"You're a necromancer and also have an uncommon martial arts technique, but why can you also use fire magic, and deploy it so adeptly? It's like you can adjust the temperature according to your wishes. How are you doing it?" Emily's charming eyes sparkled as she fixed them on Han Shuo, pouting as she admonished him.

"This is actually one of the techniques I'm training in, you don't need to be that surprised." Han Shuo shrugged his shoulders and responded honestly to Emily.

It was a pity that Emily was obviously not having any of Han Shuo's explanations. She didn't keep asking however, but just spoke with a smile, "Alright, alright. I'll discover all your secrets one day. Um, your mysteriousness is like a poison to me. The more I want to know about you, the more mysterious that I find you are."

"Heh, don't be boy crazy. Let's go, let's go." Han Shuo stretched out his hand with a smile and patted Emily's round butt, urging her to move along.

The two hadn't brought Chester along with them this time. When they approached the slave trading house where Lisa had been auctioned off last time, Han Shuo released a dark mist magic and surrounded the structure, enveloping it with darkness.

"Heh heh, your grasp of necromancy magic isn't bad at all now." Emily chuckled lowly. She deployed the archmage levitation spell and her body slowly flew through the air, landing on top of the five meter tall wall. She opened her mouth again, "I entangled the rope inside, you can climb over using it."

"Why go to so much trouble!" Han Shuo smiled and suddenly leapt upwards, his speed much faster than Emily's levitation spell as he suddenly found his footing next to Emily.

Emily's body stiffened as she looked at Han Shuo like she'd seen a ghost in broad daylight. A strange light danced in her beautiful eyes as she threw herself into Han Shuo's arms, using all the strength in her body to pummel Han Shuo's chest. She yelled at him, seemingly angry and happy. "You villain! You reached the archmage realm a long time ago, but still kept lying to me. I'm going to beat you to death! You jerk, jerk!"

Han Shuo heard some noises traveling from the distance and didn't dare remain at a high vantage point for fear of attracting attention. He suddenly grabbed Emily and flew down, hiding in a corner of the slave trading house, clasping her small hand afterwards, explaining with a wry smile, "I didn't lie to you, this is a method that's similar to the levitation spell and is one of the techniques that I'm training in. It has nothing to do with magic. Think carefully, did you sense any magic pulses from me earlier?"

Emily started after listening to Han Shuo's words and her long eyebrows fluttered in confusion. She looked at Han Shuo in shock afterwards and asked with incredulity, "Just what kind of martial art technique are you training in? According to my knowledge, even the strongest swordsman or paladin can only fly for short periods of time using fighting aura. That technique wasn't flying at all, so how could you do it?"

"I told you before that the technique I'm training in is rather incredible and I'm not at liberty to discuss so much to you." Han Shuo truly couldn't explain much regarding demonic magic, so he could only say so much to Emily.

"Alright, alright. I knew that I wouldn't get much out of you anyways. Let's go. Let's see if we can get anything useful from the slave trading house while it's still a chaotic mess within Valen City." Emily pouted and rolled her eyes at Han Shuo, tugging him towards the trading house proper that she was now familiar with.

Emily must have thoroughly investigated the trading house beforehand.

She was very familiar with the buildings and floating through the air along the way, not making a single sound. A thin, dark magic shroud surrounded her, completely concealing her movements.

Han Shuo was quite familiar with covert operations like these. Not only did he not make a single sound, but he used his extraordinary senses to continuously point out the way to Emily, helping the two evade many patrolling guards along the way.

The two had made their way past two large auction buildings after a short while and was headed for the three houses located towards the back.

“This trading house usually has part of the Gryphon Legion stationed here. It will be very difficult for us to escape once they discover traces of us. Today however, the soldiers inside would’ve been deployed due to Clark’s death and will be searching the entire Valen City. This is perfect timing for us.” Emily explained to Han Shuo as they walked.

Han Shuo became quite serious once they started talking business. He listened to Emily as he silently observed the surroundings. A very strange smell suddenly wafted into his nostrils. The smell of blood was mixed in with the smell. Han Shuo felt that it was slightly pungent as he slowly took in the smell.

He wrinkled his nose, reached out a hand and grabbed Emily, saying lowly, “There’s the smell of blood here, something’s wrong.”

“I don’t smell it.” Emily took in a deep sniff and said in surprise. She then thought for a bit and seemed to recall Han Shuo’s miraculousness, “See if you can find the source of the smell of blood.”

Nodding, Han Shuo said quietly, “Follow me.”

Grabbing Emily’s small hand, Han Shuo followed his nose in search of the origin of the blood smell. He passed by two houses and came by the side of a pond. There was an artificial mountain next to it, with several deep and slightly creepy caves within it. Han Shuo’s ears proved their worth as he walked inside one of the caves with Emily.

A creak suddenly sounded as the originally solid stone wall suddenly split apart as a guard dashed out from inside, covered in blood and wearing a frightened expression. A bone spear appeared out of thin air after he took only a few steps, running the guard through from behind. Two zombie warriors then walked out and dragged the guard's body inside.

Han Shuo and Emily received a good eyeful of the scene that had just taken place. Han Shuo was taken aback, and then spoke, "Perhaps the necromancer I saw earlier today is inside that cave."

"There's a high possibility for that, but the owner of the slave trading house is Bob Ascher, and the necromancer is one of Clark's killers, so what would he be doing here?" Emily was still a bit perplexed as she conversed lowly with Han Shuo.

"The most dangerous place is also the safest. There's an enemy behind every bush and tree now. The trading house is Bob Ascher's place of business and actually sent out the most number of soldiers. Who would've thought the necromancer would appear here? The fact that a soldier was killed just now is enough to prove that this necromancer isn't a guest either. This means it's highly likely that he has the desire to hide here." Han Shuo contemplated and then spoke slowly.

"Mm, you make a lot of sense. Shall we go see what's going on?" Emily complimented and then asked Han Shuo's opinions.

"Of course, I'm rather curious about this necromancer as well. I would likely only be able to run the other way if I faced against him alone, but with you by my side, we have nothing to fear." Han Shuo said and then paused, paying attention to the disturbances inside. He spoke again after a while, "Alright, the zombie warrior's footsteps have gone into the distance. We can go inside and take a look."

Chapter 155: The three eyed demon god

Ansidesi

The two were greeted with a scene of corpses strewn everywhere as soon as they entered the cave. Roughly estimating, there were at least a couple dozen. Judging from their clothing, there were guards, some nobles who'd come shopping, and even some slaves who'd been imprisoned in the cages.

Many torches burned along the walls, casting bright light all over the surroundings. It looked like a place to hold slaves. There were many cages made from iron bars lying around, as well as some torture equipment. It looked like this was the place they used to teach a lesson to unruly slaves.

There was a black stone erected in the center that had been shaped into a plinth. A corpse was tied to some iron bars on top of the plinth. There was also an indentation about three meters wide and long in the middle of the stone, with a thick scent of blood emanated from it.

More than ten zombie warriors had been summoned and they picked up the corpses on the ground, throwing them into the bloody pool in the middle of the plinth. These whole corpses sank into the blood with a splash. The surface began bubbling shortly thereafter and then quieted down, with the liquid level rising slightly afterwards.

The amount of fresh blood within the blood pool increased as the corpses were tossed in. It was actually about to overflow. The necromancer, whom Han Shuo had previously seen was standing off to the side of the plinth. He was holding the bone staff and had revealed his face. His body was wizened and he was staring into the blood pool with no expression. There were no signs of life in his grey pupils.

Han Shuo and Emily immediately backed up into a corner and made use of a crack to observe all that was going on. Emily set up a sound isolation boundary around the two and spoke in a low voice, "It looks like the necromancer is setting up some ritual altar. I wonder what he's about to do?"

Han Shuo shook his head and responded with a grave expression, “Maybe it’s because I know too little about necromancy magic, but I don’t know anything about the altar that the necromancer has set up. It looks like archmage level necromancers have indeed grasped many more strong magics.”

Just as Han Shuo and Emily were conversing lowly, the necromancer suddenly waved the bone staff in his hand and mumbled out an incantation. The blood pool on the altar suddenly started churning, and the corpse that was tied on top of the altar suddenly had its flesh and skin whipped off, becoming a stark white skeleton.

Another necromancy magic was chanted as the not yet dispersed souls from the newly dead on the ground seemed to materialize and condense into grey smoke, surging into the blood pool that surrounded the altar. The blood pool transformed into a whirlpool as the bones from the corpses that had just sunk to the bottom all revealed themselves again, slowly reforming themselves into a three eyed demon god with eight spikes on its head and a spiked tail attached to its waist.

The three eyed demon god was formed from the white bones and its three eyes were red, yellow, and blue, embedded into its head in the shape of a triangle. An enormous buffet of evil presence started emanating from it as it started forming, suffusing the entire area with its evil presence. It was a kind of evil that was wildly violent and bloodthirsty.

Even though they were quite a distance away, Han Shuo felt a chill grip his heart as he fixed his eyes on the three eyed demon god, not shifting from it for a second and focusing all his attention on the movement by the altar.

“Oh, my gosh! He’s connected with the three eyed demon god Ansidesi through the altar!” Emily gave a low exclamation as her eyes were filled with surprise.

A god was a being of utmost strength at a legendary level of existence. They had divine arts that stretched to the heavens, but were constrained by the laws of their plane of existence and couldn’t reveal their actual body in this world, but through some rituals and mediums, some people in this world could use mystical arts to contact the gods.

Han Shuo had always felt that this unsubstantiated saying was quite ridiculous, and felt that this was something that was impossible to actually exist, but now that the truth appeared in front of his face, Han Shuo had no choice but to believe. The three eyed demon god Ansidesi had appeared from who knew how many planes of existence through this necromancer's ritual, descending his consciousness on these skeletons. Han Shuo stood blankly there for a moment, his thoughts churning in a mess.

A string of profound and ancient sounds emitted from Ansidesi's mouth. Han Shuo and Emily were completely befuddled as they had no idea what this string of sounds meant. However, the wizened necromancer seemed to be able to communicate with it.

However, the necromancer had been crouching on the floor and had buried his head in his chest in worship when he suddenly lifted his head with a look of fright, then quickly sung out an incantation, releasing the "Life Reconnaissance" spell and sent it through the surroundings.

"This is bad!" Han Shuo knew things would get bad as soon as he saw this spell appear. He suddenly exhaled and planned on pulling Emily out of here.

It was a pity that he was still a bit too slow. The "Life Reconnaissance" spell suddenly lit up when it neared Han Shuo and Emily's position. The necromancer worshipping on the floor immediately had his face sink and his bone staff suddenly waved, sending the dozens of zombie warriors walking towards the two.

"We've been made. We need to get out of here!" Emily cried out and suddenly backed up, planning on taking Han Shuo away from here.

At this moment, Han Shuo's sharp eyes saw that Ansidesi's body, formed from white bones, crashed back into the pool of blood with a thud when the necromancer lost his concentration.

It would seem that a necromancer couldn't lose his concentration for even a second when using the mystical arts and the blood and bones within the pool to communicate with the three eyed demon god. When the necromancer shifted his attention to Han Shuo and Emily, the divine consciousness that had crossed who knew how many planes of existence would be unable to use the bone and blood to manifest itself.

“The three eyed demon god can’t help him, we don’t need to be afraid of him.” Han Shuo’s body halted in front of the cave entrance as he pulled Emily’s retreating body to a stop as well.

When Emily’s movement was arrested by Han Shuo, her beautiful eyes focused on the altar when she heard his words. She also discovered that Ansidesi had disappeared within the bloody pool and cool composure wrote itself over her face. “Who are you and how dare you use such an evil ceremony to summon Ansidesi within Valen City?!”

“The two of you shouldn’t have come in. I wouldn’t have killed you otherwise.” The shriveled necromancer spoke in an extremely dry and cracked voice, using a levitation spell to float towards Han Shuo and Emily from the altar.

He waved the bone staff in his hand as he let loose an adept level necromancy spell, “Chain of Wraiths”. More than dozens of wraiths were entwined into one long, metal chain, snaking towards Han Shuo and Emily. Dozens of zombie warriors also raised their wooden clubs and rushed to attack Han Shuo and Emily.

Snorting delicately, Emily took out her staff and lowly sang out a dark magic spell, forming a inky black Grim Reaper’s blade out of midair. It churned towards the zombie warriors with a wave of her staff, and the zombie warriors were all sliced cleanly like paper beneath the reaping of the blade. Not a single one was able to come near Han Shuo and Emily.

As the “Chain of Wraiths” came hurtling over, Han Shuo’s Demonslayer Edge suddenly whistled out of his hand as he activated the “Glacial Mystical Spellfire”. The Demonslayer Edge sent out eye piercing red light, enveloped in red spellfire as the temperature of the surrounding air suddenly skyrocketed. The Demonslayer Edge burned with the red spellfire as it landed swiftly on the Chain.

The dozens of wraiths making up the Chain all opened their mouths to scream in frightened horror beneath the searing heat of the red spellfire Demonslayer Edge. When the Demonslayer Edge sank into the Chain, the Chain emitted sharp, squeaky sounds and gave off grey smoke. The dozens of wraiths flew into pieces as they screeched and wailed.

Three bone spears suddenly formed and shot towards Han Shuo and Emily. Han Shuo used his mind to control the Demonslayer Edge to block the two aiming for Emily. He also chanted lowly and sent a bone spear hurtling through the air, crashing accurately into the other bone spear that had been about to hit him.

“Eh, kid you’re also a necromancer!” The wizened necromancer suddenly exclaimed in astonishment and looked at Han Shuo with great surprise.

“Heh heh, indeed, indeed. We even teamed up to take out Clark at Calvert’s earlier. This is our second time meeting tonight.” Han Shuo looked leisurely at this necromancer and said with a slight smile.

Han Shuo had kept his features covered up at Calvert’s and only taken off his mask after killing Clark. The two had been quite a ways apart when the necromancer attacked Han Shuo, and so he hadn’t clearly seen Han Shuo in the deep of the night. It was obvious that he hadn’t recognized Han Shuo this time either.

“So it was you!” The necromancer called out lowly and then quickly floated out towards Han Shuo. He said sinisterly, “As a fellow necromancer, I’d like to see if you truly understand the mysteries of necromancy at all.”

The necromancer made a move after he finished speaking, looking like he would take out Han Shuo first!

Chapter 156: Soul Erosion

"I've only just set a foot inside the door and have many questions to ask you!" Han Shuo himself possessed many tricks and had a dark archmage by his side. They wouldn't come off worse at all with two against one. Therefore, Han Shuo wasn't nervous at all when he saw the necromancer float over.

His figure was shapeless and unpredictable, like a ghost's, and the necromancer continuously changed direction. Just when he was ten or so meters away from the two, the archmage necromancer suddenly waved his bone staff and chanted an incantation.

An evil knight, covered in black armor and dark colored skin that measured over three meters tall appeared, riding a howling beast that was stronger than a rhino and covered with brown scales. It raised a spiked club, that was as thick as a human body, as it spurred on the howling beast beneath it, charging viciously towards Han Shuo and Emily.

The evil knight was a dark creature that was one level higher than a hate warrior. Only archmage level necromancers could summon them. They came from the dark abyss of the other dimension. Their black armor held an absolute advantage in deflecting physical attacks. Combined with the charging force of the howling beast beneath them, they were everyone's worst nightmare.

The evil knight immediately charged towards Han Shuo and Emily when it appeared, raising its club high and bringing it down like a metal pillar.

Emily immediately backed up when she saw the evil knight and murmured a dark spell. The Grim Reaper's blade from earlier had yet to vanish, and it swung towards the evil knight with Emily's manipulations.

After summoning the evil knight, the necromancer didn't take another step forward, but rather quickly dodged to the side, summoning a team of gargoyles to attack Han Shuo and shooting bone spears every which way.

Compared to fighting students in the Academy, the necromancer was obviously much more experienced and had a very fine grasp on the timing of battling. He'd approached the two in an unpredictable manner just now in order to summon the evil knight, and took advantage of the short distance to charge and deny the two any chance to defend.

The Demonslayer Edge followed Han Shuo's thoughts and whirled out in flight again, infused with the flaming red spellfire, shooting towards the gargoyles making their way over. Han Shuo himself chanted a "Bone Shield" spell and blocked towards the front, defending against the bone spears.

After blocking two rounds of bone spears, the magically summoned "Bone Shield" broke apart. Han Shuo's mental strength swiftly circulated and he abruptly summoned the little skeleton, giving the mental order to fight the evil knight.

The evil knight on top of the howling beast was an extremely high level dark creature. It very agilely used the metal club in its hand to block the attacks from Emily's Grim Reaper blade. The spiked club that had appeared with it was quite durable, as it didn't break at all when it collided with Emily's magic blade.

"Eh, you only know how to summon skeletal warriors?" The necromancer was quite perplexed when he saw that Han Shuo had only summoned a bizarre skeleton after swiftly chanting a spell.

A leisurely smile played about his lips as Han Shuo didn't respond, only mentally giving the order for the little skeleton to attack the evil knight.

His two leg bones springing up, the little skeleton's seven bone spurs shook as he flew through the air. He clasped the bone dagger tightly in his hands as he made the first move, moving swiftly behind the evil knight like a streak of lightning.

The evil knight facing off against the Grim Reaper blade, seemed rather disdainful of the little skeleton. It only slightly shook its shoulders and shifted his black armor to cover his back. The necromancer had a mocking smile on his face as he watched as the little skeleton attacked, not worried in the slightest for the evil knight that he'd summoned.

Just as the little skeleton's bone dagger was about to land into the evil knight's back, the bone dagger suddenly froze for a second and suddenly changed direction, stabbing into the evil knight's exposed neck. The evil knight facing off against the blade's attack suddenly emitted a string of ghastly screams as the giant spiked club in its hand waved around wildly.

Emily's summoned blade slipped past the spiked club's defence and smashed into the howling beast's body, cutting its head off, giving rise to a spray of light like a comet.

The little skeleton flew over at the same time and landed on the evil knight.

It blurred into motion, seeming to stab randomly into the now unarmored evil knight.

The little skeleton also yanked out bone dagger that had been stabbed into the evil knight's neck, grasping it in his hand and continuously plunging it into the evil knight's body. The evil knight, that had been covered with gleaming armor and riding the howling beast, suddenly changed greatly.

The black armor suddenly rusted over, the evil knight's originally strong and gleaming body dissipated into dust, vanishing in an instant. Even the howling beast that it was riding also scattered into ashes. It was the manifestation of life being thoroughly wiped away.

Emily breathed a sigh of relief when the evil knight vanished, her highly tensed heart was finally able to calm down and the Grim Reaper's blade also vanished without a trace. The little skeleton was the only thing remaining as it spun its bone dagger, recalling the seven bone spurs on the ground and placing them back on its back.

The jeering look on the necromancer's face had long since vanished utterly as he looked at the little skeleton with a look of incredulity. He cried out in shock, "Impossible, this is completely impossible. A hundred skeletal warriors wouldn't be able to harm an evil knight. This goes against the basic tenets of necromancy theory!"

A faint smile still on his face, Han Shuo said very easily, "Nothing is impossible. Although I don't have as much necromancy knowledge as you,

I don't think anything is illogical here.”

He gave an order and the little skeleton's legs shook as it took off towards the necromancer.

The necromancer was greatly surprised, but then immediately chuckled oddly, “Good, very good! Then let me see what secrets you have!”

A necromancy incantation sang out lowly from his mouth as the necromancer swiftly approached Han Shuo. Just as the little skeleton was about to bump into him, the necromancer suddenly leapt high into the air and flung out the bone staff in his hand, coming on top of Han Shuo's head.

An enormous evil mental strength suddenly surged into Han Shuo through the bone staff like a magnet, attempting to subvert Han Shuo's memories. The necromancer displayed a proud smile as he said viciously to the panicking Emily, “Don't make any moves. I've already established a connection with his soul. If I suddenly die, he'll lose his soul and become an idiot.”

Emily was immediately stunned motionless when she heard those words as she looked anxiously at Han Shuo. She discovered that Han Shuo was standing there frozen, completely out of it with his eyes unfocused like he was a sculpture or stone.

Even the little skeleton, that had just received Han Shuo's order to attack the necromancer, suddenly stood there blankly, looking around as he wielded his bone dagger, as if waiting for Han Shuo to give him an order.

“Haha, this is a necromancy magic called ‘Soul Erosion’ that I've recently grasped. I can take over a person's soul through necromancy magic and gain all his secrets after I erode his soul. I'm connected to the target throughout this process, and my target will be unable to escape even if I suddenly die. Haha!” The necromancer started explaining proudly to Emily when he saw that his power through the bone staff had invaded Han Shuo's brain.

Emily was quite frantic right now as she looked at Han Shuo, not knowing whether to fight this necromancer or not.

As an archmage, Emily could clearly sense the enormous even mental strength surging into Han Shuo's body through the white bone staff over his head. She didn't dare not believe the necromancer's words.

Just as Emily was utterly frantic and didn't know what to do, the originally slack jawed Han Shuo suddenly cried out harshly as red and purple spellfire surged up his arms. His entire being seemed to be enveloped in purple, red flame as his face appeared quite contorted, his entire body full of a frightening aura.

At the same time, the previously cocky necromancer suddenly had all color drained from his face as he cried out with extreme fear, "No, don't!"

Chapter 157: Taking all the memories of the soul

The white bone staff, that had originally been hovering above Han Shuo's, head had reversed directions at sometime and left his head to hover over the necromancer's instead. The frightened necromancer kept chanting spells and attempted to regain control of the staff, but nothing he did would have any effect.

The Demonslayer Edge abruptly flew out at this time and stabbed into the necromancer's chest. Red spellfire suddenly flared up over his head, whereas Han Shuo sat down cross legged. It was his turn to chant in a low voice.

The necromancer was burnt to a crisp in very short amount of time as his head was encircled by red spellfire. His head was like a black cinder, and it was no longer possible to make out his features.

A profound incantation rang out from Han Shuo's mouth. He waved his hand and the white bone staff suddenly shot out a green light that weaved together to create a net. The net of green light encompassed the necromancer's head like a whirlpool sucking something in.

A cloud of grey aura suddenly floated out of the necromancer's body and was slowly detained by the green net, just as the souls of the other dead within the surroundings had been. The net and the white staff floated in front of Han Shuo.

The white staff suddenly flew into Han Shuo's hand when it reached him, while the green net got absorbed into Han Shuo's brain through his facial orifices, along with the soul within it.

Emily was completely gobsmacked by this sequence of events. She had no idea what was going on. She didn't understand why the previously cocky necromancer had suddenly lost his soul to Han Shuo instead.

After the green net and necromancer's soul were absorbed by Han Shuo's brain through his orifices, Han Shuo sat down cross legged and didn't move a muscle. However, his expression continuously changed, at times joyful, enraged, and at times pained.

As Han Shuo sat there without moving, the little skeleton that had been standing in a daze seemed to still be perplexed. It walked around the surroundings with bone dagger in hand. When the little skeleton reached the center where the altar was, his eyes suddenly landed on the pool of blood that had been used to summon Ansidesi.

"Leave that place!" Emily knew that the little skeleton had an unexplainable connection with Han Shuo. When she saw the little skeleton run to that dangerous place, she immediately spoke up to stop him.

That evil pool of blood in the center of the altar had been formed from the corpses of countless numbers of trading house guards. The necromancer had likely added in a number of devious items. Emily was quite afraid that the evil within the pool would invade the little skeleton's body if he went in.

It was a pity that Emily wasn't Han Shuo. Her words had no effect on the little skeleton. Her words actually had the opposite effect, as the little skeleton touched its smooth head and looked at Emily with some confusion, turning back to leap forward into the pool.

"Oh, my gosh. Not only is the master crazy, but so are the summoned creatures!" Emily was going mad in her anxiety and started cursing.

Emily still walked towards the altar, even though she was cursing, planning on seeing how she could help the small skeleton. When she reached the altar however, and saw that the little skeleton was splashing around happily within the pool of blood, she actually felt the emotion of joy from the little skeleton, submerged up to his neck as he played like an innocent child.

"Eh, what's with this little skeleton?" Emily didn't know what to say when she saw that all was well with the little skeleton and that he seemed to be having a great time.

All the corpses that had landed in the pool of blood earlier had seen their flesh and blood immediately dissolve, with their bodies sinking into the pool without a trace, but the little skeleton hadn't seemed to be affected at all after entering the pool. This took Emily aback greatly. When she thought back to the first time she met Han Shuo and how the little skeleton had seemed to be immune to many dark magics, chasing her up and down the battlefield, Emily had to shake her head with a rueful smile. There were indeed some things that she couldn't explain.

Suddenly, Emily's lashes fluttered quickly as she looked at the pool of blood, perplexed. When looked at closely, it seemed that the blood within the pool was slowly decreasing.

When Emily refocused her attention on the little skeleton, she noticed that the seven bone spurs on the back of the little skeleton's back were absorbing the blood from the pool. This strange phenomenon made Emily cry out in shock and murmur, "My gosh, what kind of demon did he summon?!"

The blood within the pool was slowly absorbed into the seven bone spurs on the little skeleton's back. When the blood began to run dry, the multitude of white bones within seemed to be affected by some power and liquified with the remaining blood, also to be absorbed by the seven spurs.

This process had taken roughly half an hour and everything within the pool had been absorbed by the little skeleton's spinal area. Emily discovered that the seven bone spurs on its back had turned a fey, bright red and subtly emitted a bloodthirsty light. They looked even more sharp and frightening than before.

The pool was in a square shape and was three meters deep after everything had vanished. The little skeleton was only a meter tall. He looked up at Emily, seeming to be considering how to climb up.

"Out of ideas now, aren't you." Emily huffed and planned on unfurling a rope to pull the little skeleton up.

Who would know that the little skeleton would suddenly activate the seven bone spurs on his back as soon as she's spoken, shakily flying out of the bottom of the pool of blood, landing next to the shellshocked Emily.

The little skeleton didn't even look at Emily once as he activated the seven bone spurs again to fly next to the still meditating Han Shuo.

"Damn it, you're just as much of a jerk as your master!" Although the little skeleton was expressionless, Emily could feel that he was smugly showing off at the moment and she couldn't help but curse at him.

She then saw the little skeleton continue to fan the seven bone spurs and start flying around the enormous room. He started off shakily, but then started leveling out. As he flew more steadily, his speed increased as well. Emily's eyes couldn't even keep up with him towards the end.

Han Shuo breathed out lightly at this moment and suddenly said, "It's finally done!"

Emily was greatly surprised and turned her head to look at Han Shuo. She was suddenly mesmerized and looked at his eyes with great astonishment, forgetting to ask Han Shuo what was going on.

Han Shuo's eyes were suddenly incredibly clear, like the brightest star in the vast heavens. They were alluring and deep, giving others a feeling of impenetrable mysteriousness.

"What's wrong?" Han Shuo couldn't help but stand up when he saw Emily's lovesick expression and walked over to pinch her face, asking with some confusion.

"No, nothing much. Just that your eyes seem brighter than before, and even your presence seems to have undergone some changes." Emily brushed away Han Shuo's playful hand a bit bashfully.

"Heh heh, so it turns out there's a really nice side benefit to taking over the necromancer's soul." Han Shuo laughed gleefully.

"Hurry up and tell me, just what is going on?" Emily's curiosity was killing her at the moment as her hand snaked out and clutched Han Shuo's throat, asking viciously.

"Cough, alright, alright!" Han Shuo smiled in explanation after he wrenched Emily's hands off his neck. "I told you that the martial techniques I'm training in are quite miraculous. Not only have they strengthened my body, but they've even enlarged my brain. He wanted to use the soul erosion spell just now to take over my soul and memories, but because my brain had been enlarged, I could also sense all the memories of his soul throughout this process."

"Logically speaking, a necromancer at my level, mental strength, and brain processes would definitely be far inferior to the speed at which he would erode my soul. Ordinary people wouldn't even have the time to repeat his name before their memories were co-opted."

"But it was a pity that the tenaciousness of my enlarged brain was something that he didn't imagine. I took over his memories before he could take mine and occupied his soul, obtaining all of his. It's that simple."

Emily was gobsmacked by the explanation that came from Han Shuo's mouth. She looked at Han Shuo with an incredible look and kept shaking her head, "Unbelievable, seriously unbelievable. What kind of monster are you?"

Hugging her fiercely, Han Shuo held Emily and said cheekily, "Alright, alright. Don't be so surprised. We can go now."

The Demonslayer Edge suddenly flew up and out of the necromancer's chest after he finished speaking, landing into Han Shuo's palm. There was a chopped off finger at the tip of the Demonslayer Edge with a space ring on it. Han Shuo took that as well.

"You brat, stop flying around and come down." Han Shuo yelled up with a smile at the little skeleton still circling in the air. The little skeleton capered down in front of Han Shuo and suddenly screeched to a halt in front of him, standing on the ground, waving his bone dagger.

"He, he entered the pool of blood and absorbed all of the blood and all the fragments of bone into those seven bone spurs." Emily hastened to explain to Han Shuo what the little skeleton had done while he was meditating.

Nodding, Han Shuo smiled, "I know. It isn't the first time that he's done something so daring. This is no big deal. See, he can fly now, isn't that great?”

“I have no idea what kind of demon you’ve created here. I notice that he seems to have his own emotions now. I don’t know if it was my misimpression, but when I was laughing at him being unable to get out of the pool of blood, he immediately flew out proudly from it. Truly, I could feel that he was showing off towards me, I promise!” Emily looked at the little skeleton and seemed to suddenly remember what had just happened.

“Heh heh, don’t be surprised. There are too many mind boggling things in this world. I believe that what you saw wasn’t an illusion because I’ve had the same impression before as well. I can’t really say for sure what’s going on now, but I think that he’ll give me an explanation as he continues to evolve in the future.” Han Shuo wasn’t surprised at all as he pointed to the little skeleton and smiled faintly.

Emily started when she heard these words and looked at the little skeleton with a wry smile after a while, then shifting her gaze to Han Shuo. “You two weirdos!”

“There’s nothing weird about this. You must get used to everything about me, because I believe that there will only be more amazing things that will happen in the future.” Han Shuo laughed heartily and looked to be in quite a good mood.

“Bryan, you’re growing at such a fast speed that your future accomplishments will be hard to imagine. Perhaps I won’t be able to help you with anything soon. I’m just a widow, will you cast me aside then?” Emily suddenly seemed to think of the matters of the future as she looked at Han Shuo. Her beautiful eyes looked at him and asked with a bit of forlornment.

“Don’t be silly. I’m with you, not because of what you can help me with. Even if our identities change in the future, that won’t affect anything between us.” Han Shuo looked deeply at Emily and saw her display a happy expression. He then pulled on Emily. “Let’s go, let’s go. Let’s leave, we don’t need to go anywhere else. I think I’ve gotten what you need.”

The two didn’t linger as they left, hand in hand. The sky had just started to brighten, as the two left stealthily, similar to how they had arrived.

Chapter 158: Reaching the sky in a single bound

The Dark Mantle had strongholds in any of the Lancelot Empire's cities. Naturally, Valen City was no exception.

If you are not reading this at volaretranslations, this translation is stolen and is not the latest/most complete update.

Han Shuo sat cross legged within a secret room carved out of dense rock, slowly digesting the memories from the necromancer's souls.

Han Shuo didn't set foot out of the secret room once within the four days, going through decades of the necromancer's memories. This necromancer named Clarendon had been 52 years old, and his experiences of all those years were all analyzed by Han Shuo.

Dozens of battles and a lifetime of studying necromancy, as well as a few secrets of his identity, were completely absorbed and memorized by Han Shuo in those four days. There were many minor details of course, but Han Shuo was too lazy to remember those.

After he'd assimilated all of the necromancer's experiences, Han Shuo realized that Clarendon had been in service to an organization called the Calamity Church. As such, all his actions, including the operation against Clark, had been on the orders from the Church's senior executives. He had no idea why he had to assassinate Clark.

Apart from a few matters having to do with Clarendon's identity, Han Shuo's greatest acquisition was the necromancer's comprehension of his path from apprentice to archmage, including the experience of every single battle and subsequent reflections.

If there really was a way to reach the sky in one bound in this world, then Han Shuo was doing so right now. With the theoretical knowledge and battle experience from this necromancer, Han Shuo's path to archmage was crystal clear. He would be able to quickly learn many advanced magics as long as he had enough mental strength.

Clarendon's experience from dozens of battles greatly broadened Han Shuo's worldview, and would prove to be of incalculable benefit to his future battles. The untested Han Shuo took note of some matters to avoid. In this way, the practical experience gains were likely on par with that of those of necromancy knowledge.

Han Shuo had obtained all of the valuable aspects from Clarendon's memories after four days, but he didn't immediately leave this secluded secret room. He spent another two days to fully grasp the other necromancy magics that a journeyman mage should know.

When Han Shuo walked out of the secret room, he felt refreshed and in great spirits. He was greatly at ease and felt quite confident about their mission this time.

"You're finally out. Mistress Emily has left orders that I must take you to her as soon as you emerge." Chester was standing guard at the door and spoke respectfully to Han Shuo when the latter emerged.

"Chester! Why are you so serious now. I remember that you weren't like this when I first met you!" Chester had spoken with a very casual tone and been quite at ease when he'd interacted with Han Shuo before. Chester was now noticeably more reserved when facing Han Shuo and spoke like he was speaking to his supervisor. This made Han Shuo rather confused.

"Bryan, you'll become a great person in the future, I'm just getting used to things beforehand." Chester briefly relaxed and smiled.

Shaking his head, Han Shuo said leisurely, "Even if I become a great person, our relationship shouldn't be that estranged." He clapped Chester's shoulder and laughed easily, "True partners should relax. I feel rather ill at ease seeing you this solemn."

"Alright, alright, I know what to do. Bryan, hurry up and go see Mistress Emily. She said that I had to bring you immediately to her when you emerged." Chester chuckled lightly, relaxing after Han Shuo had clapped his shoulder, and leading Han Shuo swiftly down a brightly lit hallway.

They emerged from the secret room after a few minutes, finally arriving in front of the room Emily was in. Chester winked at Han Shuo, backing away with a chuckle, and only resumed his guard when he had placed some distance between them.

Although Han Shuo and Emily had purposefully concealed their relationship, a hint of their true status still seeped out from the tone of their conversation and gestures. As a bandit, Chester was naturally very perceptive. He had naturally discovered a few hints after spending a few days together. However, Chester was a smart man, knowing his only chance to exceed his current station in life would lie in friendly relations with Han Shuo. So, although he knew full well some of what was going on, he pretended he didn't.

Han Shuo understood this and so wasn't even slightly worried that Chester would tattle. He maintained the easy smile on his face as Chester winked, pushing open the door to Emily's room without a care in the world, not having the slightest reservations at all.

"Who is it?!" Emily was greatly shocked as she cried out from within the bathroom. Han Shuo's sharp ears even picked up a few hints of water dripping.

His eyes flickering, Han Shuo realized that Emily was actually taking a shower at the moment. After six straight days of closed door cultivation, he'd been keeping things in for quite a while. He chuckled deviously and closed the room door, shooting straight for Emily's bathroom.

Emily was a bit panicked at first, but immediately knew who had come when she heard Han Shuo's evil chuckle. She blushed and fell back into the tub.

"The beauty stealer is here!" A cocky smirk on his face, Han Shuo circulated his magical yuan, shredding his shirt from his upper body and revealing his sturdy, domineering figure. He leaped into the bath, causing the water to spray everywhere.

"You evil villain! Such a rascal!" Emily pouted teasingly and splashed around, seeming to protest against Han Shuo's invasions, but her curses had turned into soul lurching panting within the span of a few breaths.

Emily's thrashing and twitching body relaxed into a long moan after a long while, and the ripples in the water finally calmed.

“That was beautiful!” Emily sighed softly, draped over Han Shuo’s broad and firm chest. She said contently, “You evil little thing, I hate and love you!”

Han Shuo was sprawled out lazily by the side of the tub and said leisurely, “It’s one of the happiest things in life to be able to take such a warm soak on this cold winter day. Oh right, what were you in a hurry to find me for?”

“To ask you what you’ve gained through the past couple of days, of course!” Emily’s slender hands subconsciously kneaded Han Shuo’s back as she asked him.

Han Shuo took a deep breath in and thoroughly described the gains of the past couple days for Emily. Emily was incredibly shocked and looked at Han Shuo with great delight, “You’ve gained his necromancy magic comprehension and his real life battle experience!? Doesn’t this mean that as long as you have enough mental strength, you’ll be able to quickly grasp all of the archmage level magics that he already knows?”

“I think that’s the logic. I’ve already tried to practice another journeyman level magic and discovered that I could master it quickly with the prior understanding of the necromancer. I didn’t have to go through too much trial and error in the middle.” Han Shuo nodded.

“My gosh, incredible, this is too incredible!” Emily’s incredulous joy doubled when she heard Han Shuo’s words. She kept repeating those sentences and appeared even more excited than Han Shuo.

“The necromancer obtained those documents from a secret room within the slave trading house. They chronicle Bob Ascher’s business dealings and can prove that he was involved in its operations.” Han Shuo handed the documents that the necromancer had taken from the secret room over to Emily after describing the situation.

Although the necromancer named Clarendon had set up a magical boundary within his space ring, Han Shuo broke it open very easily. He had obtained several books regarding necromancy, a few medicines for replenishing mental strength, and a few magic robes that had the effect of increasing magic power.

Of course, what Han Shuo was most satisfied with was still Clarendon's white bone staff. This white bone staff was specially refined for necromancers, using this staff to cast necromancy spells would enhance Han Shuo's power.

Han Shuo could originally only summon one bone spear when he cast the bone spear spell, but with the white bone staff, he could release two at once. Even the number of summoned dark creatures would increase as well.

The delighted Emily was about to say something as she held the documents that Han Shuo had given to her when she suddenly thought of something. She stared fixedly at Han Shuo and spoke urgently, "What organization did you say that this necromancer is from?"

"The Calamity Church!" Han Shuo started and replied.

Her expression changing drastically, all the color drained from Emily's face as she spoke to Han Shuo, "Don't tell anyone you killed Clarendon. I must report this to my brother immediately, especially since it involves the Calamity Church. Oh, Lawrence came looking for you and wanted you to drop by when you had the time. If you're careful, you can make your way to him. "

Emily hastily gave Han Shuo a few more reminders and told him not to tell anyone of his involvement with the Calamity Church. She then hurriedly left for the secret room with the magic mirror that would enable her to speak with the senior executives of the Dark Mantle.

Chapter 159: Leaving with the beauty

Ever since learning of Lawrence's identity, Han Shuo had been pondering how to interact with him. From the current situation, Lawrence was obviously planning on involving himself in the struggle of the princes. It was because of the mysteriousness that shrouded his identity that made his situation not that optimistic.

If Lawrence really could inherit the throne, Han Shuo wouldn't mind growing closer with him and would even be willing to go to bat for him, but if Lawrence didn't have this kind of strength in him, it would place Han Shuo in a disadvantageous position if he were to brashly associate himself with Lawrence.

Therefore, even though he was well aware of Lawrence's identity, Han Shuo pretended that he didn't know and arrived at Lawrence's residence with his usual expression.

The assassin, Lucky, was the one who showed Han Shuo in. After their experience assassinating Clark, the old assassin had completely accepted Han Shuo and his expression was no longer that remote. When he brought Han Shuo in, Lucky said, "He's not here right now, but will return at any moment. You can wait here if you're not in a hurry."

Nodding, Han Shuo looked at Lucky with a faint smile, "No worries, I'll wait for a while. Oh, right. You went off after Calvert afterwards, but did you get him?"

"Of course, not only him, but I killed his son as well." The old assassin displayed a trace of pride in his eyes. It looked like he was quite proud of his skills.

Han Shuo chit chatted randomly when he suddenly remembered about Lisa and asked, "Oh right, Lisa isn't present at the moment. I'd like to check in on her."

"Miss Lisa is elsewhere. Please come with me, I'll take you to her." Lucky responded and took Han Shuo through a garden, arriving at a building in the quiet rear of the property. He then spoke quietly to Han Shuo, "Miss Lisa's emotions have calmed down because Calvert and his son have been killed, but you'd best not bring up her family."

Han Shuo nodded in understanding and didn't say much.

He approached the building and knocked lightly.

"Is it cousin Lawrence?" Lisa asked through the door as her voice still seemed a bit melancholic.

"It's me!" Han Shuo responded.

"Oh, Bryan, you've come to see me." Han Shuo could hear long awaited happiness in Lisa's voice as her footsteps rapidly drew near. Lisa opened the door and appeared in cotton pajamas in front of Han Shuo.

Although Lisa's features hadn't changed since her life changing event and her naive and cute demeanor remained just as youthful as ever, a constant sorrow clouded her clear eyes. Her demeanor was such that it evoked protective feelings, a marked difference from her previous obstinate, headstrong ways.

However, this weak Lisa looked quite pleasing to Han Shuo's eyes. He closed the door after walking in and huffed out lightly, pretending to be cold, "The weather outside is quite cold!"

"Thank you for killing that old dog Calvert!" Lisa tugged on Han Shuo's sleeve, leading him inside with her as she thanked him.

A brazier was burning inside as it spread warmth throughout the house. Lisa added a few sticks of dry firewood to the brazier and then took her seat on a soft, leather chair.

"It was one of your cousin's men who killed Calvert, so you should thank him instead. I only made a mess of some things." Han Shuo found a seat and poured a cup of hot water for himself.

"If it wasn't for your distraction, my cousin's man wouldn't have succeeded that easily." Lisa had indeed changed a bit from before. She was silent for a bit after speaking, then looked a bit fearfully at Han Shuo. "You spent so many gold coins to buy me from the trading house. According to the rules of slavery, I belong to you.”

Starting in fright, Han Shuo immediately said seriously, “Lisa, you should know that I bought you purely to save you and had no other thoughts whatsoever. In addition, it wasn’t that many gold coins. We’re friends after all, don’t misunderstand!”

Lisa shook her head desolately, appearing a bit frantic as she looked at Han Shuo, “Do you not want me because you disdain me now?”

“No, not at all. We’re friends and this is what I should do. You have your own personal freedom. I don’t want you to feel guilty about those thousand gold coins.” Han Shuo hastened to say.

Lisa was silent once again after speaking. “Because of Bob Ascher, my family clan is completely annihilated. My status as a slave is also confirmed. You bought me in front of so many people in the trading house, this is also an irrefutable truth.”

“Then I can return your freedom to you and lift the status of a slave from you.” Han Shuo thought and said to Lisa.

Han Shuo heard footsteps sound outside of the door, and Lawrence walked in with a slight smile after a short while. He asked when he saw Han Shuo and Lisa in conversation, “What are you two chatting about?”

“I’m saying that I’m going to dissolve Lisa’s status as a slave.” Han Shuo responded as he looked at Lawrence.

“Give me your crystal card, I’ll transfer a thousand gold coins to you. Then you’ll have sold Lisa to me through legal proceedings. Leave the rest to me.” Lawrence seemed to have given the matter some thought already and responded immediately when Han Shuo spoke up.

“No need, Lisa is my friend, I can give her to you now. I can’t take the thousand gold coins.” A thousand gold coins was nothing in Han Shuo’s eyes, and he really had held the mentality of saving Lisa at the time.

Lawrence didn’t insist on refusing after Han Shuo, but nodded at Han Shuo with a smile. Lawrence said forthrightly, “Alright, I’ll take care of her status. However, this is Valen City and Bob Ascher’s territory. I’ll get Lisa back to the Empire in the next two days. Bob Ascher will be powerless even if he wants to do anything.”

As the third prince, Lawrence’s relationship with the king was very close. There naturally wouldn’t be any difficulty for him to handle such matters. Valen City was in an uproar at the moment, and there was indeed some danger to Lisa’s life if she stayed here. It would be a good thing to get her as far away as possible.

“Lisa, I have some things to discuss with Bryan separately. We’ll be leaving first!” Lawrence cast a glance at Han Shuo and walked outside. Han Shuo then rose to his feet and followed.

The two of them walked to an artificial mountain by the side of the front yard and Lawrence looked deeply at Han Shuo, asking, “Bryan, why have you come with Mistress Emily to Valen City this time?”

This had to do with secrets of the Dark Mantle, and so Han Shuo naturally couldn’t say much. He shook his head in apology, “I’m sorry, I promised Mistress Emily that word of this wouldn’t travel.”

Sighing lowly, Lawrence said genuinely, “You have a clean birth and although you once had a status of a slave, it’s of no matter. However, Emily is different, and her current status is old Hahn’s daughter-in-law. Walking too close with her will affect you in the future.”

“I think I understand your meaning, but I know what I’m doing. You don’t need to worry about me. Right, if you’ve come to Valen City to save Lisa and kill Clark, then you’re finished here. Are you leaving soon?” Lawrence meant well, but Han Shuo and Emily’s relationship had been cemented already. Han Shuo had his own thoughts and plans and naturally wouldn’t change anything because of Lawrence’s words of advice.

“Apart from this, I also promised someone to take out Bob Ascher. Perhaps you can assist me?” Lawrence suddenly spoke as he looked at Han Shuo.

“Haha, you must be joking. You’re inviting me to fight against the chief of the Gryphon Legion. This is too laughable. I know how much I weigh and I'll have no effect whatsoever against someone at the level of old Bob." Han Shuo's eyes gleamed, but he still played dumb.

Lawrence stared at Han Shuo and was about to say something when Lucky's low call suddenly traveled in, "We've been compromised! I think we need to retreat immediately, Bob Ascher's men are on their way."

Lawrence was startled and his face changed slightly. "Bryan, please take Lisa around the path in the yard to the back. We need to make some preparations."

Time was of the essence and so Han Shuo didn't say much else. He immediately nodded decisively and suddenly moved, breaking through the door into Lisa's room like lightning.

He didn't wait for Lisa to say anything as he took down a leather coat from the wall and wrapped her in it. He wrapped Lisa in it and leapt out the window, rushing for the path in the back yard.

Rapid hoofbeats sounded in the distance and approached quickly. Han Shuo knew that the Gryphon Legion must have sent a lot of men this time. He didn't know if Lawrence and the others could make it out. Bob Ascher's Gryphon Legion blotted out the sky in Valen City. Even a prince would only face death if he went head to head with Bob Ascher.

Chapter 160: You shouldn't have chased after me

After leaving the back yard, Han Shuo immediately focused his concentrations. Although he held Lisa within his arms, his speed was still as fast as lightning as he sped along the path.

It was noon, but there were no pedestrians on the road during such a frosty winter. Add to that, the fact that the soldiers had been turning Valen City inside out over the past two days, the civilians were all hiding in their homes and didn't dare to walk about. Thus, Han Shuo's dashing figure rather stood out along the road.

Two airborne patrolling Gryphon Knights spurred their gryphons on and detected Han Shuo's figure. The gryphons screamed as the knights hefted their three meter long spears and flew towards Han Shuo.

"There are gryphons in the air!" Lisa's face was frozen red from the cold bite of the wintry air. She raised her head from her position in Han Shuo's grasp and noticed the pursuit from the two Gryphon Knights, hastily voicing a reminder to Han Shuo.

"I know, don't worry!" Han Shuo had long since noted the pursuit and he responded in a low voice to Lisa without a change in expression. His body continued to dash quickly through the scattered streets as his mind spun, searching for ways to react.

Han Shuo had thoroughly remembered all the places they'd passed on the way to Lawrence's. Now that they had been spotted by the Gryphon Knights, Han Shuo was quickly thinking of ways out.

He couldn't expose the Dark Mantle stronghold, so he couldn't return there at the moment. Now that there were Gryphon Legion members patrolling Valen City and two Knights in the air had set their sights onto them, he had to quickly shake them off or find a place to kill them. Otherwise, more trouble would quickly descend upon them.

As his thoughts raced, Han Shuo suddenly changed direction and didn't dash in and out of alleyways. He ran towards the direction of a patch of trees, circulating his magical yuan, making it so that he seemed to have a boundless source of energy. The speed of his dash was faster than the two knights' expectations.

The two knights had planned on landing as soon as Han Shuo had left the cover of the houses and killing him. Who would've thought that Han Shuo would speed forward like he was riding a fierce and swarthy horse as soon as he left the area, catching them off guard.

However, the knights naturally held an advantage being in the air. When they regained their composure, they spurred their gryphons onwards to catch up to Han Shuo and circled above the trees, locking their sights onto Han Shuo.

They were already a few li away from where Lawrence lived. Han Shuo had observed for a little bit just now and noticed that only these two knights were pursuing him, so he hadn't been unduly worried. His body halted as soon as he entered the cover of the trees and suddenly came to a complete stop, swinging Lisa up and around him so that she was on his back.

"Hold on tight and don't let go no matter what!" Han Shuo ordered lowly.

She nodded her head docilely and said resolutely, "I understand. I won't let go even if I die."

"Don't worry, we won't be the ones to die." Han Shuo comforted Lisa confidently and took out a firm, supple rope from his space ring. He firmly tied Lisa onto his back to prevent her from sliding off halfway through. Han Shuo gripped the Demonslayer Edge in his right hand after doing all this and looked coldly at the two Gryphon Knights hovering overhead, preparing himself to kill two men and two beasts.

"Let's see where you'll run to now!" A Gryphon Knight laughed disdainfully overhead, shaking the sharp spear in his hand and digging his heels into the gryphon beneath him in an odd way.

The gryphon circling in the air suddenly screamed out bizarrely and dived down towards Han Shuo. The metal claws of the gryphon could rip apart a buffalo. As it dived down towards Han Shuo like this, the aura formed by its enormous body and the knight's coldly gleaming spear was enough to stun an enemy senseless.

The other Gryphon Knight moved his steed closer to Han Shuo, but didn't immediately make a move. The arrogance and disdain on his face seemed to indicate that having one out of the two of them was more than enough to take care of Han Shuo, and that his attentions weren't needed at all.

Han Shuo's demeanor was aloof and remote as he held his ground without moving, staring intently at the diving knight and gryphon. A white bone staff suddenly appeared in his other hand when the Gryphon's metal claws was skimming the tops of the trees and Han Shuo quickly released a "Dark Mist" spell.

With the enhancing effects of this bone staff, the area of coverage by Han Shuo's "Dark Mist" spell had increased by one third, completely enshrouding an area that measured ten meters in diameter.

"Ugh, damn it, I can't see anything!" The Gryphon Knight bellowed furiously, some panic evident in his tone of voice.

He'd been chasing after Han Shuo all along and had witnessed Han Shuo's speed with his own eyes. That agility was something that a strong swordsman should possess, and a sword shaped Demonslayer Edge had appeared in his hand when he'd reached the treetops. His posture completely resembling that of a swordsman.

However, when it really came down to the actual fight, a white bone staff had suddenly appeared in Han Shuo's hands and he'd released a "Dark Mist" spell in the nick of time. This greatly astonished the Gryphon Knight, who'd also fallen into Han Shuo's trap.

The diving Gryphon Knight exclaimed in astonishment, alerting his companion that something was wrong. His companion moved quickly, intent on coming over to rescue his comrade.

It was too late.

A streak of bizarre, incandescent red fire flared strikingly through the dense, black mist. It was like it wasn't affected by the "Dark Mist" spell at all, displaying a heart stirring arc and tracing a long, bloody path.

The gryphon screamed bizarrely in pain as the knight yelled hoarsely, the cries rising at almost the same time as that fey, red fire. Screams that would strike fear into people's hearts as the long, bloody line painted itself through the patch of dark fog.

It was only when that bizarre, red fire extinguished itself did the despairing cries of agony finally fall silent.

The other Gryphon Knight that had arrived in the area listened to the screams with his scalp tingling with numbness. He couldn't see what was occurring and could only frantically repeat his questions, "Camper, what's wrong? What's going on?"

He kept calling out, but didn't dare to approach the black mist. He only observed from a distance.

The "Dark Mist" was a spell that took effect swiftly and also dispersed quickly. As the chilly wind blew, the black mist, that had coalesced quickly, vanished in a short period of time.

Han Shuo still stood where he was and had a cruel, cold leer on his face. Lisa on his back had her eyes tightly shut, burying her head into Han Shuo's neck as she couldn't bear to look upon the scene.

A bloody mess of severed limbs and hacked off flesh was scattered around Han Shuo. Some belonged to the Gryphon Knight, and some to the gryphon. A thick scent of blood attacked the nose as Han Shuo was stepping on a head that was slowly leaking brain fluid. It was as if he'd just been baptized by blood as he was covered in the gore, making his leer appear even more horrifying.

Dry retching suddenly sounded from the Gryphon Knight. He turned his gryphon immediately, fearfully trying to make his escape.

"Do you think that you're the only one who can fly?" Han Shuo's leer split in a laugh. He activated the "Demonic Art of the Ninth Heavens" and took to the air, shooting towards the Gryphon Knight like lightning with Lisa on his back. He arrived behind the Gryphon Knight before the latter had travelled too far.

Two bone spears shot out and stabbed into the gryphon's rump, making it scream shrilly. It actually turned and shot towards Han Shuo with the knight on its back. After the experience of his initial panic and the fact that his steed was now charging towards Han Shuo of its own volition, he quickly understood that Han Shuo could also fly through the air and that there was no opportunity for him to escape. He therefore hefted his spear and took aim at Han Shuo.

Every Gryphon Knight was at least a senior knight. Therefore, when he hefted his spear, it flared out with dark green fighting aura, as if silver lightning were traveling through the air after making use of the gryphon's momentum to hurtle towards Han Shuo.

Han Shuo had just used the sharp Demonslayer Edge to slaughter a Gryphon Knight, along with his gryphon. There was an uncontrollable bloodthirst rising in his heart. It was as if there was a voice spurring him on in his heart that told him to keep killing in such a gory manner. It happened to provide the perfect outlet for his emotions as he saw the Gryphon Knight charge towards him.

Han Shuo threw his head back in a long howl and flew over with a leer. The Demonslayer Edge hadn't appeared to be particularly long before, but with the circulation of the "Glacial Mystical Spellfire", a two meter long purple and red light spat from the tip. The purple light was out in front, and the red light connected to the Demonslayer Edge in the back. The weapon looked quite magical.

Even with Lisa on his back, Han Shuo's speed wasn't much slower than the Gryphon Knight's as he flew using the Art. His magical yuan circulating at top speed. Han Shuo emitted a dense killing intent that seemed to materialize as a black aura around his body. When viewed from afar, Han Shuo's figure with Demonslayer Edge in hand was like a shooting star falling towards the ground.

A ball of dazzling splendor exploded from where the two intersected, a deafening metallic clang reverberated in the surroundings. The Spellfire infused Demonslayer Edge shot out a meter of cold, purple light, crashing into the fighting aura emitted by the long spear. The spear was immediately churned into dust as it was ravaged by the violent magical yuan.

A bone piercing cold immediately crept over the knight's body. He reacted, but didn't have time to make a move before Han Shuo coalesced a red spellfire a meter tall. The blood veins in the knight's right arm gripping the silver spear suddenly exploded beneath the piercing cold and burning heat. His muscles started sliding off his bone, like they'd been doused in acid, as droplets of blood escaped from his arm.

"You shouldn't have chased after me!" Han Shuo leered at the horrified Gryphon Knight. The Demonslayer Edge started flying according to his will afterwards and hacked off the gryphon's metal claws. The Demonslayer Edge then hewed downwards and spliced the knight and gryphon's body into two, like he was cleaving apart a mountain. Fresh blood splattered like rain down towards the trees.

The two Gryphon Knights had now died grisly deaths at Han Shuo's hands, but Han Shuo actually had an unsated feeling. His heart trembled as he suddenly came to his senses, finally understanding why he had such a fervent desire to slay and slaughter.

Since his demonic magic had reached the true demon realm, Han Shuo had thoroughly become a demon. It was the first time that he'd had overwhelming power and would find it difficult to control the urges deep within his heart, particularly as the next realm was the most dangerous "bloodlust" realm. As one began to enter the bloodlust realm, the practitioner would start to have the desire to erupt in full blown slaughter in every battle.

It was a good thing that since he hadn't yet entered the bloodlust realm, Han Shuo could still control his thoughts and desires. It would become harder to control his bloodthirsty desires once he reached the next realm. He wouldn't be able to stop once he started fighting unless he saw blood, becoming an extreme, gore-seeking violent demon.

He exhaled lightly and privately reflected that practicing demonic magic was truly a perverse way. However, the exhilaration of fighting and killing today made him feel damn good, and his entire being seemed to strut around like a new person.

“Over there, after him!” The battle screams of horses came in from the distance. Han Shuo hovered in the air and swiveled his head, seeing that a troop of Gryphon Legion cavalry was quickly approaching him. This troop was formed only by earth bound knights. Han Shuo wasn’t afraid that he’d be unable to shake them off.

Snorting coldly, Han Shuo flew downwards and picked up speed to leave when he was level with the trees.

“You know how to fly!” Lisa suddenly put her lips next to Han Shuo’s ears at this time and exclaimed with astonishment at this time.

Chapter 161: Bumping into a familiar face

Outside of Valen City, Han Shuo set Lisa down when they arrived at an outcropping of randomly scattered rock in the wilderness.

Suddenly, having been set down, Lisa hugged Han Shuo tightly from behind. Her burgeoning breasts were pressed tightly against his back and he could clearly feel their soft, smooth firmness.

Han Shuo had been carrying Lisa back all along, but because he'd been fighting in a dangerous situation and had been busy avoiding hits, he hadn't focused his attentions on anywhere else. Now that the two were out of danger, Lisa suddenly embraced him tightly from behind, giving rise to strange feelings in his heart.

"Do you like that?" Lisa perched her lips next to Han Shuo's earlobes as she plastered her chest against his back, huffing out a breath of hot air and asking shyly in a low voice.

Taking a deep breath in, Han Shuo turned around and looked at Lisa, prying her from his body with a small bit of effort. He smiled, "Alright, we're safe now. Now that we've left Valen City, it will be harder for the Gryphon Legion to capture us than it would be for them to ascend to the heavens. You can be at ease."

Pouting, Lisa once again approached Han Shuo and hugged him tightly, her two arms squeezing him tightly around the waist. She said softly, "I'm nothing now, all my kin is gone. What should I do in the future?"

Clapping Lisa's shoulder, Han Shuo comforted her, "Don't worry, Lawrence will take care of you. He rushed here from the capital when he heard that something had happened to you. He truly dotes on you."

"I often played with cousin Lawrence when we were young. He already doted on me back then. Heh heh, he's been like my own brother all these years. I'm very grateful to him!" Lisa said proudly when she heard Han Shuo mention Lawrence, and then cried out in surprise, saying with worry, "Oh no, he didn't leave with us, could he possibly be in danger?"

“Don’t worry, your brother Lawrence isn’t an ordinary person. If he can’t handle even this little bit of danger, then all his years of living will have been wasted.” As the third prince, Lawrence had always been educated by his ambitious mother. He was also heavily valued by the king and had experts by his side. It wouldn’t be a problem for him to leave peacefully at all.

“Right, you haven’t answered me, why can you fly?” Han Shuo’s comfort had great effect on Lisa. She heaved a sigh of relief and suddenly thought of this matter, fixing her beautiful eyes onto Han Shuo.

“Eh, this is difficult to explain. I can only say that I’m using a levitation spell that’s not limited to archmages. As for how I can fly, I can only say that it’s a marvelous technique.” It was difficult to explain anything regarding the “Art of the Demonic Ninth Heaven” to either Emily or Lisa, and it was impossible to put things plainly. Therefore, he could only gloss over the matter.

More than ten people suddenly appeared in the distance and slowly walked towards Valen City. Han Shuo looked at them from afar and paid them no attention when he saw that they weren’t wearing the uniform of the Gryphon Legion. He stood there and continued to talk to Lisa.

The slope of random rocks that Han Shuo and Lisa were standing on happened to be where the group of people would soon pass by. When they drew near, a soft exclamation suddenly rang out, “Eh? Bryan, what are you doing here?”

Han Shuo started and then paid close attention to the group of people. He suddenly discovered a familiar face among them – Candice. Boasting a fit body and wearing a broadsword on her back, Candice was wearing the thin, tight uniform of a swordsman and seemed to be unafraid of the assault of cold air.

When she saw Han Shuo, she made a gesture to the mercenaries behind her and then walked over dashing to Han Shuo. She swept her eyes up and down Han Shuo when she walked over and frowned, “You’re bringing a small girl to feel her up behind this random outcropping of rock on such a cold day?”

“None of your business!” Lisa flicked a glance at Candice, seeming to not like her tone and hectored in an unfriendly manner.

Han Shuo struggled a little bit and broke free from Lisa’s grasp. He looked at the Battlefire mercenary band members behind her and noticed that they numbered six in total. Five of them were spread out and surrounded a girl with a better figure wearing a thin veil, seeming to be protecting her.

Looking at Candice, Han Shuo understood that Candice should have accepted a mission and was protecting the thin veiled girl behind her. He then looked at Candice and said with a slight laugh, “Long time no see Candice. You must’ve accepted a mission and are in the middle of carrying it out?”

Nodding, Candice admitted to it readily. She laughed heartily, “Indeed, I have a tough life! Not everyone can be as carefree as you, able to make out with a girl in a place like this on such a cold day!”

“Don’t you think random thoughts! We’re only here because of some matters.” Han Shuo smiled at Candice ruefully.

“We’re on a date, and what business is it to you!” Lisa’s lip curled as she seemed to resume the usual spitfire she had at school, glaring at Candice like she was a little hen itching for battle.

“Alright, alright, what are you posturing for?” Han Shuo felt things were a bit bizarre as he smiled and patted Lisa, indicating for her to say a few less words.

“This little girl is rather interesting, heh. Right, Bryan, how are things between you and Phoebe now?” Candice looked in amusement at Lisa and then stared at Han Shuo in inquiry.

“Same old, I’m business partners with her. She’s taken over the guild now and has been incredibly busy lately.” Han Shuo responded carelessly and then asked Candice, “Are you going into Valen City?”

Nodding, Candice said, “That’s right, we’ve accepted a mission to escort

Miss Belinda to Valen City. We'll take her safely back when Miss Belinda concludes her business in the city."

Because Candice and Han Shuo had gone through a life and death situation with each other before, Candice had accepted Han Shuo in the depths of her heart. Therefore, she fully revealed the details of her mission this time.

Thinking rapidly, Han Shuo weighed things up before warning Candice, "Valen City has been a bit uneasy during these past few days. The chief of the Gryphon Legion, Bob Ascher, has seen one son gone missing for a few months and his eldest, Clark, was just killed two days ago. The chief is enraged to the extreme and is turning Valen City upside down. I recommend that your employer not venture into Valen City at this time if there's nothing too urgent."

"Thank you, I'll mention your suggestion to my employer, but I can't decide whether or not she'll listen to me." Candice was very surprised by this news, and it was apparent from her furrowed brows that she too was placing high emphasis on this matter.

But she was a mercenary, and since she'd accepted an employer's mission, she had to proceed according to the original contract. She had no power to modify the contract even if some abnormalities cropped up along the way, or else she'd have to pay additional compensation. Therefore, she could only speak thus.

Nodding, Han Shuo was about to say something when his brow suddenly furrowed as he suddenly turned in the direction that they had come from. He hesitated and asked Candice, "Did you run into any danger along the way here?"

Candice first started in surprise, and then remembered Han Shuo's miraculous abilities. Her pretty features immediately stilled as she quickly responded, "We did run into some danger along the way, but we quickly handled it. Why do you say this? Did you discover something?"

"There was another group of people behind you since you've appeared. I thought they had nothing to do with you and was just another group of people wanting to enter Valen City, but a huge gust of wind blew by just now and I happened to hear the word 'Belinda'. If I'm not mistaken, this group of people that's continuously kept their distance from you must have something to do with your employer 'Belinda'." Han Shuo responded with a frown.

If it'd been anyone else to say these words, Candice would've never believed him because even she hadn't detected anything out of the ordinary at such a far distance. Not only had Han Shuo picked up the traces of another group of people, he could even make use of the wind to hear what they were saying. This was a completely unimaginably queer occurrence.

Only a wind archmage would have such miraculous hearing to be able to pick up on what others were saying so far away. Han Shuo was obviously not at this level.

However, after going through life and death with Han Shuo last time, Candice understood that he did happen to have such miraculous abilities. She had long since seen his capabilities and thus believed him without hesitation. Her long eyelashes fluttered rapidly as she contemplated with a furrowed brow, then spoke to Han Shuo, "What direction are they in, how many and what's their strength like?"

Chapter 162: The abnormalities of the white bone staff

“There are three people five hundred meters behind you. Because they’re further away and wearing ordinary gear, I can’t figure out their strength.” Han Shuo observed for a moment as he stood on the outcrop with narrowed eyes, responding to Candice’s question in a low voice after a while.

“Thank you Bryan, I’ll remember your help.” Candice said lowly and didn’t say much else to Han Shuo, turning to return to the Battlefire mercenary band, discussing something with the mercenaries.

“What is she to you that you’re willing to help her?” Lisa tugged on Han Shuo’s sleeve after Candice had left.

“A friend of mine from awhile back. Let’s go. We’ll leave in another direction. We still need to return to Valen City in a bit.” Han Shuo looked at Candice and saw that she was still discussing things with her employer. He knew that his words had had an effect then.

Candice was a mercenary and had her missions and way of living. Han Shuo gave her a reminder out of the kindness of his heart when he ran into her and saw that her mission held some latent danger. He was being a good friend, but wouldn’t interfere in her matters.

When she heard that Han Shuo wanted to leave, Lisa didn’t say much as she ducked her head shyly and walked behind Han Shuo, reaching out her hands to entwine around his neck and jumping firmly onto his back. She said merrily next to his ear, “I still want you to give me a piggyback me.”

Han Shuo was speechless, and then smiled ruefully. He said to Lisa on his back, “I had no choice just now because there was an emergency. That’s why I put you on my back. Now that we’re out of danger, you no longer need to be piggy backed. We can slowly walk back.”

“Hehe, I’m not getting down no matter what you say.” Lisa’s small hands entwined themselves around Han Shuo’s neck as her fleshy thighs criss crossed themselves around his waist, appearing quite at ease.

Lisa was at an exuberantly youthful age, and because of Han Shuo's random teachings, her originally flat chest was now a bit ridiculously well rounded. Han Shuo could even feel that her chest on his back wasn't much smaller than that of Emily's. That soft, wondrous feeling made Han Shuo's heart itch a bit.

Off in the distance, Candice spoke a bit with her comrades and seemed to be set on continuing to make their way to Valen City, ignoring the three following behind them. Their minds made up, the group began moving out again. Candice flicked a glance over at Han Shuo and happened to see Lisa on Han Shuo's back. She was rather taken aback.

Han Shuo felt Candice's slightly bizarre gaze and turned to lift his head proudly, as if showing off something to Candice. She couldn't help but break into soft laughter.

"Hang on, we're leaving too." Han Shuo didn't force her to come down from his back when he saw that Lisa's mind was set. She'd just lost her parents and was in the most painful moments of her life. He didn't want to make her unhappy at a time like this. He gave instructions in a low voice and walked off on another path, avoiding the direction that Candice's crew was taking to Valen City.

It was already evening at this time. Han Shuo took note of the direction and made a circle around the city walls. He used the "Art of the Demonic Ninth Heavens" to fly over the city walls when night had fallen, landing in Valen City's territory.

They arrived at the hotel that Emily had stayed at last time and Han Shuo made his way directly to Emily's room. Chester called out lowly from within the room before they entered, "Who is it?"

"It's me!" Han Shuo responded and pushed open the door. He looked at the surprised Chester and asked, "What are you doing here?"

Chester hesitated when he saw Lisa on Han Shuo's back, responding, "Madame Emily thought that this might be where you're meeting Lawrence and had me stay here in hopes of receiving word from anyone of you.”

“Then, did you receive any messages from Lawrence?” Han Shuo couldn’t head directly to the Dark Mantle from here because Emily had arranged for men to be here, and because Lisa was present. This was also where he’d told Lawrence he was staying, so Lawrence was likely to come here after he escaped.

Nodding, Chester answered, “Lawrence hasn’t come by yet, but he’s sent a messenger. The man told me that if you and Lisa came back, please take Lisa to this place!” Chester handed over a card as he spoke. The address that was not too far from here was written on it.

“What did the man who Lawrence sent look like?” Han Shuo had to take all precautions.

After Chester had described the person, Han Shuo immediately understood that the person who’d come was the old assassin Lucky and therefore there was nothing to worry about in this matter.

Letting Lisa down from his back, Han Shuo looked at her and said seriously, “Lisa, we’re about to do something very dangerous. You should go with Chester and immediately go to where your cousin is. Lawrence will take you back to the Empire in a short period of time. Do as I say, alright? We’ll stay and get revenge for you.”

After experiencing an extreme hardship in life, Lisa was much more mature than Han Shuo had remembered. Although an expression of longing remained in her eyes after he said his words, she nodded her head docilely, agreeing to Han Shuo’s arrangements.

“Hire a carriage. Take Miss Lisa to the place on Lawrence’s card yourself. Place her safely in Lawrence’s hands.” Han Shuo said with a smile to Chester.

“Don’t worry, I’ll handle all of this perfectly.” Chester promised Han Shuo with great confidence and then bowed towards Lisa, gesturing for her to walk ahead of him.

Lisa looked deeply at Han Shuo, saying to him with some worry afterwards, “Be careful, don’t let anything happen to you.”

“Don’t worry, nothing will happen to me. Make use of the cover of the night to make haste. Go with him.” Han Shuo nodded and urged Lisa on with a slight smile.

Lisa turned and followed Chester after these words, and the two quickly moved outside. The Dark Mantle’s influence was naturally significant in such a city as large as this. It wouldn’t have been a difficult thing to accomplish if Han Shuo had wanted to send Lisa back.

However, he’d only joined the Dark Mantle only a short while ago, so it wasn’t a good thing to use the organization’s resources for his own personal affairs. In addition, as the third prince, it would be a more than appropriate thing for him to handle this matter and take care of Lisa’s affairs after she’d returned back to the Empire.

Han Shuo turned after Lisa had left and walked into the inner chamber, saying with a slight smile, “Come on out.”

Emily walked out with a smile from the inner chamber wearing a soft leather coat and rolled her eyes when she walked next to Han Shuo. She reached out a hand and pinched him, saying with some jealousy, “You made off with Lawrence’s sister after visiting him and made him send men here to ask for her. You’re something alright!”

Grasping her pinching hand and pulling it forward, Han Shuo held Emily in his arms and started roving his hands all over her well rounded chest. He smiled in explanation, “I’m not as bad as you think I am! I only took her with me because Lawrence’s location had been compromised.”

He explained the entire matter to Emily, who then responded with a furrowed brow, “According to Lawrence’s words, he may be here to act against Bob Ascher on the king’s silent approval. This may be one of the methods that His Majesty is using to test Lawrence. He’ll be using Lawrence’s performance in this matter to determine Lawrence’s future path.”

Han Shuo started slightly after hearing Emily’s words. He hadn’t thought that much at first, but it all made sense after Emily had explained things.

He mused silently for a moment and then said, "If this is the case, then we might actually have the inclination to cooperate with Lawrence."

"That's right, the Dark Mantle is under no restrictions when we conduct missions. I don't mind cooperating with Lawrence if the timing is right, but as for how to actually act, we must have a defined plan." Emily's slender brows were knit tightly as she spoke with some concern.

Emily's worries stemmed from Lawrence's identity as prince. She was afraid that if others misunderstood their relationship before the greater picture had been set. If Lawrence wasn't king in the end and another prince inherited the throne, then Emily, Han Shuo, and those others who had been too close to Lawrence might attract fatal disasters. Thus, Emily was quite cautious.

"I understand your meaning. Don't worry, I know my place when interacting with Lawrence." Han Shuo said quietly. He thought for a moment and then asked, "Right, you left in a hurry to notify your brother about the Calamity Church and told me not to mention this to anyone else. Why is that?"

Emily's charming features became incredibly grave when these words were voiced. She took a deep breath in and responded, "The Calamity Church is an evil church. They worship all sorts of evil gods, and numerous evil experts are gathered within their ranks. I only know of a few rumors about this church and don't know the details, but my brother told me that this Calamity Church is the largest evil cult on the entire continent. They commit acts hated by both man and god in the shadows. It's always a great threat to any country whenever they embark on a large scale mission."

"Ten years or so ago, several empires cooperated to exterminate the Calamity Church and swept away all of their exposed strongholds. There was no news of the Calamity Church for a long while after that, but everyone knows that they hadn't been destroyed at all. They are only in hiding. The fact that you confirmed this fact from the memories of the necromancer from the Calamity Church means that this matter is receiving significant attention."

Starting in shock, Han Shou looked askance at Emily, “Did you report the fact that I took the necromancer’s memories?”

“Of course not.” Emily pouted and rolled her eyes at Han Shuo, seeming to fault him for not believing her. She only continued to speak after he apologized. “I only said that we killed the necromancer together and gained this information from his space ring.”

“I see. It looks like this necromancer was a big fish.” Han Shuo smiled and fished out the white bone staff as they chatted, toying with it as they continued talking.

A strange buzzing sound suddenly emitted from the white bone staff, like the drone of an unknown bug. This made Han Shuo’s hair stand on end with astonishment.

“Is there anyone here in this hotel?” A familiar voice traveled in from outside at this moment. It was Candice calling out loudly.

The white bone staff still continued to sound out oddly and kept vibrating, seeming to want to fly out of Han Shuo’s grasp. This greatly surprised both Han Shuo and Emily.

“Eh? Miss Belinda, what are you doing? You can’t leave by yourself.” Candice’s shouting suddenly became frantic calls. It seemed that her employer had walked out of the Battlefire mercenary band’s protection.

Firmly grasping onto the shaking white bone staff, Han Shuo also felt rather perplexed and shook his head quickly. “I don’t know what’s going on either. This has never happened before whenever I used it.”

Frantic footsteps quickly approached their room, accompanied by Candice’s frantic yells. Han Shuo’s thoughts raced as he seemed to understand something and put the white bone staff back into his space ring. He made a motion towards Emily as he tip toed over to the window.

Chapter 163: Convening in a small hotel

Han Shuo lifted the window slightly upwards, revealing a long, narrow crack and made use of this opening to look outside.

Candice's employer, Belinda, was wearing a face veil and revealed only a pair of sapphire colored eyes. A strange expression was in them as she seemed to be looking for something. She looked to and fro upon arriving in front of Han Shuo and Emily's room.

Candice and the others of the mercenary crew ran over frantically behind Belinda. Candice was on high alert as she kept a hand on the magic sword strapped to her back, looking carefully around the premises, deathly afraid that something would happen to Belinda.

Candice only breathed a sigh of relief when the other members surrounded Belinda in the center. She spoke to the still peering around Belinda in admonishment, "Miss Belinda, please tell us before you walk around next time. We've been hired to ensure your safety, but we won't restrict your freedom of movement. You have no need to suddenly run away like this!"

Belinda's features were hidden behind her face veil, as her half moon, slender eyebrows were tightly knit together. Her beautiful eyes darted around as she appeared quite confused. Belinda only came to herself after Candice had spoken with displeasure, speaking apologetically in a gentle voice, "I'm sorry, I just thought I saw an acquaintance and so I hastened over. It turns out that I was mistaken."

Candice was also quite perplexed upon hearing these words and she said with a strange tone. "There was no one here. Why would you say that there was a figure here? This is too strange."

"Ah, it could be that I'm short on sleep and my eyes are seeing things. I'm truly very sorry." Belinda's bright eyes swept around the room that Han Shuo and Emily were in as she responded carelessly to Candice.

More frantic footsteps sounded from behind as a slightly chubby, middle aged woman walked into view smiling merrily. She held a book in her hand and curtsied politely when she walked in front of the people, then saying apologetically, “Honored guests, you must be here to look for lodging. I was preoccupied just now and am truly apologetic. Please come register at the front counter with me.”

“To think that no one’s standing at the front of this hotel. This is truly a bit worrying. In addition, the external surroundings don’t seem that good. Should we switch to another hotel, Miss Belinda?” Candice didn’t seem to like this hotel and raised this suggestion with a sour expression.

Wrapped in a veil, Belinda’s clear eyes surveyed the surroundings and said, “No need, let’s stay here. I think this place is fine.”

“Then alright.” Candice had to follow to her employer’s wishes and responded with some disappointment.

“Excuse me, what kind of people live in the rooms along this hallway?” Belinda seemed to ask a careless question to the chubby hotel owner.

“Apologies, we’re not at liberty to say. This is for the privacy of our guests, I’m sorry!” The hotel owner stuck to her principles. Although she plainly wanted Candice and them to stay here, she wasn’t willing to budge on a matter of integrity.

Nodding, Belinda didn’t continue her line of questioning. She said softly, “That is fine too. Are there any free rooms around the hallway? If so, I’ll stay here.”

The middle aged woman’s eyes lit up as she quickly flipped through the book in her hand, then pointed at a room not too far away from Han Shuo and Emily’s, saying hastily, “This room is empty, but it’s not the best in the hotel. If the honored lady doesn’t mind, you can immediately take up residence in it.”

“No problem, then this room it is. Candice, you handle the rest.” Belinda said gently as her clear eyes flicked a surreptitious glance at Han Shuo and Emily’s room, striding out in front to her room.

The owner of the hotel knew that Belinda was the master of this group, so she very quickly fished out a set of keys when Belinda started moving. The owner opened the door and let Belinda in when she got to the door.

“You guys go in first and protect the lady. I’ll take care of the paperwork and arrange rooms for us around Miss Belinda.” Candice gave orders to the rest of the Battlefire mercenary band after she saw Belinda head inside before following the overjoyed, chubby owner back to the front desk.

Han Shuo only closed the gap in the window when those of the Battlefire mercenary band followed Belinda into the room. He said lowly to Emily, “The abnormalities of the white bone staff must have something to do with Belinda. This person’s identity is very suspicious.”

Emily had seen some of what had just happened as well and immediately nodded when she heard Han Shuo’s words. She said gravely, “It looks like Belinda has something to do with the necromancer you killed. Since you’ve taken all the memories from his soul, do you have any impression of this Belinda?”

Furrowing his brow and thinking deeply, Han Shuo shook his head firmly in the end, “No. Belinda has never appeared in any of Clarendon’s memories. I really don’t understand why she could sense the white bone staff.”

“How did Clarendon obtain the white bone staff?” Emily started and approached the question from another perspective.

“It was awarded to him by the senior leadership of the Calamity Church after Clarendon completed a certain number of mission. He only knows how to use the white bone staff, but not where it comes from.” Han Shuo responded after musing with his eyes shut for a while.

“It looks like Belinda is from the Calamity Church. She could be here because of Clarendon’s disappearance. We need to be careful.” Emily thought for a bit and concluded gravely.

Belinda was currently Candice’s employer. If she was from the Calamity Church, then it was an unknown why she had asked Candice to protect her on this trip to Valen City. Han Shuo couldn’t quite understand this point, but given that Belinda could sense the white bone staff, this meant that her background wasn't simple. He considered the situation silently as he thought of the evils of the Calamity Church.

"Belinda must be suspicious of the rooms in this hallway. I think we should temporarily leave this place and switch to another room to observe her." Han Shuo suggested to Emily after thinking for a bit.

Nodding, Emily said with confidence, "No problem, the owner of the hotel is one of ours. We can switch to any room we want."

No wonder Emily had chosen to stay at this hotel in Valen City. It turns out the owner was part of the Dark Mantle! It looked like the Dark Mantle's intelligence network was quite vast indeed.

Making use of the time before Candice returned and the fact that Belinda had gone into that room with the members of the Battlefire mercenary band, Han Shuo and Emily quietly snuck out of their room from another exit. They entered a great lobby on the floor above and leaned against the window, able to see the front yard from their vantage point.

Emily must have triggered some mechanism as the hotel owner merrily appeared in the lobby after a short while. She still wore a professional smile and bowed slightly in front of Emily, "Madame Emily, what orders do you have?"

"Sister Helene, arrange a new room for us, ideally a bit of a distance away from Belinda, but able to observe them as well." Emily also responded amiably with a bit of a smile.

The middle aged woman called Helene was a bit surprised by Emily's words. She thought for a moment, "Three people also came in and asked for a room that could be used to observe Miss Belinda."

His mind connecting the dots, Han Shuo thought of the three that had been following Candice. He asked involuntarily, "Where are they now, and did you give them the proper rooms?"

"Don't worry, I've purposefully kept the rooms that can observe Belinda's room. I knew something was wrong with that woman when her gaze at your room was a bit off.” Helene flicked a glance at Han Shuo and displayed a ‘don’t you worry, I’ve got it under control’ look on her face as she explained with a smile.

“Sister Helene has accomplished many achievements for our organization over the years. Although she doesn’t know offensive magics, she’s very adept at observing people. This is why I stay here when I’m in Valen City.” Emily also rolled her eyes at Han Shuo and smiled slightly.

“Enough, Madame Emily, don’t compliment me like that. I’ll go arrange new rooms for you right away. I’ll also keep an eye on those who’ve just arrived and will immediately report any developments to you.” Helene sashayed out after replying merrily.

“Alright, we should make our preparations as well. We must keep a close eye on that girl. Investigating her background may lead to enormous profits for us.” Emily said.

Chapter 164: The female alchemist

They changed rooms and switched into one of the rooms on the other side of the artificial mountain in the yard. From this room, they could look directly into Belinda's room through the window.

Candice seemed to be discussing something with Belinda upon returning as she stayed within the room and didn't come out. The other mercenaries were arranged in the rooms on either side of Belinda's.

The three people who had followed Belinda were given rooms neighboring Han Shuo and Emily's room. Thanks to a magical mirror, they could directly observe the three's movements.

The trio looked like nondescript, ordinary featured men. They actually looked quite similar and could have been three brothers. One of them leaned against the window and kept an eye on Belinda after moving into the room, whereas the other two fell into a deep sleep on the bed, likely because they were too fatigued.

It was still daylight, so the two groups of people made no moves, maintaining a calm, peaceful situation. Han Shuo observed them for a while and noticed that both sides were doing nothing out of the ordinary. He returned to Emily's side and thought for a moment, "Keep an eye on the situation for me. I'm going to make a trip to the cemetery of death to check on things."

"Hmm? Why do you suddenly want to go back to the cemetery of death?" Emily was a bit surprised by Han Shuo's decision and stared at him with a questioning gaze.

Smiling mysteriously, Han Shuo said, "I recently took in a follower and want to see if his injuries have healed yet."

Han Shuo had already moved further into the room and ripped up the wooden panels of the closet, setting up the transportation matrix inside. Emily was long since used to Han Shuo's mysteriousness by now and didn't ask much when she saw that he was about to leave. She said, "Alright, I'll stay here and observe them. I'll go over and pull you back if anything happens, so you'd best not stray too far from the cemetery of death."

"Mm, don't worry, I'll stay within the cemetery. You can come find me anytime if there's anything out of the ordinary." Han Shuo responded and stood within the matrix, closing the doors to activate it.

"Gilbert, where the hell are you?" Han Shuo immediately yelled loudly when he reappeared in the cemetery of death.

The little lewd dragon appeared in front of Han Shuo with a pop and fell to his knees immediately, saying pitifully, "Noble master, you've finally remembered your faithful servant. There's nothing interesting in this boring place and I can't go out either! I'm bored to death!"

"I told you to keep a good eye on that place, you didn't slack off, did you?" Han Shuo had once told Gilbert to pay attention to the piece of land that was refining the earth elite zombie, just in case something untoward happened there.

"Of course I didn't slack off, but there's really nothing worth keeping an eye on there. Nothing's happened since you left. Oh, honored master, when will you take me out to go look for beautiful women?" Gilbert complained to Han Shuo.

Compared to his charred look last time, Gilbert was now dressed in a gleaming black robe and had his hair perfectly combed. Apart from his skin being the color of coal, the young Gilbert looked rather handsome.

"How are your injuries?" It remained to be seen whether or not he'd take Gilbert out with him, based on his injuries. Although this little lewd dragon was a shot mess, his strength as a dragon was extraordinary, so he would make a good helper regardless.

Gilbert puffed his chest out after hearing this question and said very cockily, "Not a problem. As one of the strongest predators on this planet, this kind of injury was not a problem for me at all."

"Stop bullshitting me, how are your injuries?" Han Shuo glared as he spoke harshly.

As his master, Han Shuo could more or less sense a bit of Gilbert's condition through the ties of the contract. Although he was much better than before, Han Shuo could still feel that he hadn't fully recovered, and so couldn't help but take a severe tone when he heard Gilbert speak this way.

Gilbert shrank into himself and said with a bit of trepidation, "I'm not fully recovered yet, but I'm pretty much all healed, I won't drag you down."

Nodding, Han Shuo said, "Alright, I'll consider taking you with me. Maybe in the next two days. Rest well. If you become a burden when I need you in the future, I won't let you off the hook that easily!" Han Shuo walked towards the spot where the earth elite zombie was being refined. The center of the area where the earth zombie was being refined had sunk in, and the concentrated earth essence was still slowly flowing in.

He took a look around and focused his concentration, establishing a connection with the zombie in the ground. Han Shuo instantly sensed a roaring sense of life when he did so. This sense of life was brimming with the rich qi of earth. Han Shuo immediately understood that the refinement of the zombie was already on the right path.

This was because when ordinary zombies were summoned, only a dead silence could be felt when a mental connection was established. Only incredibly strong dark creatures such as the knights would send forth a bit of the feeling of life when connected to the caster. There was a vibrant sense of life and the rich feeling of earth qi exuded from this zombie warrior. This meant that it had truly grown after absorbing the essence of the place of extreme earth.

"Alright, you stay here and rest up. I'll let you out in a few days." Han Shuo was at peace when he saw that nothing was out of the ordinary within the cemetery, and that the dark dragon and earth elite zombie were all regaining their full strength. He walked towards the structure within the cemetery.

Gilbert was quite excited upon receiving Han Shuo's promise and he kept bouncing around Han Shuo, complimenting his mighty prowess.

Gilbert's fawning smile made Han Shuo burst out laughing.

Han Shuo planned on leaving through the transportation matrix, but suddenly remembered that he hadn't gone into the basement for a very long time. Now that his mental strength had increased, Han Shuo planned on seeing if he could make it another level farther.

He had Gilbert stay where he was and walked down into the secret chamber by himself. He easily broke through the boundary at the first level and walked in matter-of-factly.

When he arrived at where he'd been stuck before, Han Shuo focused his concentration and charged forward, hoping to land on the next level of the cemetery of death.

Bam! Han Shuo was immediately bounced back when he hit the boundary and his mind ached with pain.

He fell to a sitting position and staggered to his feet, immediately understanding that his current mental strength wasn't enough to make it to the next level. A thought struck him as he held the Eye of Darkness in one hand and took out the white bone staff from his space ring with the other.

The cemetery of death was once hallowed ground for necromancers, and the green Eye of Darkness was the key to opening the cemetery of death. The white bone staff could enhance necromancy magics and although its function was different from the Eye, they were both items of necromancy. Han Shuo held the two in his hand and weighed them up, trying to see if there were any commonalities between the two.

Han Shuo couldn't help but focus his attention on the two items in his hand. The Eye of Darkness suddenly lit up and shot out green light, resulting in a surge of strength entering the white bone staff. A trace of black light suddenly shot out of the white bone staff and instantly sank into the Eye of Darkness.

Shocked, Han Shuo originally paid no attention to the Eye of Darkness and set his concentration on the white bone staff. He originally hadn't sensed anything out of the ordinary from the white bone staff, but suddenly discovered that there was a small magical formation within it.

“Ah, it’s a boundary formation that acts as a magical brand, no wonder Belinda could sense the white bone staff.” Han Shuo suddenly realized what had happened when his concentration made a round through the staff.

There was a type of boundary that acted as a magical brand in Clarendon’s memories and could be placed on weapons and clothes. It usually existed in the formation of a magical formation. The owner of the magical brand would be able to sense the existence of his brand within a certain existence.

So it turned out that such a magical brand existed within the white bone staff. There were traces of magic left within the staff that had not only blocked Han Shuo’s mental exploration and alerted Belinda of its existence.

Perhaps it was the Eye of Darkness absorbing the residual magic within the white bone staff, causing the magical brand formation to collapse from lack of energy, but this allowed Han Shuo to take a peek at the situation inside.

Han Shuo’s concentration sank thoroughly inside and discovered a small line of text within the formation – Work 17 from Alchemist Belinda of the Calamity Church. “The Calamity Church alright.” Han Shuo said lowly and didn’t plan on remaining within the cemetery of death. He reemerged on the ground and went back to the hotel, planning on coming up with a good strategy to take care of Belinda.

Chapter 165: An abnormal situation within the hotel

A faint fragrance drifted into Han Shuo's nose and mouth. A strong woozy feeling suddenly assaulted him and he almost fainted.

It was a good thing that the tenacity of his body was much stronger than an ordinary person's after the demonic magic had reforged his body. The magical yuan had an even more wondrous effect. His body started automatically circulating it the moment he became dazed after taking in a breath of the faint scent.

The demon infant in his abdomen instantly expelled the fragrance from his body. The dizzy feeling in his head also disappeared as well.

At this moment, Han Shuo held his breath and started circulating magical yuan first before taking in another breath of the fragrance. When he took the breath in, his immensely strong nerves were fully mentally prepared and in the instant the dizzying feeling appeared, the feeling of wanting to faint turned from strong to faint until he was no longer affected by it.

Now that he was in the true demon realm, his physical body had been reforged to a depth beyond normal imagination and even this strong, cloying fragrance wasn't enough to affect him.

Oh no! I wonder what's happened to Emily! After his perverted body grew used to the fragrance, Han Shuo suddenly recalled that Emily had been in the room and hastily pushed open the closet door.

Emily had been within the room, but was now nowhere to be found. He didn't know where she'd gone. There were traces that the room had been turned over, and judging from the level of mess that had been made, someone had been by.

Han Shuo's transportation matrix was set up inside closet and clothes were covering the magic sticks. Therefore, even if someone opened the closet doors, they wouldn't be able to discern anything out of the ordinary if they didn't inspect closely.

When he saw that someone had gone through the room and that Emily had vanished without a trace, Han Shuo immediately started worrying. Now that he planned on walking out of the room in search of his Dark Mantle colleague, he suddenly discovered that everything about the hotel was a bit out of sorts.

He lifted a corner of the window to discover that it was already night. However, as he gazed into the distance, he could see that the rooms in the distance were lit up. This meant that it wasn't too late at night yet, but all the rooms within this hotel were shrouded in darkness. There was faint light emitting from only Belinda's room as very low voices engaged in discussion came from it.

As Han Shuo held his breath and concentrated, he discovered that there were small fly-like bugs swarming the hotel courtyard. There were dozens of them, and they spread out to fly into all of the various rooms of the hotel. A gray mist emitted from their tails, emitting the fragrance that had almost caused Han Shuo to faint.

Creasing his brow, Han Shuo was almost certain that the abnormal events within the room had to do with Belinda. He soundlessly opened the door and took out the black robe that Dark Mantle members wore during missions. He made it to the top of the roof in the darkness and slowly slunk towards Belinda's room.

As he did so, Han Shuo deftly used the magical yuan to completely cover traces of his presence, adjusting his heartbeat and breathing to a very hard to detect frequency.

"Master Belinda, all of the guests within this hotel have been gathered into the living room of the suite." Han Shuo heard a low voice speak as soon as he laid his ear to the roof of Belinda's room.

"Mm." Belinda responded faintly and seemed to walk towards the lobby.

Han Shuo carefully moved his body towards the lobby. When he arrived, he lightly reached out a finger and circulated the "Mystical Glacial Spellfire". A small flame appeared on his fingertip, burrowing through dense wood material on top and allowed him look below.

There were more than ten people in a dead faint placed in a lobby that was very similar to the room that Han Shuo was staying in. Emily was amongst them, as well as Chester, having returned from his mission of taking Lisa to Lawrence. Hotel owner Helene was amongst these people, and even Candice and the other members of the Battlefire mercenary band as well.

Apart from the people whom Han Shuo was well acquainted with, there was also the great druid Caspian and female elf Angelica. Han Shuo had bumped into both of them in the Dark Forest, but had met them separately. He only knew that the two of them were traveling together when he saw both of them here now.

There was no one of particular interest within the rest of the hotel guests. They were likely here to conduct business in Valen City and didn't raise Han Shuo's interest.

The three people who had been following Belinda were all standing there respectfully, as if subordinates waiting for Belinda's orders. This rather surprised Han Shuo as he hadn't thought the three following her would be her men.

Belinda's slender brows knit together tightly when she arrived in the lobby and she swept a gaze over those below her. She said softly, "I felt vibrations from white bone staff number 17 when I arrived at the hotel. I personally refined that white bone staff and awarded it to Clarendon."

"However, the presence from the staff suddenly vanished without a trace when I arrived at the end of the hallway. It looks like someone suddenly returned it to their space ring. No one's left the hotel since I've arrived, so the white bone staff must be within one of their space rings."

"Master, then how should we do this?" The one who looked to be the oldest out of the three brothers asked in inquiry.

Belinda's blue eyes looked shrewdly at the people on the ground and pointed at Emily. "The white bone staff should be on her. She's the only one with a space ring." Out of Emily, Candice, Caspian, and Angelica, Candice had always been with them, so was naturally ruled out. It looked like Caspian and Angelica had arrived later, therefore, in Belinda's eyes, Emily was the one with the staff.

The person who'd asked the question walked over to Emily after Belinda's words and took off her space ring, handing it respectfully to Belinda.

When Belinda took Emily's space ring, she touched it with closed eyes for a while and said, "She set up a magical boundary inside. Tie her up and then wake her."

"Master, what about the others?" It was still the oldest of the three asking the questions.

Waving her hand, Belinda said carelessly, "Same old, kill those who have no value."

Han Shuo immediately became nervous when he heard these words. Apart from Emily, Candice, Angelica, and Caspian were also in the lobby below. Although Caspian had no relationship with Han Shuo, he was friends with Candice and Angelica to varying degrees. He couldn't watch them be killed in front of him.

"Don't you think that you're going overboard with your actions?" Caspian, supposedly in a dead faint, suddenly spoke up before Han Shuo took action.

Caspian stood up as he spoke and protected the little elf Angelica behind him.

When Han Shuo noticed this abnormality, he immediately stopped and continued crouching on the roof, observing what was happening below.

"Eh? You can still remain conscious beneath the strong effects of my fragrance. It seems that the great druid Caspian does indeed have some magical abilities." Belinda exclaimed softly but spoke calmly.

"I don't care who you are, but your methods are greatly distasteful to me. I will ignore the fact that you harmed us earlier if you let all those here go, and I will allow you to leave as well." Caspian looked at Belinda with disfavor and snorted.

“Fereeca, you three brothers can take advantage of this to see what kind of magical abilities a great druid of the nature divinity possess. Kill him!” Belinda didn’t waste any blather and immediately waved her hand, indicating for the three brothers to kill Caspian.

Fereeca and his brothers suddenly displayed a ruthless look of killing intent after Belinda’s instructions and unsheathed three longswords, surrounding the druid.

“Don’t blame me for what happens next since you won’t listen to me!” Caspian glared at the three of them and took out an odd staff shaped like an old root from his space ring, planning on fighting the three.

At this moment, all of the scattered flying bugs in the small hotel seemed to be summoned by some power and converged on Belinda’s room.

At the same time, the thick branches of a large tree by the side of the room suddenly seemed to be summoned as well, sending its gnarled branches into the room like pliable snakes.

Chapter 166: The armored golem

Han Shuo could clearly see the changes in the room through a long and narrow crack in the roof above.

The flying bugs converged from all over the hotel and gathered in the room, next to Belinda.

The pliable branches of the nearby tree began to spread throughout the room crazily. The branch-like staff in Caspian's hands emitted a vibrant feeling of life.

"Why aren't you acting yet?!" Belinda snorted softly at this point.

Fereeca and his brothers attacked Caspian, almost in unison, after receiving Belinda's words. The three of them moved in concert. The tip of Fereeca's longsword suddenly crackled with lightning, and the other two had one of their longswords howl with the sound of the wind, cutting through the air extraordinarily quickly. Another flared with burning fire and roiled towards Caspian.

Han Shuo was greatly astonished when the three of them attacked together. He could tell from the changes in their longswords that Fereeca and his brothers were mage swordsmen. Fereeca looked like a thunder magic major, while the other two specialized in wind and fire magic respectively.

The three longswords also looked like they'd been tempered with special methods. They could directly imbue their elemental magic attacks into the longswords when they attacked to enhance their power and speed. It was very intimidating.

"Three mage swordsmen huh! No wonder you're so cocky!" Caspian snorted coldly when they struck out and waved the magic staff in his hand as he spoke.

The branches wove madly like snakes within the room, dancing in their movements. The scores of branches were like a long whip as they hurtled towards the brothers. Caspian took a step forward at the same time and grabbed the fainted Angelica, jumping out of the window and landing on a nearby tree.

The entangling branches were astonishingly agile beneath Caspian's manipulations. It was like they knew martial arts as they avoided the attacks of the three magical swords. High up in the tree, Caspian had a benevolent smile on his face as he raised his branch-like magic staff and lowly sang out a spell.

The tree he was standing on suddenly came alive like an enormous octopus. The leafy branches were like countless tentacles of the octopus as they spread through the house with extreme speed, churning towards everyone inside.

"Up!" Caspian roared.

A huge rumble sounded as the house Belinda and everyone was in suddenly lifted itself, with the roof caving in shortly thereafter.

Han Shuo's eyes were fixed tightly on Emily within the house, and he rushed down to save her when he realized that something wasn't quite right. It touched his heart to see that the pliable branches that had snaked into the house from all directions were protecting all the people apart from Belinda and her men.

As the house collapsed on itself, the flexible branches had already brought the people, who Belinda had sent to sleep, out.

"The friend on the roof, it's about time for you to come down, isn't it?" When Han Shuo was about to leave when he discovered that Emily had been pulled out of the room by the branches, Caspian's bright eyes landed on Han Shuo as he asked with a smile.

Seeing that his movements had been exposed, Han Shuo didn't continue to hide and he jumped down from the tree, landing in the hotel's spacious inner courtyard. He then very casually walked up to the tree that Caspian was on and stood next to Candice and Emily.

"You go about your business, I'll help you look after these people. I won't let them harm those beneath this tree." Han Shuo lifted his head to smile at Caspian as he spoke.

Caspian started when Han Shuo opened his mouth, and then looked at Han Shuo oddly. "Have we met before? Why does your voice sound familiar?"

"Heh heh, let's do away with these people first." Belinda and the others rushed out from the collapsed house at this moment and glared angrily at Caspian, immediately attacking in this direction.

"Alright, I think I must know you." Caspian responded and waved his staff, looking at Fereeca and his brothers gravely.

The branches of the leafy boughed tree above him kept entangling amongst themselves and looked grotesquely strong. The other trees within the courtyard were affected by the power of nature and started waving their branches as well, joining Caspian's side. Han Shuo was greatly surprised by this development.

After he took a look and realized that Caspian seemed to be able to deal with these people, he then focused his attentions on the fainted Emily.

He took a deep breath in and placed a hand on her back. His magical yuan circulated into a small whirlpool in his left hand.

Using his knowledge of the human body, Han Shuo concentrated and used the effects of the magical yuan to quickly clear out the fragrance's effects from her body.

Her long lashes suddenly fluttered, making Han Shuo delighted as he knew that meant she would wake soon.

A large rumble suddenly traveled to Han Shuo's ears. He abruptly lifted his head in surprise and saw that a four to five meter tall three eyed monster with eight horns on its head and a spiked tail had suddenly appeared within the courtyard.

Han Shuo recognized this monster with one glance. It was the image of the three eyed demon god Ansidesi that the necromancer Clarendon had tried to raise. This three eyed demon monster was now formed of shining, grey armor and its enormous body was filled with power, giving others an intensely intimidating feeling.

“A golem formed in the image of the demon god? You’re from the Calamity Church?” Caspian’s face changed drastically when the golem appeared and he exclaimed in shock.

“You guessed right!” Belinda said softly and then gave instructions to the golem, “Kill him.”

The four or five meter tall golem shaped from grey armor charged towards Caspian after receiving Belinda’s order. A towering tree next to it furiously sent branches churning towards it.

Before the branches had thoroughly entangled the golem’s ankles, the fierce looking golem suddenly exerted force and broke free of the soft branches around its ankles. Every heavy step the golem set down on the ground shook the ground with a thunderous crash, as if an earthquake were happening.

A nearby tree twisted many branches together and formed a branch thicker than two people’s waists put together, slamming towards the golem. When the golem discovered that an attack was about to hit it, it raised its spiked tail and swept it in an arc, crashing into the thick branch.

The thick branch, that had been roiling towards the golem, was halted in its tracks by the golem’s armored tail. Its tail was deeply embedded into the branch and it actually ripped out the branch with a vigorous shake of its tail. The branch splintered into a pile of twigs and branches.

A string of profound magical incantations suddenly rang out of Emily’s mouth as a few dark magic spells landed on the golem. However, these spells, that had an incredibly destructive effect on men and animals, had absolutely no effect on the golem.

“The alchemists of the Calamity Church have developed golems in the shape of the evil demon god with incredible magical immunity. Don’t waste your efforts.” Caspian lowered his head to give Emily this reminder.

“Then what should we do?” Emily lifted her head to ask anxiously.

“Take these innocent people away from here. I’ll think of a way to delay them.” Caspian was also equally anxious as he swept a glance below.

“The golem is being manipulated, this matter will be over if we can control her.” Han Shuo suddenly spoke coldly at this moment.

“This is indeed the case, but she has three mage swordsmen protecting her and a golem attacking us. It’s a bit unrealistic to think that we can put her under our control.” The three eyed demon god golem had already arrived at their location as they were talking. Caspian waved his staff to spur on the great tree beneath them to intercept the golem.

“Emily, you protect those beneath the tree. Caspian, you slow the golem down. Leave the rest to me!” Han Shuo roared coldly as he dashed forward like lightning, setting his sights on Belinda in the midst of the three mage swordsmen.

Chapter 167: Capturing the female alchemist

“Be careful!” Emily cried out in warning when she saw Han Shuo rush forward.

The courtyard was the size of a basketball court. With Han Shuo’s speed, he arrived in front of Belinda and the others almost as soon as Emily had finished talking.

But just as Han Shuo moved, Fereeca and his brothers understood what he was after and surrounded Belinda in their midst. They protected her on three sides and kept all three pairs of eyes on him, grasping their magic swords in their hands tightly.

Han Shuo chanted the spell for the “Dark Mist” lowly as he charged forward. He immediately released the spell when he appeared next to the four, enclosing everyone within it.

“Damn it, he’s a necromancer!” Fereeca cursed as the magic sword in his hand suddenly sent out brilliant crackles of lightning, lighting up the darkness around them.

Two zombie warriors and the dagger wielding little skeleton appeared within the dark mist. The three of them started attacking the three brothers at the same time under Han Shuo’s commands.

Even with the light from the lightning, absolute visibility still couldn’t be gained in the area covered by the dark mist, particularly due to the fact that it was also nighttime. As the caster, Han Shuo circled the three brothers like a ghost hidden in the darkness and was in no hurry to make his move.

The two zombie warriors were immediately hit with devastating attacks when they neared the three brothers. The one wielding the fire sword sent one of the zombie warrior’s clubs flying with one fiery stroke, engulfing the zombie warrior with flames in an instant. The other was remarkably agile with his command of wind magic and the speed of his flurrying strokes were too fast to be witnessed.

More than ten strokes landed on the other zombie warrior in the blink of an eye, making it lose the ability to battle in a short amount of time.

Two bone spears broke through the air at the same time aiming for Fereeca. The little skeleton brandished the bone dagger and also sped towards Fereeca.

To Fereeca, he felt that the bone spears were more of a threat than the little skeleton. When he heard the bone spears whistle towards him, he concentrated his attention on the source of the sound, flashing through the darkness like a streak of lightning and bringing them both down.

The little skeleton, who'd been moving as slowly as a regular skeletal warrior until now, suddenly picked up speed and stabbed swiftly at Fereeca's chest.

"Be careful!" Belinda, manipulating the golem off on the side, noticed this abnormality and shrieked a warning.

Fereeca startled in a fright and didn't defend himself in time. He immediately dodged, but a large bit of flesh was carved out of his chest and he grimaced in pain.

The Demonslayer Edge's harsh howling suddenly sounded piercingly at this moment, displaying a heart stopping red splendor in the darkness and quickly moved between Fereeca and his brothers.

Two soft sounds broke through the air, like a wooden stick breaking through paper.

The two who had just finished off the zombie warriors hadn't even had time to clearly see what had happened when they felt a gusty draft in their chests. They lowered their heads to see a great, bloody hole in their chests and that their blood was spurting out like arrows.

The two fell down with a thud shortly after looking down at their chests.

On the other side, Caspian discovered that the golem's movements had suddenly become a bit stiff due to Belinda's distraction. He immediately waved his staff and once again commanded the branches to entangle the golem.

Beneath the tree, Emily took out her staff and swiveled her gaze between the golem and Han Shuo, seeming to monitor the danger within the terrain.

“Don’t kill her, just capture her!” Emily saw that the Demonslayer Edge was howling louder and louder after having feasted on the blood of the two mage swordsmen. She spoke up in reminder when she saw that moving streak of red drift closer and closer to Belinda.

If it hadn’t been for Emily’s reminder, the Demonslayer Edge would’ve reaped Belinda’s life in the next second. Han Shuo immediately understood Emily’s thoughts and summoned the Demonslayer Edge back to him, having it sink back into the palm of his hand.

Having evaded one of the little skeleton’s bone dagger attacks already, Fereeca’s chest was on fire, but this pain was only temporary, as the little skeleton’s seven blood red bone spurs spun out and suddenly nailed him to the floor.

The seven blood red bone spurs were all sparkling with an evil, red splendor as the blood within Fereeca’s body all quickly flowed into the seven bone spurs. They had sucked Fereeca’s body dry in an exceedingly quick manner. His body was like a piece of dried, aged meat.

As the seven bone spurs drained Fereeca of his blood, the little skeleton seemed to enjoy this greatly as it capered happily with bone dagger in hand, giving Belinda, who stood in the distance, a feeling of uncontrollable fear.

“Don’t move.” Belinda suddenly heard a harshly cold voice behind her in the darkness, and then saw the bizarre weapon, that had reaped the lives of two of her men, resting on her shoulder.

“Who are you to interfere in the matters of the Calamity Church?” Belinda wasn’t panicked as her sapphire eyes looked ahead to the front, maintaining a gentle tone and speaking faintly.

“Cut the bullshit and make the golem stop, or you’ll die immediately.” He’d already killed Clarendon, so his grudge with the Calamity Church was certain. Han Shuo was now completely unfettered in his actions and wouldn’t care about the threats of the Calamity Church at all.

The harsh tone and the killing intent flaring out from the Demonslayer Edge made Belinda realize that Han Shuo wasn’t joking. She grunted lowly and said, “You’ll regret provoking us.”

As she spoke, Belinda manipulated the golem somehow and the fierce, stocky armored golem that was four, five meters tall suddenly disappeared within a strange magic scroll in her hands.

Pa rang out as Han Shuo exerted a bit of force and hit the back of her head, making Belinda’s body collapse and faint.

The little skeleton had retrieved the seven bone spurs after sucking Fereeca dry. The dark mist was slowly starting to dissipate. Han Shuo saw that everything was in control and dismissed the little skeleton.

Taking a deep breath in, Han Shuo picked up Belinda and carried her under his arms, walking out of the area and arrived next to Emily.

“Let’s leave the rest to Elder Caspian.”

Han Shuo lifted his head and looked at Caspian with a slight smile.

Since the golem had disappeared, Caspian naturally had no reservations and looked at Han Shuo with great surprise, “Who are you? How do you know that my name is Caspian, have we met before?”

“Hehe, we did indeed meet before, but we’re not well acquainted with each other. Mm, these people here are innocents and have only been caught by the fragrance. They’ll wake up slowly even without your help. We need to take this person of the Calamity Church to interrogate her, so we’ll be on our way.” Han Shuo smiled as he looked up to Caspian.

“No, this woman is from the Calamity Church. If the matters of today aren’t handled well, great trouble could befall you. It’s better if you give her over to me, I’ll handle this matter appropriately.” Caspian seemed a bit unwilling to let Han Shuo take Belinda away. He alighted from the tree and spoke to Han Shuo.

“Our Dark Mantle has already taken charge of the matter of the Calamity Church. It’s not your place to say what we can or cannot do.’ Emily suddenly flicked a displeased glance at Caspian and spoke with a darkened face.

Caspian started when he heard these words and then spoke with the air of enlightenment, “So you’re of the Dark Mantle. There’s no problem in that case then. Take the woman, I’ll guarantee the safety of all of those here.”

“Then you have our thanks.” Han Shuo picked up the three magical swords as he spoke and searched the bodies of Fereeca and his brothers.

“Let’s go, stop searching, there’s nothing there.” Emily rolled her eyes at Han Shuo ill temperedly, seeming to laugh at Han Shuo’s greed.

“Explain things to her if she wakes up to prevent her suspecting anything.” Han Shuo pointed at Candice as he spoke and left with Emily, returning to the Dark Mantle stronghold.

Chapter 168: Ripping off the veil

As Han Shuo and Emily brought Belinda to the Dark Mantle stronghold, they noticed that the flying bugs that had been circling the hotel were trailing them from a short distance.

The Demonslayer Edge suddenly flashed as its sharp point sank into one of the flying bugs and brought it to Han Shuo's palm. He took a closer look and discovered that this bug was the same material as the golem that Belinda had released. They were all made of metal armor, with just one of them being extremely big and the other being very small.

Magical yuan circulating in his palm, Han Shuo pinched his thumb and forefinger together tightly and a sharp crack rang out as he pulverized the bug. Han Shuo's eyes narrowed into slits as he noticed an exceedingly small magical formation within the stomach of the crushed bug, with traces of magical elements flickering within it.

"This Calamity Church is indeed formidable to set up a formation within such a small flying golem!" Han Shuo couldn't help but sigh with amazement as he put the flying golem away.

Emily nodded, in full agreement with Han Shuo's words, and spoke with a tinge of fear in her voice, "The Calamity Church is the most evil of all churches, with all sorts of evil magics and secret arts. Take the golem in the shape of the three eyed demon god for example. If the force and strength it displayed could be mass produced, then the knights of our Empire will have no way to contend against the attacks of these golems."

She was definitely part of Dark Mantle; Emily's first thought was for the country's security and not how much personal gain these golems could bring her.

"I'm going to dispose of those flying bug golems to prevent them from following us to Dark Mantle. It won't do for someone to discover our traces." Han Shuo brought out the Demonslayer Edge and willed it to charge into the crowd of flying bugs, destroying all of them in short order.

When all the flying bugs had been destroyed, Han Shuo and Emily didn't linger as they made use of the night to sneak back to the Dark Mantle stronghold.

Han Shuo placed Belinda on a chair in the secret room he'd stayed in two days ago and had Emily take out ropes to secure Belinda to the chair.

Completely unconscious, Belinda had no feeling that she was being tied to the chair. After Emily tied her down, she looked at Belinda's veiled face curiously and said, "Why is this girl veiled? Is there something that she can't show the world?"

Shrugging, Han Shuo smiled, "There are only three possibilities for a face veil. She's either too beautiful and afraid that her features will bring danger to herself, she has a need to wear it out of certain cultural considerations, or that she doesn't want people to see the flaws of her face."

"I'm quite curious myself which of these possibilities she falls under. But since she's our prisoner now, I think you can just directly take off her face veil."

Emily glared at him involuntarily when Han Shuo waxed eloquent, and an odd tone colored her voice, "Hmm. I didn't know that you knew so much about facial veils!"

Han Shuo smiled awkwardly and hastened to explain, "This has nothing to do with me. I only know about all this because I've gotten Clarendon's memories."

Snorting softly, Emily didn't say anything else as she reached out a hand to slowly pull off the light veil on her face.

The features of the senseless Belinda were slowly uncovered. Thin, arched brows appeared below a smooth, gleaming forehead. A pair of tightly shut, long lashes then came into view as Belinda's charming nose was slowly revealed. Her skin was white and translucent, she was a wondrous beauty no wonder how one looked at her.

However, when her veil was fully pulled off, Han Shuo and Emily suddenly saw a black birthmark come into view on Belinda's left cheek.

This birthmark made her originally beautiful face appear a bit frightening.

“You guessed right, she has a natural defect. If it wasn’t for this black birthmark, she’d definitely be an unabashed beauty. What a pity!” Emily looked carefully at Belinda’s exposed face and spoke with some regret.

An oval shaped face, pert nose, juicy red lips, sapphire blue eyes, and translucent pale skin all combined with a lovely figure to form the body that a beauty should have. It was a pity that the birthmark on the left side of her face was simply too eye catching. It caught the attention of anyone looking at her and formed a severe contrast, thoroughly casting her looks in the shade.

“Alright, I’ll wake her now.” Han Shuo’s expression was the same as usual as he didn’t particularly care about this girl’s appearance. He walked to the back of the chair and placed a hand on the back of her neck, lightly pinched the meridians on the back of her neck and then patted her right cheek gently. “It’s time to wake up.”

Belinda’s skin was smooth and soft. Han Shuo felt that the sensations were very comfortable when he placed his hand on her skin to wake her. It was like touching an expensive piece of satin.

Belinda’s long lashes fluttered as her clear eyes opened. She first scanned her surroundings in confusion, then alighted on Emily and Han Shuo with surprise.

If you’re not reading this on volaretranslations, this chapter has been stolen and is incomplete.

The confusion in her eyes immediately faded away as Belinda rapidly recognized where she was. Her clear eyes sparkled with ice as her voice turned soft, but threatening, “Who are you to dare capture me? My Calamity Church won’t let you get away with this. You’ll regret what you did today!”

“No need for you to worry about that. What business do you have in Valen City? Apart from assassinating Clark, what other evil plots are you up to?” Emily looked coldly at Belinda and started her interrogation.

“Do you think I’d tell you? You’re wasting your effort.” Belinda looked disdainfully at Emily.

Belinda suddenly noticed the veil in Emily’s hand and thought of something. Her previously tender voice became shrill for the first time. Panicked, she glared at Emily and said loudly, “You’ll pay the price for taking off my veil!”

After watching for a while, Han Shuo walked impatiently in front of Belinda, his voice chilling, “Tell us what you came here for, or I’ll give you another birthmark on your right cheek.”

Belinda’s facial expression changed when she heard these words and she gave a high pitched giggle, “You’ll be sorry for this!”

Her previously red flushed face abruptly drained of all color as her body stiffened instantly. Her breathing slowing to a shallow pace and her eyes shutting once more, she seemed to have fallen into a coma as all her bodily functions went into hibernation.

Han Shuo was dumbfounded by the sudden turn of events. He looked at Emily ruefully, “She seems to have taken some medicine and fainted again. This is a bit tricky, what do you think we should do?”

Emily came over and released a dark magic into Belinda’s body. She then closed her eyes and thought for a bit, but could only lower her head to sigh, “The Calamity Church is certainly difficult to deal with. There’s no point in interrogating or torturing her if we can’t wake her up.”

“So what do you say?” Han Shuo spread out his hands and backed away in resignation.

Thinking for a moment, Emily replied, “I’ll report what’s happened here and see what the senior executives say. In addition, notify the forest trolls that the siege weapons they’ve sold to the merchants seem to have been secretly transported to Valen City. I need to go gather some intelligence to see if I can obtain tangible evidence.”

“Then what should I do?” Han Shuo asked.

“Heh heh, there’s nothing for you to do at the moment. Do whatever you'd like. I'll come notify you immediately if anything happens." Emily looked at Han Shuo with a smile.

Nodding, Han Shuo responded, "That sounds good. I'll stay in the secret chamber and start practicing high level necromancy magic. I'll also see if I can find a way to wake Belinda and get something out of her."

"Whatever you'd like, but behave! Don't you take Belinda to bed whilst I'm not here!" Emily was about to leave when she suddenly thought of something and suddenly turned back to glare ferociously.

"Eh, I'm not the type to take advantage of others. Don't worry!" Han Shuo smiled ruefully.

"Humph, and you say you're not. That's exactly how you got me!" Emily glared fiercely and then seemed to remember something. "However, Belinda's black birthmark probably has affected your feelings towards her. I don't think I have anything to worry about."

Emily was obviously proud of herself after saying these words and left happily.

Chapter 169: Premeditated partnership

Han Shuo's magical prowess had increased in recent times due to his advancement to the true demon realm, and his mental strength had also advanced by leaps and bounds due to the strengthening of his brain. He'd already fully grasped all the magics that a journeyman necromancer should know.

Having received all of Clarendon's memories, Han Shuo's understanding of necromancy magics had taken a giant leap forward. He'd received knowledge of many difficult to grasp concepts thanks to Clarendon's decades of experience, so his magic was brought to new heights.

Han Shuo now felt that his mental strength was much greater than before, and since he'd fully grasped all of the journeyman magics, he planned on taking the next step forward. He'd made a promise to Fanny to officially be in a relationship with her when he reached adept status. This proved to be a great impetus for Han Shuo.

Since he had some free time now, Han Shuo remained within the secret room and made use of the time to meditate and to sort through Clarendon's reflections.

As Han Shuo continued to practice the advanced magic, "Acid Bog", Han Shuo felt that he was expending too much mental strength and temporarily halted his practice.

His eyes flicked around at this moment and rested on Belinda, who sat in a drug induced coma. A thought struck him as he walked over to Belinda's side, placing a hand on her back and slowly circulated his magical yuan, extending one tendril into her body.

It was precisely because of the harsh reforging his body had undergone that Han Shuo was incredibly familiar with the construction of the human body. As the magical yuan flowed into Belinda's body, Han Shuo concentrated and could feel the trail of the magical yuan as it traveled through her body.

As Han Shuo focused his attention in this matter, he quickly discovered that there was a numbing medicine within Belinda's body. It was like an anaesthetic that could stimulate the nerves to make one spontaneously faint, making it difficult for them to be awoken.

When Han Shuo detected the effects of this medicine, he smoothed out his breathing and used a bit of magical yuan to slowly circulate through Belinda's body. He used the power of the magical yuan to absorb this medicine and collect it into the palm of his hand.

As he did so, Han Shuo unintentionally looked at the black birthmark on Belinda's left cheek. A thought struck him as he directed the magical yuan into that birthmark.

When the magical yuan entered it, Han Shuo could clearly feel that another strange element was present within the birthmark, but it had thoroughly melded with Belinda's face and so there would be some difficulty if he wanted to remove the mark.

After all, this black birthmark would've been present at her birth and not been present in her body for only a short amount of time like this medicine.

Although he still had methods to deal with it, Belinda's beauty had nothing to do with him. It would also expend a lot of his magical yuan to do so for her, so Han Shuo naturally wouldn't help beautify Belinda.

When he'd absorbed the entirety of the medicine agent from Belinda's body, Han Shuo knew she would wake soon. His mind thought furiously as to how he would interrogate the awakened Belinda. A notion suddenly floated to the top of his mind as he chuckled coldly. A purple flame jumped into existence from his left finger tip, and he used the Demonslayer Edge to slightly cut open his index finger, forcing a drop of blood into the flame.

When this little bit of Han Shuo's essence landed on the purple flame, the flame suddenly brightened painful and then collapsed into the size of a pinky fingernail.

Under Han Shuo manipulations, the little ball of purple flame suddenly sank into the back of Belinda's neck and formed into a small, black mole.

Since reaching the true demon realm, Han Shuo could use his magical yuan to form a wondrous connection with the blood in his body. Using a secret art, he could seal a bud of frosty air into that drop of essence, and use the infant demon within him to control the level of cold within that essence.

Whenever he wanted to, the infant demon could activate that drop of essence and invade Belinda's body with frosty air, immediately deciding her life or death. In addition, he'd also be able to sense her proximity through that drop of essence as well.

Because of the loss of a drop of essence, Han Shuo made use of this time to sit down and meditate not too far from the soon to awaken Belinda, silently circulating his magical yuan to recover himself.

His blood essence resided near the infant demon and was nutrition for the demon infant. Each drop of essence contained arduously trained magical yuan.

Certain special arts would require this blood essence as a catalyst. Each drop was just as important as the demon infant. Using too much of it could make his magical yuan decrease in training at the least, or move him into cultivation deviation at the worst.

However, using only one drop wouldn't lead to any serious problems. He'd be able to fully recover after a day or so if he meditated carefully.

A soft sound suddenly sounded from beside him after a while. Deep in meditation, Han Shuo could feel that Belinda was about to awaken, even with his eyes closed.

Her long lashes fluttered as Belinda's bright eyes began to look around her surroundings. Several torches burned in this secret room, so she could clearly see everything as she looked around.

Apart from being spacious, there was nothing particularly noteworthy in this secret chamber. Han Shuo sat coolly in one corner, immediately drawing all of Belinda's attention. He presented a stern and grave face at the moment, the angles on his handsome face quite apparent. He looked quite masculine as he sat there aloofly, cross legged and back straight.

Curling her lip, Belinda breathed out softly and tugged at the ropes on her body. She discovered that it was indeed tough to struggle free from them. Her lively eyes darted to and fro, seeming to be weighing up something.

“You better not make any careless moves. Otherwise, if I discover something’s wrong, I’ll immediately kill you.” Han Shuo spoke coldly when he heard the friction of the ropes.

His sudden remarks startled Belinda and she stared angrily at Han Shuo. Belinda said, “Just who are you and what grudges do our Calamity Church have with you for you to capture me and not let me go?”

Taking a deep breath in, Han Shuo opened his deep eyes and flicked a glance at Belinda, taking out Clarendon’s white bone staff and saying faintly, “The seventh work of the Calamity Church’s alchemist Belinda. You personally refined this staff. I obtained it when I killed Clarendon. It’s very useful, so I should rather thank you!”

“So you’re the one who killed Clarendon. You must be one of Bob Ascher’s men!” Belinda’s gaze focused on the white bone staff before shifting to Han Shuo a while later.

Shaking his head, Han Shuo responded. “I’m not of the Gryphon Legion. On the contrary, I actually have a bone to settle with them. If it hadn’t been for my help when Clarendon came to assassinate Clark, Clark might not have died, but Clarendon was killing whoever he saw. I happened to see him summon the three eyed demon god Ansidesi, and was forced to defend myself when he wanted to kill me.”

“You’re really not one of Bob Ascher’s men?” Belinda was very surprised when he heard Han Shuo’s words and urgently asked for confirmation.

“Of course, you’re now my prisoner and I have no reason to lie to you.” Han Shuo nodded his head in confirmation.

“You said just now that you also tried to kill Clark. This means you’re enemies with Bob Ascher?” Appearing a bit excited, Belinda’s soft voice charged with emotion as she asked urgently.

Nodding his head again, Han Shuo responded with a smile. “That’s right, to be more accurate, Clark died by my hands and not Clarendon’s. My goal in coming to Valen City this time is also to move against Bob Ascher.”

“That’s wonderful! Since our goals are the same, I don’t think we should be enemies with each other. The Gryphon Legion has enormous influence in Valen City. I think it’ll be easier for us to reach our goals if we work together.” Surprise appeared on Belinda’s face as she looked at Han Shuo with great interest.

“However, I killed Clarendon and your three mage swordsmen as well. What should we do about that?” Although Han Shuo had long since planned to do so, he was still rather surprised to hear Belinda voice these words so straightforwardly.

“Sacrifice is unavoidable in order to attain any goal. There’s no big deal in a couple people dying. I promise we can let everything be history as long as we cooperate against the Gryphon Legion!” Belinda spoke carelessly, not caring about the life and death of her men.

Han Shuo was a bit surprised by this cavalier attitude, but still chuckled when he saw that his goal had been met, “Since this is the case, that’s wonderful!”

Chapter 170: Violation during sleep

When Emily saw that Han Shuo and Belinda were actually having a conversation when she returned to the secret room, she was flabbergasted and looked suspiciously between Han Shuo and Belinda. She pulled Han Shuo aside and asked with a disbelieving voice, “You didn’t really sleep with her, did you?”

Han Shuo didn’t know whether to laugh or cry as he quickly shook his head. “Of course not. Miss Belinda’s goal is also to kill the chief of the Gryphon Legion and can fully forgive all our past transgressions. She’s willing to cooperate with us against Bob Ascher. I felt that there was a benefit in cooperation between our two sides, so I agreed to her proposal.”

“You agreed just like that and even released her from her bonds?” Emily was startled and stared fixedly at Han Shuo as she interrogated him.

Throwing a significant look at Emily, Han Shuo smiled openly and said to Belinda, “We have a special relationship. Although we are cooperating with each other, there are still secrets between us. If you don’t mind, I’d like to blindfold you before we let you go.”

“Of course, I understand.” Belinda accepted readily and forthrightly.

